Time of furnishing copy to printer: By section 196, Revised Statutes, it was provided that copy of annual reports must be furnished Public Printer by heads of departments on or before the third Monday of November and copies of documents usually accompanying annual reports, on or before the 1st day of November. This section has been amended by clauses in the annual appropriation acts providing that copies of documents accompanying annual reports must be furnished to Public Printer on or before the 15th day of October; copies of annual reports on or before November 15; and complete revised proofs of accompanying documents and annual reports on the 10th and 20th days of November, respectively. (See sundry civil acts, Aug. 1, 1914, 38 Stat., 680, and July 1, 1916, sec. 3, 39 Stat., 336; see also, 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.) Documents and reports are not to be printed until illustrations or maps designed therefor shall be ready for publication; nor unless entire copy and illustrations for the work are furnished Public Printer within one year. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 80, 28 Stat., 621.)

Official is to be designated by head of each department to supervise the classification and compilation of all estimates to be submitted by such department. Said official shall have due regard for the requirements of all laws respecting preparation of estimates, including manner and time of their submission to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury; all unnecessary words to be eliminated from all such estimates. (Act June 23, 1913, sec. 3, 38 Stat., 75.) An "estimate clerk" in the Navy Department is provided for in the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act.

Per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or travel on official business may be prescribed by heads of departments, and estimates of appropriations from which paid shall specifically state the rates of such allowances. (Act Aug. 1, 1914, sec. 13, 38 Stat., 680.)

President is to recommend reduction by Congress in amounts estimated for, where in excess of estimated revenues, if practicable without undue injury to the public service; or otherwise he shall recommend such loans or new taxes as necessary to cover the deficiency. (Act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 7, 35 Stat., 1027.)

Printing and binding estimates are to be submitted annually by head of department (sec. 3661, R. S.); printing and binding estimates are to be submitted to Congress in detail by the Public Printer, covering all work to be done under his direction (act Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 1, 28 Stat., 961); printing and binding estimates are to be submitted in regular annual estimates to Congress under "Printing and binding," and to include all printing and binding required by each of the executive departments, their bureaus and offices, for each fiscal year, with exception of envelopes and certain articles of stationery printed in the course of manufacture (act June 30, 1906, sec. 2, 34 Stat., 762).

Subsequent estimates therefor shall state original estimated cost, amount already appropriated and expended, amount required in excess of original estimate, and reasons for the excess. (Sec. 3663, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 27, 1877, 19 Stat., 249.)

Reports to Congress of certain information are required to be made by heads of departments in the Book of Estimates.—See notes to section 429, Revised Statutes.

Secretary of the Treasury shall cause same to be classified, compiled, indexed, and printed. (Act July 7, 1884, 23 Stat., 254.)

Vehicles, passenger-carrying: Purchase and maintenance of, shall be estimated for in detail, specifying use for which intended, etc. (Act July 16, 1914, sec. 5, 38 Stat., 508.)

Appropriations only for one fiscal year.—

The annual appropriation acts are enacted in conformity with the mandatory provisions of sections 430, 3676, and 3678, Revised Statutes. They always are for the service of the given year for which they are estimated and appropriated. It is undoubtedly true that in the ordinary conduct of administration, materials and supplies properly purchased remain unconsumed and unused at the end of the fiscal year. This is recognized and has been provided for with reference to the Naval Establishment by statute (act Mar. 2, 1889, 25 Stat., 817, 818). If the statutes providing appropriations for a current fiscal year can receive the latitudinarian construction of permitting purchases of supplies avowedly for use not in that but in another and succeeding year, this would do away with the force of all the statutes making annual appropriations. It would utterly destroy the relation between the laws governing appropriations and expenditures. The intentional acquisition of naval supplies for consumption or use in succeeding years by purchase from appropriations for a current fiscal year is inconsistent with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 634.)

Sec. 431. [Hydrographic Office.] There shall be a Hydrographic Office attached to the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department, for the improvement of the means for navigating safely the vessels of the Navy and of the mercantile marine, by providing, under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, accurate and cheap nautical charts, sailing directions, navigators, and manuals of instructions for the use of all vessels of the United States, and for the benefit and use of navigators generally.—(21 June, 1866, c. 129, s. 1, v. 14, p. 69.)

Amendment was made to this section by act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 374), which provided that the Hydrographic Office should be attached to and made a part of the Bureau of Equipment. By naval appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1912, 1913, and 1914, provisions were made for the distribution of the duties, funds, and employees of the Bureau of Equipment among the other bureaus and offices of the Navy Department, and by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 408), the Bureau of Equipment was abolished. Pursuant to these statutes the Hydrographic Office was again attached to the Bureau of Navigation by Navy Regulations, and has since been appropriated for under that bureau. (See, for example, act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1026.)

Appropriations for the preparation or publication of foreign hydrographic surveys shall only be applicable to their object upon approval of the Secretary of the Navy after a report from three competent naval officers to the effect that the original data for proposed charts are such as to justify their publication. (Sec. 3686, R. S., reenacted as sec. 78, act Jan. 12, 1895, 28 Stat., 621.)

International Code of Signals, sale of to the public at cost was authorized by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1187, sundry civil act, printing and binding).

Naval officers, not exceeding four, may be detailed as necessary to the Hydrographic Office by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1172.) The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office during the continuance of the present war. (Act Apr. 25, 1917, 40 Stat., 38.) "The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708.)

Personal services or other expenditures are not to be authorized under the Hydrographic Office at Washington, D. C., except as appropriated for under the Navy Department in the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, or under appropriations for the public printing and binding. (See act Mar. 3, 1917, 39 Stat., 1099.)

Printing of charts, maps, notices to mariners, tide tables, light lists, sailing directions, bulletins, and other special publications of the Hydrographic Office, may be authorized by the Secretary of the Navy in such editions as the interests of the Government and of the public may require. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 89, 28 Stat., 622.)

Printing and engraving for the Hydrographic Office are to be estimated for separately and in detail, and appropriated for separately. (Act Aug. 4, 1886, 24 Stat., 255.)

Weather Bureau shall continue furnishing meteorological information to the Hydrographic Office for use in preparation of Pilot Charts; and said charts shall have conspicuously printed thereon: "Prepared from data furnished by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and by the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, and published at the Hydrographic Office under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy." (Act June 17, 1910, 36 Stat., 508.)

General duties of Hydrographic Office.—

The work of the Hydrographic Office comprises the making, revision, correction, and issue of charts and sailing directions for all parts of the world, including monthly Pilot Charts of the North Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; compilation, printing, and issue of weekly and other periodical notices to mariners; revision and issue of navigation tables; supervision of ocean and lake surveys, and the direction and supervision of branch hydrographic offices and sales agencies, distributed among the principal sea and lake ports of the country. (File 24501-26:1, Jan. 25, 1912.)

The work of the Hydrographic Office ever since its inception has been directed to improving the means for navigating safely the vessels of the Navy and the Mercantile Marine by producing accurate and cheap nautical charts, books, manuals, and such secondary publications as would be of service to navigators and the maritime world as the organic law (secs. 431-433, R. S.) requires. (File 24501-22, Dec. 29, 1910.)

It is the opinion of the Navy Department that the work of the Hydrographic Office merits the heartiest confidence and support; also that there should be no reduction in the branch hydrographic offices, as they are important feeders of nautical information required by the main office. (File 24501-22, Dec. 29, 1910.)

Pilot Charts.—The Pilot Chart grew into being as the result of the labors and research of Lieut. Maury. The Navy of the United States was the pioneer in publishing work of this kind. Neither its usefulness nor its accuracy has ever been questioned. It is known throughout the world as being published by the Hydrographic Office. (Ann. Rept. of Hydrographic Office, 1910.)

Between 1844 and 1861 there were compiled and issued under the Navy Department, "Maury's Wind and Current Charts," upon which the present Pilot Charts are founded. (File 24501-19, Aug. 2, 1910.)

The Pilot Charts have been published since 1883 by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department under the provisions of sections 431 and 432, Revised Statutes. (File 24501-19, Aug. 3, 1910.)

These charts contain information concerning the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, North Pacific, South Pacific, and Indian Oceans. They are invaluable for the purposes of the Navy and almost indispensable to navigators of merchant vessels. They include the prevailing winds, as shown by averages collected for the past 10 years, the best sailing routes for vessels in view of these prevailing winds, meteorological conditions that may be expected in the various portions of the ocean, and a number of other matters of great interest to the mariner. (File 24501-19, Aug. 3, 1910.)

The Pilot Chart shows graphically navigational features (magnetic variation, currents, sail and steam ship tracks, etc.), and meteorological data. (File 24501-24, Mar. 8, 1911.)

The Pilot Charts constitute an essential link between the Hydrographic Office and the shipmasters of all nations, whereby important hydrographic and navigational reports are constantly and promptly acquired for use on the other navigational charts and nautical books which the Hydrographer is charged with preparing and keeping corrected up to date. The Pilot Charts were designed and developed to insure the Hydrographic Office obtaining the various data shown upon the printed sheet entitled "Utilization of Marine Data." (File 24501-24, Mar. 8, 1911.)

Data furnished by Weather Bureau.—

The meteorological data for the Pilot Chart have been supplied to the Hydrographic Office by the Weather Bureau since 1905. Prior to that time the meteorological data shown on Pilot Charts were obtained by the Hydrographic Office, but in accordance with the decision of the Interdepartmental Board in 1904 the work of collecting such data was transferred to the Weather Bureau. The data other than meteorological incorporated in the Pilot Chart are furnished by observers in all parts of the world in return for the finished charts and requires nautical experience for its proper arrangement on the chart. (File 24501-19, Aug. 3, 1910.)

Duplication of work.—In 1909 the Weather Bureau began to publish the Ocean Meteorological charts, containing information practically the same as is furnished by the Pilot Charts of the Navy Department. By the act of June 17, 1910 [above cited], the Hydrographic Office has charge of the publication of Pilot Charts, making the proper acknowledgment to the Weather Bureau for the meteorological data secured. Although not definitely stated, this provision would seem to imply the necessary abandonment of the duplication of the work in the publication of the Ocean Meteorological Charts by the Weather Bureau. This, however, was not the case, the Chief of the Weather Bureau continuing, after the act mentioned, to publish the meteorological chart and in fact to extend its operation by collecting certain data also collected by the Hydrographic Office, this undoubtedly contrary to the intent of Congress and certainly contrary to the spirit of the above provision of law. (File 24501-19, Aug. 3, 1910.)

There is no question that this work should be performed by one department alone. It is so essential to the future welfare of the Navy, and necessarily requires such technical supervision as can only be given by a trained mariner, that the Secretary of the Navy feels sure that the work should be done by the Navy Department, and that this is the view of practically all the marine associations throughout the United States. When it was rumored that Congress might possibly abolish the Pilot Charts of the Navy Department, that department received countless letters of protest and offers of assistance to retain the publication of the Pilot Charts in the Hydrographic Office. (File 24501-19, Aug. 3, 1910.)

Jurisdiction, Hydrographic Office and Weather Bureau.—By agreement between the Navy Department and the Department of Agriculture, relative to the work of the Hydrographic Office and the Weather Bureau, it was decided:

"(a) That the Weather Bureau discontinue the Ocean and Lake Meteorological Charts;

"(b) That the Hydrographic Office continue the publication of the Pilot Charts;

"(c) That the Weather Bureau continue the control of ocean meteorology, so far as concerns the collection of meteorological observations and their compilation and the use of such observations in research work;

"(d) That the Hydrographic Office continue the distribution of the Pilot Charts at its main office and branch offices; and that it furnish all marine observers taking observations for the Weather Bureau, and all regular Weather Bureau coast stations, necessary copies of the issues of the several Pilot Charts.

"(e) That the Weather Bureau furnish all meteorological data necessary to the preparation of the Pilot Charts, and in such forms as may be mutually agreed upon between the two offices, in accordance with existing law;

"(f) That the Hydrographic Office give the Weather Bureau due credit on the Pilot Chart for the data thus published, as required by law." (File 24501-31, Aug. 14, 1913.)

Miscellaneous.—The fact that sections 431-433, Revised Statutes, require certain publications to be prepared at the Hydrographic Office in the interest of the Navy "and the Mercantile Marine," gives private citizens, having to do with shipping, interest in the proper conduct of that office. So far as the Navy Department can learn, the Hydrographic Office merits and has received from the whole maritime community only praise for its work, which so vitally concerns the welfare of our fleet at sea and the safe carriage of our goods in mercantile bottoms. (File 24501-22, Dec. 29, 1910.)

As to the naval service, the charts, books, and other publications of the Hydrographic Office are required by the Navy because our fleet could not safely and expeditiously navigate the high seas and foreign coasts without them. (File 24501-22, Dec. 29, 1910.)

The fleet is dependent upon the Hydrographic Office for its charts and sailing directions. (File 24501-23, Jan. 31, 1911.)

The supply of charts, sailing directions, and current nautical information is indispensable to the seagoing ships, and becomes more and more important with the great increase in the size, value, and speed of vessels in the last few years. Besides the Navy, the work of our Hydrographic Office is invaluable to the merchant marine, domestic and foreign, and its charts and publications have hitherto enjoyed a world-wide reputation for being second to none in accuracy, scope, reliability, and promptness of issue—the last item being of equal value with accuracy. (File 24501-26:1, Jan. 25, 1912.)

The Navy Department is endeavoring to reduce the number of foreign charts used in our ships, and the Hydrographic Office will ultimately produce all charts needed if the requisite money can be secured. This is necessary because in time of war the foreign supply would cease. (File 24501-23, Jan. 31, 1911.)

At all times, from its inception, the Hydrographic Office has been in charge of and operated by naval officers. This is clearly necessary, as the work of the office requires naval as well as scientific and nautical knowledge; and furthermore, the hydrographer and his assistants should not only have such knowledge, but be capable of administering the activities of the office. In addition, the Navy benefits by the experience its officers get in the Hydrographic Office, as their intimate association with the preparation and issue of charts, sailing directions, and navigational works fits them the better to perform their navigational duties at sea. (File 24501-16, Apr. 19, 1910.)

Naval officers have the practical training essential to the supervision of the work of the Hydrographic Office, and it goes without saying that they have a greater interest in, and a larger feeling of responsibility for, the accuracy of the work than would civilians, whom it is impossible to secure with the proper ability to supervise the technical work involved. (File 24501-23, Jan. 31, 1911.)

The preparation of the charts, books, and other publications of the Hydrographic Office could not be intrusted to a nonnavigational bureau, but should be continued in the hands of capable and trained naval officers, familiar with the requirements of the navigator and the practical use of these publications. Such has been the custom with us, and such is the unvarying practice under foreign Governments, for it is well recognized that any other course might jeopardize an important element of national defense. (File 24501-22, Dec. 29, 1910.)

Legislation restricting the number of naval officers who may be detailed to the Hydrographic Office, although contained in an annual appropriation act, is in effect perpetual and is the law until repealed, such provision not being expressly or otherwise limited in its operation to any particular period of time. (File 24501-26, July 11, 1911. But see act of July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708, which removes limitation upon number of naval officers detailed to Hydrographic Office.)

See note to section 434, Revised Statutes, as to proposed consolidation of Hydrographic Office and Naval Observatory.

An officer of the Navy is not entitled to the salary of a draftsman in the Hydrographic Office in addition to his own, though he hold both offices. The office of draftsman in the Hydrographic Office is incompatible with that of cadet engineer [now abolished]. The Secretary of the Navy may detail an engineer for service in the Hydrographic Office, but the detail will not entitle the officer to additional pay. Where two incompatible offices are held by the same person, to which are attached different salaries, he is entitled to the larger. (Winchell v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 30. In this case the officer was erroneously discharged from the Navy, and thereafter appointed to a civil position in the Hydrographic Office. When later restored to the Navy, he sought to recover the pay of both offices. See also 5 Comp. Dec., 885.)

The purchase of supplies for the Hydrographic Office is governed by the laws relating to the purchase of supplies and contracts for supplies "for any of the departments of the Government." (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 59.)

Sec. 432. [Maps, charts, etc.] The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to cause to be prepared, at the Hydrographic Office attached to the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department, maps, charts, and nautical books relating to and required in navigation, and to publish and furnish them to navigators at the cost of printing and paper, and to purchase the plates and copyrights of such existing maps, charts, navigators, sailing directions and instructions, as he may consider necessary, and when he may deem it expedient to do so, and under such regulations and instructions as he may prescribe.—(21 June, 1866, c. 129, s. 2, v. 14, p. 69.)

See note to section 431, Revised Statutes.

This section was reenacted by act of January 12, 1895, section 77 (28 Stat., 621), as follows: "The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to cause to be prepared at the Hydrographic Office attached to the Bureau of Navigation, in the Navy Department, maps, charts, and nautical books relating to and required in navigation, and to publish and furnish them to navigators at the cost of printing and paper, and to purchase the plates and copyrights of such existing maps, charts, navigators' sailing directions and instructions as he may consider necessary and when he may deem it expedient to do so, and under such regulations and instructions as he may prescribe."

Sec. 433. [Money received from sale of maps, charts, etc.] All moneys which may be received from the sale of maps, charts, and nautical books shall be returned by the Secretary of the Navy into the Treasury of the United States, to be used in the further preparation and publication of maps, charts, navigators, sailing directions, and instructions for the use of seamen, to be sold at the rates as set forth in the preceding section.—(21 June, 1866, c. 129, s. 3, v. 14, p. 69.)

See note to section 431, Revised Statutes.

This section was reenacted by act of January 12, 1895, section 77 (28 Stat., 621), as follows: "All moneys which may be received from the sale of maps, charts, and nautical books shall be paid by the Secretary of the Navy into the Treasury of the United States, to be used in the further preparation and publication of maps, charts, navigators' sailing directions, and instructions for the use of seamen, to be sold at the cost of printing and paper."

It was amended by act of May 29, 1920 (41 Stat., 665), which provided that receipts from sales of publications "shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

Sec. 434. [Naval Observatory.] The officer of the Navy employed as superintendent of the Naval Observatory at Washington shall be entitled to receive the shore-duty pay of his grade, and no other.—(3 Mar., 1865, c. 114, v. 13, p. 533.)

American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac: Publication of, by the Naval Observatory, is authorized by Article I-604 (3 a), Naval Instructions, 1913. Assignment of a professor of mathematics to duty at the Naval Observatory in charge of the Nautical Almanac is provided for by Article R-3111, Navy Regulations, 1913. (See sec. 436, R. S.)

Appointment or detail to office of astronomical director, director of the Nautical Almanac, astronomer, or assistant astronomer may be made upon recommendation of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Observatory. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1122.)

Board of Visitors to the Naval Observatory is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a period of three years without compensation other than actual expenses; four members to be astronomers of high professional standing and two members eminent citizens of the United States. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1122.)

Library of Naval Observatory may have books for its exclusive use bound in half Turkey or material no more expensive. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 86, 28 Stat., 622.)

Observatory Circle: No street, avenue, or public thoroughfare shall extend within the area of a circle described with a radius of 1,000 feet from the center of the building known as the clock room of the observatory. (Res., Aug. 1, 1894, 28 Stat., 588.)

Printing authorized of 1,800 additional copies of the Observations of the Naval Observatory, of which 800 shall be for distribution by the Naval Observatory, and the remainder for the Senate and House; and of the astronomical appendixes to said observations, 1,200 separate copies, and of the meteorological and magnetic observations, 1,000 copies, shall be printed for distribution by the Naval Observatory. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 613.)

Professors of mathematics shall perform such duties at the Naval Observatory as may be assigned them by order of the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1401, R. S.)

Public Printer shall furnish one bound copy of the Congressional Record gratuitously to the Naval Observatory. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 617.)

Regulations prescribing scope of astronomical and other researches of the Observatory and duties of its staff shall be prepared and submitted to the Secretary of the Navy by the Board of Visitors. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1122.)

Report to the Secretary of the Navy shall be made at least once each year by the Board of Visitors respecting condition of buildings, instruments, apparatus, efficiency, and expenditures of the observatory (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1122.)

Scientific investigators and students of certain educational institutions shall be afforded the facilities of the Naval Observatory for research and illustration, under such restrictions as the officers in charge may prescribe. (Res., Apr. 12, 1892, 27 Stat., 395.) They shall similarly be afforded facilities for study and research in the Government departments under such restrictions as heads of departments may prescribe. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1039.)

Superintendent of the Naval Observatory shall be a line officer of the Navy not below the rank of captain. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1122.)

A superintendent of the Naval Observatory, "who shall be either a captain, commander, or lieutenant in the Navy," at a salary of $3,000 per annum, was authorized by act of March 3, 1847 (9 Stat., 169), as amended by act of Aug. 3, 1848 (9 Stat., 266).

This provision as to the rank of the superintendent was repealed by act of March 3, 1865 (13 Stat., 533), which act further provided that "no officer of the Navy employed as superintendent shall receive other than the shore duty pay of his grade."

The superintendent should be carefully selected with reference to special fitness, and there can be no doubt that there can always be found officers in the Navy competent to administer this institution, which had its beginnings through the ability and zeal of naval officers, as also its rise to high eminence. Distinction in astronomy does not by any means go to show that its possessor will be a good administrator. The most eminent astronomer that France has produced was an utter failure in the administration of the National Observatory at Paris, and was succeeded by an admiral of the Navy, under whose direction it was excellently administered. (File 5331, Sept. 7, 1894.)

The regular work of the Naval Observatory is essential to the Navy; it can be systematically and successfully accomplished only under Government control; and no portion of it should be discontinued or transferred to other than the control of the Navy Department. The observations made in addition to those necessary for the regular work are of more interest to astronomers, do not interfere with the regular work, and should be continued. (File 15924, Apr. 3, 1903.)

Both the Naval Observatory and the Hydrographic Office are employed in supplying the fleet with navigation equipment, both are concerned in the instruction of navigators; the Hydrographic Office controls the marine surveying parties, yet the Observatory provides and attends to the repairing of instruments for them, instructs surveying officers in the use of astronomical instruments, and cooperates with them in the determination of longitudes. In numerous ways the two institutions have unity of interests and should harmonize and strengthen each other under one management. (File 26509-97, Feb. 4, 1913, recommending legislation "for consolidating the activities of the Naval Observatory and Hydrographic Office." See sec. 431, R. S., for law relating to Hydrographic Office.)

The Naval Observatory is a naval station, and the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory is the commandant of a naval station within the meaning of the act of January 25, 1895 (28 Stat., 639), "authorizing certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths," as amended by the act of March 3, 1909 (31 Stat., 1086). (File 19037-45, May 26, 1914.)

Sec. 435. [Meridians. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 435. The meridian of the Observatory at Washington shall be adopted and used as the American meridian for all astronomical purposes, and the meridian of Greenwich shall be adopted for all nautical purposes."—28 Sept., 1850, c. 80, s. 1, v. 9, p. 515.

It was repealed by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 342).

Sec. 436. [Nautical Almanac.] The Secretary of the Navy may place the supervision of the Nautical Almanac in charge of any officer or professor of mathematics in the Navy who is competent for that service. Such officer or professor, when so employed, shall be entitled to receive the shore-duty pay of his grade, and no other.—(3 Mar., 1857, c. 111, s. 3, v. 11, p. 246.)

Assignment of a professor of mathematics to duty at the Naval Observatory in charge of the Nautical Almanac, is provided for by Article R-3111, Navy Regulations, 1913.

Director of the Nautical Almanac may be recommended for appointment by the Board of Visitors to the Naval Observatory. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1122.)

Employees of Nautical Almanac Office whose services can be spared from duty of preparing for publication the annual volumes of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, may be employed by said office in duty of improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars, to be used in preparing for publication the annual volumes of the office. (Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 342.)

Exchange of data with foreign almanac offices may be arranged for by the Secretary of the Navy, any such arrangement to be terminable on one year's notice; the work of the Nautical Almanac Office to be so conducted that in case of emergency the entire portion of the work intended for the use of navigators may be computed by it, without foreign cooperation. (Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 342.)

Printing is authorized of 1,500 copies of Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, in addition to the "usual number"—500 copies to be for use of Senate and House, and 1,000 copies for distribution or sale by the Navy Department (act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 613). "Usual number" of American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac is not to be printed; in lieu thereof, 1,100 copies of same shall be printed and bound, uniform with the editions printed for the Navy Department—500 copies for Senate and House and 600 for Superintendent of Documents for distribution to State and Territorial libraries and designated depositories (res., May 13, 1902, 32 Stat., 740); 2,500 copies of American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac are to be published—1,500 copies for the Senate and House and 1,000 for distribution or sale by the Navy Department (act July 1, 1902, 32 Stat., 678). Secretary of the Navy is authorized to have additional copies of the Ephemeris and of the Nautical Almanacs extracted therefrom, printed for the public service and for sale to navigators and others. All moneys received from sale of the Ephemeris and of the Nautical Almanacs shall be deposited in the Treasury and placed to the credit of the general fund for public printing (act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 613).

Professor of Mathematics, corps shall cease to exist: See note to section 1399, Revised Statutes.

The first statute relating to the Nautical Almanac was the act of March 3, 1849 (9 Stat., 375), providing that "a competent officer of the Navy, not below the grade of lieutenant, be charged with the duty of preparing the Nautical Almanac for publication."

By act of August 5, 1854 (10 Stat., 583), it was provided that "any naval officer who may be charged with the preparation, superintendence, or publication of the Nautical Almanac, shall receive no compensation for such duty beyond what he would receive while on duty at sea." Further provisions on the subject were contained in the act of March 3, 1857, upon which the above section of the Revised Statutes is based.

Nautical Almanac Office a department of the Naval Observatory.—The Regulations of the United States Naval Observatory, approved by the Secretary of the Navy January 25, 1904, provide in part as follows: "The Naval Observatory, under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, is subject to the direct supervision of the Bureau of Equipment [now Bureau of Navigation], Navy Department, and shall be governed in accordance with the U. S. Navy Regulations relating to the general administration of shore stations where applicable" (par. 1); "the observatory work shall be divided into two branches, astronomical and nautical. The first shall include * * * the department of the Nautical Almanac" (par. 3); "there shall be * * * a director of the Nautical Almanac * * *" (par. 5); "the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory * * * shall exercise entire control over every department of the observatory * * *" (par. 7); "he [the superintendent of the observatory] shall have charge of and be responsible for the direction, scope, character, quantity, and preparation for publication of all work which is performed at the Naval Observatory * * *" (par. 9); "the director of the Nautical Almanac shall be held directly responsible to the superintendent for the preparation and publication of the Nautical Almanac and Ephemerides for use of naval vessels, merchant vessels, and for astronomical purposes, as provided for by law and the regulations and orders of the Navy Department" (par. 17). These regulations and others in line therewith, which make the Nautical Almanac Office a department of the observatory, and place the supervision thereof in charge of the superintendent of that institution, the department regards as within its power to prescribe under the authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy by secs. 419 and 436 of the Revised Statutes, relating, respectively, to the distribution of the business of the Navy Department and the superintendence of the Nautical Almanac. The fact that the Nautical Almanac Office is appropriated for separately in the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act does not, it is believed, constitute it a separate shore station, and its treatment as such would appear to be incompatible with its status as fixed by the regulations above mentioned. It may be added that the department's recent order, giving the present superintendent of the observatory, as such, "charge of the supervision of the Nautical Almanac," establishes his authority in matters pertaining to that work independently of the regulations cited. (File 9449-04, Jan. 19, 1905.)

The fact that the Nautical Almanac was intended to become an integral part of the Naval Observatory is established by the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, September 20, 1894, and by those approved January 25, 1904. There is no question that in the early days of the existence of the Nautical Almanac it was recognized as quite distinct and separate from the Naval Observatory, but the removal of that office to the Observatory buildings and the issuance of regulations making it a branch of the Naval Observatory soon after such removal, changed it to a department of the Naval Observatory. (File 17626, and 9449-04, March 18, 1904, letter of Superintendent of the Naval Observatory.)

The fact that the appropriations for the Naval Observatory and the Nautical Almanac Office have continued since the amalgamation of the two departments in 1894, to be provided for separately has caused some question in dealing with other departments of the Government, in view of which the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory as to change in the appropriations to conform to the existing regulations was approved by the Secretary of the Navy. (File 18168-25, and 9449-04, Dec. 2, 1904; and 17279-3, May 11, 1905.)

The Navy Department has established the Nautical Almanac as a department of the Naval Observatory, and appointed the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory as supervisor of the Nautical Almanac in accordance with section 436, Revised Statutes. There seems, therefore, no warrant for styling the head of the department of the Nautical Almanac as the "Director of the Nautical Almanac." (File 17279-3, May 11, 1905, letter of Superintendent of the Naval Observatory.)

The Director of the Nautical Almanac invited attention to the fact that the Navy Register of January, 1904, did not, as did those for the preceding 17 years, make mention of the Nautical Almanac Office as a separate shore station, and to the fact that his "present duty" was given in that Register as "Naval Observatory" instead of, as formerly, "Director Nautical Almanac," and requested that in subsequent issues of the Navy Register the Nautical Almanac Office be restored to its former status:

Held, That the Navy Register, in the particulars mentioned, is not regarded as in error, and the department is therefore constrained to deny the request that in subsequent issues the changes suggested be made. (File 9449-04, and 17626, Jan. 19, 1905.)

Supervision of Nautical Almanac can not be limited to line officers.—A regulation providing that "a line officer not below the rank of captain shall be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy as superintendent of the Naval Observatory," and that "in his charge shall also be placed the supervision of the Nautical Almanac," in so far as the latter portion thereof is concerned, would be illegal, as it would place upon the supervision of the Nautical Almanac a restriction not prescribed by law, to wit, that it should be under "a line officer not below the rank of captain," whereas the law (sec. 436, R. S.) leaves the supervision of the publication open to "any officer or professor of mathematics in the Navy who is competent for that service." (File 1112-04, Feb. 12, 1904; 17279-2, Feb. 13, 1904; see also note to sec. 161, R. S.)

A nautical almanac is well known to be a book. It is a "nautical book" of the sort mentioned in section 432 of the Revised Statutes. The machinery by which the Secretary is authorized from year to year to have this book made is to be found in section 3661 of the Revised Statutes in connection with annual reports by and appropriations for that officer. By this provision the Secretary is to submit to Congress an estimate "for printing and binding to be executed under the direction of the Congressional Printer." Accordingly, held, that the printing and binding at the Government Printing Office of the book called "The American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac" for the Navy Department, are within the appropriation made for printing and binding for that department, and accordingly are authorized by law. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 127.)

515. Copies of returns.

Sec. 437. [Establishment of Department of the Interior.] There shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department to be known as the Department of the Interior, and a Secretary of the Interior, who shall be the head thereof.—(3 Mar., 1849, c. 108, s. 1, v. 9, p. 395.)

Origin and growth of executive departments—see note to section 158 Revised Statutes.

Sec. 441. [Duties of Secretary.] The Secretary of the Interior is charged with the supervision of public business relating to the following subjects: * * *

Second. The public lands, including mines.

Third. The Indians.

Fourth. Pensions and bounty-lands.

Fifth. Patents for inventions. * * *

Seventh. Education.

Eighth. Government Hospital for the Insane.

Ninth. Columbia Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb.—(3 Mar., 1849, c. 108, ss. 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, v. 9, p. 395; 8 July, 1870, c. 230, s. 1, v. 16, p. 198; 5 Feb., 1859, c. 22, s. 1, v. 11, p. 379; 20 July, 1868, c. 176, s. 1, v. 15, pp. 92, 106; Maguire v. Tyler, 1 Bl., 195.)

Government Hospital for the Insane.—The designation of this institution was changed to "Saint Elizabeths Hospital" by act of July 1, 1916 (39 Stat., 309). See sections 4838-4843, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Sec. 442. [Duties concerning Territories.] The Secretary of the Interior shall hereafter exercise all the powers and perform all the duties in relation to the Territories of the United States that were, prior to March first, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, by law or by custom exercised and performed by the Secretary of State.—(1 Mar., 1873, c. 217, v. 17, p. 484.)

Guam and Samoa.—On and after June 1, 1907, all official communications from and to executive officers of the Territories and territorial possessions, including Samoa and Guam, shall be transmitted through the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe. (Exec. O., May 11, 1907.)

It will be entirely satisfactory to the Interior Department to receive copies of the official reports relative to Guam and Samoa instead of the originals direct. (File 21393-26, June 4, 1907.)

The governors of Guam and of Tutuila, Samoa, are directed to forward all reports, etc., relating to territorial matters, as distinguished from matters of purely naval administration, to the Navy Department in duplicate in order that one copy may be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior. (File 21393-26, June 6, 1907.)

Sec. 470. [Commissioner of Pensions.] There shall be in the Department of the Interior a Commissioner of Pensions, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to receive a salary of four thousand dollars a year.—(2 Mar., 1833, c. 54, s. 1, v. 4, pp. 619, 622; 3 Mar., 1835, c. 46, ss. 1, 2, 3, v. 4, p. 779; 3 Mar., 1837, c. 43, v. 5, p. 187; 4 Mar., 1840, c. 4, ss. 1, 2, 3, v. 5, p. 369; 4 Mar., 1840, c. 4, s. 4, v. 5, p. 370; 20 Jan., 1843, c. 4, v. 5, p. 597; 14 Jan., 1846, c. 4, s. 1, v. 9, p. 3; 19 Jan., 1849, c. 20, s. 1, v. 9, p. 341; 3 Mar., 1873, c. 226, s. 3, v. 17, p. 508.)

This section has been amended with reference to the salary of the Commissioner.

Sec. 471. [Duties of Commissioner.] The Commissioner of Pensions shall perform, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, such duties in the execution of the various pension and bounty-land laws as may be prescribed by the President.—(2 Mar., 1833, c. 54, s. 1, v. 4, pp. 619, 622; 3 Mar., 1835, c. 46, s. 2, v. 4, p. 779; 3 Mar., 1837, c. 43, s. 2, v. 5, p. 187; 4 Mar., 1840, c. 4, s. 2, v. 5, p. 369; 4 Mar., 1840, c. 4, s. 4, v. 5, p. 370; 20 Jan., 1843, c. 4, s. 2, v. 5, p. 597; 19 Jan., 1877, c. 27, v. 19, p. 224.)

Service pensions to disabled enlisted men are to be granted under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. (Secs. 4756-4757, R. S.)

Jurisdiction, Commissioner of Pensions.—Requests for information concerning pensions should be addressed to the Commissioner of Pensions, under whose jurisdiction lies the authority of granting pensions to claimants and deciding questions of law and fact relative thereto. (File 26250-709:1, Jan. 5, 1916; see also file 26510-1247.)

The law (act of May 11, 1912, 37 Stat., 112) requires proof of the length of service of pension claimants to be made "according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide." This language is similar to that contained in the act of August 5, 1892, under which it was held by the Interior Department (16 P. D., 492, 493) that evidence as to whether a person rendered the required service "must be considered and passed upon by the Commissioner of Pensions, subject only to the supervisory jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior;" that where the evidence concerning claimant's length of service is indefinite and contradictory, "the record is not conclusive either as to the length or character of the employment;" and that "the fact of such service, or employment, may be proved by any competent witness, whether officer, enlisted man, or civilian." (File 26510-1214, Sept. 2, 1915.)

The exclusive jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions to determine all such questions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, was again expressed by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior (18 P. D., 480) as follows: "It is the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to judge and determine all applications for pensions and to construe and interpret all questions which may arise as to the construction of the several acts of Congress relating to pensions; and said officer is the exclusive judge of the law and the facts in all cases within the scope of his authority, subject only to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Thus, acting under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions constitutes a special tribunal for the adjudication of pension claims, and his judgments, awards, and decrees in such claims are final; they are in the nature of judicial decrees which necessarily conclude the rights of all persons within the scope of his authority." See also 19 P. D., 269, 272, and cases there cited. (File 26510-1214, Sept. 2, 1915.)

In 19 P. D., 188, the decision of the War Department that the death of a soldier occurred in line of duty was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions. On appeal, the action of the Commissioner of Pensions was reversed by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who, nevertheless, stated: "This department does not—can not, under the law—accept the conclusion that this soldier was in line of duty when he was killed merely because the War Department so holds. It does, however, upon the facts in the case, conclude that * * * he is held for pensionable purposes to have been in line of duty when he met his death." (File 26510-1214, Sept. 2, 1915.)

In answer to inquiries, the Navy Department should furnish the Commissioner of Pensions with all facts of record bearing upon the service of claimants, leaving the determination of doubtful questions and the drawing of inferences from such facts to the jurisdiction of the Pension Bureau, which is claimed by the Interior Department in the decisions above cited to be exclusive. The law, as interpreted by the Interior Department, having made it the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions and his superiors to decide all questions of law and fact which may be involved in pension claims, the Navy Department should not be called upon to render an "opinion" upon such questions for the information or guidance of another department of the Government which claims that its jurisdiction thereof is exclusive. (File 26510-1214, Sept. 2, 1915.)

Where the records are incomplete, the establishment therefrom of a definite date when an enlisted man should be regarded as having been discharged from the Navy during the Civil War "would at best be merely a matter of conjecture." Whether or not such man was discharged, and if so, on what date, is a question of fact which may be established by competent evidence in any case in which it becomes necessary to decide such question. However, where a claim is filed and pending in the Bureau of Pensions, this does not present a case pending before the Navy Department which requires a decision of this question, but is a case requiring determination thereof by the Bureau of Pensions. Accordingly, held that the Navy Department can not with propriety render a decision as to the date when said man should be regarded as having been discharged from the Navy for pension purposes, first, because the records of the Navy Department do not disclose this fact; second, because the evidence submitted on this point is contradictory; third, because the determination of this question, upon the facts shown by the records of the Navy and Treasury Departments and evidence submitted by the claimant, is a question which, under the law as interpreted by the Interior Department, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions, subject only to the direction of his official superiors. (File 26510-1214, Sept. 2, 1915. In this connection, see War Department Circular of Nov. 2, 1901, publishing decision of the Secretary of War (Mr. Root) concerning the powers of the Secretary of War and the authority which had been attempted to be exercised by subordinate officers of other departments of reviewing and overruling the decisions of the Secretary of War upon military questions and matters arising in the administration of the War Department.)

The Secretary of the Navy and not the Secretary of the Interior has exclusive jurisdiction to determine whether applicants are entitled to pensions under sections 4756 and 4757, Revised Statutes; the Commissioner of Pensions in making payments under said sections acts only in a ministerial capacity; it is immaterial whether he concurs or differs in such judgments as may be arrived at by the Secretary of the Navy. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 127, affirmed Op. Atty. Gen., Nov. 7, 1917, file 26510-1022:11; see also 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 268, and C. M. O. 37, 1918, p. 20.)

Sec. 512. [Returns Office.] The Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time provide a proper apartment, to be called the Returns Office, in which he shall cause to be filed the returns of contracts made by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior, and shall appoint a clerk of the first class to attend to the same. [See §§ 3744-3747].—(2 June, 1862, c. 93, s. 4, v. 2, p. 412.)

Contracts made by or under the Secretary of the Navy shall be reduced to writing, signed by the contracting parties, and copy thereof filed, by the officer making and signing the contract, in the Returns Office within 30 days, together with all bids, offers, proposals and advertisements relating thereto, and affidavit of the officer making the return. (Secs. 3744-3745, R. S.) Time may be extended to 90 days in discretion of Secretary of the Navy. (Act of June 15, 1917, 40 Stat., 198.)

Copies of returns of contracts, certified and authenticated under the seal of the Interior Department, shall be evidence in prosecutions against officers for falsely swearing to returns. (Sec. 888, R. S.)

Failure of any officer to make return as required is punishable by fine and imprisonment. (Sec. 3746, R. S.)

Secretary of the Navy shall furnish printed instructions and blank forms of contracts and affidavits to officers authorized to make contracts. (Sec. 3747, R. S.)

The Secretary of the Interior has no jurisdiction over the contracts entered into by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy because of the fact that returns are to be made to an office in his department. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.)

It is the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to call apparent violations of section 3746, Revised Statutes, to the attention of the Department of Justice in order that, if the law has been violated, appropriate criminal proceedings may be instituted for its enforcement. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.)

The duty rests upon each head of department to reduce to writing and make a proper return to the Returns Office of all contracts made by him referred to in section 3744, Revised Statutes. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.)

Sufficiency of return.—The return made by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, stating that there were excepted therefrom "certain plans that are confidential and can not be divulged at this time without detriment to the public interests," is a sufficient compliance with the law. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.)

Confidential plans.—Section 3744, Revised Statutes, should not be construed as requiring the disclosure of plans that are confidential and can not be divulged without detriment to the public interests, notwithstanding such plans form part of the contract by express stipulation contained therein. It is manifest that if the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy were required in making returns of contracts made by them for the construction of things authorized for the national defense, such as vessels of war, fortifications, armor and armament, to accompany such contracts with copies of plans and specifications, secrets pertaining to the national defense would be exposed to the public view. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.)

Sec. 513. [Clerk to file returns.] The clerk of the Returns Office shall file all returns made to the Office, so that the same may be of easy access, keeping all returns made by the same officer in the same place, and numbering them in the order in which they are made.—(2 June, 1862, c. 93, s. 4, v. 12, p. 412.)

Sec. 514. [Indexes.] The clerk of the Returns Office shall provide and keep an index-book, with the names of the contracting parties, and the number of each contract opposite to the names; and shall submit the index-book and returns to any person desiring to inspect it.—(2 June, 1862, c. 93, s. 4, v. 12, p. 412.)

Sec. 515. [Copies of returns.] The clerk of the Returns Office shall furnish copies of such returns to any person paying therefor at the rate of five cents for every one hundred words, to which copies certificates shall be appended in every case by the clerk making the same, attesting their correctness, and that each copy so certified is a full and complete copy of the return.—(2 June, 1862, c. 93, s. 4, v. 12, p. 412.)

761. Summary hearing; disposition of party.

Sec. 751. [Courts authorized to issue writ.] The Supreme Court and the circuit and district courts shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus.— (24 Sept., 1789, c. 20, s. 14, v. 1, p. 81; 10 Apr., 1869, c. 22, s. 2, v. 16, p. 44; 2 Mar., 1833, c. 57, s. 7, v. 4, p. 634; 5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385; 29 Aug., 1842, c. 257, s. 1, v. 5, p. 539; *U. Circuit courts were abolished and their powers and duties transferred to the district courts by the Judicial Code, act of March 3, 1911, sections 289-291 (36 Stat., 1167).

Due process of law denied accused, habeas corpus proceedings as remedy—see note to Constitution, fifth amendment, under "VI. Remedy when Due Process Denied."

Power of Federal courts to order release of person held by State authorities—see note to section 753, Revised Statutes, and to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 13, under “III. Jurisdiction of Civil Authorities.”

Power to review proceedings of courts-martial by habeas corpus—see note to section 753 Revised Statutes, and to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 14, under “III. Finality of court-martial proceedings.”

State courts without jurisdiction to order release of persons held by authority of United States—see note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 13, under “III. Jurisdiction of Civil Authorities.”

Suspension of privilege of writ of habeas corpus—see Constitution, Article I, section 9, clause 2, and note thereto.

The writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, which is the ordinary writ of habeas corpus, is the written order of a judge or court of competent jurisdiction, addressed to a person who is alleged to be restraining another of his liberty without authority of law, requiring the speedy production in court of the party restrained, together with a return or statement setting forth the true cause of such restraint. (See note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9, clause 2.)

The writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum is the judicial process issued to the officer in charge of a prison, commanding the production in court of a prisoner in his custody for the purpose of having such prisoner testify as a witness in a case there pending. (See note to sec. 753, R. S.)

Under section 876, Revised Statutes, a writ of subpoena in a criminal case will run into any district; and it is held that the writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum will run where a subpoena runs, it being but a substitute for a subpoena. (12 Comp. Dec., 538.)

Sec. 752. [Judges authorized to grant writ.] The several justices and judges of the said courts, within their respective jurisdictions, shall have power to grant writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of an inquiry into the cause of restraint of liberty.—(24 Sept., 1789, c. 20, s. 14, v. 1, p. 81; 10 Apr., 1869, c. 22, s. 2, v. 16, p. 44; 2 Mar., 1833, c. 57, s. 7, v. 4, p. 634; 5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385; 29 Aug., 1842, c. 257, s. 1, v. 5, p. 539.)

“Within their respective jurisdictions.”—Where the party is alleged to be unlawfully restrained of his liberty in a distant possession of the United States (island of Guam), by or under authority of a naval officer serving as governor thereof, a writ of habeas corpus can not be directed to the Secretary of the Navy commanding him to produce such party in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in order that the court may inquire into the grounds of the detention. The prisoner not being in the actual custody of the Secretary of the Navy, jurisdiction to issue the writ can not be conferred upon the court by the allegation that the Secretary of the Navy has the final control over his imprisonment. Even though the court were authorized to inquire into the grounds of detention, where the party is confined out of its jurisdiction, the writ could not be issued to the Secretary of the Navy, because the officers of the Navy are not his agents, but are the agents of the President, who is Commander in Chief; therefore the power to release the prisoner or to produce him in obedience to the writ would be in the President and not in the Secretary. (McGowan v. Moody, 22 App. D. C., 148.)

It is possible that the court might issue a writ of habeas corpus addressed to a person within its jurisdiction, commanding him to produce in court a person confined by his order and under his control outside of the court's jurisdiction, should it be made to appear that the party had been confined within the jurisdiction of the court and had been removed therefrom to evade its process. (McGowan v. Moody, 22 App. D. C., 148, reviewing authorities.)

The provisions of the Revised Statutes “contemplate a proceeding against some person who has the immediate custody of the party detained, with the power to produce the body of such party before the court or judge, that he may be liberated if no sufficient reason is shown to the contrary.” (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 574.)

“Restraint of liberty.”—“In the case of a man in the military or naval service, where he is, whether as an officer or a private, always more or less subject in his movements, by the very necessity of military rule and subordination, to the orders of his superior officer it should be made clear that some unusual restraint upon his liberty of personal movement exists to justify the issue of the writ; otherwise, every order of the superior officer directing the movements of his subordinate, which necessarily to some extent curtails his freedom of will, may be held to be a restraint of his liberty, and the party so ordered may seek relief from obedience by means of a writ of habeas corpus.” (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

“Something more than moral restraint is necessary to make a case of habeas corpus. There must be actual confinement, or the present means of enforcing it.” (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

An officer of the Navy, against whom charges had been preferred for trial by court-martial, was given the following order by the Secretary of the Navy: “You are placed under arrest and you will confine yourself to the limits of the city of Washington.” The facts showed that he was not under “physical restraint;” and that the above-mentioned order did not operate to restrain his movements any more than would have been the case had it directed him to remain in Washington to serve as a member of the court-martial. Held, that there was no such “restraint of liberty” in this case as to justify the use of habeas corpus; and that the fear of being forcibly arrested and returned should he leave the city of Washington, if sufficient to keep the officer within the limits of the city, "is a moral restraint, which concerns his own convenience, and in regard to which he exercises his own will." (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

"In case of a person who is going at large, with no one controlling or watching him, or detaining him, his body cannot be produced by the person to whom the writ is directed, unless by consent of the alleged prisoner, or by his capture and forcible traduction into the presence of the court." (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

Sec. 753. [Writ in case of prisoner in jail.] The writ of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to a prisoner in jail, unless where he is in custody under or by color of the authority of the United States, or is committed for trial before some court thereof; or is in custody for an act done or omitted in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof; or is in custody in violation of the Constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States; or, being a subject or citizen of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, is in custody for an act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, privilege, protection, or exemption claimed under the commission, or order, or sanction of any foreign state, or under color thereof, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations; or unless it is necessary to bring the prisoner into court to testify.—(24 Sept., 1789, c. 20, s. 14, v. 1, p. 81; 2 Mar., 1833, c. 57, s. 7, v. 4, p. 634; 5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385; 29 Aug., 1842, c. 257, s. 1, v. 5, p. 539; Ex parte Dorr, 3 How., 103; Ex parte Barnes, 1 Sprague, 133; Ex parte Bridges, 2 Woods, 428.)

I. PERSONS IN CUSTODY BY SENTENCE OF COURT-MARTIAL.

Jurisdiction of courts-martial subject to review.—"It cannot be doubted that the civil courts may in any case inquire into the jurisdiction of a court-martial, and if it appears that the party condemned was not amenable to its jurisdiction, may discharge him from the sentence. And, on the other hand, it is equally clear that by habeas corpus the civil courts exercise no supervisory or correcting power over the proceedings of a court-martial; and that no mere errors in their proceedings are open to consideration. The single inquiry, the test, is jurisdiction. That being established, the habeas corpus must be denied and the petitioner remanded. But wanting, it must be sustained and the petitioner discharged." (In re Grimley, 137 U. S., 147.)

An enlisted man of the Marine Corps is not amenable to trial by naval court-martial under section 1624 of the Revised Statutes (Articles for the Government of the Navy) where the offense charged was committed by him while detached for service with the Army, in accordance with section 1621, Revised Statutes, at which time he was subject to the Articles of War (sec. 1342, R. S.) and not subject to the laws or regulations for the government of the Navy. Accordingly, in habeas corpus proceedings the prisoner is entitled to discharge from custody under the sentence of the naval court-martial. (U. S. v. Waller, 225 Fed. Rep., 673; C. M. O. 31, 1915, p. 6. But see subsequent amendment to sec. 1342, R. S., art. 2 (c), made by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 651.)

Errors of procedure cannot be reviewed.—Where the military authorities proceed regularly within their jurisdiction, they cannot be interfered with "no matter what errors may be committed in the exercise of their lawful jurisdiction." (In re McVey, 23 Fed. Rep., 878.)

"Where a court-martial had jurisdiction to try petitioner for an offense against the naval regulations, and to impose sentence authorized thereby, a civil court in habeas corpus proceedings could only review the question of jurisdiction and could not pass on alleged errors of law committed by the court-martial or on the severity of the sentence imposed." (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

A statute providing that the judge advocate shall not be present during a closed session of the court, relates to procedure merely, and not to jurisdiction; and, while the rights of the accused are violated by allowing the judge advocate to be present for a short time during a closed session, the nonobservance of the statute is a matter for the revising military authorities, not for the civil courts in habeas corpus proceedings. (Ex parte Tucker, 212 Fed. Rep., 569. The statute referred to was the act of July 27, 1892, sec. 2, 27 Stat., 277, relating to Army courts-martial, and was erroneously cited by the court as applicable to naval courts-martial; there was no similar statute with reference to the Navy, but the Navy Regulations contained a provision to the same effect.)

Where a court-martial has jurisdiction over the person and subject matter, its proceedings can not be collaterally impeached for any mere error or irregularity, if there were such committed, within the sphere of its authority. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 23.)

"We must not be understood by anything we have said as intending in the slightest degree to impair the salutary rule that the sentences of courts-martial, when affirmed by the military tribunal of last resort, cannot be revised by the civil courts save only when void because of an absolute want of power, and not merely voidable because of the defective exercise of power possessed." (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 401.)

"Undoubtedly errors are committed by courts-martial which a civil tribunal would regard as sufficient grounds for a reversal of their judgments if it were sitting as an appellate court. But there is always this radical difference between an appellate court sitting for the correction of errors and a civil court into which the record of a court-martial is collateral—in the former there is not a failure of justice; the appellate court may reverse a judgment or prescribe another or award a new trial; in the latter the court must either give full effect to the sentence or pronounce it wholly void." (Swain v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 217; affirmed 165 U. S., 563.)

"Courts-martial are lawful tribunals, with authority to finally determine any case over which they have jurisdiction, and their proceedings, when confirmed as provided, are not open to review by the civil tribunals, except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the military court had jurisdiction of the person and subject matter, and whether, though having such jurisdiction, it had exceeded its powers in the sentence pronounced." (Carter v. Roberts, 177 U. S., 496; Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S., 697; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109.)

"With the sentences of courts-martial which have been convened regularly, and have proceeded legally, and by which punishments are directed, not forbidden by law, or which are according to the laws and customs of the sea, civil courts have nothing to do, nor are they in any way alterable by them. If it were otherwise, the civil courts would virtually administer the rules and articles of war, irrespective of those to whom that duty and obligation has been confided by the laws of the United States, from whose decisions no appeal or jurisdiction of any kind has been given to the civil magistrate or civil court." (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 55, 82.)

Sufficiency of charges and specifications can not be reviewed.—"Where a charge against a person tried by a military court is within the court's jurisdiction, and is authorized by the Army or Navy Regulations, the manner of setting out the offense is a matter of pleading, rather than jurisdiction, the sufficiency of which is for the exclusive determination of the court-martial." (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

corpus proceedings that the offense of embezzlement by an officer of the Army was erroneously charged as a violation of article 62 of the Articles of War (sec. 1342, R. S.), which provides for the punishment of offenses "to the prejudice of good order and military discipline." In overruling this contention it was stated by the Supreme Court:

"We should suppose that embezzlement would be detrimental to the service within the intent and meaning of the article, but it is enough that it was peculiarly for the court-martial to determine whether the crime charged was 'to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.' (Swain v. United States, 165 U. S., 553; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 178; United States v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84.) In Swain v. United States, which involved a sentence under the sixty-second Article of War, Mr. Justice Shiras, delivering the opinion, said: 'But, as the authorities heretofore cited show, this is the very matter that falls within the province of courts-martial, and in respect of which their conclusions cannot be controlled or reviewed by the civil courts. As was said in Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 178, "of questions not depending upon the construction of the statutes, but upon unwritten military law or usage, within the jurisdiction of courts-martial, military or naval officers, from their training and experience in the service, are more competent judges than the courts of common law . . . Under every system of military law for the government of either land or naval forces, the jurisdiction of courts-martial extends to the trial and punishment of acts of military or naval officers which tend to bring disgrace and reproach upon the service of which they are members, whether those acts are done in the performance of military duties, or in a civil position, or in a social relation, or in private business."'"

Sentence final when confirmed by the proper military authority.—In cases which do not extend to the loss of life, or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, the Secretary of the Navy is "the final reviewing authority provided by law to act upon records of courts-martial." (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322, 326.) Where the court-martial is ordered by the Secretary of the Navy, its sentence can not be carried into effect until confirmed by him (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 81); where ordered by an officer of the Navy vested with such authority, its sentence may be carried into execution on confirmation by such officer (sec. 1624, R. S., art. 53). Where the sentence extends to loss of life, or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, it can not be carried into execution until confirmed by the President. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 53.) In any of these cases, where the sentence has been so confirmed by the proper reviewing officer, "it becomes final, and must be executed, unless the President pardons the offender. It is in the nature of an appeal to the officer ordering the court, who is made by law the arbiter of the legality and propriety of the court's sentence. When confirmed, it is altogether beyond the jurisdiction or inquiry of any civil tribunal whatever, unless it shall be in a case in which the court had not jurisdiction over the subject matter or charge, or one in which, having jurisdiction over the subject matter, it has failed to observe the rules prescribed by the statute for its exercise." (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 81.)

"When affirmed by the military tribunal of last resort," the sentences of courts-martial can not be revised by the civil courts, "save only when void because of an absolute want of power." (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 380.)

The judgments of a court-martial when approved as required, rest on the same basis and are surrounded by the same considerations which give conclusiveness to the judgments of other legal tribunals. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 23.)

Where the sentence of a court-martial has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy, in a case not extending to loss of life or dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, it can not be revised by the civil courts on the ground that alleged errors of law were committed by the court-martial, or that the prisoner was harshly dealt with and a sentence of undue severity was imposed. (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

Excessive sentence not void.—"Under a writ of habeas corpus, the inquiry is not addressed to errors, but to the question whether the proceedings and judgment are nullities; and unless it appears that the judgment or sentence under which the prisoner is confined is void, he is not entitled to his discharge." Where a court "has jurisdiction of the person and the offense, the imposition of a sentence in excess of what the law permits, does not render the legal or authorized portion of the sentence void, but only leaves such part of it as may be in excess, open to question and attack." (U. S. v. Pridgeon, 153 U. S., 48; see also file 26287-1543; and G. C. M. Rec. No. 23271.)

The prisoner "cannot be discharged on habeas corpus until he has performed so much of the judgment, or served out so much of the sentence as it was within the power of the court to impose." (In re Swan, 150 U. S., 637, 653; U. S. v. Pridgeon, 153 U. S., 48.)

Discharge not required by subsequent change in party's status.—An officer convicted by court-martial and sentenced to dismissal and imprisonment, which sentence is duly approved by the President, can not be released from custody on habeas corpus on the ground that upon execution of the sentence of dismissal he ceased to be amenable to military jurisdiction and could not be held to serve his period of imprisonment. "Where the jurisdiction of the military court has attached in respect of an officer of the Army, this includes not only the power to hear and determine the case, but the power to execute and enforce the sentence." (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365.)

Where jurisdiction has attached, it can not be divested by mere subsequent change of status. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 383, citing Barrett v. Hopkins, 7 Fed. Rep., 312; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509; see also file 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911.)

II. PERSONS IN CUSTODY FOR ACT DONE IN PURSUANCE OF A LAW OF THE UNITED STATES.

Military guard charged with manslaughter.—There is no question that an act done by a soldier in the performance of his duty in the military service of the United States, is done in pursuance of a law of the United States, and so not within the jurisdiction of a State court to try. Accordingly, where a soldier on guard duty shot at an escaping prisoner, as required by the manual of guard duty, and killed a young woman pedestrian, there being no claim that the killing was intentional or that the guard acted maliciously or wantonly or otherwise than in good faith, held that the guard in shooting was acting in the supposed performance of his duty as a soldier, and was not subject to arrest and trial by the State authorities for manslaughter, even though it might have been more prudent for him to have exercised still greater care; and accordingly, the judge of a district court of the United States has authority under sections 752, 753, and 761 Revised Statutes, to inquire into the facts of the case and direct his release from the custody of the State authorities. (U. S. v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. Rep., 65; see also In re Fair, 100 Fed. Rep., 149.)

For other cases, see note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 13, under "III. Jurisdiction of Civil Authorities."

III. PERSONS IN CUSTODY IN VIOLATION OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Imprisonment without due process of law.—"It is open to the courts of the United States, upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus, to look beyond forms and inquire into the very substance of the matter, to the extent of deciding whether the prisoner has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law, and for this purpose to inquire into jurisdictional facts, whether they appear upon the record or not." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

One committed for refusing to incriminate himself, in the exercise of his right under the Constitution, should be released on habeas corpus. (Foot v. Buchanan, 113 Fed. Rep., 156.)

For other cases see note to Constitution, fifth amendment.

IV. BRINGING PRISONER INTO COURT TO TESTIFY.

Naval prisoners as witnesses or parties in civil courts.—"If the Federal or State authorities desire the attendance of a naval prisoner as a witness in a criminal case pending in a civil court, upon the submission of such a request to the Secretary of the Navy authority will be given in a proper case for the production of the man in court without resort being had to a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum." (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, par. 16, citing file 26251-8684:2, June 10, 1914; 26276-93, May 29, 1914; 26276-40, June 10, 1912; 26276-33, June 5, 1911; 26276-17, Nov. 10, 1909; etc.)

However, the Navy Department "will not authorize the attendance of a naval prisoner in a Federal or State court, either as a party or as a witness in private litigation pending before such court, as in such cases the court may grant a postponement or a continuance of the trial; but the department will allow the deposition of such naval prisoner to be taken in the case." (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, par. 16, citing file 26251-4913:1, Oct. 12, 1911; 26276-36, Dec. 9, 1911.)

Sec. 754. [Application for writ.] Application for writ of habeas corpus shall be made to the court, or justice, or judge authorized to issue the same, by complaint in writing, signed by the person for whose relief it is intended, setting forth the facts concerning the detention of the party restrained, in whose custody he is detained, and by virtue of what claim or authority, if known. The facts set forth in the complaint shall be verified by the oath of the person making the application.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385.)

Averments of conclusions of law, inadequate.—"If the detention is claimed to be unlawful by reason of the invalidity of the process or proceedings under which the party is held in custody, copies of such process or proceedings must be annexed to or the essential parts thereof set out in the petition, and mere averments of conclusions of law are necessarily inadequate." (Creamer v. Washington, 168 U. S., 128. See also Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S., 231; Kohl v. Lehlback, 160 U. S., 293; Cuddy, Petitioner, 131, U. S., 280; Andersen v. Treat, 172 U. S., 24.)

Where a petition for habeas corpus alleges that the petitioner is the father of the person whose release is sought, and that such person, being between the ages of 18 and 21 years, entered into the United States Navy without the parent's consent, and is himself desirous of being released therefrom; and that, under the statutes of the United States in such case made and provided, the enlistment of such person was illegal and invalid: Held, That no issue as to the intoxication of the recruit at the time of enlistment is presented, especially in view of the fact that the Revised Statutes, section 1624, article 19, requires the dishonorable dismissal of an officer who knowingly enlists an intoxicated person. Held, also, That no issue as to intoxication at the time of enlistment being presented by the pleadings, the fact that the recruit was permitted, apparently without objection, to testify to such intoxication, does not constrain the court on appeal to review the latter question. (Thomas v. Winne, 122 Fed. Rep., 395.)

Sec. 755. [Allowance and direction of writ.] The court, or justice, or judge to whom such application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto. The writ shall be directed to the person in whose custody the party is detained.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385; Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet., 193; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, (110).

Suspension of privilege of writ—see note to Constitution, Article I, section 9, clause 2.

The writ need not be awarded where it is obvious that, before a return to the writ can be made, or any other action can be taken, the restraint of which the petitioner complains would have terminated. (Ex parte Bacz, 177 U. S., 378.)

Persons confined by naval officers are not in the custody of the Secretary of the Navy so as to warrant the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus directed to him. (McGowan v. Moody, 22 App. D. C., 148; see note to sec. 752, R. S.)

"If the party is not in the custody of the officer to whom the writ is directed, he will so state in his return." (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, par. 7; see also file 26262-1665:41, Inc. 1, p. 26.)

Service of writ.—A writ of habeas corpus was issued by a Federal judge, directed to the commanding officer of the Arkansas, which vessel was under orders to sail from the navy yard, Norfolk, Va., on the morning that the writ was returnable. The writ was not served, but the United States marshal communicated with the commandant of the navy yard, who informed the commanding officer of the Arkansas by radiogram that the writ had been issued; whereupon the commanding officer delivered the party named therein to the commandant of the navy yard, and sailed in accordance with previous orders. Held, That the radiogram from the commandant was in no sense legal service on the commanding officer of the Arkansas of the writ of habeas corpus; however, the latter's action in delivering the party to the commandant, under the circumstances, was approved. (File 26522-26, Nov. 30, 1914.)

A writ of habeas corpus was issued by a United States judge, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, the commandant of the navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., "and any other person having custody of" the enlisted man named in said writ. The writ was delivered at the naval prison, navy yard, New York, about 3.45 p. m. The prisoner had been transferred under guard from said prison at about 3 p. m. the same day. The original of the writ was then served upon the prisoner's guard, while waiting on the Bay State Line pier for instructions just prior to leaving with his prisoner for the naval prison, Portsmouth, N. H. The circumstances were reported to the commandant, navy yard, New York who directed that the guard carry out his orders to deliver the prisoner at Portsmouth, which was done. The matter being brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Navy, orders were immediately issued for the return of the prisoner to New York and his production in court in answer to the writ of habeas corpus, the commandant's attention being invited to the erroneous procedure adopted by him in directing the guard to proceed with his prisoner to Portsmouth after a writ of habeas corpus had been served upon said guard; the fact that a writ of habeas corpus issued by a Federal court must always be obeyed; and the unnecessary annoyance and expense caused by the erroneous procedure in this case. (File 26522-25.)

Sec. 756. [Time of return.] Any person to whom such writ is directed shall make due return thereof within three days thereafter, unless the party be detained beyond the distance of twenty miles; and if beyond that distance and not beyond a distance of a hundred miles, within ten days; and if beyond the distance of a hundred miles, within twenty days.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385.)

Full time permitted.—"The officer upon whom such a writ of habeas corpus is served can not be required to obey same in any shorter period after the service of the writ than that specified in the above section of the Revised Statutes, even though the writ should in terms require that the person named therein be produced 'forthwith,' or 'immediately,' or at a specified time." (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, par. 5, citing Ex parte Baez, 177 U. S., 389, and United States v. Bollman, 24 Fed. Cas., 1190.)

Commanding officers of vessels or shore stations of the Navy or Marine Corps are forbidden to deliver any person in their custody or under their control to the civil authorities, in obedience to writs of habeas corpus, without first communicating with the Secretary of the Navy and awaiting his instructions in the premises. "The Secretary of the Navy will promptly issue the necessary orders in the case or make request upon the Attorney-General, in accordance with Title VIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to furnish such legal assistance to the commanding officer concerned as the interests of the United States involved in such case may demand." Should instructions for any reason not be received by the commanding officer from the Secretary of the Navy by the last day of the period allowed by law for making return, he will comply with sections 757 and 758 of the Revised Statutes, and request the court to delay the hearing of the cause for the full period of five days allowed by section 759, Revised Statutes, so that further opportunity may be afforded for the receipt of instructions in the premises from the Secretary of the Navy. (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914.)

of the War of 1812, for refusing obedience to a writ of habeas corpus, which fine he paid. (See Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158, 194, noted under Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 11, "Effect of martial law.")

An officer of the Army refused during the Civil War to receive service of a writ of habeas corpus issued by the Chief Justice of the United States on the ground that the privilege of the writ had been suspended by him, under authority from the President. The chief justice held that he was without power to proceed further in the premises, and that it became the duty of the President under the Constitution, Article II, section 3, to come to the aid of the judicial authority when resisted by a force too strong to be overcome, assisting it to execute the process and enforce its judgments. (Ex parte Merryman, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9487; see note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9, clause 2, and Art. II, sec. 3.)

When service of the writ is prevented by force, the court does not perceive that anything more can be done. "The court deeply regrets that officers of the United States should obstruct process out of a court of the United States, especially this process;" nevertheless, "those officers are at present beyond the control of the law, and the court has not the command of the physical force needful to effect a service of this writ at the present time. Let the writ be placed on file, to be served when and where service may become practicable." (In re Winder, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17867.)

An order from the War Department to a United States marshal not to obey a writ of habeas corpus is no protection to such officer, who is answerable for contempt of court for refusing obedience to the writ. (Ex parte Field, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4761.)

Sec. 757. [Form of return.] The person to whom the writ is directed shall certify to the court, or justice, or judge before whom it is returnable the true cause of the detention of such party.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385.)

"If the party is not in the custody of the officer to whom the writ is directed, he will so state in his return." (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, par. 7; see also file 26262-1625:41, Inc. 1, p. 26.)

The following is a form of return which has been used in such a case (see citation last above noted):

"Return of Respondent.

"U. S. S. ———,

"Hampton Roads, Va., Nov. 13, 1912.

"In re W. W. D. ———, Chief Commissary Steward, U. S. Navy.

 "To the Honorable The Judge of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Virginia:

"The respondent, Captain J. A. H. ———, U. S. Navy, having been served a writ for the production of W. W. D. ———, respectfully makes return and states that the said W. W. D. ——— is not now under his command.

"J. A. H. ———,

"Captain, U. S. Navy,

"Commanding U. S. S. ———."

For form of return filed in the case of an officer of the Navy who applied for a writ of habeas corpus while under arrest awaiting trial by court-martial, but not in actual custody, merely being confined "to the limits of the city," in which such trial was to be had, see Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 567.

The following form of return has been prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy for the guidance of officers on whom writs of habeas corpus are served by Federal courts or judges (see Naval Courts and Boards, 1917):

"In the District Court of the United States for the (Eastern) District of (Virginia).

"In the Matter of } Return of re-A ——— F. B. ———. } spondent.

"Upon application for writ of Habeas Corpus.

"To the Honorable G ——— H. R. ———, Judge of said Court (or To the said Court):

"1. Comes now M ——— H. C. ———, captain, U. S. Navy (or U. S. Marine Corps), commanding officer of the ———,
 and by way of return to the writ of habeas corpus issued herein, states, in conformity with the provisions of section 757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as follows, to wit:

"2. That the said A ——— F. B. ——— enlisted in the United States Navy (or in the United States Marine Corps) as ——— on the ——— day of ———, 19—, at (Boston, Massachusetts), for a term of four years from that date.

"3. That the said A ——— F. B. ———, at the time of his enlistment as aforesaid, stated on oath that he was born on the ——— day of ———, 1—, thus making him more than eighteen years of age, as will appear from a copy of the enlistment record of said A ——— F. B. ———, hereto attached as a part of this return; that since the enlistment of said A ——— F. B. ——— he has received pay and allowances from time to time thereunder; that on the ——— day of ———, 19—, the said A ——— F. B. ——— was detained and recommended for trial by general court-martial for fraudulent enlistment in the United States Navy, in violation of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, United States Statutes at Large, volume twenty-seven, page seven hundred and sixteen; and that said action was before the issuing of the writ herein.

"4. That the said A ——— F. B. ——— deserted from said United States Navy (or United States Marine Corps), at (Boston, Massachusetts), on the ——— day of ———, 19—, and remained absent in desertion until he was apprehended at (Norfolk, Virginia), on the ——— day of ———, 19—, and was thereupon committed to the custody of the respondent, as commanding officer of the ———; and that the said A ——— F. B. ——— was detained and recommended for trial by general court-martial for said offense of desertion in violation of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

"5. That the said A ——— F. B. ——— has been duly arraigned and tried for the said offenses before a general court-martial convened by order of the Secretary of the Navy (and is now held, awaiting the action of the convening authority upon the proceedings and findings of said court) (or was convicted thereof by said court and was sentenced to ———, which sentence was approved) (or was mitigated to ———, and approved) on the ——— day of ———, 19—, by the Secretary of the Navy, as required by article 53, section
 1624, of the Revised Statutes of the United States. (A copy of the order promulgating said sentence and the action of the Secretary of the Navy thereon is hereto attached.)

"6. This respondent here produces in court the body of the said A ——— F.
 B. ———, as commanded by the writ of habeas corpus issued in this matter as aforesaid, but he prays that your honor (or this honorable court) will refuse to discharge the said A ——— F. B. ———, and will return and remand him to the custody of this respondent.

"Respectfully submitted.

"M ——— H. C. ———,

"Captain, U. S. Navy,

"Commanding ———.

"———, 19—.

"Var. 1.—If the offense is not fraudulent enlistment by a minor under 18 years of age, omit paragraph 3 above.

"Var. 2.—If the offense is fraudulent enlistment by a minor under 18 years of age without desertion, omit paragraph 4 above.

"Var. 3.—If the offense is neither fraudulent enlistment by a minor under 18 years of age, nor desertion, omit paragraphs 3 and 4 above and substitute an appropriate description of the offense for which the accused is detained, and state whether or not he has been recommended for trial by general court-martial for said offense.

"Var. 4.—If the accused has not been tried by general court-martial, omit para-

Sec. 758. [Body of party to be produced.] The person making the return shall at the same time bring the body of the party before the judge who granted the writ.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385.)

See note to section 756, Revised Statutes.

"In case of a person who is going at large, with no one controlling or watching him, or detaining him, his body cannot be produced by the person to whom the writ is directed, unless by consent of the alleged prisoner, or by his capture and forcible traduction into the presence of the court." In such a case there is nothing to support a habeas corpus. (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564; see note to sec. 752, R. S.)

"If the party is not in the custody of the officer to whom the writ is directed, he will so state in his return." (See note to sec. 757, R. S.)

Sec. 759. [Day for hearing.] When the writ is returned, a day shall be set for the hearing of the cause, not exceeding five days thereafter, unless the party petitioning requests a longer time.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1 v. 14, p. 385.)

See note to section 756, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 760. [Denial of facts in the return; amendments.] The petitioner or the party imprisoned or restrained may deny any of the facts set forth in the return, or may allege any other facts that may be material in the case. Said denials or allegations shall be under oath. The return and all suggestions made against it may be amended, by leave of the court, or justice, or judge, before or after the same are filed, so that thereby the material facts may be ascertained.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385.)

Sec. 761. [Summary hearing; disposition of party.] The court, or justice, or judge shall proceed in a summary way to determine the facts of the case, by hearing the testimony and arguments, and thereupon to dispose of the party as law and justice require.—(5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1, v. 14, p. 385.)

Summary hearing.—"The injunction to hear the case summarily, and thereupon 'dispose of the party as law and justice require' does not deprive the court of discretion as to the time and mode in which it will exert the powers conferred upon it." (Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S., 251.)

Issues of fact.—This section confers express power upon a Federal judge in habeas corpus proceedings to pass upon questions of fact; accordingly, where a soldier was arrested by the civil authorities of a State upon a charge of manslaughter growing out of the killing by him of a young woman while shooting at an escaping prisoner, Held, that the Federal judge was empowered in habeas corpus proceedings to inquire into the facts and decide that the soldier was free from blame and therefore not subject to prosecution in the State courts for manslaughter. (United States v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. Rep., 65; see also, note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 13, under "III. Jurisdiction of Civil Authorities.")

[However, when the party is held pursuant to the laws and regulations governing the Navy, the only "facts" which the civil courts may inquire into on habeas corpus are whether the naval authorities have jurisdiction. (See note to sec. 753, R. S.) Where he is held pursuant to the finding of a court-martial the sufficiency of the evidence is no part of such facts. (See In re Stupp, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13563.)]

Disposition of party upon subsequent change of status.—A writ of habeas corpus was issued to determine the legality of the confinement of a Chinaman held by the immigration authorities upon order of deportation signed by the "Acting Secretary" of Labor, it being contended that such officer was not in fact the Acting Secretary at the time the order was signed, and that his order was therefore illegal and void. While the case was pending the Secretary of Labor personally reviewed the deportation proceedings and affirmed the previous order signed by the "Acting Secretary." Thereupon the court discharged the writ and remanded the petitioner to the custody of the immigration authorities, holding that in view of the action personally taken by the Secretary there remained "nothing at issue," and that "courts are not organized to do idle things, but to determine issues presented," and it was unnecessary to examine into the right of the "Acting Secretary." (Ex parte Ching Hing, 224 Fed. Rep., 261.)

Disposition of party claiming discharge from Navy on ground of fraudulent enlistment.—It is the policy of the Navy Department, upon return of the writ in fraudulent enlistment cases to request the court to make the order of discharge, if granted, to take effect only after trial and punishment by naval court-martial for the statutory offense involved. For cases where this request has been granted and full statement of this policy, see file 2757-8 of August 27, 1906. (In this connection see provision in the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 931), that any minor who fraudulently procures his enlistment in the Navy by making false oath as to age "shall, upon request of either parent, or, in case of their death, by the legal guardian, be released from service in the Navy, upon payment of full cost of first outfit, unless, in any given case, the Secretary, in his discretion, shall relieve said recruit of such payment.")

A minor who enlists while under the statutory age without the required consent of his parents or guardian is "not only de facto, but de jure, a soldier—amenable to military jurisdiction," and can not secure his discharge upon habeas corpus proceedings instituted by himself. The statutory requirement of consent in such cases "is for the benefit of the parent or guardian. It means simply that the Government will not disturb the control of the parent or guardian over his or her child without consent. It gives the right to such parent or guardian to invoke the aid of the court and secure the restoration of a minor to his or her control; but it gives no privilege to the minor." (In re Morrissey, 137 U. S., 157; Solomon v. Davenport, 87 Fed. Rep., 318.)

Since the decision of the Supreme Court in Morrissey's case (above noted) it is the settled law that the enlistment of a minor in the Army or Navy without the written consent of his parents or guardian and against the prohibition of the statutes of the United States is not void, but voidable only; that it is good as to the minor but voidable at the instance of the parent or guardian. But notwithstanding such enlistment is voidable, the civil courts on habeas corpus will not interfere to discharge one who is thus enlisted, "if at time of presentation of petition for the writ he has been arrested and is being held on any charge cognizable by a military court." It does not follow from the fact that such an enlistment is voidable that the enlisted minor may obtain immunity from prosecution for an offense committed by him against the law of the United States. (In re Scott, 144 Fed. Rep., 79; file 2757-4. In this case the minor was arrested on a charge of fraudulent enlistment preferred against him by his commanding officer to the Commandant of the Marine Corps. While said charges were pending and undetermined the minor's father applied for a writ of habeas corpus; the court denied the petition without prejudice to the petitioner to renew same at the termination of the military proceedings and at the expiration of the sentence, if any be imposed thereunder; see also Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696; 16 Ann. Cas., 127, file 5956-6; United States v. Pendleton, 167 Fed. Rep., 690.)

Where the Secretary of the Navy preferred charges against a minor after hearing had been had upon a writ of habeas corpus granted upon petition of minor's father to inquire into the legality of his enlistment, and while the court had the matter under advisement before rendering a decision, Held, that although the enlistment was voidable at the instance of minor's father, who had not consented thereto, nevertheless he could not be discharged from the custody of the naval authorities on writ of habeas corpus until he had answered and satisfied the charges pending against him. (U. S. v. Reaves, 126 Fed. Rep., 127; file 15204. In this case the minor, after fraudulently enlisting and receiving pay from the Government, deserted; was arrested by the civil authorities and held as a deserter; his father sued out a writ of habeas corpus; the chief of police made return on Jan. 5, 1903, the hearing of which was set for Jan. 15, 1903, and the matter held under advisement until Feb. 16, 1903. In the meantime, Feb. 12, 1903, the Secretary of the Navy preferred charges against the minor for desertion and fraudulent enlistment, which were served upon the prisoner. His discharge was ordered by the circuit court (121 Fed. Rep., 848), but on appeal the decision was reversed.)

A minor under 18 years of age enlisted in the Navy without the consent of his parents; deserted; was arrested by the civil authorities on a charge of desertion; while confined for safe-keeping his father applied for his discharge on habeas corpus. Held, that the minor was subject to arrest and punishment for desertion and other infractions of the rules and regulations of the Navy, and can not be discharged on writ of habeas corpus pending proceedings against him therefor. (Ex parte Rock, 171 Fed. Rep., 240; see also In re Lessard, 134 Fed. Rep., 305.)

A minor under the age of 18 years enlisted in the Navy without the consent of his parents, who petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus. In the meantime, prior to the suing out of the writ, said minor was "detained and recommended" for trial by court-martial for fraudulent enlistment. Upon the hearing it did not appear that charges had been preferred against him. Held, that the petitioners are entitled to the discharge of the minor on habeas corpus, and the right can not be denied because of contemplated or possible court-martial proceedings against the minor for fraudulent enlistment, especially where between the time demand for his discharge was made by his parents of the naval authorities and the procuring of the writ, several months elapsed, during which no proceedings were taken against him. (Ex parte Bakley, 148 Fed. Rep., 56; affirmed Dillingham v. Bakley, 152 Fed. Rep., 1022; file 5506-5; compare Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696, 16 Ann. Cas., 127, file 5956-6, which arose in the same jurisdiction, and in which the minor was remanded to the custody of his commanding officer; in the latter case it was shown beyond question that the minor was being held for trial by court-martial for desertion.)

An enlisted man arrested by a civil officer as a deserter from the Navy will not be discharged on habeas corpus upon the allegation that he was intoxicated at the time of enlistment. "It seems to me illogical to say that a man can commit a crime and when arrested obtain a discharge on the ground that the original enlistment was not regular or proper." (In re Hamilton and Carroll, Superior Court, Fulton County (Ga.), Atlanta Circuit, file 7969 and 7988-04; see also In re McVey, 23 Fed. Rep., 878.)

An enlisted soldier can not avoid a charge of desertion by showing at the time when he voluntarily enlisted he had passed the age at which the law allows recruits to be enlisted for the Army. (In re Grimley, 137 U. S., 147.)

Minors between the ages of 18 and 21 years may be enlisted in the Navy without the consent of their parents or guardians, being included in the term "other persons" in section 1418, Revised Statutes, as amended. (Thomas v. Winne, 122 Fed. Rep., 395; see also In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369; In re Norton, 93 Fed. Rep., 606.) The age at which an infant shall be competent to do any acts or perform any duties, civil or military, depends wholly upon the legislature. (In re Morrissey, 137 U. S., 157.)

Disposition of party claiming discharge from Marine Corps on ground of fraudulent enlistment.—The Marine Corps is not an independent organization, but is part of the Navy rather than of the Army; and sections 1418-1419, Revised Statutes, which, taken together, authorize the enlistment of minors over 18 years of age to serve in the Navy without the consent of their parents or guardians, apply to enlistments in the Marine Corps as well; so that a minor who has enlisted in the Marine Corps when over 18 years of age will not be discharged from the custody of the officers of the Marine Corps in habeas corpus proceedings brought by the father, who did not consent to the enlistment. (Elliott v. Harris, 24 App. D. C., 11, following In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369, and overruling In re Shugrue, 3 Mackey (D. C.), 325, as being "in manifest conflict with the principle upon which the subsequent case of United States v. Dunn (120 U. S., 249) was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States." See also file 26251-6297:7, May 18, 1914, and 26251-6297:8, June 4, 1914. But see McCalla v. Facer (144 Fed. Rep., 61), in which the court approved and followed In re Shugrue, apparently overlooking the fact that said case had been overruled.)

Section 1117, Revised Statutes, providing that no person under 21 years of age shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States, refers exclusively to enlistments in the Army and does not include enlistments in the Navy or Marine Corps. (Elliott v. Harris 24 App. D. C., 11.)

As to status of Marine Corps, see note to section 1621, Revised Statutes.

Appeal from decision of court or judge granting writ.—It is required by regulations of the Navy Department (published in Naval Courts and Boards, 1917), that whenever an adverse decision is rendered in habeas corpus proceedings against any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps, such officer or counsel shall note an appeal pending instructions from the Navy Department, and shall immediately make report to the Judge Advocate General, forwarding to him direct a copy of the opinion of the court as soon as it can be obtained.

Insane persons in the Army and Navy lawfully committed by the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy to the Government Hospital for the Insane should continue to be held by the superintendent of that hospital until the court orders otherwise or until they are cured.

The United States attorney for the District of Columbia has been instructed to advise the Department of Justice of any proceedings through which such patients secure their release from the hospital, so that consideration can be given to the question of securing a review of the case by the court of appeals. In this way an authoritative ruling can be had which will set at rest any question as to the right of the superintendent to hold persons after their discharge from the Army or the Navy. (File 26251-4927-10, July 8, 1911, quoting letter from Department of Justice to the Interior Department, dated Mar. 28, 1912.)

Arrest of petitioner after discharge.—

An enlisted man of the Marine Corps, discharged on habeas corpus proceedings, was afterwards arrested upon the charge of perjury in connection with his sworn statements at time of enlistment and held for trial in the civil courts of the United States at the instance of the Navy Department. (File 5939-1, Oct. 12, 1906.) Later the prosecution was discontinued, because of the peculiar circumstances of hardship which it involved, the Secretary of the Navy concurring in the recommendation of the United States attorney to this effect. (File 5939-7, Feb. 18, 1907.) In this connection see U. S. v. Chung Shee (71 Fed. Rep., 277), holding that the discharge of the party upon habeas corpus is res judicata as to the issues of law and fact involved, and that he is not subject to rearrest for the same cause. Compare In re White (45 Fed. Rep., 237) and Ex parte Kaine (14 Fed. Cas., No. 7597), the latter holding that a decision upon one writ refusing the discharge of a prisoner is no bar to the issuing of any number of other successive writs by any court or magistrate having jurisdiction, and accordingly that the decision of a circuit court of the United States dismissing the writ and remanding the prisoner was no bar to an inquiry by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States upon a habeas corpus issued by him into the legality of the detention of the prisoner. (Upon question whether decision adverse to petitioner prevents a new petition being filed for the same cause, where an appeal was not taken see King v. McLean Asylum, 64 Fed. Rep., 331.)

The Navy Department has authority under the law to recommit an officer to the Government Hospital for the Insane after his discharge therefrom has been ordered by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in accordance with the finding of a jury that he is of sound mind. However, to avoid placing itself in the position of disregarding the court's action sufficient time should elapse and new evidence be obtained, so that a second habeas corpus proceeding could be successfully met. (File 8528-327, Apr. 18, 1911.)

Where the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia decided that an officer of the Navy was entitled to his discharge from the Government Hospital for the Insane but the chief justice agreed to withhold the signing of an order until the Navy Department could be communicated with and be heard on the subject, the Navy Department ordered the officer in question to a naval hospital for treatment, and decided to take no further action in the case. (File 8528-327:2, Jan. 31, 1911.)

CHAPTER SIXTEEN.

WITNESSES' FEES.

Sec.

848. Witnesses' fees.

849. No officer of court to have witness fees.

850. Witnesses in Government service allowed actual expenses.

851. Witnesses transported on Government or private vessel.

Sec. 848. [Witnesses' fees.] For each day's attendance in court, or before any officer pursuant to law, one dollar and fifty cents, and five cents a mile for going from his place of residence to the place of trial or hearing, and five cents a mile for returning. When a witness is subpœnaed in more than one cause between the same parties, at the same court, only one travel fee and one per diem compensation shall be allowed for attendance. Both shall be taxed in the case first disposed of, after which the per diem attendance fee alone shall be taxed in the other cases in the order in which they are disposed of.

When a witness is detained in prison for want of security for his appearance, he shall be entitled, in addition to his subsistence, to a compensation of one dollar a day. [See §§ 879, 881.](—(26 Feb., 1853, c. 80, s. 3, v. 10, p. 167; 1 May, 1876, c. 88, v. 19, p. 41; Dennis v. Eddy, 12 Blatch., 195.)

Witnesses before naval courts are to be allowed fees and mileage at the rates provided for witnesses in the United States district courts for the State, Territory, or district in which such naval court is held. (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 12, 35 Stat., 622.)

Witness fees allowed for giving depositions for use in State courts—see section 874, Revised Statutes.

Witness fees allowed for giving depositions for use before departments in pending claims—see section 185, Revised Statutes.

Witnesses in Government employ—see section 850, Revised Statutes.

Witnesses in United States courts in Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Idaho, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona are allowed $3 a day during attendance and necessary travel time; and 15 cents a mile for travel by stage or private conveyance; and 5 cents a mile for other travel. (Act May 27, 1908, sec. 1, 35 Stat., 377.)

Witnesses in courts in District of Columbia are allowed $1.25 a day and 5 cents a mile coming and returning when summoned from without the District. (Sec. 1114, Code, D. C., act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1367.)

Courts-martial.—Section 1202, Revised Statutes, which authorizes judge advocates of Army courts-martial "to issue like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which courts of criminal jurisdiction within the State, Territory, or District where such military courts shall be ordered to sit, may lawfully issue," operates to make applicable to such courts-martial the provisions of section 848, Revised Statutes, fixing the amount of fees and mileage of such witnesses before courts of the United States. As there is but one statute upon the subject of witnesses attending in court or before an officer, I feel compelled to hold that the words "in court" are broad enough to include a court-martial, and that the analogy existing between what is exacted of a witness, both in the matter of attendance upon and the giving of testimony, whether in a civil or criminal court on the one hand or in a court-martial on the other, is so great, coupled with the fact that there is but one statute, as above stated, regulating the compensation of witnesses in attendance upon any court or any officer pursuant to law, that I see no way of escape from the conclusion that a witness in attendance upon a court-martial shall be paid the same, and no more than is paid to a witness in attendance upon a civil or criminal court. Since there is a statute regulating the amount of per diem and traveling expenses of a witness in attendance "in court," it seems clear to my mind that that shall be made applicable to cover the compensation of a witness "in a court-martial" rather than leave it to the discretion of even so high an authority as that of the honorable Secretary of War. (1 Comp. Dec., 79. In this case the War Department took the position that the appropriation for compensation of witnesses attending courts-martial is to be expended under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, and the rate of compensation is a matter to be left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of War. The Comptroller took the view that there being a statute in force regulating the compensation of witnesses in attendance upon courts and before judges and others authorized to compel their attendance, it was applicable also to a witness compelled by process of law to attend before a court-martial; and accordingly concluded that civilian witnesses duly subpoenaed to attend before a court-martial are entitled only to such compensation as is paid to witnesses in attendance upon United States courts.)

For other cases, see below, "Expert witnesses"; and see note to section 850, Revised Statutes.

Departmental regulations govern the use of departmental appropriations, but do not apply to appropriations for expenses of witnesses, which are by law audited by and disbursed upon order of the court. (18 Comp. Dec., 992, citing U. S. v. Sanborn, 135 U. S., 271, 284; see also "Courts-martial," above.)

Fees allowed for Sunday.—I have not found any case specifically holding that under section 848, Revised Statutes, which provides for compensation to witnesses for attendance in Federal courts, a witness is entitled to a per diem for Sunday when obliged to remain over from one week to another in the hearing of a case. There are cases, however, to that effect in State courts, under State laws similar to section 848. It has also been held that a witness in attendance upon the court, although not actually testifying, is entitled to his per diem compensation for the days which he thus necessarily attends. It would seem, therefore, not improper, when in the discretion of the court or commissioner such action is necessary, to allow a witness his per diem for Sunday under the circumstances stated. (1 Comp. Dec., 252.)

Witness in two cases.—A witness who attended under subpoenas on behalf of the United States before the same commissioner on the same day in two cases against different defendants, and was sworn and testified in each case and was allowed a separate per diem therefor in each case for the same day by the commissioner, is entitled to the separate per diem as allowed. (14 Comp. Dec., 378.)

A witness who attends before a United States commissioner in Kentucky in different cases on the same day is entitled under section 848, Revised Statutes, to 5 cents a mile for each mile he actually travels in going from his place of residence to the place of hearing, and 5 cents a mile for returning, but is not entitled to double or constructive mileage. (15 Comp. Dec., 796.)

Voluntary attendance of witness.—Where a person voluntarily present at proceedings before a United States commissioner is called upon to testify, he is entitled for his services as such witness to the usual per diem, but not to mileage. (11 Comp. Dec., 792.)

Amount of fees can not be exceeded.—Section 848 is mandatory and limits the amount that may be paid to any witness under ordinary circumstances, however much said witness may lose in obeying a summons of a court. Accordingly, held that a Chinese inspector in charge is not entitled to reimbursement for an amount paid by him to a railroad employee residing within the jurisdiction of the court's process for loss sustained by such employee by reason of his serving as a witness for the Government in Chinese-exclusion cases, for which service such employee received from the Government fees and mileage as provided by section 848. (12 Comp. Dec., 660; see also 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 356.)

Additional allowance to witness outside of jurisdiction.—If the Secretary of the Treasury, in the exercise of his discretion, deems it a necessary expense in the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion acts, the sum of $68 may be paid from the appropriation for enforcing said acts, to secure the attendance in a Chinese smuggling case of an important witness living in Mexico, who refuses to attend without such payment. (4 Comp. Dec., 106.)

The appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs is applicable to the compensation and expenses of witnesses under agreements to come within the jurisdiction of the courts, and the expenses incurred by an assistant district attorney in collecting evidence when the testimony of the witnesses and the evidence collected are necessary in proceedings for the forfeiture of goods seized by customs officers. (4 Comp. Dec., 519.)

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into an agreement to compensate a witness whose testimony is necessary in the prosecution of a smuggler, for coming within the jurisdiction of the courts, and to reimburse him for the necessary expenses incurred in performing the service. The appropriation for prevention and detection of frauds upon the customs service is applicable to the expenses of procuring evidence to be used in the prosecution of a smuggler. (4 Comp. Dec., 495.)

If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in the exercise of his discretion deems it a necessary expense in the enforcement of the alien immigration act, the sum of $3.50 per day may be paid by him from the appropriation for the expenses of regulating immigration to secure the attendance of a witness living in Mexico who refuses to attend unless paid that amount in addition to the witness fee provided for by section 848 of the Revised Statutes. (12 Comp. Dec., 438, citing 4 Comp. Dec., 106.)

A United States commissioner has no authority to issue process to be served outside of his district. Accordingly, a witness attending a hearing before a commissioner in a district other than that of the residence of such witness is entitled to mileage only from a point within the commissioner's district nearest the residence of the witness to the place of the hearing and return therefrom to said point; if the subpoena is issued in such case by a United States court, whose process runs into any other district, the witness would be entitled to mileage for going from his residence to the place of hearing and returning therefrom. (14 Comp. Dec., 752.)

A United States commissioner is not authorized to issue a subpoena for a witness outside of his district, and a witness attending before a commissioner upon a subpoena issued by him is entitled to mileage for travel within his district only. (9 Comp. Dec., 121.)

A subpoena issued under section 4 of the act of January 31, 1903 (32 Stat., 790, relative to depositions for use before registers and receivers of the land office) does not run outside of the county in which the witness resides; and when a witness in obedience to such subpoena testifies in another county, said witness is entitled only to mileage from his residence to the border of the county nearest to the place where the deposition is taken. (17 Comp. Dec., 983.)

Expense of witness in preparing to testify.—When it becomes necessary for a witness to proceed from Chicago to New York and return, for the purpose of refreshing his memory before testifying in an antitrust case in Chicago, compensation and expense of travel by such witness may be paid from the appropriation "Enforcement of the Anti-Trust laws, etc., 1912." This preliminary preparation could not have been required of him under his obligation as a witness in the case, and he did not, by reason of this employment, become entitled to the fees and mileage allowed by law to witnesses. He is entitled, however, subject to the Attorney General's approval, to such compensation as may have been agreed upon, whether fixed by reference to fees of witnesses or otherwise. The appropriation for fees of witnesses is clearly not applicable, as it applies only to mileage and attendance in court or before any officer pursuant to law. The expense was incident to the preparation of the case rather than to its trial. (18 Comp. Dec., 541.)

Expert witnesses.—A witness is one who may be compelled to testify concerning a transaction which he has fortuitously beheld; an expert is one who testifies as to his own self-acquired knowledge, which he can not be compelled to impart by the expedient of calling him as a witness. (In re Maj. William Smith, 24 Ct. Cls., 209; C. M. O. 19-1915, p. 4.)

The Government can not acquire the services, skill, or knowledge of an expert without his consent and without just compensation. (In re Maj. William Smith, 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

The employment of experts before a court-martial is within the legal and proper discretion of the Secretary of War, and his order to employ and pay them is official authority to an officer who, in the ordinary discharge of his duty, makes such payments, and protects him from the summary remedy of having his pay stopped. (In re Maj. William Smith, 24 Ct. Cls., 209. As to employment of expert witnesses by accused before naval courts-martial, see note to Constitution, sixth amendment.)

Where a civilian physician was subpoenaed to attend before a naval court of inquiry as an ordinary witness to testify to facts within his knowledge, he is entitled merely to ordinary witness fees, notwithstanding that in the course of his examination his testimony may have developed into the nature of expert testimony. In both civil and military courts, compensation for expert testimony is a matter for determination between the witness and the party calling him for such testimony. In the Navy, if the testimony of an expert, as such, is desired, the question is one which must be submitted in each specific instance to the Navy Department for its determination as to whether the circumstances warrant the expenditure. In this case, the judge advocate having summoned the claimant as an ordinary witness, and having no authority to summon him for any other purpose, the claim for compensation as an expert witness can not be approved. (File 26276-105, Mar. 16, 1915.)

The compensation of expert witnesses, the expenses of collecting evidence, and the purchase and preparation of exhibits in connection with suits against collectors of customs may, under the long-established practice, be paid from the appropriation made for the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs. (1 Comp. Dec., 249.)

An expert witness summoned to appear before the Board of United States General Appraisers may be allowed, in addition to the ordinary witness fees, such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, payable from the appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs. (2 Comp. Dec., 449.)

Where the employment of expert witnesses is necessary to properly enforce the pure food and drugs act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ and pay such expert witnesses from the appropriations made to carry into effect the provisions of said act. (15 Comp. Dec., 757.)

Interpreter not witness.—The expenses of a person who did not attend as a witness in the case, but who was present as an "interpreter," are not chargeable to the appropriation "Fees of witnesses, United States courts," but to the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts," upon the authorization and approval of the Attorney General. (16 Comp. Dec., 92.)

Increased allowances in certain States.—The act of August 3, 1892 (27 Stat., 347, superseded by act of May 27, 1908, sec. 1, 35 Stat., 377, noted above), does not apply to witnesses attending before United States commissioners, as such proceedings are not in any court of the United States. (2 Comp. Dec., 66.)

Larger fees and mileage are allowed to witnesses in some districts than in others, because local conditions make the hardships and expense of travel greater. The reason does not apply where the deposition of a witness is taken elsewhere for use in one of the districts where the larger allowance is paid witnesses for testifying therein. The act of January 31, 1903 (32 Stat., 790), relating to compulsory attendance of witnesses before registers and receivers of the land office, provides that when the witness resides outside of the county in which the hearing is held, any party to the proceedings may take his testimony by deposition in the county of his residence, and provides further that such witness "shall receive the same fees and mileage, and be subject to the same penalties in all respects, as in cases of the violation of subpoena to appear before the register or receiver and subject to the same limitations." The act provides that the fees and mileage of witnesses before a register or receiver "shall be the same as that provided by law in the district courts of the United States in the district in which such land offices are situated." Held, that a witness whose deposition is taken under the act of January 31, 1903, for use in a hearing before a register or receiver of the General Land Office is entitled to the fees allowed to witnesses in the United States district court in the district in which the deposition is taken. (20 Comp. Dec., 308, overruling 16 Comp. Dec., 153, which held that witnesses residing in New York City, while testifying in the county of their residence by deposition before a commissioner under appointment issued by the authorized officers of the land office in Wyoming, are entitled to $3 a day, payable in advance if necessary to secure their testimony, this being the amount allowed by the act of May 27, 1908, for witnesses in Wyoming, and the law providing that witnesses in proceedings before registers and receivers shall be entitled to the same fees as provided by law in the district court of the United States in the district in which such land offices are located.)

Such witness, testifying by deposition in Alaska, is entitled to the witness fees allowed in the United States district court in the judicial division of the district of Alaska in which the deposition is taken. (20 Comp. Dec., 308.)

Witness against the United States.—As a general rule, when the United States is a party to a suit it is not liable to pay costs incurred by the adverse party, even though such adverse party prevail in the suit, unless there is an affirmative statute clearly making the United States liable therefor. (16 Comp. Dec., 693.)

The act of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat., 357), relating to condemnation proceedings to acquire sites for public buildings, does not imply that the United States should stand upon the same footing in a State as would a quasi public corporation, or other artificial entity with reference to the payment of costs. (16 Comp. Dec., 693.)

Sec. 849. [No officer of court to have witness fees.] No officer of the United States courts, in any State or Territory, or in the District of Columbia, shall be entitled to witness fees for attending before any court or commissioner where he is officiating.—(16 Aug., 1856, c. 124, s. 8, v. 11, p. 50. 21 July, 1852, c. 66, s. 1, v. 10, p. 16, (22).)

Sec. 850. [Witnesses in Government service allowed actual expenses.] When any clerk or other officer of the United States is sent away from his place of business as a witness for the Government, his necessary expenses, stated in items and sworn to, in going, returning, and attendance on the court, shall be audited and paid; but no mileage, or other compensation in addition to his salary, shall in any case be allowed.—(26 Feb., 1853, c. 80, s. 3, v. 10, pp. 167, 168.)

Witness fees in general—see note to section 848, Revised Statutes.

Expenses of subsistence limited to $5 per day. (Act Apr. 6, 1914, 38 Stat., 318; 22 Comp. Dec., 484.)

- I. WHAT PERSONS INCLUDED.
- II. WITNESS FOR THE GOVERNMENT.
- III. NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS.
- IV. CHARACTER OF EXPENSES ALLOWED.
- V. APPROPRIATION FROM WHICH PAID.

When the defendant in condemnation proceedings has incurred expenses in procuring the attendance of witnesses upon the day set for trial, and the case was on said day continued upon motion of the district attorney and was subsequently dismissed at the request of the Government, and there is no Federal or State statute clearly authorizing the taxing of defendant's costs against the Government or their payment by the Government, such expenses are not legally payable from Government funds. (16 Comp. Dec., 693.)

When land has been condemned and the court in rendering judgment includes in said judgment or award certain costs, such judgment including the costs, would be a legal charge against the appropriation to acquire the site when the payment of the judgment was made a condition precedent to vesting title in the Government. (16 Comp. Dec., 693.)

Nothing said in the above decision is intended to relieve the judicial appropriations from the payment of fees to witnesses subpoenaed by and for the United States, and who attend court as witnesses for the Government in condemnation proceedings, when such witnesses are paid by the marshal upon order of the court. (16 Comp. Dec., 693.)

For other cases, see "Courts-martial," under section 850, Revised Statutes, "II. Witnesses for the Government."

Appropriation from which paid.—A witness summoned to appear before the board of United States General Appraisers is entitled to the allowances for witnesses prescribed in section 848, Revised Statutes, payable from the appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs. (2 Comp. Dec., 449.)

For other cases, see decisions noted above under this section; and see note to section 850, Revised Statutes, under "V. Appropriation from which Paid."

I. WHAT PERSONS INCLUDED.

The words "clerk or other officer" must be construed in the broad sense of "official," and includes an employee. (9 Comp. Dec., 276; 17 Comp. Dec., 586; 22 Comp. Dec., 126.)

The word "officer" in this section has been construed in the broad sense of "official" and includes an employee. (18 Comp. Dec., 896, citing 5 Comp. Dec., 797; 9 Comp. Dec., 276; 17 Comp. Dec., 584.)

A department clerk when subpoenaed to testify on behalf of the United States has no right to witness fees, but his expenses are allowable. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 263.)

See below, "Persons in Army and Navy."

Waiver of salary.—An officer or employee for whom a salary is provided by law can not, by relinquishing his salary, become entitled to fees or mileage as a witness for the Government. (9 Comp. Dec., 276.)

Persons in Army and Navy.—An officer of the Navy who travels to testify as a witness for the Government is entitled, under this section, to his actual and necessary expenses only, notwithstanding that such officer may have been ordered by his superior officer to travel for that purpose. (19 Comp. Dec., 752, citing 4 Comp. Dec., 147; but see below, "Courts-martial," under "III. Nature of Proceedings.")

These general statutes regulate the fees for attendance as witnesses before civil courts, and the compensation to Army and Navy officers for attendance as witnesses before such courts must conform to them, whether the attendance is in obedience to a subpoena or to an order from the head of their department. (10 Comp. Dec., 55, citing 4 Comp. Dec., 146, and Dig. Sec. Comp., vol. 2, sec. 1211.)

This section is found under the title of "The Judiciary" in the Revised Statutes, and undoubtedly applies to clerks and officers of the United States who are witnesses before the Federal civil courts. (Comp. Dec. Apr. 14, 1914, file 26254-1476:1.)

"The word 'officer' in this section is to receive a liberal construction. It does not import an officer as distinguished from a soldier, but any person who is an employee or is in the service of the United States, in however humble a capacity." (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 113, holding that Army officers and enlisted men who appear as witnesses for the Government before any court of the United States are entitled to receive their necessary expenses in going, returning, and attendance on the court, and are not entitled to any mileage or witness fees; see also 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 486; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 147; 17 Comp. Dec., 584.)

Retired officers.—A retired Army officer who is called to testify before a civil court as a witness for the United States is entitled to lawful fees as a witness and not to actual expenses as provided by section 850 of the Revised Statutes. (19 Comp. Dec., 966, following 10 Comp. Dec., 51, holding that retired officers are not within the purview of section 850 because not subject to orders to testify as witnesses. In this connection, see act of August 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329, providing that retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps may, with their consent, be ordered to any active duty at sea or on shore. And see below, "Courts-martial," under "III. Nature of Proceedings.")

A Naval Militia member subpoenaed as a witness before a naval court-martial when his organization is not in the service of the United States is in the status of a civilian witness, not in Government employ, and he is entitled to fees and mileage accordingly. (File 26251-10968:9, Dec. 1, 1915; 26276-119, Dec. 22, 1915. See below, "Courts-martial," under "III. Nature of Proceedings.")

United States Senators.—The provision in section 850, Revised Statutes, does not apply to Senators of the United States. To fall within its terms the clerk or officer must have a place of business and be sent away therefrom, indicating very clearly that class of officials who occupy subordinate positions and are subject to the control and direction of their superior officers. It is hardly necessary to add that United States Senators are not of this class. Such witnesses are accordingly entitled to the compensation fixed by section 848, Revised Statutes. (7 Comp. Dec., 764. As to compulsory attendance of Senators and Representatives as witnesses in judicial proceedings, see note to Constitution, Art. 1, sec. 6, clause 1.)

Federal prisoners.—A person in custody awaiting trial for an alleged offense who attended before a United States commissioner as a witness is entitled to the fee provided by law for such attendance. He is not, however, entitled to mileage for at least two reasons: First, the Government necessarily bears the expenses of his transportation, if there are such, from the jail to the place where he testifies; second, the jail can not be said to be his place of residence. (6 Comp. Dec., 588.)

However, where a person in custody has been convicted of crime, has forfeited his residence, and his time and services belong to the Government, which is charged with his care and support while imprisoned in a penitentiary or jail, per diem for attendance and mileage are not allowable. (6 Comp. Dec., 588.)

If a convicted person were called upon to testify in a civil suit, the Government would be entitled to charge for and collect, as against the person subpoenaing him as a witness, a per diem on account thereof, as his services belong to the Government. (6 Comp. Dec., 588.)

Temporary employee.—A temporary mail weigher is an employee of the United States, and if said mail weigher is subpoenaed to testify in a United States district court on behalf of the Government, he is entitled to be paid his actual and necessary expenses in addition to his regular compensation as mail weigher, while going to, returning from, and attendance on the court. (18 Comp. Dec., 896.)

A person who has been paid $3 for a day's service as bailiff under a United States marshal, is not entitled to the statutory fee of $1.50 for his attendance as a witness for the Government before a United States commissioner on the same day. After adjournment of the court, he was summoned and attended as a witness before the commissioner. However, the per diem allowed him as bailiff covered his time and services as bailiff for an entire day, and the adjournment of the court did not release him from liability to serve for the remainder of the day for which he was paid. (22 Comp. Dec., 126.)

Private clerk of Government official.—"The theory of the statute manifestly is that where the Government is entitled to an officer's time, the diversion of it from his official routine to attend in court as a witness in its behalf shall not entitle him to dual compensation. The court does not overlook the fact that a marshal's clerk is appointed by him and that his compensation is conditional and dependent upon the fees and emoluments of the marshal's office * * *; but nevertheless the service is rendered for the government, the expense is additional to the marshal's compensation, and the money with which the clerk is paid is the money of the Government and would otherwise go into the Treasury. The marshal, therefore, is not the employer but the appointing power, and his chief clerk is as much an employee of the Government as is the private secretary of the President." (Duval v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 102; 17 Comp. Dec., 584.)

A person employed by a postmaster, who receives a fixed salary without any allowance for clerk hire, and who himself pays such person as his deputy, is not a "clerk or officer of the United States" within the meaning of this section. (In re Waller, 49 Fed. Rep., 271.)

District of Columbia employee.—Officers and employees of the District of Columbia are not officers or employees of the United States within the meaning of this section; they are accordingly entitled to the fees allowed by law to other witnesses, unless it is a part of their official duty under their appointments to attend and testify in proceedings of the character involved. (18 Comp. Dec., 382, citing 17 Comp. Dec., 153.)

II. WITNESS FOR THE GOVERNMENT.

No testimony given.—An officer of the Navy was ordered to "proceed to Norfolk, Va., and on December 27, 1912, confer with the district attorney. Upon the completion of this conference report to the commandant of the navy yard for temporary duty as witness before a court of inquiry at the station under his command." The Auditor for the Navy Department held that the travel involved was primarily performed in order that claimant might testify on behalf of the Government in the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. This ruling was reversed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, who decided that there was nothing in the orders in question to direct the officer to appear as a witness in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, and the officer stated that he did not so appear. Accordingly, held that the officer was entitled to mileage for the travel in question, and that section 850, Revised Statutes, was not applicable thereto. (Comp. Dec. Apr. 14, 1914, file 26254-1476:1; see below, "Courts-martial," under "III. Nature of Proceedings.")

An officer of the Navy ordered to perform travel in order that he might be present to testify, if needed, in a suit to which the Government was not a party, but in which it had sufficient interest to make it necessary, or at least advisable, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, for the officer to be present, could not be considered as a witness for the Government within the meaning of section 850, Revised Statutes. In performing the travel in question appellant should be regarded as traveling on public business under orders of the Secretary of the Navy, and entitled to mileage accordingly. (Comp. Dec., July 28, 1915, 173 S. and A. Memo., 3729.)

Identifying party under charges.—A clerk in the Navy Department who performed travel to New York City, at the request of the police department of the District of Columbia, for the purpose of identifying and securing the arrest of a party wanted for trial in the District of Columbia upon charges of larceny and bigamy, was not in the status of a witness for the Government during her absence from duty for the purpose stated. (File 4488-61, June 24, 1911.)

Witness for private party.—When subpoenaed by a private party a department clerk may demand and accept witness fees. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 263.)

A naval officer giving expert testimony in a suit between private parties may receive compensation therefor at the usual rates, in accordance with his agreement with the party for whom he appeared. (File 1981-1900; see also file 6053, Oct. 30, 1906; and file 26276-125, Nov. 22, 1915.)

An officer of the Navy Department who attends court as a witness otherwise than as a witness for the Government is not entitled to draw salary during the period absent from work, unless such absence is charged to his annual leave. (File 6036-2, Apr. 5, 1907.)

Witness against the Government.—Where a naval constructor appeared as a witness in behalf of the defendant, the complainant being the United States, he was informed that there appeared from the facts stated to be no reason why he should not accept "ordinary mileage and attendance fees." (File 4565-4, Oct. 23, 1906.)

Courts-martial.—This section clearly recognizes the fact that persons in the employ of the Government may be called upon to testify before the courts in matters not necessarily connected with the service for which they are paid, and that their salaries shall continue while so absent from their regular duties. Since no distinction is made in military courts between payment of witnesses, whether for or against the Government, it must be held that they are equally entitled to their salaries while in attendance before a military court, if they were acting under proper orders, although they appeared as witnesses for the accused. Their attendance was required at this court-martial by proper subpoena issued by the judge advocate of the court. It was requested by the Secretary of War in a letter addressed to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State ordered them, through the proper channels, to attend the trial and at the same time directed that they be retained in the employ of the Government and receive their compensation during their attendance. Accordingly, held that they were entitled to their salaries until the time they were discharged from attendance upon the court-martial, and that the same should be paid from the appropriations for their regular duties with the Nicaragua Canal Commission. (5 Comp. Dec., 797.)

III. NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS.

Courts-martial.—Civilian employees of the United States subpoenaed on behalf of the Government as witnesses before naval courts are not entitled to mileage or per diem as witnesses, but to their regular salaries and actual and necessary expenses only, their rights being controlled by section 850 of the Revised Statutes. (14 Comp. Dec., 143; see also, 1 Comp. Dec., 79, noted under sec. 848, R. S.)

A per diem employee of a navy yard is entitled to his actual and necessary expenses while attending under orders as a witness before a court of inquiry and while going to and returning from the court. (8 Comp. Dec., 211.)

This section does not apply to military officers when witnesses before military courts; it appears under the title of "The Judiciary," in the Revised Statutes, and undoubtedly applies to clerks and officers of the United States when witnesses before the Federal civil courts; accordingly, held that an officer of the Navy is entitled to mileage for travel performed under orders for the purpose of appearing as a witness before a naval court of inquiry. (Comp. Dec. Apr. 14, 1914, file 26254-1476:1; see above, "No testimony given," under "II. Witness for the Government.")

A contract surgeon in the Army who is directed by special orders to attend as a witness before a general court-martial by which he had been duly summoned is not entitled to reimbursement of expenses as a civilian employee of the Government, but is limited to the mileage allowance payable to commissioned officers traveling under orders. (9 Comp. Dec., 461.)

Section 850, Revised Statutes, has never, so far as I am aware, been applied in fixing the compensation of officers of the Army and Navy on the active list for attendance as witnesses before general courts-martial, when in attendance in obedience to orders; and I know of no reason why it should apply in the case of a retired officer if it does not apply to an officer on the active list. The retired officer has no place of business to be sent away from, within the meaning of that section, and he is not an officer subject to be ordered to such duty, and is not, therefore, within the purview of the said section. (10 Comp. Dec., 55, citing 7 Comp. Dec., 764.)

A retired officer of the Army is not entitled to commutation of quarters while in attendance as a witness before a general court-martial, but he is entitled to the per diem compensation and mileage provided for civilian witnesses not in the employ of the Government. (10 Comp. Dec., 51.)

A summons to a retired officer of the Navy to attend as a witness before a general court-martial does not place him on active duty, and he is not, therefore, entitled to the difference between active duty and retired pay in consequence thereof. (5 Comp. Dec., 244. At the time this decision was rendered retired officers of the Navy could not be ordered to active duty except in time of war; accordingly, it had been held by the accounting officers (Dig. Sec. Comp. Dec., vol. 2, sec. 1211) that in time of peace officers on the retired list of the Navy while attending upon courts-martial as witnesses were not entitled to active-duty pay. This case arose in time of war, but it was held that the effect of an ordinary summons to attend as a witness before a court-martial in time of war, even though approved by the Secretary of the Navy, did not place the officer in any different position than he would have occupied had the summons been issued and the travel performed in time of peace. An order which places a retired naval officer upon duty in time of war should clearly express such intention, and no such intention can properly be imputed in the case of an ordinary summons to attend as a witness, approved by the Secretary of the Navy after it is issued. The existing law, act of Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329, provides that retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps may, with their consent, be ordered to any active duty at sea or on shore.)

A member of the Naval Militia subpoenaed as a witness before a naval court-martial is not thereby called into the service of the United States under the provisions of the Constitution (Art. I, sec. 8, clause 15) and the Naval Militia Act of Feb. 16, 1914, sec. 3 (38 Stat., 284). He is not, therefore, by virtue of such subpoena entitled to the pay and allowances provided for the Naval Militia when called into the service of the United States. (File 26276-119:3, Jan. 26, 1916.)

See cases noted above, under "I. What Persons Included."

In courts-martial the United States pays not only its own witnesses but the witnesses of the accused; accordingly, while section 850 refers directly to witnesses for the Government, the fact that all witnesses before military courts are paid by the Government bring the latter within the spirit of this section. (5 Comp. Dec., 802. See note to Constitution, sixth amendment, as to compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in behalf of the accused before naval courts-martial.)

District of Columbia courts.—Salaried employees of the Government are not entitled, under the provisions of section 850 of the Revised Statutes, to witness fees for attendance as witnesses on behalf of the United States before a United States grand jury in the District of Columbia. Accordingly, held that a clerk in the Treasury Department at Washington, D. C., is not legally entitled to witness fees, either per diem or mileage, for her attendance before the United States grand jury, Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as a witness on behalf of the United States. (17 Comp. Dec., 282.)

Salaried officers or employees of the United States who attend before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as witnesses for the Government are not entitled to the compensation provided by law for witnesses who are not such officers or employees. (18 Comp. Dec., 382, citing 17 Comp. Dec., 282; see above, "Identifying party under charges," under "II. Witness for the Government.")

State courts.—The actual expenses of officers of the Army in attending, by authority of the Secretary of War, upon a State court as witnesses for the United States in a case in which the United States is a party, may be paid from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the War Department. (12 Comp. Dec., 649; see above, "No testimony given," under "II. Witness for the Government.")

Extradition proceedings before commissioner.—An employee of the Government is not entitled to mileage and fees, but only to actual and necessary expenses, for attendance as a witness before a United States commissioner in extradition proceedings instituted in the name of the United States. (11 Comp. Dec., 665.)

Justice of the peace.—This section applies to payment of witnesses in attendance upon a preliminary hearing before a justice of the peace. (16 Comp. Dec., 92.)

Civil Service Commission.—A civil-service employee of the War Department on duty in the ordnance office at Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., who appears as a witness before the Civil Service Commission in obedience to a duly authorized summons of the commission under Civil Service Rule XIV approved by the President, should, while going to, attending on, and returning from the commission be treated as in a duty status, and as in the performance of duty under his employment, and should be paid accordingly from the appropriation for the ordnance service. (18 Comp. Dec., 135.)

IV. CHARACTER OF EXPENSES ALLOWED.

Employment of a substitute.—The necessary expenses of travel, board, and lodging of salaried employees of the Government attending a United States court or before a United States commissioner as witnesses on behalf of the Government, are usually payable, under section 850 of the Revised Statutes, from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts"; but there is no provision for the payment of the hire of a substitute whom it may be necessary to engage by reason of the salaried employee's absence. (16 Comp. Dec., 630.)

Section 850, Revised Statutes, does not authorize the payment to a consul of an amount paid by him as compensation to his vice consul while in charge of the consulate during the absence of the consul as such witness. (9 Comp. Dec., 521.)

This section provides for the ordinary and usual expenses of the witness, and does not include the loss of salary because of such absence. The items of expense of such a witness are his necessary traveling expenses in going and returning, and his necessary expenses while in attendance upon the court. (9 Comp. Dec., 521.)

Leave of absence.—A per diem employee of a navy yard is entitled to his compensation as such per diem employee, and actual expenses while attending under orders a court of inquiry as a witness, and while going to and returning from the court; and the time he is so absent from his employment is not to be deducted from the time for which he may be granted leave of absence. (8 Comp. Dec., 211.)

Employees of the Navy Department attending as witnesses for the Government, as to leave to which they may be entitled by law, are in the same status as if they had been actually at work at their regular place of work and had not been absent as such witnesses. (17 Comp. Dec., 584.)

Employees of the Navy Department who attend court as witnesses otherwise than as witnesses for the Government are not entitled to draw salary during the period absent from work unless charged to annual leave. (File 6036-2, Apr. 5, 1907. But see 5 Comp. Dec., 797, noted below, as to witnesses for accused in court-martial cases.)

An employee of the Navy Department absent from duty at the request of the police department of the District of Columbia, for the purpose of identifying and securing the arrest of a person in New York wanted for trial in the District for larceny and bigamy, is not within the purview of the decision of the Comptroller which treats employees of the Government as in a duty status when in attendance as witnesses for the Government in Federal courts. The absence from duty in such case should, therefore, be charged to the employee's leave. (File 4488-61, June 23, 1911.)

An employee of the War Department should be treated as in a duty status while going to, attending on, and returning from an inquiry by the Civil Service Commission in obedience to a subpoena issued by the commission. (18 Comp. Dec., 135.)

Civilian employees of the State Department appearing before an Army court-martial, in obedience to a subpoena issued by the judge advocate of the court and proper orders issued by the Secretary of State upon request of the Secretary of War, should be treated as in a duty status, notwithstanding that they were subpoenaed as witnesses against the Government and for the accused. (5 Comp. Dec., 797.)

While attending as a witness for the Government in a United States district court, an employee was performing a service for and on behalf of the Government other than the service required under his appointment, and such compulsory absence would not have the effect of relieving him of his pay status for the reason that during that time he is to be regarded as in the performance of duty under his employment and therefore should be paid his regular compensation in addition to his actual and necessary expenses. (18 Comp. Dec., 896.)

Witness outside jurisdiction.—Where an office deputy marshal attends as a witness before a United States commissioner in a district other than his own, the allowance of his expenses of subsistence is a matter within the discretion of the commissioner, unlimited by the statutory maximum fixed for deputy marshals. (19 Comp. Dec., 91.)

A deputy collector of internal revenue is entitled to all necessary and lawful expenses incurred in attending before a United States commissioner pursuant to the subpoena of said commissioner, although the hearing is held in a district other than that of the deputy collector's residence. (20 Comp. Dec., 195.)

It has been held that a witness from another district attending before a commissioner upon a subpoena issued by the commissioner, is not entitled to the mileage provided by section 848, Revised Statutes, for travel outside of the commissioner's district. (9 Comp. Dec., 121.) This ruling does not apply to officers or employees of the Government whose official duty it is to testify in behalf of the Government and who are bound to attend for that purpose whether in the district in which they reside or elsewhere. Such officer or employee is entitled to his necessary expenses in going, returning, and attending, when sent away from his place of business as a witness for the Government. (20 Comp. Dec., 195.)

See, in this connection, note to section 848, Revised Statutes, relative to expense of bringing witnesses within jurisdiction of the court.

V. APPROPRIATION FROM WHICH PAID.

Judiciary appropriation.—The necessary expenses of travel, board, and lodging of salaried employees of the Government attending a United States court or before a United States commissioner as witnesses on behalf of the Government are usually payable, under section 850, Revised Statutes, from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts." (16 Comp. Dec., 630.)

In 12 Comp. Dec., 391, it was held that the expenses of officers of the United States incurred in going, returning, and in attendance on courts when sent away from the usual place of the performance of their duties as witnesses for the Government are payable from the appropriate fund of the department from which they are sent, and not from the judicial appropriation for fees of witnesses. However, this decision is published with a footnote, stating that since it was rendered it had been discovered that the decision therein relied upon had been overruled by the Supreme Court of the United States. Hence, the necessary expenses of a clerk sent away as a witness for the Government should be audited by the court, taxed as witness fees, and paid in full from the proper judicial appropriation.

The auditing contemplated by section 850 must be done, primarily, in the court in which the case is pending and where it can best be determined what expenses have been necessarily incurred by the witness. It was not intended by section 850 to deny to the Government the right, when successful in a suit, to have even the necessary expenses of witnesses of the class described in that section included in the judgment for costs, nor did the United States intend to remit to its defeated adversary not only witness fees for per diem and mileage, but the necessary expenses of witnesses who happened to be in its employment and whom it sent away from their place of business to testify in its behalf. As a person of that class receives while absent his stipulated salary and is paid in that way for his time, it is not deemed just that he should also receive mileage and per diem; but, instead thereof, he is allowed his necessary expenses, which, being audited by or under the direction of the court upon which he attends as a witness, he is entitled to have paid to him, and the Government, being under an obligation to pay them, is entitled to have the amount so audited included in its bill of costs and in any judgments rendered in its favor. In other words, when the Government is successful in a suit, the "necessary expenses" of its witnesses of the class described in section 850 take the place in its bill of costs of the per diem and mileage which, but for that section, would have been taxed and allowed in its favor. (U. S. v. Sanborn, 135 U. S., 271.)

Necessary expenses of soldiers as witnesses for the Government allowed under this section may be paid by marshals upon proper proof thereof. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 147.) [Enlisted men detained by a United States marshal as witnesses, and by him paid $1.70 per day, are not entitled to rations during the period they were absent from their ship. (File 1098-94.)]

Where a trustee in bankruptcy is called to testify as an expert witness in a criminal prosecution, growing out of transactions in connection with the bankrupt estate, the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 462), prohibits the payment to him of any compensation whatever for services as such expert from the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, 1913." (19 Comp. Dec., 395.)

Other appropriations available.—"Attention is invited to the fact that while section 850, Revised Statutes, allows a clerk or officer his actual expenses when sent away from his place of business, it does not provide that such expenses shall be paid from the judiciary appropriations. On the contrary, the inference is that such expenses will be paid from whatever appropriation is applicable." (5 Comp. Dec., 2.)

Naval appropriation.—The claim of an enlisted man of the Army for reimbursement of expenses incurred in complying with a subpoena issued by a naval court-martial is a proper charge against the naval appropriation, "Pay, miscellaneous." (File 26276-14.)

"Expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs," are appropriated for each year in the naval appropriation act under the heading, "Pay, miscellaneous." (See, for example, naval appropriation act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 929.)

Appropriation for department where witness is employed.—If an officer of the Government attends upon the United States courts, or before United States commissioners, in his official capacity, in connection with the examination or trial of persons charged with violations of certain laws relating to the work of his department, and it is his duty under the laws or regulations governing his appointment, to aid in the prevention, detection, suppression, punishment, or prosecution of such violators or offenses, then his proper actual traveling expenses, incurred by reason of his attendance upon such examination or trial, are properly chargeable to the appropriation out of which his ordinary traveling expenses are usually paid, notwithstanding the fact that he may be called and testify in the case as a witness; but when a salaried government employee is subpoenaed as a witness and he so attends otherwise than as above stated, he is entitled to reimbursement of his actual expenses by the marshal from the appropriation "Fees of witnesses, United States courts." (15 Comp. Dec., 298.)

As early as January 4, 1879, the Attorney General issued a circular, section 2 of which is as follows: "2. That section 850 is regarded by this department as not extending to officers or employees of the government for whose necessary expenses while traveling to and from court, and also during their attendance thereon, provision is otherwise made by Congress. Within this category, it is believed, come the special agents of the Post-Office Department, the special agents of the Pension Office, the special agents of the Treasury Department, Internal Revenue agents, and Secret Service operatives under the control of the Treasury Department, [see below, "Special laws governing use of appropriations"] especially when called as witness for the Government in those cases wherein they are employed by direction of their respective bureaus or departments. These agents and operatives (in addition to certain salaries or per diem paid them as compensation for their services) are understood to receive allowances for traveling and other incidental expenses, incurred while in the discharge of their duties, out of appropriations specially providing for these objects. Section 850 does not comprehend expenses for which Congress has thus specially provided. District attorneys and marshals are instructed, in dealing with the claims of witnesses under section 850, to act in conformity hereto. They are directed, before allowing or paying under that section any officer or employee of the United States who has been subpoenaed as a witness for the Government his necessary expenses for travel and attendance on court, to require from the claimant a declaration, to be inserted in and made a part of the affidavit to his account, that he has not received, and is not entitled by the regulations of the bureau or department in whose service he is or was employed, to claim or receive, and will not claim, from such bureau or department, any allowance whatever for those expenses." (5 Comp. Dec., 2.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury concurs in the opinion of the Attorney General that section 850, Revised Statutes, "does not comprehend expenses for which Congress has thus specially provided." (5 Comp. Dec., 2, affirming 4 Comp. Dec., 649.)

The actual expenses of a salaried officer of the Government who testifies as a witness for the Government may be paid in either of two ways, according to the nature of his employment and the character of the testimony given. (18 Comp. Dec., 992, citing 16 Comp. Dec., 411.)

In order to relieve the appropriation, "Fees of witnesses, United States courts," from the payment of the expenses of officers, employees or agents of the Government while in attendance as witnesses, two things must concur: First, it must be the actual duty of such officers, employees or agents who are called as witnesses before a commissioner, grand jury or court, to investigate the facts upon which the proceedings are based, and to appear in their official capacity to testify as to the facts so acquired; and, second, there must be an appropriation controlled by that particular department of the Government, under which such officers, employees or agents are serving, applicable to the payment of such expenses. (16 Comp. Dec., 411.)

Where Government employees are required to attend the sessions of a court in the discharge of their official duties, testimony given by them is incidental to such official attendance, whether subpoenaed as witnesses or not, and their expenses incurred thereby are not payable from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses," but are a charge against the proper appropriation for their department. (14 Comp. Dec., 80.)

Where it is the duty of an officer, either under law or rule or regulation, to aid in the detection, prosecution, and punishment of a certain class of offenders, he is not entitled to his expenses from the appropriation for witnesses, his attendance being incidental to the performance of his duties and the expenses thereof being chargeable to the appropriation of his department. (14 Comp. Dec., 113; 14 Comp. Dec., 80.)

Where inspectors who are employed under appropriations to carry into effect the pure food and drugs act attend as witnesses for the prosecution of offenses under said act, based on facts certified to the district attorney by the Secretary of Agriculture, they should be considered as attending in their official capacity unless they are called to give evidence of facts not found by them in the discharge of their duties as inspectors, and while in attendance in their official capacity their actual and necessary traveling expenses should be paid from appropriations under the Department of Agriculture. (15 Comp. Dec., 757.)

The actual, necessary expenses of customs officers, while attending as witnesses before a United States commissioner, grand jury, or district court, to testify on behalf of the Government as a result of knowledge gained by them in the discharge of their official duties, are payable from the appropriation for "Collecting the revenue from customs." It is the duty of the customs officer in the cases now under consideration to attend before the commissioner or upon the court, and when so attending he is not present as an ordinary witness (in obedience to a subpoena and for no other reason), but is present in his capacity as a customs officer to aid in the detection, prevention, and suppression of violations of the customs laws and in the discharge of duties for which he is appointed. His presence in the character of a witness in a case wherein he made the seizure and arrest must be regarded as incidental to the real purpose for which he is present, and expenses incurred in attending such hearing or trial should be considered as incurred in his official capacity as a customs officer and in the interests of the customs service; accordingly, such expenses, actually and necessarily incurred under the proper departmental regulations, are payable from the appropriation out of which his other expenses incurred in the line of his duty are paid. (15 Comp. Dec., 154.)

The attendance of a naturalization examiner before a United States commissioner in a hearing of a case upon a warrant sworn out by him for a violation of the naturalization laws, and his subsequent attendance before a grand jury relative to the same case for the purpose of having the defendant indicted for such violation, are a part of his official duties and whether he was subpoenaed or not testimony given by him at such hearing or before the grand jury, as a result of knowledge gained by him in the discharge of his official duties, was only incidental thereto and his expenses incurred thereby, within the limits of his appointment, are payable from the appropriation for "Pay of assistant attorneys in naturalization cases," and not from the judicial appropriation for fees of witnesses. (14 Comp. Dec., 516.)

The law makes it a part of the duty of a special examiner to aid in the prosecution of persons violating the pension laws. He therefore appears as a witness in such cases as an official duty. Accordingly, held that the ap-appropriation for examiners in the Bureau of Pensions is exclusively applicable to the expenses of such examiners for attendance upon court as witnesses, there being no provision in that appropriation that no part thereof shall be used in defraying such expenses, such as appears in some appropriations for other departments. (5 Comp. Dec., 2.)

In the matter of the appropriations chargeable with the traveling expenses incurred by salaried employees of the Government by reason of their attendance upon a trial or examination before a United States court or a United States commissioner, the Comptroller of the Treasury can not undertake to determine the exact status of such employees and the nature of the trial or examination in each and every one of the cases which arise. (15 Comp. Dec., 298.)

The payment of expenses of a witness in the Government service should be governed by the rule laid down in 15 Comp. Dec., 298 (above noted). Whether said witness attended in his official capacity as an officer, or as an ordinary witness, is unknown to the comptroller, and it is the duty of the marshal to develop the facts and apply the rule to such facts when definitely ascertained. (16 Comp. Dec., 92.)

Expenditures incurred by a departmental clerk in obeying a subpoena issued by a district court of the United States are properly chargeable to the appropriation "Fees of witnesses, United States courts," when it is shown that said clerk was summoned for no other purpose than that of an ordinary witness. The subpoena in this case was addressed to the Chief of the Division of Naturalization, Department of Commerce and Labor, Washington, D. C., and was issued for the purpose of securing the production before the grand jury of a certain "duplicate declaration of intention" on file in the department; a clerk of class 4 in the department at Washington was directed to attend in answer to this subpoena, which he did and in so doing incurred the expenses in question. It does not appear that said clerk officially investigated or found out and developed the facts upon which the case before the grand jury was predicated, or that it was his official duty under the law or regulations to aid in the prosecution of the case. In fact, there is nothing to show that this departmental clerk attended otherwise than in the character of an ordinary witness under section 850 Revised Statutes. (16 Comp. Dec., 672.)

Special laws governing use of appropriations.—The principle announced in previous decisions (4 Comp. Dec., 649; 5 Comp. Dec., 2; 14 Comp. Dec., 80; 14 Comp. Dec., 516; 15 Comp. Dec., 154; 15 Comp. Dec., 298, all above noted) is correct and should be adhered to in determining the particular appropriation chargeable with the expenses of employees in attendance upon the United States courts whose duties under their appointments or under the law involve aiding in the detection, prevention, prosecution or suppression of violations of certain laws, except in cases where Congress has seen fit to exempt any class of employees from the operation of such rule by special legislation. (15 Comp. Dec., 594.)

By act of May 22, 1908 (35 Stat., 207) an exemption was made with reference to officers of the Internal Revenue Service, and similar provisions have been enacted with reference to Secret Service employees. Accordingly, held that, "in view of the provisions of the act of May 22, 1908, the actual and necessary expenses of a deputy collector of internal revenue, under section 850 of the Revised Statutes, incurred by reason of his attendance as a witness on behalf of the United States before the grand jury in obedience to a subpoena issued by the United States district court are payable from the appropriation "Fees of witnesses, United States courts." (15 Comp. Dec., 594; followed, 16 Comp. Dec., 838, and 20 Comp. Dec., 195, with reference to expenses of attendance as witnesses before United States commissioners in obedience to subpoenas.)

Sec. 851. [Witnesses transported on Government or private vessel.] There shall be paid to each seaman or other person who is sent to the United States from any foreign port, station, sea, or ocean, by any United States minister, chargé d'affaires, consul, captain, or commander, to give testimony in any criminal case depending in any court of the United States, such compensation, exclusive of subsistence and transportation, as such court may adjudge to be proper, not exceeding one dollar for each day necessarily employed in such voyage, and in arriving at the place of examination or trial. In fixing such compensation, the court shall take into consideration the condition of said seaman or witness, and whether his voyage has been broken up, to his injury, by his being sent to the United States.

When such seaman or person is transported in an armed vessel of the United States no charge for subsistence or transportation shall be allowed. When he is transported in any other vessel, the compensation for his transportation and subsistence, not exceeding in any case fifty cents a day, may be fixed by the court, and shall be paid to the captain of said vessel accordingly.—(26 Feb., 1853, c. 80, s. 3, v. 10, p. 168.)

Sec. 868. [Deposition for use in Federal courts.] When a commission is issued by any court of the United States for taking the testimony of a witness named therein at any place within any district or Territory, the clerk of any court of the United States for such district or Territory shall, on the application of either party to the suit, or of his agent, issue a subpoena for such witness, commanding him to appear and testify before the commissioner named in the commission, at a time and place stated in the subpoena; and if any witness, after being duly served with such subpoena, refuses or neglects to appear, or, after appearing, refuses to testify, not being privileged from giving testimony, and such refusal or neglect is proven to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk issues such subpoena, such judge may proceed to enforce obedience to the process, or punish the disobedience, as any court of the United States may proceed in case of disobedience to process of subpoena to testify issued by such court.—(24 Jan., 1827, c. 4, s. 1, v. 4, p. 197; York Co. v. Central R. R., 3 Wall., 113.)

Depositions for use in Federal courts, upon the previous issuance of a commission, are authorized by sections 866-868, Revised Statutes.

Depositions for use in State courts are authorized by sections 871-874, Revised Statutes.

Notaries public of the States, Territories, and District of Columbia were authorized to take depositions, by act of August 15, 1876 (19 Stat., 206).

Heads of departments.—See note to section 871, Revised Statutes, as to duty of heads of departments to testify or furnish depositions.

Assistant to head of department required to appear and testify before commissioner appointed to take his deposition.—In habeas corpus proceedings instituted by a Chinaman in the United States Court for the Western District of Washington it was contended by petitioner that proceedings for his deportation were invalid for the reason that his appeal to the Secretary of Labor was heard and disposed of by a subordinate officer of the Department of Labor, who signed his action thereon as Acting Secretary, whereas such officer had been authorized to perform the duties of the Secretary, under section 179, Revised Statutes, only when the Secretary and Assistant Secretary were both absent from the department, and at the time in question both the Secretary and Assistant Secretary were present at their offices. A commission was issued by the court to take the deposition of the Assistant Secretary of Labor before a commissioner in the District of Columbia. A subpoena was duly issued by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, requiring the Assistant Secretary to appear and testify before the said commissioner. The Assistant Secretary appeared, but declined to answer the interrogatories or cross-interrogatories propounded, on the ground that each question "relates to the internal administration of the department and I regard it as calling for an answer that might be prejudicial to the public interest. For this reason I decline to answer until instructed otherwise by the Secretary of Labor." The first and material question was: "Were you on duty at the Department of Labor on each of the following dates: September 24, 1914, September 25, 1914, and September 26, 1914?" A rule was issued to the Assistant Secretary by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, requiring him to show cause why he should not answer the questions propounded. In his return the Assistant Secretary stated, in part, that he had been instructed by the Secretary of Labor "that the disclosures sought to be obtained by the interrogatories propounded would be prejudicial to the public interest," and that "he was advised by the Solicitor of the Department of Justice for the Department of Labor, as a matter of law, that he was privileged to decline to answer the said questions pursuant to such instructions and for the reasons stated in said declination." It was thereupon ordered by the court that the Assistant Secretary appear before the commissioner and make full and true response to the question above quoted. In the opinion of the court it was stated in part:

"It will therefore be seen that the question propounded to the witness Post, which he declined to answer, goes to the jurisdiction of the officer who assumed to act as Secretary of Labor in signing the mandate, or order of exclusion, under which Ching Hing is detained.

"As stated by Judge Dooling of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California in the case of In re Tsuei Shee et al., on October 23, 1914: 'The appellants were by law entitled to appeal to the Secretary of Labor, and entitled to have their appeal heard and determined by him except as above stated, and the determination of their appeal by another not authorized is neither a fair hearing, nor due process of law.'

"Briefly stated, the question asked respondent was whether or not he was on duty in the department on three named days. Upon his answer to an extent, depends the liberty of Ching Hing. He declined to answer because the answer 'might be prejudicial to the public interest.' In exactly what manner it might be 'prejudicial to the public interest' for any official to testify as to whether he was, at a given time, performing the duties charged upon him by law and for which he was being paid at public expense, when the fact becomes important in a judicial investigation affecting the liberty of an individual—even a Chinaman—is not apparent on this record. In the instant case, upon the record before the court, it is impossible to find any prejudice to the public interest in requiring an answer to the question propounded.

“This case is differentiated from Boske v. Comingle (177 U. S., 459), where the information sought of the collector of internal revenue was prohibited by a regulation of the Secretary of the Treasury made under authority of law and for the purpose of making more efficient the Internal Revenue Service, and also from such cases as Gody v. Pentland (85 Pa., 22), in which public officials are protected in their refusal to produce records on grounds of public policy. Here the question of the public policy involved in the answer sought is as capable of being decided by the court as by the executive official, because apparently all the information surrounding the alleged privilege of respondent is before the court. And upon this information, the court is of the opinion that it is the duty of respondent to answer the question put to him. An analogous situation might be supposed if the judgment of a court against a citizen was questioned because of the lack of jurisdiction in the court to render the judgment, and the court should refuse to permit an investigation as to the fact of such jurisdiction. If the Department of Labor has acted without authority, and an individual has been denied his liberty as a result of such action, it is most extraordinary for the department to assert that public policy requires a concealment of the truth in regard to such lack of authority. Indeed, if the department had authority to act, and that authority were questioned in a proper judicial proceeding, by a court having jurisdiction of the matter, it would seem reasonable that the respect due by one coordinate branch of the Government to another would discountenance a concealment of the facts upon which the department acted.” (In the matter of Ching Hing, Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, decided June 10, 1915, file 26276-127; for other cases, see note to secs. 161, 417, and 418, R. S., and Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1, clause 1. See also Ex parte Ching Hing, 224 Fed. Rep., 261, in which the commission to take testimony in the case above quoted was recalled by the United States Court for the Western District of Washington, for the reason that after such commission was issued the Secretary of Labor personally reviewed and affirmed the decision of the “Acting Secretary” in the same proceedings; affirmed Ching Hing v. White, 234 Fed. Rep., 616.)

Sec. 869. [Compelling production of records before commissioner appointed to take deposition.] When either party in such suit applies to any judge of a United States court in such district or Territory for a subpoena commanding the witness, therein to be named, to appear and testify before said commissioner, at the time and place to be stated in the subpoena, and to bring with him and produce to such commissioner any paper or writing or written instrument or book or other document, supposed to be in the possession or power of such witness, and to be described in the subpoena, such judge, on being satisfied by the affidavit of the person applying, or otherwise, that there is reason to believe that such paper, writing, written instrument, book, or other document is in the possession or power of the witness, and that the same, if produced, would be competent and material evidence for the party applying therefor, may order the clerk of said court to issue such subpoena accordingly. And if the witness, after being served with such subpoena, fails to produce to the commissioner, at the time and place stated in the subpoena, any such paper, writing, written instrument, book, or other document, being in his possession or power, and described in the subpoena, and such failure is proved to the satisfaction of said judge, he may proceed to enforce obedience to said process of subpoena, or punish the disobedience in like manner as any court of the United States may proceed in case of disobedience to like process issued by such court. When any such paper, writing, written instrument, book, or other document is produced to such commissioner, he shall, at the cost of the party requiring the same, cause to be made a correct copy thereof, or of so much thereof as shall be required by either of the parties.—(24 Jan., 1827, c. 4, s. 2, v. 4, p. 199; 1 Burr’s Trial, 183.)

See notes to sections 161, 418, and 871, Revised Statutes, concerning records of executive departments.

Sec. 870. [Fees of witness before commissioner to be paid in advance.] No witness shall be required, under the provisions of either of the two preceding sections, to attend at any place out of the county where he resides, nor more than forty miles from the place of his residence, to give his deposition; nor shall any witness be deemed guilty of contempt for disobeying any subpoena directed to him by virtue of either of the said sections, unless his fee for going to, returning from, and one day's attendance at, the place of examination, are paid or tendered to him at the time of the service of the subpoena.—(24 Jan., 1827, c. 4, ss. 1, 2, v. 4, pp. 197, 199.)

Sec. 871. [Depositions for use in State courts.] When a commission to take the testimony of any witness found within the District of Columbia, to be used in a suit depending in any State or territorial or foreign court, is issued from such court, or a notice to the same effect is given according to its rules of practice, and such commission or notice is produced to a justice of the supreme court of said District, and due proof is made to him that the testimony of such witness is material to the party desiring the same, the said justice shall issue a summons to the witness, requiring him to appear before the commissioners named in the commission or notice, to testify in such suit, at a time and at a place within said District therein specified.—(3 Mar., 1869, c. 128, s. 1, v. 15, p. 324.)

See note to section 868, Revised Statutes, for references to other laws authorizing depositions in various cases.

Heads of departments.—In the absence of specific authority on the subject the Attorney General is inclined to hold that the head of a department is not legally bound to appear and testify in obedience to a subpoena of a court. However, where it is proposed to take the testimony by commission, and the head of the department is not thus required to appear in court but before a commissioner, suggested that an arrangement might readily be made which would better comport with the dignity of his office as head of an executive department of the Government, whereby such testimony as he should deem proper and advisable to give could be taken at the department of which he is the head. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326; see also Gardner v. Anderson, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5220, noted under sec. 418, R. S., in which head of department refused to respond to subpoena and court refused to proceed against him for contempt. Compare In the matter of Ching Hing, noted under sec. 868, R. S.)

Chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department have been authorized by the Secretary of the Navy to answer interrogatories propounded before a commissioner duly appointed by a State court to take their testimony, without any summons being issued by a justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as provided for by the above section of the Revised Statutes. (See for example, file 12475-52, Oct. 31, 1914.)

Copies of records will not be furnished parties litigant for use in the course of proceedings in a Federal or State court; but the Navy Department will promptly furnish such copies upon call of the court before which the litigation is pending. (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, par. 18; see also file 12475-65, Jan. 12, 1916.)

Officers of the Navy or Marine Corps are prohibited from producing official records or copies thereof in a State court in answer to subpoena duces tecum or otherwise, without first obtaining authority therefor from the Secretary of the Navy. (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, par. 18, citing Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S., 460.)

The Navy Department will permit the duly authorized commissioner appointed by a State court to obtain copies of records, at the expense of the party desiring them, the same as such copies would have been furnished upon call of the court before which litigation is pending in which they are to be used. (File 12475-52:1, Aug. 15, 1914.)

In accordance with Navy Regulations (Art. R-2958, 1913) and the practice of the Navy Department, a medical officer is not authorized, without approval by the department in each specific case, to (a) sign the form used in secret fraternal orders to secure sick dues; (b) sign a death certificate for presentation to a secret society or lodge having death benefits; or (c) fill out insurance blanks in the case of the death of a naval patient. This relates to medical records of officers and enlisted men in the naval service who have been patients of the medical officer of whom the certificates are requested. Where certificates of death are required by State laws in connection with the transportation of remains, such certificates would be "official certificates" and would not come under the prohibition of the regulations. (File 12475-52:10, Aug. 5, 1915; see also 12475-52:8, Dec. 5, 1914; 12475-71, Mar. 16, 1916; 26806-15, Apr. 8, 1909; 5195-61:1, Mar. 21, 1912.)

It has been the practice of the Navy Department to consider a man's medical record as private and confidential, and that it should be given to no one but the man himself, or if dead to his next of kin, and furthermore that such action is to be taken only upon application to the department direct. (File 12475-52:8, Dec. 12, 1914; C. M. O. 6, 1915, p. 14.) Attorneys or agents may obtain information concerning the service of officers or enlisted men, by filing with the department a power of attorney from the party or his next of kin, and giving a satisfactory statement as to the purpose for which the desired information is to be used. (Art. I-26, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

For other cases, see note to sections 161 and 418, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 872. [Depositions when no commission issued.] When it satisfactorily appears by affidavit to any justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or to any commissioner for taking depositions appointed by said court—

First. That any person within said District is a material witness for either party in a suit pending in any State or territorial or foreign court;

Second. That no commission nor notice to take the testimony of such witness has been issued or given; and

Third. That, according to the practice of the court in which the suit is pending, the deposition of a witness taken without the presence and consent of both parties will be received on the trial or hearing thereof, such officer shall issue his summons, requiring the witness to appear before him at a place within the District, at some reasonable time, to be stated therein, to testify in such suit.—(3 Mar., 1869, c. 128, s. 2, v. 15, p. 325.)

Sec. 873. [Manner of taking and transmitting depositions.] Testimony obtained under the two preceding sections shall be taken down in writing by the officer before whom the witness appears, and shall be certified and transmitted by him to the court in which the suit is pending, in such manner as the practice of that court may require. If any person refuses or neglects to appear at the time and place mentioned in the summons, or, on his appearance, refuses to testify, he shall be liable to the same penalties as would be incurred for a like offense on the trial of a suit.—(3 Mar., 1869, c. 128, s. 3, v. 15, p. 325.)

Sec. 874. [Witness fees allowed for giving depositions.] Every witness appearing and testifying under the said provisions relating to the District of Columbia shall be entitled to receive for each day's attendance, from the party at whose instance he is summoned, the fees now provided by law for each day he shall give attendance.—(3 Mar., 1869, c. 128, s. 4, v. 15, p. 325.)

See sections 848-851, Revised Statutes, for amount of fees allowed witnesses.

See section 185, Revised Statutes, as to fees allowed witnesses giving depositions for use before departments in pending claims.

Sec. 877. [Witnesses; form of subpoena.] Witnesses who are required to attend any term of a circuit or district court on the part of the United States, shall be subpoenaed to attend to testify generally on their behalf, and not to depart the court without leave thereof, or of the district attorney; and under such process they shall appear before the grand or petit jury, or both, as they may be required by the court or district attorney.—(6 Feb., 1853, c. 80, s. 3, v. 10, p. 169.)

Circuit courts were abolished by the Judicial Code, act of March 3, 1911, sections 289-291 (36 Stat., 1167).

Naval courts have power to issue like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which United States courts of criminal jurisdiction may lawfully issue. (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 11, 35 Stat., 621.)

Sec. 879. [Imprisonment or recognizance of witnesses.] Any judge or other officer who may be authorized to arrest and imprison or bail persons charged with any crime or offense against the United States may, at the hearing of any such charge, require of any witness produced against the prisoner, on pain of imprisonment, a recognizance, with or without sureties, in his discretion, for his appearance to testify in the case. And where the crime or offense is charged to have been committed on the high seas, or elsewhere within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, he may, in his discretion, require a like recognizance, with such sureties as he may deem necessary, of any witness produced in behalf of the accused, whose testimony in his opinion is important, and is in danger of being otherwise lost. [See §§ 848, 1014.]—(24 Sept., 1789, c. 20, s. 33, v. 1, p. 91; 23 Aug., 1842, c. 188, s. 2, v. 5, p. 517; 8 Aug., 1846, c. 98, s. 7, v. 9, p. 73.)

See note to section 877, Revised Statutes, as to power of naval courts to compel attendance of witnesses.

Sec. 881. [Confinement of witnesses at any time to insure appearance.] Any judge of the United States, on the application of a district attorney, and on being satisfied by proof that the testimony of any person is competent and will be necessary on the trial of any criminal proceeding in which the United States are parties or are interested, may compel such person to give recognizance, with or without sureties, at his discretion, to appear to testify therein; and, for that purpose, may issue a warrant against such person, under his hand, with or without seal, directed to the marshal or other officer authorized to execute process in behalf of the United States, to arrest and bring before him such person. If the person so arrested neglects or refuses to give recognizance in the manner required, the judge may issue a warrant of commitment against him, and the officer shall convey him to the prison mentioned therein. And the said person shall remain in confinement until he is removed to the court for the purpose of giving his testimony, or until he gives the recognizance required by said judge.—(8 Aug., 1846, c. 98, s. 7, v. 9, p. 73.)

See note to section 877, Revised Statutes, as to power of naval courts to compel attendance of witnesses.

In prosecutions for unlawful cohabitation, when it appears that there is reasonable ground to believe that a witness will refuse to obey a subpoena, an attachment for such witness may be issued without previous subpoena, and the witness held until he executes a recognizance for his appearance. (Act Mar. 3, 1887, sec. 2, 24 Stat., 635.)

Sec. 882. [Copies of Department records and papers.] Copies of any books, records, papers, or documents in any of the Executive Departments, authenticated under the seals of such Departments, respectively, shall be admitted in evidence equally with the originals thereof.—(15 Sept., 1789, c. 14, s. 5, v. 1, p. 69. 22 Feb., 1849, c. 61, s. 3, v. 9, p. 347. 31 May, 1854, c. 60, s. 2, v. 10, p. 297.)

Certified copies of records in naturalization cases are evidence in any case in which originals might be admissible. (Act June 29, 1906, sec. 28, 34 Stat., 606.)

Courts-martial—As to admissibility of evidence and competency of witnesses before naval courts-martial, see section 1624, Revised Statutes, articles 40–42, and 60.

Practice of Navy Department as to furnishing copies of records for use in court proceedings—See note to section 871, Revised Statutes.

Scope of section.—Only papers or documents which were made by an officer or agent of the Government in the course of his official duty are embraced by this section, which can not be held to include every document or paper on file. (Block's case, 7 Ct. Cls., 406.)

The words "documents" and "papers" used in acts of Congress do not mean every document or paper on file in a department, but such as were made public documents by officers of the Government in the discharge of their duties. (The Ship Parkman, 35 Ct. Cls., 407.)

The statutes providing for the authentication of copies of books, papers, and documents in the executive departments employ substantially the same language that is used by common-law writers on the same subject and they must be understood and interpreted by the same reasons that govern at common law. (Block's case, 7 Ct. Cls., 406.)

Transcripts from the records of the executive departments, when authenticated by the seal of the department, are evidence both at common law and by statute; but the words "documents" and "papers" used in the act of Congress can not be held to mean every document or paper on file, but such only as were made by an officer or agent of the Government in the course of his official duty. Official documents duly certified need no further proof; but other documents, though on file, do not by the mere fact of certification become so authenticated as to entitle them to be read in evidence. (Block's case, 7 Ct. Cls., 406.)

A receipt for property captured, procured from a military governor by a claimant and by him filed in an executive department, is not a public document; and an authenticated copy thereof can not be read in evidence. The original must be produced and proved according to the rules of evidence. (Block's case, 7 Ct. Cls., 406.)

This statute applies at least to any paper which is by law required to be kept on file in any executive department; it is not limited to papers written by an officer in his official capacity. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355, 362.)

See notes to section 1624, Revised Statutes, articles 34 and 42.

Form of authentication.—It is a sufficient compliance with this section for the head of the office where the record is kept to certify that it is a true copy of the original, and for the head of the department to certify under seal to the official character of the head of the office. (Ballew v. U. S., 160 U. S., 187.)

State courts may admit in evidence certified copies of papers and documents on file in the Navy Department, pursuant to State statutes similar to the above provision of section 882. (See, for example, Maurice v. Worden, 54 Md., 233.)

When documentary evidence is offered before a naval court-martial it must be in a public session of the court, and if admitted the document in full or an authenticated copy thereof must be appended to the record or set out in full in the recorded testimony of the witness who reads from the document (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, arts. 187, 203), except that it is not necessary for a court-martial to append either the originals or certified copies of efficiency reports to the record of proceedings when introduced in evidence, a simple notation in the record that they were admitted in evidence being sufficient, as the originals form a part of the officer's official record on file in the Navy Department, where they may readily be examined at any time in connection with the court-martial proceedings. (C. M. O. 19, May 25, 1915, citing file 26251-7777, July 2, 1913.)

When it is desired to put any part of the official record of an officer in evidence, the original, where available, should be offered, and the action of a judge advocate in making admissions as to its contents would not in general meet with the approval of the Navy Department. (C. M. O. 19, May 25, 1915; Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, art. 191.)

Court-martial orders, general and special orders, circulars, regulations, and similar publications of the Navy Department should be judicially noticed by courts-martial without being offered in evidence. (See Naval Courts and Boards, 1917.)

Sec. 883. [Copies of records in office of Solicitor of Treasury.] Copies of any documents, records, books, or papers in the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, certified by him under the seal of his office, or, when his office is vacant, by the officer acting as Solicitor for the time, shall be evidence equally with the originals.—(22 Feb., 1849, c. 61, s. 2, v. 9, p. 347.)

Sec. 886. [Transcripts from records of Treasury.] When suit is brought in any case of delinquency of a revenue officer, or other person accountable for public money, a transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department, certified by the Register and authenticated under the seal of the Department, or, when the suit involves the accounts of the War or Navy Departments, certified by the Auditors respectively charged with the examination of those accounts, and authenticated under the seal of the Treasury Department, shall be admitted as evidence, and the court trying the cause shall be authorized to grant judgment and award execution accordingly. And all copies of bonds, contracts, or other papers relating to, or connected with, the settlement of any account between the United States and an individual, when certified by the Register, or by such Auditor, as the case may be, to be true copies of the originals on file, and authenticated under the seal of the Department, may be annexed to such transcripts, and shall have equal validity, and be entitled to the same degree of credit which would be due to the original papers if produced and authenticated in court: Provided, That where suit is brought upon a bond or other sealed instrument, and the defendant pleads "non est factum," or makes his motion to the court, verifying such plea or motion by his oath, the court may take the same into consideration, and, if it appears to be necessary for the attainment of justice, may require the production of the original bond, contract, or other paper specified in such affidavit.—(3 Mar., 1797, c. 20, s. 1, v. 1, p. 512; 3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, s. 11, v. 3, p. 367; Walton v. U. S., 9 Wh., 651; U. S. v. Buford, 3 Pet., 12; Smith v. U. S., 5 Pet., 292; Cox v. U. S., 6 Pet., 172; U. S. v. Jones, 8 Pet., 375; Gratiot v. U. S., 15 Pet., 336; U. S. v. Irving, 1 How., 250; Hoyt v. U. S., 10 How., 109; Bruce v. U. S., 17 How., 437; U. S. v. Edwards, 1 McLean, 467; U. S. v. Hilliard et al., 3 McLean, 324; U. S. v. Lent, 1 Paine, 417; U. S. v. Martin, 2 Paine, 68; U. S. v. Van Zandt, 2 Cr. C. C., 328; U. S. v. Griffith, 2 Cr. C. C., 336; U. S. v. Lee, 2 Cr. C. C., 462; U. S. v. Harrill, 1 McAll., 243; U. S. v. Mattison, Gilp., 44; U. S. v. Corwin, 1 Bond, 149; U. S. v. Gaussen, 19 Wall., 198.)

This section was amended by act of July 31, 1894, section 17 (28 Stat., 210), as amended by act of March 2, 1895, section 10 (28 Stat., 809), so as to require that "the transcripts from the books and proceeding of the Department of the Treasury and the copies of the bonds, contracts, and other papers provided for" in section 886, Revised Statutes, "shall hereafter be certified by the Secretary or an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under the seal of the Department."

Sec. 887. [Evidence in embezzlement cases.] Upon the trial of any indictment against any person for embezzling public moneys, it shall be sufficient evidence, for the purpose of showing a balance against such person, to produce a transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department, as provided by the preceding section.—(6 Aug., 1846, c. 90, s. 16, v. 9, p. 63; 2 Mar., 1797, c. 20, s. 1, v. 1, p. 512. U. S. v. Gaussen, 19 Wall., 198.)

A similar provision is contained in the Criminal Code, act March 4, 1909, section 93 (35 Stat., 1105).

A provision that transcript from account books of Auditor for Post Office Department shall be prima facie evidence of balance against person on trial for embezzlement of postal funds, is contained in the Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, section 225 (35 Stat., 1133.)

Accepting or transmitting to Treasury Department for allowance, receipt from creditor of the United States without having paid full amount specified therein, is evidence of conversion. (Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 95, 35 Stat., 1106.)

Failure to produce or pay over postal funds when required is prima facie evidence of embezzlement. (Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 225, 35 Stat., 1133.)

On general subject of embezzlement see sections 89–96, Criminal Code, act March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105, 1106), and section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Refusal of officer to surrender or transfer public funds when required is prima facie evidence of embezzlement. (Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 94, 35 Stat., 1106.)

Sec. 888. [Copies of records in Returns Office.] A copy of any return of a contract returned and filed in the returns-office of the Department of the Interior, as provided by law, when certified by the clerk of the said office to be full and complete, and when authenticated by the seal of the Department, shall be evidence in any prosecution against any officer for falsely and corruptly swearing to the affidavit required by law to be made by such officer in making his return of any contract, as required by law, to said returns-office. [See § 3744.]—(2 June, 1862, c. 93, s. 4, v. 12, p. 412.)

See sections 512–515, Revised Statutes, relating to Returns Office.

Sec. 895. [Extracts from Journals of Congress.] Extracts from the Journals of the Senate, or of the House of Representatives, and of the Executive Journal of the Senate when the injunction of secrecy is removed, certified by the Secretary of the Senate or by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, shall be admitted as evidence in the courts of the United States, and shall have the same force and effect as the originals would have if produced and authenticated in court.—(8 Aug., 1846, c. 107, s. 1, v. 9, p. 80.)

See section 859, Revised Statutes, concerning testimony given by witnesses before Congress.

Sec. 896. [Copies of records in consular offices.] Copies of all official documents and papers in the office of any consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent of the United States, and of all official entries in the books or records of any such office, certified under the hand and seal of such officer, shall be admitted in evidence in the courts of the United States. [See § 1707.]—(8 Jan., 1869, c. 7, v. 15, p. 266.)

Copies of protests or declarations before consular officers are admissible in evidence under section 1707, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 905. [Authentication of State laws and records.] The acts of the legislature of any State or Territory, or of any country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be authenticated by having the seals of such State, Territory, or country affixed thereto. The records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State or Territory, or of any such country, shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, so authenticated, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the State from which they are taken.—(26 May., 1790, c. 11, v. 1, p. 122; 27 Mar., 1804, c. 56, s. 2, v. 2, p. 299; *Ferguson v. Revised Statutes of the United States (first edition): Printed volume legal evidence of the laws therein contained (act June 20, 1874, sec. 2, 18 Stat., 113).

Revised Statutes of the United States (second edition): Printed volume legal evidence of the laws therein contained, but shall not preclude reference to nor control in case of discrepancy the effect of any original act as passed by Congress since December 1, 1873. (Act Mar. 2, 1877, sec. 4, 19 Stat., 269, as amended by act Mar. 9, 1878, 20 Stat., 27.)

Statutes at Large: Printed volumes legal evidence of laws and treaties therein contained. (Act June 20, 1874, sec. 8, 18 Stat., 114; act Jan. 12, 1894, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 612.)

Judicial notice of State laws.—The National and State courts, not being foreign to one another, as the State courts are, but subordinate courts of a complete system of Government, with limited and separate jurisdiction; and the former having judicial knowledge of the laws of the several States, and therefore of the mode of authenticating the judicial records thereof, a statute prescribing the mode of proving the judicial records of a State when used in another State does not apply to a case where such record is sought to be used in a national court. (Bennett v. Bennett, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1318; see also, as to judicial notice by courts of the United States of the public statutes of the several States, Merchants Exch. Bank v. McGraw, 59 Fed. Rep., 972; Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet., 625; Bank v. Fraueklyn, 120 U. S., 747; Lamar v. Micou, 114 U. S., 857; Gormley v. Bunyan, 138 U. S., 453.)

All Federal courts, when exercising original jurisdiction, take judicial notice of the constitutions and public statutes, not only of the State where they are sitting, but of every other State and of every Territory. All courts in the United States take judicial notice of the United States Constitution and amendments thereto, and of the public statutes enacted by Congress. Judicial knowledge of a statute includes the date when it went into effect, when it was suspended or repealed, and facts recited or recognized in the statute. (See 16 Cyc., 889, 890, 892, and cases there cited.)

Naval courts-martial must take judicial notice of the law of a State which is pertinent to a case on trial, without such law having been offered in evidence. (C. M. O. 27, 1913, p. 8.)

Sec. 906. [Proof of State records other than judicial.] All records and exemplifications of books, which may be kept in any public office of any State or Territory, or of any country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any court or office in any other State or Territory, or in any such country, by the attestation of the keeper of the said records or books, and the seal of his office annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county, parish, or district in which such office may be kept, or of the governor, or secretary of state, the chancellor or keeper of the great seal, of the State, or Territory, or country, that the said attestation is in due form, and by the proper officers. If the said certificate is given by the presiding justice of a court, it shall be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify, under his hand and the seal of his office, that the said presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or, if given by such governor, secretary, chancellor, or keeper of the great seal, it shall be under the great seal of the State, Territory, or country aforesaid in which it is made. And the said records and exemplifications, so authenticated, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court and office within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts or offices of the State, Territory, or country, as aforesaid, from which they are taken.—(27 Mar., 1804, c. 56, ss. 1, 2, v. 2, pp. 298, 299; 21 Feb., 1871, c. 62, v. 16, p. 419.)

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN.

PROCEDURE.

Sec. 1023. [Perjury before naval court-martial.] In prosecutions for perjury committed on examination before a naval general court-martial, or for the subornation thereof, it shall be sufficient to set forth the offense charged on the defendant, without setting forth the authority by which the court was held, or the particular matters brought before, or intended to be brought before said court.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 13, v. 12, p. 604.)

Perjury committed by persons in the naval service is punishable under section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14, clause 4, and articles 22 and 42.

Perjury is defined and made punishable by fine and imprisonment, by the Criminal Code, act March 4, 1909, section 125 (35 Stat., 1111).

Quartermaster-General of Army may sell articles of serviceable quartermaster property to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps for use in the public service, the same as such articles are sold to officers of the Army. (Act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1079.)

Subsistence supplies of the Army may be sold to officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps at same prices charged officers and enlisted men of the Army. (Act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1072.)

Subsistence supplies furnished by the War Department to another executive department are to be paid for in cash by the proper disbursing officer of the bureau, office, or department concerned, or by the employee to whom the sale is made; the price charged to include the contract or invoice price and 10 per cent additional to cover wastage in transit, and the cost of transportation. (Act Mar. 3, 1911, 36 Stat., 1047.)

Transportation by or under the instructions of the Quartermaster General of the Army, of property for the civil or naval departments of the Government in Washington or elsewhere, under the regulations governing the transportation of Army supplies, was authorized by act of July 5, 1881 (23 Stat., 111), which provided that the amount paid for such transportation should be refunded or paid by the bureau to which such property or stores pertained.

When in the opinion of the Secretary of War accommodations are available, transportation may be provided for the officers, enlisted men, employees, and supplies of the Navy, the Marine Corps, and other officers of the Government while traveling on official business, and without expense to the United States for the families of those persons herein authorized to be transported. (Act Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1170.)

When in the opinion of the Secretary of War accommodations are available, transportation on vessels of the Army transport service may be furnished to officers, employees, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard and their families, without expense to the United States, and also secretaries and supplies of the Army and Navy department of the Young Men's Christian Association. (Act Mar. 3, 1911, 36 Stat., 1051.)

When the War Department procures stores or material, or performs any service, for the Navy Department, the funds of the Navy Department may be placed subject to the requisition of the War Department for direct expenditure by it. (Act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1084.)

Provision for supplying enlisted men of the Marine Corps with the Army or Navy ration, or commutation therefor, under varying conditions, was made by section 1615, Revised Statutes, and act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 909).

Sec. 1176. [Trusses, to whom furnished. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1176. Every soldier of the Union Army who was ruptured while in the line of duty during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, is entitled to receive a single or double truss, of such style as may be designated by the Surgeon General, as best suited for his disability."—(28 May, 1872, c. 228, s. 1, v. 17, p. 164.)

It was superseded by the following provision of the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat., 353):

"That section one of the act entitled 'An act to provide for furnishing trusses to disabled soldiers,' approved May twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-two [incorporated in section 1176, Revised Statutes], be, and the same is hereby, amended so that said section shall read as follows:

"That every soldier of the Union Army, or petty-officer, seaman, or marine in the naval service, who was ruptured while in the line of duty during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, or who shall be so ruptured thereafter in any war, shall be entitled to receive a single or double truss of such style as may be designated by the Surgeon General of the United States Army as best suited for such disability;

"And whenever the said truss or trusses so furnished shall become useless from wear, destruction, or loss, such soldier, petty-officer, seaman, or marine shall be supplied with another truss on making a like application as provided for in section two of the original act of which this is an amendment:

"Provided, That such application shall not be made more than once in two years and six months; * * *

The words "section two of the original act," as used in the above enactment of March 3, 1879, refer to section 2 of the act of May 28, 1872, which is incorporated in section 1177, Revised Statutes, set forth below.

Artificial limbs or commutation therefor are allowed officers, soldiers, seamen, and marines who shall have lost a limb in the line of duty in the military or naval service, by act of August 15, 1876 (19 Stat., 203). See also section 4787, Revised Statutes, as amended by acts of February 27, 1877, section 1 (19 Stat., 252) and March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1103); and see sections 4788–4791, Revised Statutes, as amended by acts of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 252) and March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 979).

Sec. 1177. [Trusses, application for.] Application for such truss shall be made by the ruptured soldier, to an examining surgeon for pensions, whose duty it shall be to examine the applicant, and when found to have a rupture or hernia, to prepare and forward to the Surgeon-General an application for such truss without charge to the soldier. [See § 4787.]—(28 May, 1872, c. 228, s. 2, v. 17, p. 164.)

This section was amended by act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat., 353), which provided, "That sections two and three of the said act of May twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-two, shall be construed so as to apply to petty officers, seamen, and marines of the naval service, as well as to soldiers of the Army." Section 2 of the act mentioned was incorporated in section 1177, Revised Statutes, and section 3 of said act was embodied in section 1178, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1178. [Trusses, purchase of.] The Surgeon-General is authorized and directed to purchase the trusses required for such soldiers, at wholesale prices, and the cost of the same shall be paid upon the requisition of the Surgeon-General out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.—(26 May, 1872, c. 228, s. 3, v. 17, p. 164.)

This section was amended by act of March 3, 1879, quoted above, under section 1177, Revised Statutes.

It was repealed in part by the following provision of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 367): "So much of section eleven hundred and seventy-eight of the Revised Statutes of the United States as makes a permanent indefinite appropriation to purchase trusses for soldiers, is repealed, to take effect after June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine, and estimates of sufficient sums for the purchase of such trusses shall be submitted to Congress for the fiscal year nineteen hundred and ten, and annually thereafter, in the regular Book of Estimates."

Sec. 1225. [Detail of Army and Navy officers to educational institutions.]

The President may, upon the application of any established military institute, seminary or academy, college or university, within the United States having capacity to educate at the same time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army or Navy to act as superintendent, or professor thereof; but the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed fifty from the Army, and ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty, at any time, and they shall be apportioned throughout the United States, first, to those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the provisions of the act of Congress of July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be the practical instruction of the industrial classes in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics; and after that, said details to be distributed, as nearly as may be practicable, according to population. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section, and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case, in double the value of the property, for the care and safe keeping thereof, and for the return of the same when required.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of September 26, 1888 (25 Stat., 491), section 2 of which act provided "That the said section twelve hundred and twenty-five of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the said act of Congress approved July fifth, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, saving always, however, all acts and things done under the said amended section as heretofore existing."

As originally enacted, this section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1225. The President may, upon the application of any established college or university within the United States, having capacity to educate, at the same time, not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof; but the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed twenty at any time, and they shall be apportioned throughout the United States, as nearly as may be practicable, according to population. Officers so detailed shall be governed by general rules prescribed, from time to time, by the President. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of any small arms or pieces of field artillery belonging to the Government and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice, by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section; and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case, in double the value of the property, for the care and safe-keeping thereof, and for the return of the same when required." 28 July, 1866, c. 229, s. 26, v. 14, p. 336. 4 May, 1870, res. 40, v. 16, p. 373.

By act of July 5, 1876 (19 Stat., 74), the maximum number of officers to be detailed to educational institutions was increased from twenty, as authorized by the original section 1225, to thirty, and by act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat., 108), was further increased to forty, until section 1225 was amended and reenacted as set forth above by act of September 26, 1888 (25 Stat., 491).

[The "Engineer Corps of the Navy" was abolished and the personnel thereof transferred to the line of the Navy by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004). See note to section 1390, Revised Statute.]

Act May 4, 1880 (21 Stat., 113): "Upon the application of any college, university, or institution of learning incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having capacity at the same time to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, the President may detail an officer of the Army on the retired list to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof; and such officer may receive from the institution to which he may be detailed the difference between his retired and full pay, and shall not receive any additional pay or allowance from the United States."

Act September 26, 1888 (25 Stat., 491): "Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the detail of officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy as professors in scientific schools or colleges as now provided by act of Congress approved February twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, entitled 'An act to promote a knowledge of steam engineering and iron shipbuilding among the students of scientific schools or colleges in the United States.'" [The act of September 26, 1888, from which this provision is taken, reenacted section 1225, Revised Statutes, as set forth above. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section twelve hundred and twenty-five of the Revised Statutes, concerning the detail of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to permit the President to detail under the provisions of that act, and in addition to the detail of the officers of the Army and Navy now authorized to be detailed under the existing provisions of said act, such retired officers of the Army and Navy of the United States as in his judgment may be required for that purpose, to act as instructors in military drill and tactics in schools in the United States, where such instruction shall have been authorized by the educational authorities thereof, and where the services of such instructors shall have been applied for by said authorities.

"Sec. 2. That no detail shall be made under this act to any school unless it shall pay the cost of commutation of quarters of the retired officers detailed thereto and the extra-duty pay to which the latter may be entitled by law to receive for the performance of special duty: Provided, That no detail shall be made under the provisions of this act unless the officers to be detailed are willing to accept such position without compensation from the Government other than their retired pay."

Act March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 738): "That the act approved November third, eighteen hundred and ninety-three, authorizing the detail of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, be amended so as to provide that retired officers, when so detailed, shall receive the full pay and allowances of their rank, except that the limitations on the pay of officers of the Army above the grade of major as provided in the acts of March second, nineteen hundred and five, and June twelfth, nineteen hundred and six, shall remain in force."

Act March 4, 1911, section 3 (33 Stat., 1353): "That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, when in his opinion the same can be done without detriment to the public service, to detail proper officers of the Navy as superintendents of or instructors in such schools: Provided, That if any such school shall be discontinued, or the good of the naval service shall require, such vessel shall be immediately restored to the Secretary of the Navy and the officers so detailed recalled: And provided further, That no person shall be sentenced to or received at such schools as a punishment or commutation of punishment for crime." [The schools referred to in this section are certain nautical schools, or schools or colleges having a nautical branch.]

Act June 3, 1916, section 45 (39 Stat., 192): "The President is hereby authorized to detail such numbers of officers of the Army, either active or retired, not above the grade of colonel, as may be necessary, for duty as professors and assistant professors of military science and tactics at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained; but the total number of active officers so detailed at educational institutions shall not exceed three hundred, and no active officer shall be so detailed who has not had five years' commissioned service in the Army. In time of peace retired officers shall not be detailed under the provisions of this section without their consent. Retired officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel so detailed shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grade, and retired officers above the grade of major so detailed shall receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under a like detail. No detail of officers on the active list of the Regular Army under the provisions of this section shall extend for more than four years."

Act June 3, 1916, section 46 (39 Stat., 192): "The President is hereby authorized to detail for duty at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained such number of enlisted men, either active or retired or of the Regular Army Reserve, as he may deem necessary, but the number of active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall not exceed five hundred, and all active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall be additional in their respective grades to those otherwise authorized for the Army. Retired enlisted men or members of the Regular Army Reserve shall not be detailed under the provisions of this section without their consent. While so detailed they shall receive active pay and allowances."

Act June 3, 1916, section 56 (39 Stat., 197): "Such arms, tentage, and equipment as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary for proper military training shall be supplied by the Government to schools and colleges, other than those provided for in section forty-seven of this act, having a course of military training prescribed by the Secretary of War and having not less than one hundred physically fit male students above the age of fourteen years, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to detail such commissioned and noncommissioned officers of the Army to said schools and colleges, other than those provided for in sections forty-five and forty-six of this act, detailing not less than one such officer or noncommissioned officer to each five hundred students under military instruction." [Section 47 of this act provides for "institutions at which one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained."]

Act September 17, 1919 (41 Stat., 286): "That no officer on the active list [Army] shall be detailed for * * * duty at schools and colleges, not including schools of the service, where officers on the retired list can be secured who are competent for such duty." (Similar provision contained in act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 777.)

Generous policy in respect to educational institutions.—The policy of the United States has always been a generous one in respect to educational institutions. Statutes have been enacted appropriating a particular section in each township of the public lands for use of schools. By the acts of July 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 417), and March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1281), money is annually appropriated to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanical arts now established or which may be hereafter established in accordance with the act of July 2, 1862 (12 Stat., 503). Accordingly, the provisions of section 1225, Revised Statutes, should be given a broad interpretation. (17 Comp. Dec., 691, Mar. 22, 1911.)

"Within the United States," includes college in Porto Rico.—The words, "upon the application of an established college or university within the United States," as used in section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, were not intended to restrict the benefits of said statute to colleges or universities "within the United States," in the sense of the States united, but were used in a broader sense and embrace the organized contiguous Territories; and the act of April 12, 1900 (31 Stat., 79), authorizes the extension of the benefits of section 1225 as amended to Porto Rico. (17 Comp. Dec., 691, Mar. 22, 1911.)

"An officer of the Army or Navy" includes a retired officer.—When the law speaks of "officers of the Army," without any qualifying words, it includes officers on the retired list as well as those on the active list. Section 1225, as amended by the act of September 26, 1888, authorizes the President to detail officers of the Army (without qualifying words) for duty at educational institutions; retired officers are included in this authorization. (6 Comp. Dec., 120, Aug. 15, 1899.)

Until the passage of the act of November 3, 1893, there was no authority of law for the detail of retired officers to such duty with the full pay of their rank, details of this kind being limited to officers on the active list. "I can not believe that a duty to which for many years only officers on the active list were permitted to be assigned is not active duty or ceases to be such when retired officers are permitted on their own application to undertake it." (11 Comp. Dec., 698, May 18, 1905. As to pay of retired officers detailed to colleges, see cases noted below.)

It will be noted that section 1225, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of September 26, 1888 (25 Stat., 491), refers to the detail of officers "of the Army," but it was never held to apply to retired officers until amended by the act of November 3, 1893 (28 Stat., 7), so as to provide that "officers on the retired list of the Army may upon their own application be detailed to such duty, and when so detailed shall receive the full pay of their rank." This appears to have been the first law authorizing the payment of full pay to retired officers on duty at educational institutions, and it would not apply to or affect details under section 1260, Revised Statutes, or the act of May 4, 1880. (23 Comp. Dec., 500.)

The act of November 3, 1893, was amended by the act of March 3, 1909. The next legislation on this subject was the act of June 3, 1916. From an examination of the various laws relative to the detail of officers to educational institutions, it appears to have been the uniform practice of Congress whenever it intended to provide for the detail of retired officers to designate them specifically and also to stipulate as to the pay they should receive. Section 56 of the act of 1916 makes no specific reference to retired officers or to pay, and Congress did not intend by said section to grant any new authority for the detail of retired officers to educational institutions. Accordingly, held, that the term "commissioned and noncommissioned officers of the Army," as used in section 56, act of June 3, 1916 (39 Stat., 197), does not include retired officers, although in its broad sense the Army of the United States does include officers and enlisted men on the retired list. (23 Comp. Dec., 500.)

For other cases, see note to section 1457, Revised Statutes.

Limitation upon number of officers detailed applies both to active and retired list.—The act of November 3, 1893, authorizes the detail of 100 officers from the active list of the Army, but does not require it. Said act leaves it within the discretion of the President to make the detail of officers of the Army for colleges wholly from the active list of the Army, or wholly from retired officers, who, "upon their own application," may be detailed for those services, or from both lists, in such proportion as he sees fit and as the applications for such detail from the retired officers will allow. No other limit than 100 is set to the number of such officers that can be detailed and these may be taken by the President from either the active or retired list of the Army, or both. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 687, Dec. 8, 1893.)

Restrictions as to length of service in Army and period of detail apply both to active and retired lists.—The "five years' service in the Army," as well as the limit of detail to four years, applies to officers detailed from the retired as well as from the active list. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 687, Dec. 8, 1893.)

Number of active and retired officers detailed must be apportioned.—By section 1225, Revised Statutes, and the acts of September 26, 1888, November 3, 1893, and March 3, 1909, the President may, upon the application of any established military institute, seminary or academy, college or university, within the United States, having a certain capacity, detail an officer of the Army on the active or retired list to act as superintendent, or professor thereof, but such officers so detailed shall be apportioned throughout the United States, first, to those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tacties under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862 (12 Stat., 503), donating lands for the establishment of colleges, etc., and after that said details to be distributed as nearly as may be practicable according to population, etc. (17 Comp. Dec., 691, Mar. 22, 1911.)

Officer bound to obey order to act as professor.—Where an officer of the Army is detailed by peremptory order to act as professor in a college, under the act of July 28, 1866 (14 Stat., 336, sec 26), [embodied in section 1225, Revised Statutes], the order so detailing him is one which he is bound to obey. (Long v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cls., 398, Dec. Term, 1872.)

Service as an instructor in an institution of learning, under a detail pursuant to section 1225, Revised Statutes, as amended, is active service to which a retired naval officer may be ordered in time of war; but to which he could not be assigned, without his consent, in time of peace. The act of March 2, 1895, applies to cases where retired officers desire to engage as instructors on their own account in purely private institutions where military tactics are not taught, and to which Government officers could not therefore be assigned for duty as such; and said act has no reference to the case where an officer might lawfully be ordered to perform such service without his consent. A similar provision to the act of March 2, 1895, is found in section 1260, Revised Statutes, with regard to retired officers of the Army, and Congress has made a distinction between employment under that section and under section 1225. See act of August 6, 1894. (5 Comp. Dec., 326, Dec. 19, 1898. When this decision was rendered, retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps could not be employed on active duty except in time of war. See note to sec. 1462, R. S.)

The act of August 6, 1894, leaves it in the power of the President to detail retired officers of the Army, under the act of May 4, 1880, upon application by the institutions; that is, to make compulsory details. (6 Comp. Dec., 120, Aug. 15, 1899.)

Retired officer may be allowed additional compensation by college.—Section 1260, Revised Statutes, refers to additional compensation from the United States, not from the colleges. That this does not refer to any additional compensation from the college, but from the United States, is evident from the language employed, which does not prohibit the receiving, but the allowing of additional compensation. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 687, Dec. 8, 1893.)

Pay of retired officers.—A retired officer of the Navy who, in time of war, is detailed to act as superintendent or professor at any educational institution, as provided by section 1225, Revised Statutes, and the act of September 26, 1888 (25 Stat., 491), is engaged in active service and entitled to active-duty pay, under section 1592, Revised Statutes, during the continuance of the war. (5 Comp. Dec., 326, Dec. 19, 1898.)

Officers of the Army on the retired list who, upon their own application, are detailed to educational institutions in accordance with the provisions of the act of November 3, 1893 [as part of the limited number of officers authorized to be detailed by said act], are entitled to the full pay of their rank. (6 Comp. Dec., 120, Aug. 15, 1899.)

When, under the act of November 3, 1893, a retired Army officer is detailed as a professor of military science and tactics at a university located in the Island of Porto Rico, such officer is entitled while so detailed to the full pay of his rank. (17 Comp. Dec., 691, Mar. 22, 1911.)

Officers of the retired list detailed for college duties prior to November 3, 1893, and still on duty under such detail, are entitled to full pay only from the passage of the act of that date, under and by virtue of which alone is their right to full pay derived. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 687, Dec. 8, 1893.)

Under section 1225, as amended by act of September 26, 1888, which says nothing about pay, retired officers, if so detailed, would be placed on duty and would thereby ordinarily become entitled to the full pay of their grades (citing Long v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cls., 403, holding that "a retired officer when called into service and assigned to duty is entitled to receive the full pay and the emoluments of his rank"). This view would, however, be subject to modification in case some statute should require it. The act of May 4, 1880, provides that a retired officer "may receive from the institution to which he may be detailed the difference between his retired and full pay, and shall not receive any additional pay or allowance from the United States." As the law stood after the act of May 4, 1880, retired officers detailed to educational institutions could not receive full pay of their grade from the United States, and it would not be material whether the detail was compulsory or made upon application of the officers. (See also sec. 1260, R. S.) The act of November 3, 1893, amended section 1225 and entitled retired officers to receive the full pay of their rank, provided the detail is not compulsory, but is made upon the application of said retired officers. The act of August 6, 1894, does not attempt to repeal or modify the act of 1893 in so far as said act of 1893 authorizes full pay for retired officers when they are detailed "upon their own application" in making up the maximum of 100 officers, both active and retired, authorized by the act. The act of 1894 still leaves it in the power of the President to detail retired officers under the act of 1880, upon application by the institutions (or compulsory details), and under section 1260, Revised Statutes, upon application of said retired officers, but when so detailed under the act of 1880 or section 1260 the officers will not be entitled to any pay or allowance from the United States beyond their pay as retired officers. It is difficult to understand why officers detailed upon their own application under the act of 1893 should be given full pay, and denied it when detailed upon their own application under section 1260; or why denied it when compulsorily detailed under the act of 1880 and other acts; but such must be the construction of the law as it is. (6 Comp. Dec., 120, Aug. 15, 1899.)

It will be observed that retired officers detailed to educational institutions under the acts of May 4, 1880 (21 Stat., 113), and May 21, 1904 (33 Stat., 225), receive only their retired pay and such additional compensation or allowances as may be paid by the institution to which detailed. (23 Comp. Dec. 500.)

Pay of retired Army officers governed by general laws relating to active duty.—

A retired officer of the Army with the rank of colonel who was detailed under the act of November 3, 1893, for duty at an educational institution, was while so detailed "assigned to active duty" within the meaning of the act of March 2, 1905 (33 Stat., 831), and therefore, under the provisions of said act, he was only entitled while so detailed to the full pay and allowances of a major on the active list. (11 Comp. Dec., 698, May 18, 1905.)

The act of March 2, 1905 (33 Stat., 831), refers to the pay of retired officers of the Army when "assigned" to active duty; the term "assigned" includes "detailed," as a detail is only one method of assignment; the act of March 2, 1905, therefore applies to retired officers detailed to duty at educational institutions, as such duty is to be regarded as "active duty," and officers so assigned to active duty are entitled only to the rates of pay authorized by that act. (11 Comp. Dec., 698, May 18, 1905.)

An officer of the Army on the retired list detailed to duty at an educational institution under the act of November 3, 1893, who was advanced from the rank of major to the rank of lieutenant colonel, under the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 264), on account of civil-war service, should be regarded for pay purposes as a lieutenant colonel, and under the act of March 2, 1905 (33 Stat., 831), he is, while on such duty, entitled to receive the full pay and allowance of a major on the active list. (16 Comp. Dec., 716, May 13, 1910.)

Pay of retired Navy officers not governed by general laws relating to active duty.—A retired officer of the Navy detailed to service under the act of March 2, 1895, during the period February 7, 1903, to September 30, 1903, is not entitled to active-duty pay and commutation of quarters. (Comp. Dec., July 18, 1905, 53 S. and A. Memo., 572.)

The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), which authorized the detail of any retired naval officer to active duty (during a period of twelve years from its date), with "the pay and allowances of an officer of the active list of the grade from which he was retired," did not apply so as to entitle the officer to active-duty pay during his detail to active duty under the act of March 2, 1895. (Comp. Dec., July 18, 1905, 53 S. and A. Memo., 572.)

The act of March 2, 1895, is a special statute, while the later one of June 7, 1900, was general, and under established rules a subsequent act treating a subject in general terms and not expressly contradicting the provisions of a prior special statute is not to be considered as intended to affect the more particular and specific provisions of the earlier act, unless it is absolutely necessary so to construe it in order to give its words any meaning at all. As the act of March 2, 1895, under which this officer was detailed, provides that while so detailed he shall be allowed no additional pay, he is not entitled to active-duty pay and commutation of quarters. (Comp. Dec., July 18, 1905, 53 S. and A. Memo., 572.)

As to interpretation of act of March 2, 1895, see 5 Comp. Dec., 326, noted above, under "Officer bound to obey order to act as professor."

Commutation of quarters.—Under the provision of the act of November 3, 1893, that retired officers of the Army detailed at educational institutions "shall receive the full pay of their rank," but which does not include allowances, such officers so detailed are not entitled to commutation of quarters. (6 Comp. Dec., 506, Nov. 23, 1899; Spencer v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 430.)

The act of May 4, 1880, prohibits both pay and allowances, while the act of November 3, 1893, merely removes the restriction as to pay, but says nothing about allowances. This omission is significant and controlling in the construction of the act of 1893. The general rule in military matters is that where the word pay is used alone, it does not include allowances. (6 Comp. Dec., 506, Nov. 23, 1899.)

Where an officer of the Army is detailed by peremptory order to act as professor in a college under the act of July 28, 1866 (14 Stat., 336, sec. 26) [embodied in section 1225, Revised Statutes], he is entitled to fuel and quarters or commutation therefor, and his right to commutation is not affected by the fact that his detail was procured by the president of the college with his cooperation. In such a case, if there be no quarters at the place, it will be a station without troops within the meaning of the Army Regulations, and he need not make requisition for quarters. (Long v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cls., 398, Dec. Term, 1872.)

An officer relieved from duty at a station where he had quarters in kind, and ordered to report in person for duty at a college during vacation, is not entitled to commutation of quarters prior to the date on which he reports in person at the college. A report by letter does not have the effect of placing him on duty at the college in such a sense as to entitle him to commutation of quarters at that station. (4 Comp. Dec., 254; Nov. 26, 1897.)

Medical attendance.—A retired officer of the Army who is detailed as a professor at an educational institution is not entitled to reimbursement for expenditures for medicines or for medical attendance. (7 Comp. Dec., 89, Aug. 14, 1900.)

It seems clear that medicines and medical attendance can not be considered as part of the pay of an officer, and they must therefore be regarded as in the nature of an allowance, which is not authorized to be given to a retired officer detailed under the act of November 3, 1893. (7 Comp. Dec., 89, Aug. 14, 1900.)

A retired colonel or lieutenant colonel of the Army, detailed under the act of November 3, 1893, to duty at an educational institution, being entitled under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1905 (33 Stat., 831), to the full pay and allowances of a major on the active list, is entitled to such medical attendance and medicines at the expense of the United States as are authorized for a major on the active list; but under the provisions of said act of March 2, 1905, a retired officer above the rank of colonel is not entitled while so detailed to said allowances. (11 Comp. Dec., 758, June 14, 1905.)

Mounted pay.—Cavalry and Field Artillery officers on the active list of the Army below the grade of major, who are detailed at educational institutions, are required to be mounted during such detail within the meaning of the act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat., 108), and if they provide suitable mount or mounts at their own expense they are entitled to the addition to their pay on that account and to the allowances for mounts as authorized by law. (16 Comp. Dec., 638, Mar. 31, 1910.)

Detail of retired Marine officer.—The act of March 2, 1895 (above quoted) does not appear to have been affected by any subsequent legislation in so far as officers of the Marine Corps are concerned. The Navy Department is therefore of opinion that a retired Marine officer is eligible under that act to detail to service as a teacher or professor in any school or college. (File 9736-22, Aug. 12, 1911.)

There appears to have been no change in the act of March 2, 1895, so far as retired officers of the Marine Corps are concerned. As specific authority thus exists for the detail of the retired Marine officer concerned, it is unnecessary to pass upon the question whether said officer may properly be considered an officer of the Navy within the intent of the act of April 21, 1904 (above quoted). The act of March 2, 1895, as construed by the Attorney General, does not prohibit additional compensation from the college, but from the United States. (File 11112-649, Sept. 8, 1916.)

Detail of petty officer in the Navy.—There is no statutory authority for detailing a petty officer on the active list to an educational institution as instructor therein. However, the act of April 21, 1904 (above quoted), includes retired petty officers in the Navy by the phrase "retired officers and noncommissioned officers of the Army and Navy." It follows that a retired petty officer of the Navy may be detailed as instructor in an educational institution, and while so detailed such institution is, under the terms of the act cited, required to pay him commutation of quarters. Further, the prohibition in said act against payment of compensation from the Government, other than retired pay, to the "noncommissioned" officers so detailed, does not prohibit the acceptance by such noncommissioned or petty officers of additional compensation from the institution to which detailed. It should be noted that section 1225, Revised Statutes, as amended, limits the details in question to colleges or universities having capacity to educate at the same time "not less than 150 male students," and prevents details thereunder of retired noncommissioned or petty officers unless they "are willing to accept such position." (File 7657-361, May 6, 1916.)

Sec. 1229. [Dismissal of officers in military or naval service.] The President is authorized to drop from the rolls of the Army for desertion any officer who is absent from duty three months without leave; and no officer so dropped shall be eligible for re-appointment. And no officer in the military, or naval service shall in time of peace be dismissed from service except upon and in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial to that effect, or in commutation thereof.—(Art. of war, 99; art. of war, 106; 15 July, 1870, c. 294, s. 17, v. 16, p. 319; 13 July, 1866, c. 176, s. 5, v. 14, p. 92.)

By act of April 2, 1918 (40 Stat., 501), the President was authorized "to drop from the rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps any officer thereof who is absent from duty without leave for a period of three months or more, or who, having been found guilty by the civil authorities of any offense, is finally sentenced to confinement in a State or Federal penitentiary: Provided, That no officer so dropped shall be eligible for reappointment."

Dismissals from the naval service are further provided for by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 36.

Dismissals from the Army are further provided for by section 1342, Revised Statutes, article 118, as amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 669).

Dropping an officer from the rolls of the Army is authorized, where he has been absent in confinement in a prison or penitentiary for more than three months after final conviction by a civil court of competent jurisdiction. (See act Jan. 19, 1911, 36 Stat., 894; and art. 118, sec. 1342, R. S., as amended by act Aug. 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 669).)

Historical note.—As recommended to Congress by the Commission to Revise the Laws (1872), this section read as follows: "The President is authorized to drop from the rolls of the Army for desertion any officer who is absent from duty three months without leave; and no officer so dropped shall [be eligible for re-appointment] ever be restored to the military service, except by a re-appointment confirmed by the Senate. But such dismissal shall be subject to the provisions of the next section." The "next section" contained provisions similar to those of article 37 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy. (Sec. 1624, R. S.) In the notes to the proposed section (Comms. Draft, R. S., pp. 610, 611), it was stated:

"The act of 3 March, 1865, ch. 79, §12, vol. 13, p. 489, provides: 'That in case any officer of the military or naval service who may be hereafter dismissed by authority of the President shall make an application in writing for a trial, setting forth under oath that he has been wrongfully and unjustly dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the public service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he was dismissed. And if such court-martial shall not award dismissal or death as the punishment of such officer, the order of dismissal shall be void. And if the court-martial aforesaid shall not be convened for the trial of such officer within six months from the presentation of his application for trial, the sentence of dismissal shall be void.'

"Section 17 of act 15 July, 1870, ch. 294, vol. 16, p. 319, provides for dropping an officer 'from the rolls,' but as it declares him thereafter ineligible 'for re-appointment,' it appears that this process of dropping is absolute dismissal. Taken by itself the later provision seems to imply that the action of the President is conclusive; but it is assumed by this commission that it can not be construed separately from the existing general provision as to all dismissals by the President. The last clause of the section in the text is not inserted as a new suggestion, therefore, but as the necessary construction of the provision.

"It is to be observed that the act of 20 July, 1868, ch. 185, vol. 15, p. 125, provides that officers cashed by sentence of court-martial shall not be restored to the military service except by re-appointment confirmed by the Senate, while the act of 15 July, 1870, cuts off such re-appointment. The earlier act treats the appointing and confirming power as a trustworthy authority to review all the circumstances of a dismissal by court-martial, as well as to consider the subsequent history of the convicted person. Cases might very well occur in which a prolonged absence without leave could be explained, but after a certain time the party would be without remedy. It seems probable that no distinction in this respect between the cases of dismissal by court-martial and cases of dismissal by the President was intended. The words in italics are inserted for the purpose of placing them on the same footing."

However, the recommendations of the commissioners were not accepted by Congress, which enacted this provision in the Revised Statutes as section 1229, in the language given above. (As to the effect of pardon with reference to the reappointment of dismissed officers to the Navy, see note to section 1441, Revised Statutes; as to distinction between various methods by which the service of officers may be terminated without their consent, see note to section 1454, Revised Statutes, under "Meaning of 'wholly retired,'" and note to section 1456, Revised Statutes, under "Character of discharge issued under act of 1882.")

Sec. 1342. [Articles of War. Repealed.]

This section of the Revised Statutes, which contained the Articles of War, and statutes amendatory thereof, were repealed by act approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 812), which same act contained new articles of war (id., pp. 787-812). However, article 2 of the original section 1342, which prescribed the oath of allegiance to be taken by enlisted men, is continued in force for enlisted men of the Navy by act of March 3, 1899, sec. 25, noted under section 1418, Revised Statutes.

The Navy is governed by the articles embodied in section 1624 of the Revised Statutes, known as the "Articles for the Government of the Navy."

The Marine Corps is governed by "the laws and regulations established for the government of the Navy," except when detached for service with the Army by order of the President; and when so detached it is subject to the rules and articles of war prescribed for the government of the Army. (See sec. 1621, R. S.; and art. 2 (c), quoted below.)

"Officers and enlisted men of the Medical Department of the Navy, serving with a body of marines detached for service with the Army in accordance with the provisions of section sixteen hundred and twenty-one of the Revised Statutes, shall, while so serving, be subject to the rules and articles of war prescribed for the government of the Army in the same manner as the officers and men of the Marine Corps while so serving." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 573.)

Article 2 of the Articles of War (June 4, 1920) reads as follows:

"ART. 2. PERSONS SUBJECT TO MILITARY LAW.—The following persons are subject to these articles and shall be understood as included in the term 'any person subject to military law,' or 'persons subject to military law,' whenever used in these articles: Provided, That nothing contained in this Act, except as specifically provided in Article two, subparagraph (c), shall be construed to apply to any person under the United States naval jurisdiction unless otherwise specifically provided by law.

"* * * (c) Officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the Armies of the United States by order of the President: Provided, That an officer or soldier of the Marine Corps when so detached may be tried by military court-martial for an offense committed against the laws for the government of the naval service prior to his detachment, and for an offense committed against these articles he may be tried by a naval court-martial after such detachment ceases * * *."

As to persons in the Navy and Marine Corps subject to the Articles of War, see notes above, under this section, and see notes to section 1621, Revised Statutes.

The only case in which it is "otherwise specifically provided by law" that any person under the United States naval jurisdiction shall be subject to the Articles of War is that set forth in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573, quoted above under this section), relating to members of the Medical Department of the Navy serving with a body of marines detached for service with the Army. By section 6 of this act of August 29, 1916, "All laws and parts of laws in so far as they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." Accordingly held, that a fireman second class in the Navy was not subject to the jurisdiction of an Army court-martial for absence without leave from U. S. Army Base Hospital No. 6, A. E. F., and that the sentence of an Army summary court-martial purporting to require forfeiture of pay in his case was null and void and should be disregarded and ignored by the naval authorities. (File 26287-5459, Feb. 28, 1919.)

Men enlisted in the Army may on their own application be transferred to the Navy or Marine Corps, but such transfer shall not release them "from any penalty incurred for a breach of military law." (Sec. 1421, R. S.)

Article 4 of the Articles of War (June 4, 1920) reads as follows:

"ART. 4. WHO MAY SERVE ON COURTS-MARTIAL.—All officers in the military service of the United States, and officers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the Army by order of the President, shall be competent to serve on courts-martial for the trial of any persons who may lawfully be brought before such courts for trial. * * *

It was originally provided by section 1342, as article 78 of said section, that "officers of the Marine Corps, detached for service with the Army by order of the President, may be associated with officers of the Regular Army on courts-martial for the trial of offenders belonging to the Regular Army, or to forces of the Marine Corps so detached; and in such cases the orders of the senior officer of either corps, who may be present and duly authorized, shall be obeyed."

As to status of Marine Corps when detached for service with the Army, see note to section 1621, Revised Statutes; see also note to article 120, below.

Articles 119 and 120 of the Articles of War (June 4, 1920) read as follows:

"ART. 119. RANK AND PRECEDENCE AMONG REGULARS, MILITIA, AND VOLUNTEERS.—That in time of war or public danger, when two or more officers of the same grade are on duty in the same field, department, or command, or of organizations thereof, the President may assign the command of the forces of such field, department, or command, or of any organization thereof, without regard to seniority of rank in the same grade.

"ART. 120. COMMAND WHEN DIFFERENT CORPS OR COMMANDS HAPPEN TO JOIN.—When different corps or commands of the military forces of the United States happen to join or do duty together, the officer highest in rank of the line of the Regular Army, Marine Corps, forces drafted or called into the service of the United States, or Volunteers, there on duty, shall, subject to the provisions of the last preceding article, command the whole and give orders for what is needful in the service, unless otherwise directed by the President."

It was originally provided by section 1342, as article 122 of said section, that, "if, upon marches, guards, or in quarters, different corps of the Army happen to join or do duty together, the officer highest in rank of the line of the Army, Marine Corps, or militia, by commission, there on duty or in quarters, shall command the whole, and give orders for what is needful to the service, unless otherwise specially directed by the President, according to the nature of the case."

By amendment of March 8, 1910, (36 Stat., 234), article 122 of the original section 1342, was changed to read as follows: "If, upon marches, guards, or in quarters, different corps of the Army happen to join or do duty together, the officer highest in rank of the line of the Army, Marine Corps, or militia, by commission, there on duty or in quarters, shall command the whole, and give orders for what is needful to the service, unless otherwise specially directed by the President, according to the nature of the case."

Scope of article.—"The one hundred and twenty-second [now 120th] article of war above quoted applies only when 'different corps of the Army' happen to join or do duty together. It has no pertinency when a portion of the naval force of the United States and a part of the Army happen to join or do duty together, or when any portion of the Marine Corps happens to serve in conjunction with the Army, unless such portion of the Marine Corps can be deemed at the time a part of the Army or at least organically attached to it." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 15.)

Marine Corps detached for service with Army.—When the Marine Corps is detached for service with the Army, by order of the President, in accordance with section 1621, Revised Statutes, "then of course it becomes a 'corps of the Army' within the scope of the one hundred and twenty-second [now 120th] article of war. When any part of the Marine Corps is present with the Army and engaged in a common enterprise with it, without an order of the President detaching it for service with the Army, the case is one of cooperation, but not of incorporation; and then no officer of the Marine Corps can exercise command over the Army any more than a naval officer can when some part of the Navy is cooperating with the Army; and conversely it is true that no officer of the Army can exercise command over the Marine Corps when the Army and Marine Corps are merely cooperating, without the Marine Corps having been attached to the Army by order of the President, any more than an Army officer can exercise command over the Navy under like circumstances. Indeed, this case of some part of the Marine Corps and some part of the Army being together engaged in a common enterprise is but a special instance of the many cases in which the Army and Navy cooperate to a common end. It becomes different only when some portion of the Marine Corps has been attached to the Army by the President's order." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 15.)

"The one hundred and twenty-second [now 120th] article of war does not operate to give to officers of the Marine Corps any authority to exercise command in the Army unless they have been detached for service with the Army by order of the President and are still serving with the Army under that order." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 15.)

Command of joint forces of Army and Navy.—"At the present time there is no law which purports to provide who shall command joint forces of the Army and Navy doing duty together, this matter having heretofore been left by Congress where it properly belongs—to the President, who, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, is the only authority vested by the Constitution with the power to determine what officers shall take command of such forces either by virtue of rank or by special designation. As an example of this authority of the President, the following article (1050) of the Navy Regulations, all of which are issued with the written approval of the President, may be cited:

"An officer of the Navy can not assume command of Army forces on shore, nor can an officer of the Army assume command over any ship of the Navy, or over its officers or men afloat, except in either case by special authority for a particular service; but when officers of the Navy are on duty on shore with the Army, they shall be entitled to the precedence of the rank in the Army to which their own corresponds, except command as aforesaid, and this precedence will regulate their right to quarters."

"Similarly the regulations governing the relationship of Army and naval officers while engaged in convoy operations or in the transportation of Army forces aboard naval vessels which have recently been amplified, indicate again the authority of the President in the matter of determining questions of command. Therefore, it appears clear to this department that the President may issue immediately whatever regulations he may deem wise on the subject of command of joint forces of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and no enactment of Congress can increase the power which he already possesses over this subject matter." (Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of War, Mar. 4, 1918, file 3980-1402:3.)

Sec. 1362. [Grades of line officers. Superseded.]This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1362. The active list of the line officers of the Navy of the United States shall be divided into eleven grades, as follows, namely:

- "First. Admiral.
- "Second. Vice Admiral.
- "Third. Rear admirals.
- "Fourth. Commodores.
- "Fifth. Captains.
- "Sixth. Commanders.
- "Seventh. Lieutenant commanders
- "Eighth. Lieutenants.
- "Ninth. Masters.
- "Tenth. Ensigns.
- "Eleventh. Midshipmen.

"Provided, That vacancies occurring in the grades of Admiral and Vice Admiral shall not be filled by promotion, or in any other manner; and that when the offices of said grades shall become vacant, the grade itself shall cease to exist."—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 1, v. 12, p. 583. 21 Dec., 1864, c. 6, s. 1, v. 13, p. 420. 25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 1, v. 14, p. 222. 2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 1, v. 14, p. 516. 24 Jan., 1873, c. 62, v. 17, p. 418).

It was superseded by the Navy personnel act, March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), which provided that "the active list of the line of the Navy" shall be composed of

- Rear admirals;
- Captains;
- Commanders;
- Lieutenant commanders;
- Lieutenants;
- Lieutenants (junior grade); and
- Ensigns.

Rear admirals were divided into two grades for pay purposes by section 7 of the personnel act above cited, rear admirals of the "nine lower numbers" being given the pay and allowances of brigadier generals in the Army, while rear admirals of the upper nine numbers were not specifically provided for, but, under the general provisions contained in section 13 of the same act they received the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank in the Army, namely, major general, that being the rank corresponding with the rank of rear admiral according to section 1466, Revised Statutes. This division of rear admirals into two grades for pay purposes was continued in effect by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat. 127), which provided different rates of pay for "rear admiral, first nine," and "rear admiral, second nine." (See Terry v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 353.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576, 577), provision was made for increasing the number of officers allowed in the various grades and ranks of the Navy, and it was further enacted that "hereafter pay and allowances of officers in the upper half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps and including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, shall be that now allowed by law for the first nine rear admirals, and the pay and allowances of officers in the lower half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps, shall be that now allowed by law for the second nine rear admirals."

The grade of commodore was omitted from the active list by the Navy personnel act, section 7, above cited. That act, however, while thus abolishing the grade of commodore on the active list, did not thereby affect the rank of officers then on the retired list having the rank of commodore, and it contained several provisions for the future retirement of officers with that rank under certain prescribed conditions, viz, by section 7 of said act (30 Stat., 1005) it was provided "that nothing contained in this section shall be construed to prevent the retirement of officers who now have the rank or relative rank of commodore with the rank and pay of that grade;" by section 8 (30 Stat., 1006), it was provided that officers retired on their own application for the purpose of creating a prescribed minimum of annual vacancies should be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of the "next higher grade, as now existing, including the grade of commodore;" by section 9 (30 Stat., 1006), it was provided that officers retired by selection for the purpose of creating a prescribed minimum of annual vacancies should be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of the "next higher grade, including the grade of commodore, which is retained on the retired list for this purpose." None of these provisions for retirement with the rank of commodore is now in force. By section 11 of the personnel act (30 Stat., 1006), it was provided that officers having Civil-War service should, when retired, be retired with the rank "of the next higher grade;" under that section, officers with the rank of captain on the active list were retired with the rank of rear admiral and not commodore. Under section 1481, Revised Statutes, certain staff officers are retired with the rank of commodore, this being the only case in which any officers are now placed on the retired list with that rank. (In this connection, see notes to secs. 421 and 1473, R. S., concerning the retirement of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department.) The naval appropriation act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), which established new rates of pay for the Navy, provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service, and the annual pay of each grade shall be as follows: * * * rear admiral, second nine, or commodore, six thousand dollars." However, there were no commodores on the active list at the time of this enactment and none have since been appointed.

The grade of Admiral ceased to exist, in accordance with section 1362, Revised Statutes, February 13, 1891, in consequence of the death of Admiral David D. Porter. The grade of Vice Admiral had previously ceased to exist, Vice Admiral Stephen C. Rowan having retired February 26, 1889, and died March 31, 1890. However, by act March 2, 1899 (30 Stat., 905), the President was authorized to appoint an "Admiral of the Navy," with the condition that "whenever such office shall be vacated by death or otherwise the office shall cease to exist." The following day, March 3, 1899, the Navy personnel act became law, providing, as above set forth, what officers should compose "the active list of the line of the Navy," and making no mention of "Admiral of the Navy." In anticipation of a possible decision that this omission of the grade of "Admiral of the Navy" from the personnel act impliedly repealed the prior enactment of March 2, 1899, authorizing the appointment of such officer, the said act of March 2, 1899, authorizing the appointment of an "Admiral of the Navy," was reenacted in the same words as a clause in the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1045). The grade of "Admiral of the Navy" accordingly continued as part of the active list of the Navy until such office was "vacated" by the death of Admiral George Dewey on January 16, 1917, when such grade in accordance with law ceased to exist.

The naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 941, 942), provided that the commanders in chief of the Atlantic, Pacific, and Asiatic Fleets shall have the rank of admiral, and the officers second in command of said fleets shall have the rank of vice admiral, from the date each such officer shall assume duty as commander in chief or second in command, respectively, until his relinquishment of such duty; and that "the grades of admiral and vice admiral in the Navy are hereby reestablished and authorized for the purposes of this section." It was further provided that when an officer is detached from duty as such commander in chief or second in command, "he shall return to his regular rank in the list of rear admirals" from which appointed. This act has been construed as not investing the officers concerned with the offices of admiral and vice admiral, but merely as conferring upon them temporarily the rank and pay of those offices, while they continued at the same time to be officers of the grade of rear admiral. (21 Comp. Dec., 840.) See note below, "Title," "grade," "rank," and "office" defined and distinguished."

By act of May 22, 1917, section 18 (40 Stat., 89) the provision in the act of March 3, 1915, quoted in the preceding paragraph, was expressly repealed, and in lieu thereof it was provided that the President be authorized to designate six officers of the Navy for the command of fleets or subdivisions thereof, and that, after such designation, from the date of assuming such command until relinquishing thereof, not more than three of such officers shall each have the rank and pay of an admiral and the others shall each have the rank and pay of a vice admiral; and that "the grades of admiral and vice admiral are hereby authorized and continued for the purpose of this Act;" provided, that in time of war the selections under the provisions of said act shall be made from the grades of rear admiral or captain on the active list of the Navy, and that in time of peace such selections shall be made from among the rear admirals on the active list of the Navy; provided further, that nothing contained herein shall create any vacancy in any grade in the Navy or increase the total number of officers authorized by law; provided further, that when any officer with the rank of admiral or vice admiral is detached from the command of a fleet or subdivision thereof he shall return to his regular rank in the list of officers of the Navy and shall thereafter receive only the pay and allowances of such rank; and provided further that nothing in said act shall be held or construed as amending or repealing sections 1434, 1463, and 1464 of the Revised Statutes.

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 558), it was provided that the Chief of Naval Operations, while so serving, shall have the rank and title of admiral, to take rank next after The Admiral of the Navy, and if retired while so serving he shall be retired with the lineal rank and retired pay to which he would be entitled had he not been serving as Chief of Naval Operations.

The grades of master and midshipman as part of the active list of the line, under section 1362, Revised Statutes, were abolished, and the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and junior ensign, created by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which had the effect of changing the title "master" to "lieutenant (junior grade)" and the title "midshipman" to "ensign" (see Schuetze v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 299; Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, 337), and the grade of junior ensign thus created was abolished by act of June 26, 1884, section 2 (23 Stat., 60). The title of "midshipman" was applied to students at the Naval Academy by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686). "Midshipmen are, by law, officers in a qualified sense. They are classed as being of the line." (Art. R-1002, par. 3, Navy Regulations, 1913. See Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324; Schuetze v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 299.)

Who are line officers; status of warrant and commissioned warrant officers.—In 1862 Congress passed an act purporting to establish the grade of line officers in the Navy. Prior to that time there is little or nothing in the statutes about the line of the Navy. In that statute, without explaining which of the various meanings of the word "line" Congress had in mind, it left no doubt as to the officers it intended to embrace among the line officers of the Navy, for it mentioned them all. This specification was practically repeated in the acts of July, 1866, in the Revised Statutes of 1873, in an act of August 5, 1882, and in the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 620.)

It is obvious that all officers specified by Congress as line officers were thereby distinguished from all officers not specified, whether those officers were staff officers, properly so called, or officers belonging to special corps, such as the Pay Corps, the Medical Corps, and the like, warrant officers, or petty officers. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 620.)

"From the earliest times the officers of the Navy have been divided into commission officers, warrant officers, and petty officers, the difference being rather a difference in the mode of the appointment or designation than one growing out of the function to be performed. The commission officers were those holding commissions from the President like the commissions of other officers of the United States; warrant officers had no such commissions but only warrants given by the President or Navy Department; and petty officers were rated or designated by the commanders of their respective vessels from among the enlisted men on board." (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 620.)

It seems to be clear that, within the meaning of the Revised Statutes and subsequent laws, line officers of the Navy are the officers specified as such by Congress, and that no others are such officers of the line. It follows that no warrant officers are, within the meaning of those laws, officers of the line. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 620.)

However, Congress in speaking of "the line" evidently does not mean "the line of command," and there is nothing in its classification to indicate an intent to make unlawful the exercise of command by boatswains and gunners. "It would seem that boatswains and gunners have been in the line of command as a matter of fact for a century. Both of them are officers whose functions and business are ancient and are involved in the customs of the British and American navies. As a navy is an organic growth, its antecedents and customs should not be ignored * * *. From all that has been said I think we may conclude that treating those officers as in the line of command was not without lawful authority before 1862 * * *. These things being so, I think those officers are not improperly classed in the Regulations as officers of the line, and that they can properly be given the star upon their uniforms." (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 620.)

"The machinist has existed in the Navy for some time, of course, and yet for no great period. He has been a rated or petty officer (Art. 794, Regulations of 1893). The personnel act of this year [1899] creating the office of warrant machinist [now "machinist"] shows plainly that Congress did not intend to place the machinists in its own list of line officers, for it repeated that list in section 7, and omitted them. They had previously been connected with the Engineer Corps or its business, a staff or special corps, no part of which had been exercising military command. The personnel bill has not been regarded as ipso facto transferring all the officers of that corps to the line of command. (See General Orders 524.) As these machinists do not appear to have previously exercised military command, I think that, before they are to be held entitled to command, and others, including senior officers, held to be under obligations to obey them, something positive to that effect should be produced from the personnel acts or from the general nature of their duties or elsewhere. The presumption is the other way, and I find nothing to overcome it." (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 620.)

Since the above opinion was rendered by the Attorney General, it has been held by the Navy Department (file 17789-15, Dec. 13, 21, 1909) that machinists should be classified as line officers, the same as boatswains and gunners, and accordingly it was provided by Navy Regulations that chief boatswains, chief gunners, and chief machinists (who are commissioned officers, designated by the Navy Regulations as "commissioned warrant officers," Art. R-1013, par. 2, Navy Regs., 1913), and boatswains, gunners, and machinists (who are warrant officers), are line officers of the Navy (Art. R-1013, par. 3, Navy Regs., 1913); but that "so far as succession to command or succession to duties aboard ship outside the engineer department are concerned chief machinists and machinists are restricted to the

As to the appointment of warrant officers and commissioned warrant officers, see note to section 1405, Revised Statutes.

"Title," "grade," "rank," and "office" defined and distinguished.—Title is the name by which an office or the holder of an office is designated and distinguished in the statute and by which the officer has a right to be known and addressed; grade expresses one of the divisions or degrees in the particular department or branch of the service according to which offices therein are classified or graded; and rank, which originally signified that which determines the right to command and is still an inseparable incident to such right, expresses the position of officers of different grades or of the same grade in point of authority, precedence, or the like, of one over another. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

The word "rank" is sometimes used, however, as synonymous with "grade"; thus, when it is said that a particular officer shall have the rank of captain, commander, and so forth, there being no qualifying word, it is used in the sense of grade, and this whether the rank is permanently or temporarily given. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 414; see also Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 160.)

In some cases the same word or appellation may express, alike, title, grade, and rank with clearness. Thus, in section 1362, which provides that "the active list of the line officers of the Navy of the United States shall be divided into eleven grades, as follows, namely," etc., each of the words "Admiral," and "Vice Admiral," expresses the title of the officer holding either of those respective positions, his grade, and his rank; in other words, the name by which he is entitled to be addressed, the division or degree in the line of the Navy to which he belongs, and the rank which he holds in it. If, however, there were more than one officer of the same title and grade, it would not necessarily express rank. Thus, "rear admiral," which is a grade composed of more officers than one, each having a right to the same title, does not express the rank which they hold inter sese, although it expresses the rank so far as those above and below that grade are concerned. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

"Grade is a step or degree in either office or rank, and has reference to the divisions of the one or the other or both, according to the connection in which the word is employed." (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 160; affirmed 107 U. S., 414; see also Moser v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 86; Thornley v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 111.)

The distinction between rank and office is more clearly apparent with reference to staff officers than to officers of the line, because in the latter case the words used to designate the rank and the office are usually the same, while in the former case they are always different. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 159.)

While "grade" has the same meaning as "office," "rank" is merely a classification to fix the position of officers with respect to other officers in the same or in other grades, as to command, precedence, privilege, or pay. "Rank" may be conferred by mere notification, and without either examination, confirmation, or commission (citing Gen. Wood's Case, 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 159; Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S., 414; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 358, 362, 363; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 169; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376). So also, while "grade" is only partially, "rank" is wholly, within the control of Congress (citing Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S., 414, 417; Sen. Rept. No. 2163, 38th Cong., 2d sess.). But whenever Congress creates a new grade or rank, without making any provision for filling it, the selection, in the case of a vacancy in grade, is made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate (citing 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 117); while in the case of a vacancy in rank it is made by the President as Commander in Chief of the Navy, without any action on the part of the Senate (citing Gen. Ainsworth's Case, 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 480). (Op. Atty. Gen., Dec. 27, 1916, file 28687-4:8.)

Rank is often used to express something different from office. It then becomes a designation or title of honor, dignity, or distinction conferred upon an officer in order to fix his relative position with reference to other officers in matters of privilege, precedence, and sometimes of command, or by which to determine his pay and emoluments. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 159.)

In some cases, officers of the line have a rank assigned to them different from that of the title of their office. Congress has frequently exercised the power of changing the mere rank of officers, without invoking the constitutional power of the Executive to appoint the incumbents to new offices. Accordingly, held that when a line officer is retired upon a higher rank pursuant to act of Congress, as a reward for services rendered in battle, his office remains the same as it was on the active list, but he acquires a higher rank without in any sense being appointed to a new office. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 159, 161, 162; affirmed 107 U. S., 414.)

The titles or names of offices to which line officers are appointed are employed also as the designation of rank, and when no other rank is conferred upon them the titles of their respective offices also express their rank; but it does not follow that rank and office are therefore always identical, and in point of fact they are not so. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 158, 159.)

The office remaining the same, the officer may have a different rank conferred on him, as a title of distinction, to fix his relative position with reference to others. (Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S., 414.)

The word "grade" in Revised Statutes, section 1588, which fixes the pay of retired officers of the Navy at 75 per cent of the pay of the grade or rank held by them at the time of retirement, refers to the divisions of officers into five-year periods of service. (Rutherford v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 339.)

Where the law provided that certain officers should have "the highest rates of pay attached to their respective grades," it was held that the officers in question were thereby entitled to the highest pay of their rank, the court saying: "A grade is a step in a series, a rank; * * * a grade is a rank, and in our opinion Congress intended to give plaintiff the highest pay of his rank." (Schuetze v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 299.)

Relative rank between Army and Navy officers.—See section 1466, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1363. [Number of line officers.

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1363. There shall be allowed on the active list of the line officers of the Navy one Admiral, one Vice-Admiral, ten rear-admirals, twenty-five commodores, fifty captains, ninety commanders, eighty lieutenant-commanders, two hundred and eighty lieutenants, one hundred masters, and one hundred ensigns; and no promotion to the grade of lieutenant-commander shall be made until the number of such grade is reduced below eighty."—(25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 1, v. 14, p. 222. 15 July, 1870, c. 295, ss. 9, 10, v. 16, p. 333.)

It was amended by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), which reduced the number of officers in the various grades of the line to the following: Rear admirals, 6; commodores, 10; captains, 45; commanders, 85; lieutenant commanders, 74; lieutenants, 250; masters, 75; and ensigns, 75.

It was superseded by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 1 of which act (30 Stat., 1004) transferred the officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy to the line, and section 7 of which act (30 Stat., 1005) provided that "the active list of the line of the Navy, as constituted by section one of this act, shall be composed of" the following: 18 rear admirals, 70 captains, 112 commanders, 170 lieutenant commanders, 300 lieutenants, and not more than a total of 350 lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns.

The number of line officers was increased by act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), which authorized 30 additional lieutenant commanders, in all 200; 50 additional lieutenants, in all 350; and such total numbers of lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns as may qualify for said grades under existing law.

The number of line officers was again increased by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576, 577), which provided that "hereafter the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be four per centum of the total authorized enlisted strength of the active list, exclusive of the Hospital Corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps: Provided, That the total number of commissioned line officers on the active list at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the proportion of one of the grade of rear admiral to four in the grade of captain, to seven in the grade of commander, to fourteen in the grade of lieutenant commander, to thirty-two and one-half in the grade of lieutenant, to forty-one and one-half in the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign, inclusive:

Provided further, That lieutenants (junior grade) shall have had not less than three years' service in that grade before being eligible for promotion to the grade of lieutenant. * * *

When there is an odd number of officers in the grade or rank of rear admiral in the line or in each corps, the lower division thereof shall include the excess in number, except where there is but one. Whenever a final fraction occurs in computing the authorized number of any corps, grade or rank in the naval service, the nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number: Provided, That at least one officer shall be allowed in each grade or rank. For the purpose of determining the authorized number of officers in any grade or rank of the line or of the staff corps, there shall be excluded from consideration those officers carried by law as additional numbers, including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, and nothing contained herein shall be held to reduce below that heretofore authorized by law the number of officers in any grade or rank in the staff corps." (As to the total authorized number of enlisted men, see note to sec. 1417, R. S.)

The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), which authorized a temporary increase in the number of enlisted men, provided (sec. 4) for the temporary appointment and promotion of additional commissioned officers, based upon such temporary increase in the enlisted strength, such additional temporary officers to be distributed between the various grades and ranks, not above lieutenant commander, in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916 (above cited). The same act and section further provided for temporary appointments and promotions to fill, during the period of the war, the deficiency existing prior to May 22, 1917, in the total number of commissioned officers authorized by the act of August 29, 1916, and "that lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns may be considered eligible for temporary promotions to the grades of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade) without regard to length of service in grade."

The act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 137, 138), which temporarily increased the enlisted strength for specified periods, provided that during such periods the "average number" of commissioned officers of the line, including temporary officers and reserves on active duty, shall not exceed 4 per centum of the total temporary authorized enlisted strength of the Regular and Temporary Navy, and members of the Naval Reserve Force in enlisted ratings on active duty; with a proviso that nothing in said act "shall be construed as affecting the permanent commissioned strength of the Navy as authorized by existing law."

The act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834) provided "That the number of commissioned officers of the line, permanent, temporary, and reserve on active duty shall not exceed 4 per centum of the total authorized enlisted strength of the Regular Navy," with the proviso that nothing therein contained should be construed as reducing the permanent commissioned strength of the Regular Navy as authorized by existing law.

Ensigns are commissioned as such from among the graduates of the Naval Academy (see acts Mar. 7, 1912, 37 Stat., 73, and July 9, 1913, 38 Stat., 103), and the appointment of 12 ensigns each year from among the boatswains, gunners, machinists, chief boatswains, chief gunners, and chief machinists in the Navy was authorized by acts of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), and March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 771); see also acts of March 3, 1899, section 12 (30 Stat., 1007); March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1129); and April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 346).

Lieutenants (junior grade) are appointed by promotion from ensigns who have had three years' service as such (act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 7, 30 Stat., 1005). By act of June 4, 1920, section 5 (41 Stat., 836) it was provided that until June 30, 1923, promotions to lieutenant (junior grade) and lieutenant may be made without regard to length of service.

Additional officers are authorized by various enactments, including the following: Advancement of officers for "eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism" is authorized by sections 1506-1507, Revised Statutes, notwithstanding that the higher grades to which such officers may be so advanced already have the full number of officers specified by law. By acts of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108) and June 16, 1906 (34 Stat., 296), officers so advanced are to be carried as additional to the numbers of each grade in which they serve. By sections 1508-1510, Revised Statutes, any line officer receiving the thanks of Congress for "highly distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy, or for extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession," may be advanced one grade, and such vote of thanks shall be held "to affect such officer only." Retired officers detailed for the command of squadrons or single ships in time of war may be restored to the active list if they receive a vote of thanks of Congress for their services and gallantry in action against the enemy (sec. 1465, R. S.). See also file 26521-400, June 19, 1920, noted below under "Effect of exceeding number of officers allowed in any grade."

The act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), provides that no promotion shall be made to fill a vacancy occasioned by the promotion, retirement, death, resignation, or dismissal of any officer who is an additional number in his grade under the provisions of the said act; and section 1510, Revised Statutes, provides that no promotion shall be made to fill a vacancy occasioned by the final retirement, death, resignation, or dismissal of an officer who has received a vote of thanks.

Officers on the active list of the line who, under the provisions of section 5 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005), perform engineering duty on shore only, were made "additional to the numbers in the grades" in which they were serving or to which they might be promoted, by act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267). [Note: Such former engineer officers are now made available by law for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade. See note to section 1390, Revised Statutes.]

The act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 939), authorized the President to restore to the active list officers who were compulsorily retired to create vacancies in accordance with section 9 of the Navy personnel act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1006), and provided that officers so transferred to the active list shall be carried as additional numbers in the grades to which transferred or thereafter promoted. Provision for restoration to the active list of certain designated retired officers, as additional numbers in grade, was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 602).

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), provided for the appointment and detail of line officers of the Navy for engineering duty only, and the same act (39 Stat., 578, 579) provided that such officers, and officers of the former Engineer Corps "who are restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only," shall, when promoted by selection to the grades of commander, captain, and rear admiral, "be carried as additional numbers in grade."

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 582, 586), created a naval flying corps, to be composed in part of 150 officers, detailed from the line of the Navy and from the Marine Corps, or appointed to the line of the Navy or Marine Corps, for aeronautic duties only, and provided that said number of officers shall be in addition to the total number of officers provided by law "for the other branches of the naval service."

Warrant officers and commissioned warrant officers.—As to number of, authorized by law, see note to section 1405, Revised Statutes.

Naval Reserve.—The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to establish a list of persons who have been found eligible by examination for commissions in any reserve or volunteer naval force hereafter organized, other than the Naval Militia, and, when exigency demands, the President is authorized to issue commissions in the Regular Navy to persons so qualified. The President is also authorized to commission or warrant former officers who have been honorably discharged from the Navy. (Act Feb. 16, 1914, sec. 21, 38 Stat., 289.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 587), amended by acts of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1174), April 25, 1917 (40 Stat., 37), April 25, 1917 (40 Stat., 38), May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708-712), and June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834), created a "Naval Reserve Force" and provided for enrollment therein, for "general service" only, of former officers and citizens of the United States or of the insular possessions and aliens, not enemies, who have declared their intention to become citizens, who "may be ordered into active service in the Navy by the President in time of war or when, in his opinion, a national emergency exists"; said Naval Reserve Force to have the various grades and ranks, not above the rank of lieutenant commander, corresponding to those in the Navy.

National Naval Volunteers.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 595), the "National Naval Volunteers" was created, to be composed of members of the Naval Militia, "to provide a force for use in any emergency, including that of actual or imminent war, requiring the use of naval forces in addition to those of the Regular Navy." By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708), all laws relating to the Naval Militia and National Naval Volunteers were repealed and the President was authorized to transfer as a class all members of the National Naval Volunteers to the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve.

The Coast Guard.—By act of January 28, 1915 (38 Stat., 800), amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 600), the Coast Guard was established, to "constitute a part of the military forces of the United States," and "to operate as a part of the Navy, subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, in time of war or when the President shall so direct."

The Lighthouse Service.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 602), it was provided that "the President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the Navy Department, or of the War Department, such vessels, equipment, stations, and personnel of the Lighthouse Service as he may deem to be the best interest of the country."

Coast and Geodetic Survey.—By act of May 22, 1917, section 16 (40 Stat., 87), it was provided "that the President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the War Department, or of the Navy Department, such vessels, equipment, stations, and personnel of the Coast and Geodetic Survey as he may deem to be the best interest of the country."

Public Health Service.—In times of threatened or actual war the President is authorized in his discretion to utilize the Public Health Service in such manner as in his judgment shall promote the public interest without impairing the efficiency of the service for the purposes for which created. (Act July 1, 1902, sec. 4, 32 Stat., 713.)

When detailed in time of war for duty with the Navy, officers of the Public Health Service shall be subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the Navy (act July 9, 1917, 40 Stat., 242); and are empowered to serve on naval courts-martial (act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 393).

Acting officers.—As to authority for appointment of, see note to section 1410, Revised Statutes.

During the Spanish War, by act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 369), the President was authorized, for a period of twelve months, in case of an exigency, to appoint officers of the line and staff not above the rank of commander, and warrant officers, and officers of the Marine Corps not above the rank of captain, as might be requisite; such officers to serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services were required in the then existing war. (In this connection, see 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82; and U. S. v. Hite, 204 U. S., 343.)

Number of officers not to be increased without explicit legislation.—Legislation relating to the Navy should not be construed as impliedly increasing the number of officers authorized by law, where no such result was intended by Congress. Thus a law providing that increased rank and pay should be conferred upon certain officers on the active list who had served as chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department should not be construed as creating a vacancy in the list of officers of their former rank, with a resultant increase in the total number of officers. Such provision was intended to affect only the officers for whose benefit it was enacted, and not to increase the number of officers in the Navy. When Congress has seen fit to make increases in the number of officers in the Navy, either generally or in particular corps or grades, it has generally used specific and apt language to accomplish that object. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 526; see also note to sec. 421, R. S.)

In accordance with the above opinion of the Attorney General, held, that an act of Congress providing that pharmacists in the Navy having six years' service as such should be commissioned as chief pharmacists, which grade had not theretofore existed, was intended merely to confer increased rank and emoluments upon officers who had served a specified period as pharmacists, and not to increase the total number of such officers; accordingly, the law having previously limited the total number of pharmacists to 25, this limitation must be held to embrace the new grade of chief pharmacist, and said grades of pharmacist and chief pharmacist combined, should be limited to a maximum of 25. (File 27213-3, May 6, 1913; see also 5460-81, May 12, 1916, and see note to sec. 1405, R. S.)

Effect of exceeding number of officers allowed in any grade.—The law fixes the maximum number of officers in various grades in the Navy; and where the number in each of the grades is full, no new appointment, either original or by promotion, can be made in those grades, without either increasing the number allowed by law, or removing some other officer. Therefore, the nomination and confirmation of an officer for appointment to a grade already full (commander), vice M, "promoted," at a time when M had been nominated for promotion but not confirmed and was therefore still in the grade of commander, must either, first, increase the number of commanders beyond that allowed by law; or second, operate to remove M from the Navy; or third, operate to confirm M as a captain; or, fourth, be ineffectual or void. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, holding that in this case effect of nomination and confirmation of successor to M, was to confirm M's nomination as captain. Compare 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 44, noted under sec. 1457, R. S., "Correction of erroneous retirement.")

The President has not power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to increase the number of commanders in the Navy beyond the number expressly fixed and limited by Congress. While the Constitution gives the President the power, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint officers, it does not confer power to create such offices as these, nor to increase their number. He may appoint such officers as are created by the Constitution or by law, but there can be no doubt of the power of Congress to fix and limit the number of such officers as these, and such action is binding upon both the Executive and the Senate, and can be changed by Congress alone. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), while it does not in numbers fix the complement of the various commissioned grades and ranks of the Navy, does specify a definite method of determining the maximum number of such officers by mathematical calculation. The result of such calculation is the fixed number of officers allowed by law in each grade and rank for the period covered thereby and the number thus arrived at for any period can not be exceeded during said period any more than if the law had specified same in actual figures. The power of Congress to reduce the number of officers is undoubted. Accordingly, should subsequent computations result in decreasing the number of officers as previously fixed, it is not unlikely that the excess number of officers would be legislated out of office, in the absence of further legislation. (File 28687-19, Jan. 24, 1917, citing 23 Comp. Dec., 33. But see file 26521-400, June 19, 1920, holding that officers found to be in excess of the authorized number in any grade, as the result of new computations, should be carried as additional numbers in grade until such time as the number is reduced by death, resignation, promotion, retirement, etc., no provision having been made by Congress for the reduction of such officers to lower grades, and the President not being required or directed by law to revoke their commissions.)

As to removal of officer by nomination and confirmation of successor, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, under "VIII. Power of Removal."

Vacancies necessary prior to promotion.—"Officers subject to examination before promotion to a grade limited in number by law shall not be entitled to examination in such a sense as to give increase of pay until designated by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the higher grade." (Sec. 1495, R. S.)

Where an officer in a grade limited in number by law, which grade counting him is full, becomes due for promotion to fill a vacancy in a higher grade, but his promotion is delayed, a successor to such officer can not lawfully be appointed until the latter's promotion is consummated. (File 26521-67, June 4, 1913; 26521-67:1, Dec. 4, 1913; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 764; and file 28762-277, Dec. 10, 1917.)

The act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191) [noted under section 1561, Revised Statutes], providing that officers on promotion in certain cases shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which promoted from date of rank therein, does not apply so as to entitle officers to pay in the higher grade from date of rank when it appears that there were no vacancies in the higher grade on that date. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, 40.)

See note to section 1364, Revised Statutes, under "Vacancies necessary prior to promotion."

Sec. 1364. [When number of line officers may be exceeded. Obsolete.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1364. The provisions of the foregoing section shall not have the effect to vacate the commission of any lieutenant-commander, lieutenant, master, or ensign appointed according to law, in excess of the respective number therein fixed; nor to preclude the advancement of any officer to a higher grade, for distinguished conduct in battle, or for extraordinary heroism, under the provisions of sections fifteen hundred and six and fifteen hundred and eight.”—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 9, v. 12, p. 584. 25 July, 1866, c. 231, ss. 1, 2, v. 14, p. 222.)

It was rendered obsolete by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), which superseded “the foregoing section” referred to herein, namely, section 1363, Revised Statutes, by making new and complete provisions as to the number of officers who should compose the active list of the line of the Navy.

Provisions relating to the advancement of officers to higher grades for distinguished conduct in battle or for extraordinary heroism, notwithstanding that such grades already had the full number of officers specified by law, were contained in sections 1507 and 1509, Revised Statutes, and the acts of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1103) and June 16, 1906 (34 Stat., 296), noted above, under section 1363, Revised Statutes. Also, the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197, 1198), noted above under section 1363, Revised Statutes, after increasing the number of officers in certain grades of the active list of the line, and fixing a new total for such grades, provided that “nothing contained in this act shall affect the officers of the Navy who may have been or may hereafter be advanced in rank under existing provisions of law by which they become extra numbers in their respective grades, or operate to vacate the commission of any officers now in the service.” See also note to section 1363, Revised Statutes, under “Effect of exceeding number of officers allowed in any grade.”

Vacancies necessary prior to promotion.—Section 1364 provides that the provisions of the foregoing section shall not have the effect to vacate the commission of certain grades of officers appointed according to law, in excess of the respective number therein fixed—thus, by a familiar rule of construction, implying that the commissions of other officers in excess of the number fixed, might be thereby vacated. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

Sections 1364, 1506, and 1507 authorize the advancement of officers of the Navy to higher grades for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism, even though in excess of the number in such grade as fixed by statute. These sections do not apply in the cases of officers promoted in turn to fill vacancies, and such promotions could not be sustained if they increased the number of officers of these grades beyond the number fixed by law. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, 39.)

Sec. 1365. [Selection of rear admirals during war.] During war rear-admirals shall be selected from those officers on the active list, not below the grade of commanders, who shall have eminently distinguished themselves by courage, skill, and genius in their profession; but no officer shall be so promoted, under this provision, unless, upon recommendation of the President by name, he has received the thanks of Congress for distinguished service.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 7, v. 12, p. 584.)

Examinations prior to promotion on the active list are required by sections 1493–1497, Revised Statutes. See also section 1366, Revised Statutes, below.

In time of war the President may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, detail any officer on the retired list, not below the grade of commander, for the command of a squadron, with the rank and title of “flag officer”; and retired officers so detailed may be restored to the active list if they receive a vote of thanks of Congress. (Secs. 1463–1465, R. S.)

Temporary promotions to all grades in the Navy, “during the period of the present war,” were authorized by act of May 22, 1917, section 4 (40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715, 716.)

President may select any officer not below the grade of commander on the active list of the Navy and assign him to the command of a squadron, with the rank and title of “flag officer.” (Sec. 1434, R. S.)

Thanks of Congress, effect of: See sections 1465, 1508–1510, Revised Statutes. Persons who have by name received the thanks of Congress are entitled to the privilege of admission to the floor of the House of Representatives. (See Rules of the House of Representatives.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), provides that “hereafter all promotions to the grades of commander, captain, and rear admiral of the line of the Navy, including the promotion of those captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who are, or may be, carried on the Navy list as additional to the numbers of such grades, shall be by selection only from the next lower respective grade upon the recommendation of a board of naval officers as herein provided.”

Sec. 1366. [Promotion to rear admiral during peace. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

“Sec. 1366. During peace, vacancies in the grade of rear-admiral shall be filled by regular promotion from the list of commodores, subject to examination according to law.”—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 7, v. 12, p. 584.)

It was superseded by the act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), which abolished the grade of commodore on the active list of the Navy. (See note to sec. 1362, R. S.) Thereafter, promotions to the grade of rear admiral were made by seniority from the grade of captain. (See sec. 1458, R. S.)

New provisions for promotion to the grade of rear admiral were contained in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), noted under section 1365, above.

See also sections 1434, 1463, 1464, and 1497, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1367. [Secretaries to Admiral and Vice Admiral.] The Admiral and Vice Admiral shall each be allowed a secretary, who shall be entitled to the rank and allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy.—(21 Dec. 1864, c. 6, s. 2, v. 13, p. 420. 16 May, 1866, c. 84, v. 14, p. 48. 25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 6, v. 14, p. 223. 2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 1, v. 14, p. 516.)

Appointments from civil life of secretaries or clerks to the Admiral or Vice Admiral when on sea service were prohibited by act of May 4, 1878 (20 Stat., 50), which further provided that an officer not above the grade of lieutenant shall be detailed to perform the duties of secretary to the Admiral or Vice Admiral when on sea service.

Pay of secretaries to the Admiral and Vice Admiral was fixed at $2,500 per annum by section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Secretaries and clerks are not petty officers of the Navy. (See sec. 1410, R. S.)

See note to section 1362, Revised Statutes, as to the grades of Admiral and Vice Admiral in the Navy.

Appointment of secretary.—The appointment of secretary allowed the Admiral of the Navy by section 1367, Revised Statutes, does not belong to the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, but devolves upon the Admiral as one personal to himself, and the contemporaneous construction of the statute and uniform practice thereunder by the executive branch of the Government have accorded with this view. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589. As to appointment of officers in general, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

It can not be supposed, in the absence of express provision, that Congress wished to deprive the Admiral and Vice Admiral of the important privilege of selecting their confidential assistants, especially when such a privilege had always been accorded to officers inferior to them in rank. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

The office of secretary to the Admiral is not an independent office to be filled without regard to the Admiral's nomination and for a life term like that of a lieutenant in the line. By section 1362, Revised Statutes, it is provided that when the office of Admiral becomes vacant, the grade shall cease to exist. Thus, if the foregoing opinion were not correct, we should have a secretary to the Admiral without an Admiral. It would then be a puzzling question to define the scope of his official duties. Congress could not have intended such an anomalous state of affairs. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

Section 1410, Revised Statutes, provides that "all officers not holding commissions or warrants, or who are not entitled to them, except such as are temporarily appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer, and except secretaries and clerks, shall be deemed petty officers," etc. The necessary implication of this section is that secretaries are officers not holding commissions or warrants, and are not entitled to them. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

When Congress gave the Admiral and Vice Admiral secretaries, it had been the established practice in the Navy Department for 40 years to allow commanders of fleets, squadrons, and divisions to appoint secretaries to serve them while in command; and such secretaries were staff officers with the relative rank of lieutenant. Without any legislation, therefore, the Admiral and Vice Admiral, while in command on the sea, would have been allowed secretaries on their own appointment. The statutory provision embodied in section 1367 simply extended the privilege of a secretary to these high officers of the Navy for their shore service also. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

Pay of secretary.—The position of secretary to the Admiral was necessarily in abeyance until the grade of Admiral was revived. However, when the grade was revived, the provisions of law relating to the secretary to the Admiral became again operative. Not being a commissioned officer, his pay was not affected by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899. Accordingly, he is entitled to a salary of $2,500 per annum under section 1556, Revised Statutes, and to the allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy, under section 1367. (6 Comp. Dec., 828.)

By special enactment of Congress the appointment was authorized, as an assistant paymaster in the Navy, of Leonard G. Hoffman, secretary to the late Admiral of the Navy, as an additional number in grade, the services of said Hoffman as secretary to be credited to him, for purposes of pay, as service in the Navy. (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1184.)

Sec. 1368. [Medical Corps; organization of. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1368. The active list of the Medical Corps of the Navy shall consist of fifteen medical directors, fifteen medical inspectors, fifty surgeons, and one hundred assistant surgeons."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 5, v. 16, p. 535.)

It was superseded by a clause in the naval appropriation act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), which provided that "the active list of the Medical Corps of the Navy shall hereafter consist of fifteen medical directors, fifteen medical inspectors, fifty surgeons, and ninety assistant and passed assistant surgeons."

The number of officers was increased by act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), which provided that "the active list of surgeons shall hereafter consist of fifty-five, and that of passed assistant and assistant surgeons of one hundred and ten."

A further increase was made by the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), which provided that "the grades of the active list of the Navy hereinafter designated shall be so increased that there shall be * * * thirty additional surgeons with the rank of lieutenant commander, in all eighty-five; one hundred and twenty additional passed assistant and assistant surgeons, with the rank, respectively, of lieutenant, and lieutenant (junior grade), in all two hundred and thirty; * * * and not more than twenty-five assistant surgeons * * * in addition to those necessary to fill vacancies in said grades, shall be appointed in any one calendar year."

A further increase was made by the act of June 12, 1916, section 4 (39 Stat., 224), entitled "An act to authorize and empower officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps to serve under the Government of the Republic of Haiti, and for other purposes," which provided for the following increase in the Navy: 1 surgeon, 2 passed assistant surgeons, 5 hospital stewards, and 10 hospital apprentices, first class.

The number of officers was again increased by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), which provided that "the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the Medical Corps shall be sixty-five one-hundredths of one per centum of the total authorized number of the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, including midshipmen, Hospital Corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps."

The same act (39 Stat., 577) provided that "the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following mentioned staff corps at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the various grades of the respective corps as follows: Medical Corps: One-half medical directors with the rank of rear admiral to four medical directors with the rank of captain, to eight medical inspectors with rank of commander, to eighty-seven and one-half in the grades below medical inspector * * *. When there is an odd number of officers in the grade or rank of rear admiral in the line or in each corps, the lower division thereof shall include the excess in number, except where there is but one. Whenever a final fraction occurs in computing the authorized number of any corps, grade or rank in the naval service, the nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number: Provided, That at least one officer shall be allowed in each grade or rank. For the purpose of determining the authorized number of officers in any grade or rank of the line or of the staff corps, there shall be excluded from consideration those officers carried by law as additional numbers, including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, and nothing contained herein shall be held to reduce below that heretofore authorized by law the number of officers in any grade or rank in the staff corps."

In the same act (39 Stat., 581) it was provided that "hereafter the authorized number of surgeons in the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, increased by one; and that hereafter the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to detail one or more officers of the Medical Corps of the United States Navy for duty with the Military Relief Division of the American National Red Cross."

Distribution of medical officers between lower grades.—In the distribution of medical officers between the grades below medical inspector under the act of August 29, 1916, the following numbers fixed by prior laws should be regarded as established by law and not to be reduced in consequence of anything contained in the act of August 29, 1916: 87 in the grade of surgeon and 232 in the grades of passed assistant and assistant surgeon. There is no fixed distribution between the grades of passed assistant and assistant surgeon, except for the specific authorization of two passed assistant surgeons contained in the act of June 12, 1916, section 4, above cited. Subject to these restrictions, the increase in the grades of the Medical Corps below medical inspector resulting from the act of August 29, 1916, may be distributed among the three lower grades in such proportions as may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, best serve the interests of the Navy. (File 27223-37, Mar. 20, 1918. See also note to sec. 1376, R. S.)

The temporary appointment of additional officers during the period of the existing war was authorized by the act of May 22, 1917, section 4 (40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), which also authorized temporary appointments and promotions to fill, during the period of the war, the deficiency existing prior to May 22, 1917, in the total number of commissioned officers authorized by the act of August 29, 1916.

Acting assistant surgeons, not to exceed twenty-five may be appointed by the President for temporary service (act May 4, 1898, 30 Stat., 380); and such acting assistant surgeons as the exigencies of the service may require, may be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy for temporary service in case of war. (Sec. 1411, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 15, 1879, sec. 2, 20 Stat., 295; see also note to sec. 1410, R. S.)

A Dental Corps, to be a part of the Medical Department of the Navy, was authorized by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 344), which was superseded by new provisions on the same subject contained in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573), which was in turn superseded by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708).

A dental surgeon in the Navy for duty at the Naval Academy was authorized by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 709), as a special provision for the civilian dentist then employed at the Naval Academy.

A Medical Reserve Corps, to be a constituent part of the Medical Department of the Navy, was established by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 344), "under the same provisions, in all respects (except as may be necessary to adapt the said provisions to the Navy), as those providing a Medical Reserve Corps for the Army." This law was repealed and provision for transfer of Medical Reserve Corps officers to the Naval Reserve Force was made by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708).

A Navy Dental Reserve Corps was authorized by the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 903), to be organized and operated under the provisions of law providing for the Navy Medical Reserve Corps. This act was superseded by new provisions on the same subject contained in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 574), and the latter act was repealed and provision made for transfer of Dental Reserve Corps officers to the Naval Reserve Force, by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708).

A Hospital Corps, to be permanently attached to the Medical Department of the Navy, was established by act of June 17, 1898 (30 Stat., 474), as amended by acts of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 345), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572).

A Nurse Corps (female) was established by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 146).

Public Health Service.—By act of July 1, 1902, section 4 (32 Stat., 713) it was provided that "the President is authorized, in his discretion, to utilize the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service in times of threatened or actual war to such extent and in such manner as shall in his judgment promote the public interest without, however, in any wise impairing the efficiency of the service for the purposes for which the same was created and is maintained."

By act of February 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 650) it was provided that "said Service shall remain under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department until otherwise hereafter specifically provided by law."

By resolution of July 9, 1917 (40 Stat., 242), it was provided that "when officers of the United States Public Health Service are serving on Coast Guard vessels in time of war, or are detailed in time of war for duty with the Army or Navy in accordance with law, they * * * shall be subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the service to which they are respectively detailed."

By act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 393) commissioned officers of the Public Health Service were authorized to serve on naval courts-martial "when actively serving under the Navy Department in time of war or during the existence of an emergency, pursuant to law, as a part of the naval forces of the United States."

The designation of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service was changed to Public Health Service by act of August 14, 1912 (37 Stat., 309).

A Naval Reserve, composed of persons who have been found qualified by examination for commissions in any reserve or volunteer naval force hereafter organized, other than the Naval Militia, is authorized by the act of February 16, 1914 section 21 (38 Stat., 289); and the same act provides that when exigency demands the President is authorized to issue commissions in the Regular Navy to persons so qualified; and also authorizes the President to commission or warrant former officers who have been honorably discharged from the Navy.

As to other auxiliary naval forces, see note to section 1363, Revised Statutes.

Number of officers not to be increased without explicit legislation. (See note to sec. 1363, R. S.)

Passed assistant surgeons.—Section 1368, Revised Statutes, did not include the grade of passed assistant surgeon as a part of the Medical Corps. However, by section 1556, Revised Statutes, provision was made for the pay of passed assistant surgeons at a higher rate than that allowed assistant surgeons by the same section; it was also provided by said section that "assistant surgeons of three years' service, who have been found qualified for promotion by a medical board of examiners," shall be allowed "the pay of passed assistant surgeons." Where an assistant surgeon had successfully passed his examination for promotion, the practice was for the Secretary of the Navy to notify him by letter that the report of the board of examiners had been approved by the department, and from that date he would be regarded as a "passed assistant surgeon." In a case where this procedure was followed, it was held by the Supreme Court that "the place of passed assistant surgeon is an office, and the notification by the Secretary of the Navy was a valid appointment to it," notwithstanding that the law (see sec. 1369, R. S.) provided that all appointments in the Medical Corps of the Navy should be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Moore v. U. S., 95 U. S., 760, see also Collins v. U. S. 14 Ct. Cls., 568.)

In the organization of the Medical Corps of the Navy a passed assistant surgeon and an assistant surgeon were, under the Revised Statutes (secs. 1368, 1375, 1474, 1480, and 1556), officers of one and the same grade, but belonging to different classes in such grade. A passed assistant surgeon was simply an assistant surgeon who had been officially notified that he had passed successfully the examination necessary to be undergone before he could be appointed a full surgeon when a vacancy might occur. If it had been the purpose of Congress in adopting the Revised Statutes to make passed assistant surgeon a distinct grade, instead of a mere classification under a grade, the same particularity of enactment would have been used in their case as in the case of passed assistant paymasters (secs. 1376, 1377, 1380, and 1383) and passed assistant engineers (secs. 1390, 1392). But no such legislation is to be found. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 169.)

In United States v. Moore (95 U. S., 760), it was held that a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate were not necessary to make a passed assistant surgeon out of an assistant surgeon, a position that could not have been taken if there had been such a grade as passed assistant surgeon. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 169.)

ceding sections, which included mention of passed assistant surgeons, was an error on the part of the revisers, and could not be construed as an intention to make a change in the organization of the Medical Corps of the Navy by establishing passed assistant surgeon as a separate grade. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 169.)

It seems very clear that under the law, as it stood when the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), was passed, there was no such "grade" in the Navy as that of passed assistant surgeon. That act was intended merely to cut down the number of assistant and passed assistant surgeons, "and to deduce anything more, especially anything so radical as a change in the organization of the Medical Corps, by establishing a new grade, would be * * * to take an unwarrantable liberty with the language of the statute. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 169.)

A court is not always confined to the written words of a statute; in order to avoid giving higher pay to an inferior officer, the words "assistant surgeon," as used in a statute may be construed to include passed assistant surgeons, and the latter, as well as assistant surgeons, thus held to rank with captains in the Army (U. S. v. Farenholt, 206 U. S., 226.)

[Passed assistant surgeons now clearly constitute a separate "grade" in the Navy, by virtue of the act of February 13, 1897 (29 Stat., 526), which provided that "passed assistant surgeons now borne upon the Navy Register shall be commissioned as such by the President, such commissions to bear the dates upon which said passed assistant surgeons, respectively, received their appointments as such; and hereafter assistant surgeons shall be regularly promoted and commissioned as passed assistant surgeons, and passed assistant surgeons as surgeons, subject to such examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy."]

Medical attendance allowed persons in Navy.—See section 1586, Revised Statutes.

Compulsory medical treatment of persons in Navy.—An enlisted man refused to permit an injection, for the purpose of immunization, of anti-diphtheritic serum during the prevalence of an epidemic of diphtheria on board his ship; for his refusal he was reported by his commanding officer to the Navy Department; his trial by general court-martial was ordered, resulting in his conviction, which was approved by the Secretary of the Navy on February 11, 1910. (G. C. M. Rec. No. 21477; see file 26253-98, May 17, 1910.)

An enlisted man refused to submit to an injection of typhoid prophylactic, as required by general order issued by the Secretary of the Navy and the order of his commanding officer; he was tried by general court-martial and convicted of "refusing to obey the lawful order of his superior officer." Held, that he was legally convicted, and the fact that the proposed treatment violated the tenets of his religious faith, could not legally justify his refusal to obey the orders of his official superiors. (File 26251-6149:4, June 21, 1912.)

An enlisted man refused to allow the medical officer properly to treat him; the treatment contemplated was not dangerous nor very painful; the result of his refusal was carefully explained to him and he persisted in his refusal.

He was accordingly tried therefor by summary court-martial. (File 1117-2, Oct. 11, 1906; see file 26253-98, May 17, 1910.)

While the Navy Department will not undertake to lay down, as a general rule, that a man must, particularly in cases involving risk of life or loss of limb, submit to a surgical operation, on the other hand it can not accept the opinion that it is optional with the man concerned whether or not he shall submit to such an operation in the course of medical treatment. In ordinary cases when, in the opinion of the medical officer, after consultation, if advisable, with other surgeons available, it is deemed necessary, in order to restore a man to his capacity for the performance of his duties, that a minor surgical operation be made upon him, he can be required to undergo the same, under penalty of punishment, as by sentence of court-martial, in case of his refusal to submit thereto. (File 1165-02, Feb. 12, 1902.)

The Navy Department is of the opinion that an enlisted man should not be required to undergo a surgical operation for hernia in opposition to his wishes, and that disciplinary action should not be taken against him on account of his refusal to permit such operation. (File 1117, Mar. 17, 1905; file 1117-1, Mar. 10, 1906.)

The Navy Department has heretofore held that a man need not submit to an operation for hernia against his wishes, while the War Department has held otherwise. The principle seems to be the same in both departments as to an operation involving risk of life even though there be diversity in the application of the rule. Held, that one in the naval service may not, against his will, be ordered to submit to an operation which is dangerous to life or limb, whereas he may be ordered to submit to an operation which would correct a condition which destroys his usefulness, when such operation may fairly be said, by a responsible medical officer, to be of such a character as not to endanger the life or limb of the patient, under the conditions existing at the time of operation or under the conditions which were believed then to exist and which an experienced medical officer would, in the exercise of due care, be justified in believing to exist. (File 7036-382, Nov. 9, 1917; C. M. O. 72, 1917, p. 18.)

"It will be noted, from the foregoing, that so far as the Department's policy in such matters is concerned, a distinction is made between a minor operation and one of greater magnitude or danger, such as an operation for hernia. In the former case a man, and doubtless an officer, may be required to submit to such an operation under penalty of punishment upon his refusal. But in the case of an operation for hernia, that is, one of greater danger, he 'should not be required to undergo a surgical operation' therefor in opposition to his wishes." (File 26253-98, May 17, 1910.)

The finding of a retiring board, that the incapacity of an officer of the Marine Corps is due to the fact that he will not submit to an operation recommended by responsible medical officers of the Navy, and is therefore not the result of an incident of the service, should be disapproved. It appears to be clear upon principle, and in accordance with precedent, that he should not be required to submit to the operation which was advised in his case, and which was of a serious nature. (File 26253-98, May 17, 1910.)

If a disability results from an incident of the service, and is of such a serious character that a person in the service may properly decline to be operated upon, such person is entitled to a finding of "in line of duty." But where one may properly be ordered to submit to operation, and is punishable for failure so to submit, the notation of record, "not in line of duty, due to his own misconduct," correctly reflects the facts. A condition having its inception in an incident of the service ceases to be due to that cause and becomes instead traceable to the recalcitrance of the patient. (File 7036-382, Nov. 9, 1917.)

Medical attendance to persons not in the Navy.—Medical officers are required by the Navy Regulations, in addition to their official duties, to attend the families of officers and enlisted men residing within a prescribed distance from navy yards, naval stations, recruiting offices, and the Navy Department; and to render professional assistance to mechanics or laborers injured while at work in navy yards. (R-4006, Navy Regs. 1913.)

There is no provision of law which prohibits professional attendance by medical officers upon families of officers of the naval service, and if such attendance does not interfere with the necessary service to officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps, it is not contrary to law. (File 28019-17, Jan. 26, 1912.)

United States medical officers, where practicable, shall furnish reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital services to Federal employees injured while in the performance of duty. (Act Sept. 7, 1916, 39 Stat., 742.)

The Bureau of War Risk Insurance shall, by arrangement with the Secretary of the Navy, make use of the services of surgeons in the Navy. (Act Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 14, 40 Stat., 399.)

Persons injured while in the naval service in the line of duty shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services as the director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary. (Act Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 302 (4), 40 Stat., 406.)

Persons applying for or in receipt of compensation under the War Risk Insurance Act, Art. III, shall, as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit to examination by medical officers of the United States. (Act Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 303, 40 Stat., 406.)

[Medical officers of the Army are required by law to attend the families of officers and soldiers free of charge whenever practicable. (Act July 5, 1884, 23 Stat., 112.)]

Commanders in chief, senior officers present, and division commanders may require the medical officers of their commands to render professional aid to persons not in the naval service, when such aid can be rendered without detriment to the interests of the Government, and is necessary and demanded by the laws of humanity or the principles of international courtesy. (R-1607, Navy Regs. 1913.)

A medical officer in the Navy is entitled to compensation from appropriations under control of the Department of Justice for professional services rendered by him to United States prisoners in a United States jail. In this case it appeared that it had been the custom of the Department of Justice for many years to employ medical officers of the Navy to render necessary medical services to prisoners confined in the jail in question, for which services the medical officers were paid by the local United States marshal from the appropriation "support of prisoners." In passing upon the marshal's accounts, certain fees thus paid were disallowed by the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, on the ground that, as the medical officer was an assistant surgeon in the Navy, his compensation was fixed by law, and therefore under section 1765, Revised Statutes, he was not entitled to receive any further salary or fees from the Government. The marshal called upon the medical officer to refund the amounts disallowed, which the latter refused to do, whereupon the marshal made a report to the Secretary of the Navy, who declined to take any action in the matter. Thereafter, the action of the auditor was reversed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, who stated that the medical officer in question was not required by virtue of his office to attend the prisoners in question, and followed the principle applied in 18 Comp. Dec., 156, in which it was held that, "where a clerk to a United States attorney typewrites official reports for an examiner of the Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, and the making of such reports is not authorized or directed by a superior officer, such typewriting is not a part of the official duties of said clerk, and compensation therefor is not prohibited by sections 1764 and 1765 of the Revised Statutes." (Comp. Dec., May 15, 1912, 45 MS. Comp. Dec., 300; see file 6320-15, Bu. Nav. As to appropriation chargeable with expenses of officer detailed for duty under another department, see note to sec. 1437, R. S.)

The private practice of medicine and surgery by a medical officer of the Navy in competition with a private physician is not disapproved by the Navy Department under the circumstances of the case presented. (File 17088-8, Jan. 4 and 19, 1910. In this case the facts as accepted by the department were that for many years there had never been a civilian doctor resident in the vicinity of the naval hospital, which compelled the naval medical officer to assume private practice, for a large portion of which he received no remuneration; that the private physician who protested to the department was not permanently located in the immediate vicinity of the hospital, but had a sanitarium and business interests at a distance, which necessitated his absence from town for periods of a month at a time; that should the naval medical officer be prohibited from practicing outside of Navy limits, the inhabitants of the town and surrounding country, a number of whom were destitute, would be left without the services of a physician; that the professional and personal probity of the medical officer in question was satisfactorily established; that the resources of the naval hospital were not being used by him for personal profit or in any manner inconsistent with proper practice; that said medical officer had observed professional ethics in his association with patients and with other medical practitioners, and would unquestionably continue to do so. See also, as to same case, file 118514 Bu. M. and S., and file 6320-9, Bu. Nav.)

A member of the Hospital Corps of the Navy treated a private patient who called at the naval dispensary and whose case required immediate attention. He accepted compensation for such treatment. A warrant for his arrest for practicing medicine without a license was issued at the instance of a private medical practitioner located in the vicinity of the naval station. Upon report of the occurrence to the Navy Department the case was immediately referred to the Attorney General, who detailed counsel for the defense, with the result that the case was dismissed by the civil magistrate. (File 6692-233.)

Right to practice medicine and surgery.—"It is well settled that under the police power inherent in the State, the legislature may enact regulations for the examination and registration of physicians, and the practice of medicine and surgery, and such statutes violate neither the Federal nor the State constitutions. Similar statutes have been sustained for the regulation of the practice of dentistry." (30 Cyc., 1547.)

"The qualifications prescribed by the several States to entitle one to enter upon the practice of medicine and surgery may be generally classified as follows: (1) The candidate must have a diploma from a medical college in good standing and, in addition, must pass a satisfactory examination before a board of examiners. (2) The candidate must pass a satisfactory examination, as in the first class, but is not required to have a diploma. (3) The candidate may either present an acceptable diploma, or, if he has no diploma, he may be examined as to his qualifications. (4) The applicant must hold a diploma issued by a reputable medical college, which must be satisfactorily shown to belong to him." (30 Cyc., 1548.)

"The statutes in many States except from their operation certain classes of persons, and services rendered in particular cases. Thus it is commonly provided that the statute shall not apply to any commissioned medical officer of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine service; * * * physicians called into consultation from another State, or to treat a particular case, and who do not otherwise practice in the State; * * * or to services rendered gratuitously, or in case of emergency, or to the administration of domestic medicines. These exemptions have been attacked as unconstitutional on the ground of discrimination, but have been upheld by the courts." (30 Cyc., 1560.)

The act of March 3, 1896 (29 Stat., 198), "to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia," provided (sec. 12) "that this act shall not apply to commissioned surgeons of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Hospital Service, nor to regularly licensed physicians and surgeons in actual consultation from other States or Territories, nor to regularly licensed physicians and surgeons actually called from other States or Territories to attend specified cases in the District of Columbia, nor to the treatment of any case of actual emergency, * * * nor to the use of ordinary domestic remedies without fee, gift, or consideration of any kind."

"An emergency means a case in which ordinary medical practitioners are not available, as where the exigency is of so pressing a character that some kind of action must be taken before such parties can be found or procured." (30 Cyc., 1560, citing People v. Lee Wah, 71 Cal., 80, 11 Pac., 851.)

The treatment of civilian patients by a medical officer of the Navy within the limits of the Naval Reservation at Indianhead, Md., can not be prosecuted by the State authorities as a violation of State laws prohibiting the practice of medicine and surgery without a license. (File 6692-233; see also note to sec. 355, R. S., under "VI. Jurisdiction, Naval Reservations.")

Right of medical officers to perform autopsies on deceased members of the naval personnel.—The following principles are established by judicial decisions concerning the power of coroners and attending physicians to perform autopsies without consent of relatives of the deceased:

"1. In general, coroners are authorized to hold inquests and perform autopsies only in cases of death accompanied by suspicious circumstances such as to indicate that death resulted from violence or other unlawful means. This matter, however, is regulated by statutes in the different jurisdictions, some of which are very much broader in their terms than others.

"2. Where the attending physician is required by law to make a report of death showing the cause thereof, or where the law requires a burial certificate to be issued before interment of the remains, a post-mortem examination is authorized, regardless of the consent of the relatives, where such an examination is necessary to determine the cause of death. This question is wholly distinct from the subject of coroner's inquests, and in cases of this character an autopsy may be performed without the existence of any suspicious circumstances. In some of the cases considered in support of this statement, the autopsy was authorized by the appropriate city authorities. In others, the autopsy was performed by the attending physician upon his own responsibility and his action sustained by the courts.

"3. In cases where an autopsy is proper, it must be performed in a decent manner, with due regard to the sensibilities of the family and the respect due to the dead. Accordingly, there should be no further disfigurement of the body than is absolutely necessary, and any parts of the body removed should be restored for burial, unless it be necessary to preserve some particular organ for further examination as to whether a crime had been committed or for evidence." (File 13673-1587, Apr. 22, 1912).

The Navy Regulations, 1909, articles 1644 (1), 1645 (3), and 1646 (2) [embodied in "Naval Courts and Boards," 1917, articles 596-608, superseding Navy Regulations, 1913, articles R 321, 322, and 323], are similar to the various State statutes relating to the duties of coroners, and clearly authorize the making of a post-mortem examination, without the consent of the family; whenever death occurs in the Navy under the conditions stated by the Regulations, i. e., "as the result of an accident, or attended with unnatural or suspicious circumstances," in which cases a board of inquest must be convened. (File 13673-1587, Apr. 22, 1912.)

The Instructions for Medical Officers, U. S. Navy, 1909, pages 109, 110, required that a post-mortem examination be made "in every case of death" occurring in the Navy, whether necessary to determine cause of death or not. These instructions, which were incorporated in the Navy Regulations, 1909, by article 1143 of said Regulations, are too broad. A post-mortem examination should be required only in cases of death occurring under circumstances which afford a reasonable necessity for the performance of an autopsy. (File 13673-1587, Apr. 22, 1912—The instructions mentioned were modified in accordance with the foregoing, in Manual for Medical Department, U. S. Navy, par. 2443, incorporated in the Navy Regulations, 1913, by art. R-4562; see also art. 964, Navy Regs., 1909, now art. R-2963, Navy Regs., 1913.)

As to force and effect of Navy Regulations, see note to section 161, Revised Statutes; as to responsibility of naval officers for illegal acts, see cases noted under Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 13; as to right of coroners to hold inquests on naval reservations, see note to section 355, Revised Statutes.

Reports by medical officers of the Navy to State authorities can not be required in cases of communicable diseases occurring in naval reservations, as the State laws do not operate within such places under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. (File 14560-174, Apr. 19, 1916. See also file 4778-95, Dec. 1, 1916, 7657-458, July 27, 1917, and 7657-458; 1, Dec. 13, 1917; and see note to sec. 355, R. S.)

Medical records confidential.—See notes to section 161, Revised Statutes, under "II. Custody of Property and Records"; section 418, Revised Statutes, under "Records of department"; and section 871, Revised Statutes, under "Copies of records."

Medical officers serving with the Army.—"Officers and enlisted men of the Medical Department of the Navy, serving with a body of marines detached for service with the Army in accordance with the provisions of section sixteen hundred and twenty-one of the Revised Statutes, shall, while so serving, be subject to the rules and articles of war prescribed for the government of the Army in the same manner as the officers and men of the Marine Corps while so serving." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 36 Stat., 573.)

Sec. 1369. [Medical Corps; appointments in, how made.] All appointments in the Medical Corps shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.—(21 April, 1806, c. 35, s. 3, v. 2, p. 390. 16 April, 1814, c. 58, s. 5, v. 3, p. 125. 24 May, 1828, c. 121, s. 3, v. 4, p. 313.)

As to appointment of officers in general, see note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2.

Acting assistant surgeons may be appointed by the President (act May 4, 1898, 30 Stat., 380); or in time of war by the Secretary of the Navy (sec. 1411, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 15, 1879, sec. 2, 20 Stat., 295.)

Appointments in the Naval Reserve Force, to commissioned grades, shall be made by the President alone, and to warrant grades shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 587.)

Appointments in the Dental Corps of the Navy are made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708, superseding act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 573, which superseded act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 345.)

Appointments of temporary commissioned officers during the war with Germany were to be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 12, 40 Stat., 87.)

Nurses (female) are appointed by the Surgeon General with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy; except the superintendent of the Nurse Corps, who is appointed by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 146.)

Passed assistant surgeons are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (See note to sec. 1368, R. S.)

Pharmacists in the Hospital Corps are to be appointed by the President (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 572, amending act June 17, 1898, sec. 1, 30 Stat., 474). Chief pharmacists in the Hospital Corps are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 345; amended by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 572.)

Promotion of medical officers—see note to section 1371, Revised Statutes.

Rank of officers of the Navy shall not be changed, "except in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." (Sec. 1506, R. S., as amended by act June 17, 1878, 20 Stat., 143.)

Recess appointments, when Senate not in session—see note to Constitution, Article III section 2, clause 3.

The Secretary of the Navy was authorized to make "temporary appointments as warrant officers of the Navy" by act May 22, 1917, section 5 (40 Stat., 85).

Recess appointment not accepted.—A recess commission issued to a candidate who had qualified for appointment as assistant surgeon, which, however, was not accepted and was therefore never of any practical effect, should not be accepted after the appointment has been confirmed by the Senate, but should be disregarded and a permanent commission issued in the usual manner. (File 8622-2, Feb. 10, 1908.)

An examination of statutes relating to appointments in the Navy, as well as appointments in the Army, indicates that Congress frequently discriminates between appointments to be made by the President alone, and appointments to be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. For example, section 1369, Revised Statutes, provides that all appointments in the Medical Corps shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; section 1378 contains a similar provision with reference to appointments in the Pay Corps; section 1394 provides in a similar manner for the appointment of cadet engineers as second assistant engineers [now repealed]; section 1395 contains a similar provision as to chaplains in the Navy; section 1382 empowers the President alone to appoint a paymaster of the fleet; section 1393 authorizes the President to appoint an engineer of the fleet; section 1403 authorizes cadet engineers of certain merit to be immediately appointed as assistant naval constructors [now amended]; section 1405 authorizes the President to appoint as many boatswains, gunners, sailmakers, and carpenters as may in his opinion be necessary and proper; section 1411 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to appoint acting assistant surgeons for temporary service; section 1414 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to appoint storekeepers on foreign stations. Where the statute provides for the appointment of an officer by the President, without requiring the consent of the Senate, such consent is unnecessary, and the President may make such appointment without submitting the same to the Senate for confirmation. In the latter case the commission may be signed by the Secretary of the Navy as the act of the President. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82; for other examples of cases in which the President has been authorized to appoint officers of the Navy without consent of the Senate, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, under "II. Constitutional Power of Appointment.")

Sec. 1370. [Medical Corps; qualifications for assistant surgeons.] No person shall be appointed assistant surgeon until he has been examined and approved by a board of naval surgeons, designated by the Secretary of the Navy, nor who is under twenty-one or over thirty years of age, inclusive.

This section was expressly amended to read as above by a clause in the naval appropriation act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 380). As originally enacted it provided as follows: "Sec. 1370. No person shall be appointed assistant surgeon until he has been examined and approved by a board of naval surgeons, designated by the Secretary of the Navy; nor who is under twenty-one or over twenty-six years of age."—(24 May, 1828, c. 121, s. 1, v. 4, p. 313. 3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 5, v. 16, p. 536.)

Amendment to this section, as reenacted by the act of May 4, 1898, was made by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), which provided "that hereafter appointees to the grade of assistant surgeon shall be between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-two at the time of appointment;" and by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1171), as to boards being convened by officers on foreign stations.

Qualifications for appointment as dental surgeon in the Dental Corps—see act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573).

Qualifications for appointment in the Naval Reserve Force are prescribed by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 587), as amended.

Special age limits were prescribed for officers appointed to the Regular Navy, by transfer from the temporary Navy and Naval Reserve Force, by act approved June 4, 1920, section 5 (41 Stat., 835).

Appointments to temporary service.—The above law, as its language imports, was to guard against the appointment of incompetent surgeons in the Navy, and evidently applies to appointments to be made in the regular or permanent service, as contradistinguished from appointments in the temporary service; for in the next succeeding clause or paragraph of the act of May 4, 1898 (amending section 1370), there is a provision authorizing the President "to appoint for temporary service twenty-five acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the relative rank and compensation of assistant surgeons" [and containing no restrictions as to the qualifications necessary for such temporary appointments]. The Congress by their legislation have recognized the distinction between officers in the permanent and temporary service in the Navy. (Taylor v. U. S. 38 Ct. Cls., 155, 161; see also file 27231-51:5, July 10, 1915; and see note to sec. 1411, R. S.)

The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), providing for temporary appointments and promotions in the Navy, does not require compliance with statutory provisions governing permanent promotions. The decision of the Court of Claims in Taylor v. U. S. (38 Ct. Cls., 155), [noted above], is directly in point in connection with the administration of the act of May 22, 1917. (File 28687-22, June 14, 1917; see also Op. Atty. Gen., Oct. 20, 1917, file 28550-123:4.)

Acting assistant surgeons may be appointed for temporary service after such examination as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. (Art. R-3305, Navy Regs., 1913; see note to sec. 1411, R. S.)

Application of statutory requirements to appointments under subsequent laws.—"When a general law prescribes what persons may be appointed to any class or kind of office or place, the time or manner of their appointment, the tenure of their office, their qualifications or the test of their qualifications and fitness, any appointment of that kind thereafter authorized, must, unless otherwise provided, be made with reference to and in conformity with the requirements of such general law. I think it a mistake to suppose that, in order to bring such appointments within the purview of the general law, it would be necessary to state specifically in the act authorizing them, that they are to be made as thus prescribed, or as provided by law, or that such idea be expressed in any form. On the contrary, I think that in order to exempt such appointments from the operation of the general law, a specific exemption therefrom would be required. Indeed, as a general rule, it may be said that in every statute authorizing or requiring a certain act, there is implied, as if there written, the direction that such act shall be done with reference to and in conformity with existing laws on the subject, if there are any. All laws in pari materia should be construed together, and so as to give effect to all and to not conflict with each other." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 341.)

General requirements for appointment.—No person shall be appointed to any office in the Navy unless he is a citizen of the United States, nor until he shall have passed a physical, a mental, and a professional examination. The physical examination shall precede the mental and professional, and if a candidate be physically unfit he shall not be examined otherwise. (Art. R-3301, Navy Regs., 1913; see note to sec. 1428, R. S., as to citizenship of officers of the Navy.)

"Board of naval surgeons."—The word "surgeons" in this section is construed to mean "medical officers," and not as restricting the membership of the examining board to officers in the grade of surgeon. (See Art. R-3305, Navy Regs., 1913, providing that a candidate for assistant surgeon must be examined physically, morally, mentally, and professionally by a board of "medical officers"; see also note to sec. 1493, R. S. As to the grades of officers constituting the Medical Corps, see note to sec. 1368, R. S.)

Age of candidates for appointment.—See notes to section 1379, Revised Statutes, as to age of candidates for appointment as assistant paymasters; section 1517, Revised Statutes, as to age of candidates for appointment as midshipman at the Naval Academy; and act March 3, 1899, section 14 (30 Stat., 1007), as to age of candidates for appointment as warrant machinists, now designated as "machinists."

Where a candidate for assistant surgeon had not passed his thirtieth birthday when confirmed by the Senate, the statutory requirement was fulfilled, and he can legally be commissioned and accept the appointment after passing said age. (File 8622-2, Feb. 10, 1908; see also note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, under "VI. What Constitutes Appointment.")

In the case noted in the preceding paragraph it was assumed that the words "over thirty years of age" excluded candidates who had passed their thirtieth birthday, but it was held that the particular candidate in question, having been under thirty years of age at the time he was nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, was eligible under the law, and might legally accept his appointment after passing his thirtieth birthday, the acceptance of the office by the appointee being distinct from the appointment and not necessary to render the appointment complete. In other words, that the candidate in question was not over thirty years of age when "appointed" and might, therefore, accept such appointment after passing his thirtieth birthday. (File 27223-12:1, Jan. 27, 1915.)

An act of July 25, 1861, section 3, relating to an increase in the Marine Corps, provided "that the appointment of commissioned officers to be made under the provisions of this act shall be of persons between the ages of twenty and twenty-five years; and shall be subjected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy to an examination as to their qualifications for the service to which they are to be appointed." A candidate attained the age of twenty-five years on the 24th day of April; he had been examined and found qualified on the 22d of April; on the 23d he was nominated to the Senate; his nomination was confirmed on the 14th of June following: Held, that the President may lawfully issue a commission to the candidate as second lieutenant in the Marine Corps under the circumstances of his case as above-stated. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 308.)

In the case noted in the preceding paragraph, the Attorney General stated: "I need not discuss the significance of the word appointment, for it has various meanings and the true sense can only be known by a study of the subject matter and the context in which it is used. This case does not present the question, at what time an officer is so authentically certified as to be known and respected in his official relations; nor the question, when he is so inducted into his office as to be entitled to be paid for his official services; nor yet the question, at what time the officer has a legal right to receive the final evidence of his appointment, to wit, the commission." The question applies solely to the eligibility of the candidate; that is, had the President lawful power to choose him to be a second lieutenant of Marines at the time when he did actually choose him and name him to the Senate for office, asking the Senate to consent to and ratify his act. "That is the question in this case, and I am clearly of the opinion that Stoddard was eligible and that the President had lawful power to appoint him, subject only to the consent of the Senate. In such case the Senate has no power to appoint but the power only to arrest and prevent the appointment by the President. The action by the Senate upon the President's nomination is always and necessarily relative, for all that it can do is to reject or affirm what the President has already done. I am of opinion that it is lawful and right to give Mr. Stoddard his commission." (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 308.)

An act of July 14, 1862, section 7, prescribed the age of chaplains in the Navy. Under that act it was held that the President could not appoint a person to that office above the age limit of 35 years, although before the passage of that act the President had instructed the Secretary of the Navy to prepare a nomination of the person in question to the Senate for the office which nomination had not, however, actually been made. If the nomination had actually been made by the President prior to the act of July 14, 1862, the appointment might lawfully have been made after confirmation by the Senate, whether such action of the Senate had been taken before or after the date of said act, this being in accordance with the prior opinion (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 308) holding valid the appointment of a lieutenant of Marines who was of lawful age when nominated, but over age when confirmed. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

Date of appointment.—See note to section 1371, below, under "Length of service prior to promotion."

Sec. 1371. [Medical Corps; promotions in. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1371. No person shall be appointed surgeon until he has served as an assistant surgeon at least two years, on board a public vessel of the United States at sea, nor until he has been examined and approved for such appointment, by a board of naval surgeons, designated by the Secretary of the Navy."—(24 May, 1828, c. 121, v. 4, p. 313.)

It was superseded by the following provision in the act of February 13, 1897 (29 Stat. 526): "Hereafter assistant surgeons shall be regularly promoted and commissioned as passed assistant surgeons, and passed assistant surgeons as surgeons, subject to such examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy."

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

As to status of passed assistant surgeons, see note to section 1368, Revised Statutes.

Assistant surgeons are promoted to passed assistant surgeons after three years' service. This practice was originally in accordance with the provision of section 1556, Revised Statutes, that "assistant surgeons of three years' service, who have been found qualified for promotion by a medical board of examiners," shall be allowed "the pay of passed assistant surgeons." The practice has continued, although not now specifically provided for by law, section 1556, Revised Statutes, with reference to the pay of assistant surgeons, being no longer in force. (File 26280-68, Apr. 12, 1916.)

Assistant surgeons on original appointment have the rank of lieutenant (junior grade). (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 577.) They are entitled to advancement to the rank of lieutenant with the line officer with whom or next after whom they take precedence. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 576.) Lieutenants (junior grade) of the line are entitled to promotion to lieutenant after not less than three years' service in grade (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 576), except that during the existing war this requirement as to length of service shall not apply to temporary promotions (act May 22, 1917, sec. 5, 40 Stat., 86.) The Secretary of the Navy has discretion to provide that all assistant surgeons may be promoted to passed assistant surgeons at the same time that they are advanced to the rank of lieutenant. (File 27223-37, Apr. 6, 1918.)

Passed assistant surgeons are promoted to surgeons, surgeons are promoted to medical inspectors, and medical inspectors are promoted to medical directors, all by seniority, to fill vacancies, in accordance with section 1480, Revised Statutes, and the "established rules of the service" (see sec. 1458, R. S.), subject to examination, as required by sections 1493 and 1496, Revised Statutes, and the act of February 13, 1897, above quoted. (In this connection see note to sec. 1372, R. S.) As to constitutionality of laws requiring promotion by seniority, see notes to sections 1458 and 1480, Revised Statutes.

Advancement to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the Staff Corps of the Navy are to be made by selection upon recommendation of a board of officers of the corps concerned. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718.)

Subject to the limitations contained in laws prior to August 29, 1916, as to the number of officers in certain lower grades of the Medical Corps (see note to sec. 1368, R. S.), the Secretary of the Navy has discretion to provide that all passed assistant surgeons shall be promoted to surgeons at the same time that they are advanced to the rank of lieutenant commander (File 27223-37, Apr. 6, 1918.)

Pay on promotion.—All officers of the Navy advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates stated in their commissions. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892; see sec. 1561, R. S.)

Suspension from promotion of officers who fail to qualify when examined is required by section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 11, 1912 (37 Stat., 73).

Length of service prior to promotion.—The three years' service of assistant surgeons prior to promotion may lawfully be regarded as commencing on the date of their appointment rather than on the date of actual entry upon the duties of the office. "In support of this view it is urged that the uniform practice of the Navy Department, extending through many years, has been to have regard to the date of appointment rather than the other date as fixing the beginning of the required three years' service, a practice which is said to rest in the custom in the Navy of advancing by seniority. As illustrating the reason of the practice it is said that when several men are examined for appointment as assistant surgeon the respective numbers assigned to them upon qualifying professionally are based upon the order of proficiency shown by the examination. If the circumstance of location nearer Washington, which would enable one applicant to execute his oath of office earlier than could one who was not so conveniently located, should be given effect, then it could follow that the one entitled by his examination to the first number might have to fall below the others, and this for no other reason than that the one entitled to the higher position in the grade could not get his oath of office executed as soon as one more conveniently located * * *. We find no statute which prohibits said practice, and administrative action is entitled to consideration. Ross's case, 283 U. S., 530, 538. It does not appear that any positive law has been disregarded, nor does it appear that the four or five days' difference in the dates was caused by any fault or negligence of the plaintiff or resulted from any other cause than a supposed orderly practice long continued. As stated by the Judge Advocate General in re John A. Nelson, April 12, 1916, "The only argument in favor of the legality of the present practice is that it is expedient and has so long continued that it may be regarded as having been known to and acquiesced in by Congress." (Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 333).

Advancement in rank.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), it was provided that

Sec. 1372. [Medical Corps; rank of assistant surgeons in case of delayed examination. Obsolete.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1372. When any assistant surgeon was absent from the United States, on duty, at the time when others of his date were examined, he shall, if not rejected at a subsequent examination, be entitled to the same rank with them; and if, from any cause, his relative rank can not be assigned to him, he shall retain his original position on the register."—(3 Mar., 1835, c. 27, s. 1, v. 4, p. 757.)

It was rendered obsolete by the abolishment of competitive examinations in accordance with the Attorney General's opinion noted below. Also, examinations for promotion of assistant surgeons to higher grades have now been discontinued, in accordance with the act of May 22, 1917, noted above under section 1371, and the advancement in rank of staff officers is regulated by the acts of August 29, 1916, and July 1, 1918, noted above, under section 1371.

Promotion by seniority and not competitive examination.—The practice of the Navy Department, requiring competitive examinations to determine the relative position of medical officers of the Navy preparatory to promotion to the grade of surgeon, which originated prior to the act of May 24, 1828 [now sections 1370 and 1371, Revised Statutes], was recognized and confirmed by a clause in the act of Congress approved March 3, 1835, which is embodied in the Revised Statutes as section 1372. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

The system of competitive examinations to determine the relative merit of assistant surgeons preliminary to promotion, and thus to define their rank by seniority, has, under authority of section 1372, been continued to the present time [February 25, 1881], and the uniform practice of the Navy Department has been to assign to the members of each class of assistant surgeons examined and found qualified for promotion, positions in accordance with their

"Officers of the lower grades of the Medical Corps, Pay Corps, Construction Corps, and Corps of Civil Engineers shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law: Provided, That all assistant surgeons shall from date of their original appointment take rank and precedence with lieutenants (junior grade)."

By act of May 22, 1917, section 17 (40 Stat., 89), it was enacted that the above clause in the act of August 29, 1916, shall not operate "to disturb the relative position of officers in the Medical Corps with reference to precedence or promotion, but all such officers otherwise qualified shall be advanced in rank with or ahead of officers in said corps who were their juniors on the date of said act."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that advancement to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the Staff Corps of the Navy shall be made by selection in the manner therein prescribed.

See note to section 1474, Revised Statutes.

relative standing as determined and reported by the board of examiners. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

However, the custom of requiring competitive examination of assistant surgeons and assigning them positions in the Navy Register in order of relative merit as ascertained and reported by the board of examiners, is not correct under the present law. A clause in the act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 536), contemplated that promotion in the staff corps, including the Medical Corps, should be by seniority, and not by competitive examination. This clause did not find its way into the first edition of the Revised Statutes. It was reenacted by act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 249), and as so reenacted was included in the second edition of the Revised Statutes as section 1480. The effect of it is to adopt the rule of seniority in regard to promotions from one grade to another in the Staff Corps, including, among others, the Medical Corps. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

The rule that officers shall be assigned rank in the order of merit as determined by competitive examinations was never prescribed by law, but was a usage that had grown up in the Navy Department. The propriety of that usage was, perhaps, recognized by the act of 1835, later embodied in section 1372, Revised Statutes. However, that act was at most a recognition of the previous practice in an implied way, and not by a very clear implication. The Secretary of the Navy was not required by law to assign relative rank according to the results of competitive examinations, but the matter was within his discretion. The Secretary had a right to maintain this as a rule, or to rescind it the moment after it was carried into execution. (U. S. ex rel. Hall v. Whitney, 5 Mackey (D. C.), 370.)

Following the Attorney General's opinion above noted, the Secretary did rescind the previous rule of assigning relative rank by competitive examinations. Whether he thought that the act of 1877 required that officers should rank according to seniority alone, or whatever were the grounds of his action, it was within the scope of his authority. Accordingly, when an assistant surgeon was assigned relative rank according to the previous rule, as the result of a competitive examination, and later, following the Attorney General's opinion, was reduced from the rank which he had already been assigned and given a lower position to which his seniority entitled him, held, that the court could not by mandamus proceedings compel the Secretary of the Navy to restore him to his former position in the Navy Register. (U. S. ex rel. Hall v. Whitney, 5 Mackey (D. C.), 370.)

"It is within the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to adopt a rule by which the relative rank of officers of the Navy shall be regulated, and afterwards to rescind such rule and adopt another, although the latter rule may have the effect of placing an officer in a lower relative rank than that assigned him under the provisions of the previous rule." (U. S. ex rel. Hall v. Whitney, 5 Mackey (D. C.), 370.)

Sec. 1373. [Medical Corps; surgeon of the fleet.] The President may designate among the surgeons in the service, and appoint to every fleet or squadron an experienced and intelligent surgeon, who shall be denominated "surgeon of the fleet," and shall be surgeon of the flag-ship.—(24 May, 1828. c. 121, s. 2, v. 4, p. 313.)

Pay of fleet surgeons was fixed at $4,400 per annum by section 1556, Revised Statutes.

The word "surgeons" as used in this section has been construed to mean "medical officers," and not as restricting details for this duty to officers in the grade of "surgeon." (See Art. R-1826 (2), Navy Regs., 1913.)

See note to sections 1382 and 1393, Revised Statutes, for cases relating to appointment and pay of fleet officers.

Sec. 1374. [Medical Corps; duties of surgeon of the fleet.] The surgeon of the fleet shall, in addition to his duties as surgeon of the flag-ship, examine and approve all requisitions for medical and hospital stores for the squadron or fleet, and inspect their quality. He shall, in difficult cases, consult with the surgeons of the several ships, and he shall make, and transmit to the Navy Department, records of the character and treatment of diseases in the squadron or fleet.—(24 May, 1828, c. 121, s. 2, v. 4, p. 313.)

Sec. 1375. [Medical Corps; assistant to Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.] A surgeon, assistant surgeon, or passed assistant surgeon, may be detailed as assistant to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, [who shall receive the highest shore pay of his grade.]—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 18, v. 12, p. 587. 27 Feb., 1877, c. 69, v. 19, p. 244.)

See note to section 421, Revised Statutes, for cases relating to assistants to chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department.

The amendment to this section, concerning the pay of officers detailed thereunder as assistants to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, contained language which clearly gave it a retrospective character. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 259.)

Pay of assistant.—Both the Navy and Treasury Departments have in practice uniformly interpreted this law as entitling surgeons detailed as assistants to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery to the shore pay given to a surgeon after 20 years' service, although they may not have served as surgeons over 5 years; and these officers have always been so paid. This shows that the word "grade" is intended to give the officer the highest pay of his "rank." (Schuetze v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls. 299; as to difference between "grade" and "rank," see note to sec. 1362, R. S.)

Sec. 1376. [Supply Corps; organization of. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1376. The active list of the Pay Corps of the Navy shall consist of thirteen pay directors, thirteen pay inspectors, fifty paymasters, thirty passed assistant paymasters, and twenty assistant paymasters."—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 11, v. 16, p. 334. 3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 6, v. 16, p. 536.)

It was superseded by a clause in the naval appropriation act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat. 285), which provided that "the active list of the Pay Corps of the Navy shall hereafter consist of thirteen pay directors, thirteen pay inspectors, forty paymasters, twenty passed assistant paymasters, and ten assistant paymasters."

The number of officers was increased by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1038), which provided that "the active list of passed assistant and assistant paymasters of the Pay Corps shall hereafter consist of thirty and forty, respectively."

A further increase was made by act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), which provided that "the grades of the active list of the Navy hereinafter designated shall be so increased that there shall be * * * two additional pay inspectors, in all fifteen; thirty-six additional paymasters, in all seventy-six; twenty-six additional passed assistant and assistant paymasters, in all ninety-six; * * * not more than twenty assistant paymasters, * * * in addition to those necessary to fill vacancies in said grades, shall be appointed in any one calendar year."

The Pay Corps was again increased by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), which provided that "the grades of the active list of the Pay Corps of the Navy are hereby increased by ten additional paymasters, in all eighty-six paymasters, and by twenty additional passed assistant and assistant paymasters, in all one hundred and sixteen passed assistant and assistant paymasters: Provided, That the total increase of the Pay Corps of the Navy shall not exceed twenty during the first fiscal year."

The number of officers was again increased by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), which provided that "the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following staff corps, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be based on percentages of the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy, as follows: Pay Corps, twelve per centum * * *"

The same act (39 Stat., 577) provided that "the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following mentioned staff corps at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the various grades of the respective corps as follows: * * * Pay Corps: One-half pay directors with the rank of rear admiral to four pay directors with the rank of captain, to eight pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to eighty-seven and one-half in the grades below pay inspector. * * * When there is an odd number of officers in the grade or rank of rear admiral in the line or in each corps, the lower division thereof shall include the excess in number, except where there is but one. Whenever a final fraction occurs in computing the authorized number of any corps, grade, or rank in the naval service, the nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number: Provided, That at least one officer shall be allowed in each grade or rank. For the purpose of determining the authorized number of officers in any grade or rank of the line or of the staff corps, there shall be excluded from consideration those officers carried by law as additional numbers, including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, and nothing contained herein shall be held to reduce below that heretofore authorized by law the number of officers in any grade or rank in the staff corps."

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834), it was provided "that the number of commissioned officers of the line, permanent, temporary, and reserve on active duty shall not exceed 4 per centum of the total authorized enlisted strength of the Regular Navy, and the number of staff officers on active duty of whatever kind shall be in the same proportions as authorized by existing law * * * That nothing herein shall be construed as reducing the permanent commissioned * * * strength of the Regular Navy as authorized by existing law."

The temporary appointment of additional officers during the period of the existing war was authorized by the act of May 22, 1917, section 4 (40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), which also authorized temporary appointments and promotions to fill, during the period of the war, the deficiency existing prior to May 22, 1917, in the total number of commissioned officers authorized by the act of August 29, 1916.

The designation of the "Pay Corps" was changed to "Supply Corps" by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147).

"The number of passed assistant and assistant paymasters in the Navy to be appointed in each of the two grades under the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), not being prescribed by that act, is necessarily left to Executive discretion, to be controlled by the general terms and regulations providing for the advancement of officers in the naval service. Nor is it required that the relative proportion of officers in each of those grades shall remain always the same, a change in the proportion being within the discretion of the Executive, unless controlled by general laws or regulations." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 511; see also Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 316; Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337.)

While the total increase of 26 in the number of assistant and passed assistant paymasters, made by the act of March 3, 1903, may be placed in the grade of passed assistant paymaster, which was limited by the act of March 3, 1899, to 30, thereby increasing the total number of passed assistant paymasters to 56, this number can not be exceeded under the act of March 3, 1903. That act did not have the effect of also authorizing the transfer of the 40 assistant paymasters, prescribed by the act of March 3, 1899, to the grade of passed assistant paymaster, thereby increasing the latter grade to 76, and leaving no officers in the grade of assistant paymaster. (File 3022-7, Apr. 10, 1908.)

The above interpretations of the act of March 3, 1903, were applied to the increase made by the act of August 22, 1912, of "twenty additional passed assistant and assistant paymasters," this total increase being placed in the grade of passed assistant paymaster, thereby increasing that grade to 76, and retaining in the grade of assistant paymaster the 40 positions authorized by the act of March 3, 1899. (File 1660-139, Bu. Nav.)

The act of August 29, 1916, authorizes 87½ per cent of the commissioned officers of the Pay Corps in the grades below pay inspector without fixing the number in each grade. In other words, it authorizes an increase in the number of officers allowed in the three grades of paymaster, passed assistant paymaster, and assistant paymaster, combined, just as the acts of March 3, 1903, and August 22, 1912, provided increases in the grades of passed assistant paymaster and assistant paymaster, without providing how the increases should be distributed.

Accordingly, held, that the act of August 29, 1916, should receive the same construction as the previous acts, and that the distribution of the increase among the grades below pay inspector has been left to the executive discretion. Hence, 87½ per cent of the increase in the Pay Corps may be distributed among the three lower grades in such proportions as may best serve the interests of the Navy. This would result in having at least 40 officers in the grade of assistant paymaster when the three lower grades are full, the act of August 29, 1916, not having the effect of repealing the act of March 3, 1899, which fixed the number of assistant paymasters at 40. In other words, although additional officers, authorized from time to time, may be distributed between the lower grades of the Pay Corps where not otherwise provided by Congress, the number of assistant paymasters specifically authorized by previous laws can not be distributed so as, for example, to place in the grades of passed assistant paymaster and paymaster the total number of pay officers allowed below the grade of pay inspector without retaining any officers in the grade of assistant paymaster. (File 27223-37, Mar. 20, 1918.)

See note to section 1380, Revised Statutes, re promotion of assistant paymasters.

Acting officers.—See section 1381, Revised Statutes, and note to section 1410, Revised Statutes.

Clerks to officers of the Supply Corps.—By naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942), three grades were established of clerks to pay officers, viz, acting pay clerks, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; pay clerks, warranted by the President; and chief pay clerks, commissioned by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Special disbursing agents are authorized to be employed by section 3614, Revised Statutes. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 132.)

Disbursing officers abroad are not to be employed for naval service, under contract or otherwise, unless they hold appointments confirmed by the Senate. (Sec. 1550, R. S.)

A naval reserve, composed of persons who have been found qualified by examination for commissions in any reserve or volunteer naval force hereafter organized, other than the Naval Militia, is authorized by act of February 16, 1914, section 21 (38 Stat., 289); which act authorizes the President, when exigency demands, to issue commissions in the Regular Navy to persons so qualified; and also authorizes him to commission or warrant former officers who have been honorably discharged from the Navy.

As to other auxiliary naval forces, see note to section 1363, Revised Statutes.

Number of officers not to be increased without explicit legislation.—(See note to sec. 1363, R. S.)

The Pay Corps consists of officers commissioned by the President, and clerks and others who are not so commissioned do not belong to the Pay Corps. This is obvious from the language of section 1378, Revised Statutes (U. S. v. Mout, 124 U. S., 303.)

Duties of Supply Corps.—The number of pay officers for the Navy is fixed by law, and each must give bond for the faithful discharge of his duties. They are prohibited from loaning money to brother officers. With these exceptions there are no statutes prescribing their duties or functions. These latter spring from regulations issued from time to time by the Secretary of the Navy pursuant to section 161, Revised Statutes. Such regulations, when not inconsistent with law, are binding upon the Comptroller of the Treasury, and pay officers are amenable to court-martial for violation thereof. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611.)

Decisions of Comptroller.—Disbursing officers may apply for and obtain decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury concerning legality of proposed payments (act July 31, 1914, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 208); and may appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury from disallowances in their accounts by the Auditor for the Navy Department. (Same act and section.) Requests for advance decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury must be forwarded by pay officers through the Secretary of the Navy; but appeals to the Comptroller from disallowances by the Auditor for the Navy Department may be forwarded by them direct. (Art. I-2205, Naval Instructions, 1913; 90 S. and A. Memo., 836.)

On general subject of accounting see note to section 236, Revised Statutes; and see Title XL, "The Public Monies," sections 3591-3659, Revised Statutes.

Disbursing officers of the Navy shall render their accounts and vouchers direct to the proper accounting officer of the Treasury. (Sec. 3622, R. S., as amended.)

Secretary of the Treasury is required to report annually to Congress disbursing officers delinquent in rendering accounts. (Act May 28, 1896, 29 Stat., 179.)

Failure in rendering accounts as provided by law is punishable as embezzlement by section 90, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105); other proceedings against delinquent officer are provided for by sections 3624-3638, Revised Statutes, and acts of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 206), and May 28, 1896, section 4 (29 Stat., 179.)

Accounts of pay officer of lost or captured vessel; see section 284, Revised Statutes for provisions concerning.

Settlement of outstanding checks and accounts of disbursing officers. (See secs. 306-310, R. S., and art. R-4334, Navy Regs. 1913.)

Lost checks, procedure with reference to. (See secs. 3646, 3647, R. S.; act of Feb. 23, 1909, 35 Stat., 643, and art. R-4337, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Advances of public money are prohibited by section 3648, Revised Statutes, with certain exceptions contained in that section and in section 1563, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1181); and unauthorized advances are punishable as embezzlement under section 87, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1109.)

Requisitions for advances to disbursing officers and agents of the Navy may be issued by the Secretary of the Navy under a "general account of advances." (Act June 19, 1878, sec. 1, 20 Stat., 167.)

Exchange of Government funds for other funds, with certain exceptions, is prohibited;

disbursing officer violating this prohibition shall be suspended from duty immediately, and the matter reported to the President to the end that he may be promptly removed from office or restored to duty (Sec. 3639 and 3651, R. S.); and such unauthorized exchange of government funds is punishable as embezzlement under section 89, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105). See section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Depositing public money in place not authorized by law is punishable as embezzlement under section 87, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105); a disbursing officer who deposits money in a bank not designated as a depository in accordance with sections 3620 and 3639, Revised Statutes, is liable with his sureties for any loss that may arise from the failure of such bank (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 24); and the conduct of bankers or officers of banks in knowingly receiving such money on deposit is punishable as embezzlement by section 96, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1106.)

All moneys received by any officer for the United States must be promptly paid into the Treasury, without deduction (sec. 3617, R. S.); officers violating this requirement shall be removed from office and forfeit moneys withheld (sec. 3619, R. S.); and such failure to deposit public money when required so to do is punishable as embezzlement (sec. 91, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1105). But see note to section 236, Revised Statutes, under "Set-off."

Failing safely to keep public moneys in the care of a disbursing officer is punishable as embezzlement. (Sec. 88, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1105.) See section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Making false returns, keeping false accounts, or embezzling public or private money or property, shall be punished by fine and imprisonment by any court, civil or military, having jurisdiction. (Sec. 5306, R.S.) See section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Making false or fictitious entries in accounts or records, or making false reports of moneys or securities belonging to the United States or to any person, or aiding or abetting therein, shall be punished by fine of not more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both. (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1355.)

Trading in Federal or State funds is punishable under section 103, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1107).

Any officer of the United States who sells for a premium any Treasury note or other public security not his own property, without accounting for such premium, shall be forthwith dismissed from office. (Sec. 3652, R. S.)

Responsibility of disbursing officers.—Upon application to Court of Claims, disbursing officers may be relieved of responsibility for losses incurred without fault or neglect on their part. (Judicial Code, act Mar. 3, 1911, secs. 145, 147, 36 Stat., 1136, 1137.)

Disbursing officers of the Navy shall be relieved by the accounting officers of responsibility on account of loss or deficiency determined by the Secretary of the Navy to have occurred without fault or negligence on the part of such disbursing officers while they were in the line of their duty. (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 132; see also similar provision in the same act (41 Stat., 153) as to losses incurred during the "present emergency" due to military necessity or accidental circumstances.)

Responsibility of disbursing officers for payments made by order of commanding officers: See section 285, Revised Statutes, and cases noted thereunder; see also note to section 176, Revised Statutes.

Embezzlement.—On general subject, see sections 86-96, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105, 1106), and section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Receipts.—Taking receipt for larger sum than paid is punishable as embezzlement under sections 86 and 95, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105, 1106); taking receipts for payments by check, duplicate receipts for cash payments, or receipts in advance of actual payments, is prohibited by Navy Regulations, 1913, article R-4303.

Miscellaneous.—Disbursing officers are required to furnish heads of departments with certain data for annual reports to Congress (sec. 193, R. S.); and are required to make annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury of checks outstanding for three years or more (sec. 310, R. S.).

Disbursing officers are not allowed to pay expense connected with any commission or inquiry, except courts-martial or courts of inquiry in the military or naval service, unless special appropriation therefor is made by law (sec. 3681, R. S.); nor to pay compensation or expenses of any commission, council, board, or similar body, unless the creation of the same shall be authorized by law. (Act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat., 1027.)

No money can be paid to any person as compensation who is in arrears to the United States. (Sec. 1766, R. S. See note to sec. 236, R. S., under "VI. SET-OFF.")

Sec. 1377. [Supply Corps; no promotion or appointment in certain grades until reduced. Obsolete.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1377. Until the number of passed assistant paymasters shall have been reduced below thirty, there shall be no promotion to that grade, nor any appointment to the grade of assistant paymaster."—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 11, v. 16, p. 334.)

It became obsolete as soon as the number of passed assistant paymasters was reduced below 30. See also later laws, noted above under section 1376, increasing the number of passed assistant and assistant paymasters.

Sec. 1378. [Supply Corps; appointments in, how made.] All appointments in the Pay Corps shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.—(30 Mar., 1812, c. 47, s. 6, v. 2, p. 699. 22 June, 1860, c. 181, s. 3, v. 12, p. 83. 17 July, 1861, c. 4, s. 1, v. 12, p. 258. 3 May, 1866, c. 72, s. 1, v. 14, p. 43.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), which changed the designation of the Pay Corps to "Supply Corps."

As to appointment of officers in general, see note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2.

Acting pay officers may be appointed at sea by senior officer present, in cases authorized by section 1381, Revised Statutes; see also note to section 1410, Revised Statutes.

Appointments as acting pay clerks are made by the Secretary of the Navy; appointments as pay clerks are made by the President; and appointments as chief pay clerks are made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942.)

Appointments in the Naval Reserve Force, to commissioned grades, shall be made by the President alone, and to warrant grades shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 587.)

Appointments of temporary commissioned officers during the war with Germany were to be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 12, 40 Stat., 87.)

Promotion of officers; for provisions relating to, see section 1380, Revised Statutes.

Rank of officers of the Navy shall not be changed "except in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." (Sec. 1506, R. S. as amended by act June 17, 1878, 20 Stat. 143.)

Recess appointments when Senate not in session. (See note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 3; see also note to sec. 1381, R. S.)

Supply Corps limited to commissioned officers.—"It is obvious from the language of section 1378 that the Pay Corps is limited to officers commissioned by the President, and that clerks and others who are not so commissioned do not belong to the Pay Corps." (U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303.)

See note to section 1369, Revised Statutes, concerning appointments in the Navy.

Sec. 1379. [Supply Corps; qualifications for assistant paymasters.] No person shall be appointed assistant paymaster who is, at the time of such appointment, less than twenty-one or more than twenty-six years of age; nor until his physical, mental, and moral qualifications have been examined and approved by a board of paymasters appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and according to such regulations as he may prescribe.—(17 July, 1861, c. 4, s. 2, v. 12, p. 258.)

Age for appointment as assistant paymaster from among chief pay clerks and pay clerks, was fixed by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 943), at "between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-five years at the time of appointment."

Boards may be convened by officers on foreign stations. (Act March 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1171.)

Midshipmen on graduation may be appointed assistant paymasters in the Navy, by authority of act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103); see also note to section 1521, Revised Statutes.

The age limit fixed by this section was waived by act of July 3, 1894 (28 Stat., 99), for the benefit of certain graduates of the Naval Academy who had been discharged from the service; and by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1038), for the benefit of persons who had served as assistant paymasters in the war with Spain. The age limit has also been waived by special act of Congress in individual cases (see, for example, act May 9, 1914, 38 Stat., 39). Special age limits were prescribed for officers appointed in the Regular Navy by transfer from the temporary Navy and Naval Reserve Force, by act of June 4, 1920, section 5 (41 Stat., 835).

A candidate who has passed his twenty-sixth birthday is ineligible and can not, therefore, legally be appointed to the Pay Corps under section 1379, Revised Statutes. This has been the prior interpretation of the law by the Navy Department, and such interpretation received the approval of Congress in the enactment of a special act of May 9, 1914 (38 Stat., 39), waiving the age limit in the case of a candidate who successfully passed the Pay Corps examination while under 26 years of age, but who attained that age the day after the board's finding was approved and before his nomination could be made by the President, owing to an adjournment of the Senate for the Christmas holidays. Other statutes relating to the ages of candidates for appointment to the Navy have been, similarly interpreted by the Navy Department and the Attorney General, and there have been judicial decisions in civil cases which support such interpretation. (File 27223-12:1, Jan. 27, 1915, citing authorities.)

For other decisions, see note to section 1370, Revised Statutes, as to age of candidates for appointment as assistant surgeons; see also section 1517, Revised Statutes, as to age of candidates for appointment as midshipmen at the Naval Academy; and act of March 3, 1899, section 14 (30 Stat., 1007), as to age of candidates for appointment as warrant machinists (now designated as "machinists").

As to what constitutes appointment, see note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2; and see note to section 1370, Revised Statutes, as to when an appointment as assistant surgeon is complete.

Examination by "board of paymasters."—The term "paymasters" in this section has been construed to mean "officers of the Supply Corps," and not as restricting the membership of the examining board to officers in the grade of "paymaster." (See Art. 1640, Navy Regs., 1920. As to grades of officers constituting the Supply Corps, see note to sec. 1376, R. S.)

[This section is peculiar in requiring the physical qualifications of candidates for the Supply Corps to be examined and approved by a board not composed of medical officers. In practice, nevertheless, candidates for this corps are physically examined by a board of medical officers, who report the result of such examination to the statutory board, and the latter thus have the benefit of the medical officers' opinion to guide them in making their report upon the physical qualifications of the candidates. (See Art. R-3306, Navy Regs., 1913. See also in this connection act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942, providing that candidates for appointment as acting pay clerk, pay clerk, and chief pay clerk shall be physically, as well as mentally, morally, and professionally examined by a board, composed when practicable of officers of the Pay [now Supply] Corps.) Report of medical officers is not, however, binding upon the statutory board, which may legally find physically qualified for appointment a candidate who has been adversely reported upon by the medical officers. (See, for example, records of examining boards in cases of Assistant Paymasters Charles L. Austin, Walter Maudry, and Maury W. Boykin.)]

Qualifications for temporary appointment.—See note to section 1370, Revised Statutes, under "Appointments to temporary service."

Sec. 1380. [Supply Corps; promotions in.] Passed assistant paymasters shall be regularly promoted and commissioned from assistant paymasters, and paymasters from passed assistant paymasters; subject to such examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.—(17 July, 1861, c. 4, s. 5, v. 12, p. 258. 3 May, 1866, c. 72, s. 1, v. 14, p. 43.)

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

It was provided by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), that "officers of the lower grades of the Medical Corps, Pay [now Supply] Corps, Construction Corps, and Corps of Civil Engineers shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law." (See note to sec. 1475, R. S.)

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that advancement to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the Staff Corps of the Navy shall be made by selection in the manner therein prescribed.

Assistant paymasters are promoted to passed assistant paymasters after three years' service, provided vacancies exist in the upper grade.

The following order was issued by the Secretary of the Navy, February 21, 1908: "It is directed that hereafter assistant paymasters shall be considered as due for promotion to be passed assistant paymasters as soon as they have served three years in the grade of assistant paymaster: Provided, That the number of passed assistant paymasters shall not exceed fifty-six." (File 3022-5; as to increase by law in total of passed assistant paymasters, see note to sec. 1376, R. S.)

This order was modified by the President, upon recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, August 23, 1912 (file 1660-139, Bu. Nav.), by increasing the grade of passed assistant paymaster to 76, pursuant to act of August 22, 1912, (noted under sec. 1376, R. S.), and providing that "no assistant paymaster shall be promoted to passed assistant paymaster until he shall have served three years in the grade of assistant paymaster."

The promotions of assistant paymasters in accordance with the above order of the Secretary of the Navy are promotions "in course," within the meaning of the act of June 27, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), and are advancements in grade "pursuant to law," within the meaning of the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892). (See Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 316, and Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337; see also sec. 1561, R. S.)

The law does not regulate the length of time which an officer must serve in the grade of assistant paymaster before being eligible, if otherwise qualified, to fill a vacancy which may exist in the grade of passed assistant paymaster. The department has, however, adopted the procedure, which is now well established, by which such advancements are regulated by length of service, but it may modify in a particular case the procedure thus established. (File 11130-30:1, May 4, 1916.)

Subject to the limitations contained in laws prior to August 29, 1916, as to the number of officers in certain lower grades of the Pay Corps (see note to sec. 1376, R. S.), the Secretary of the Navy has discretion to provide that all assistant paymasters shall be promoted to passed assistant paymasters at the same time that they are advanced to the rank of lieutenant, and that all passed assistant paymasters shall be promoted to paymaster at the same time that they are advanced to the rank of lieutenant commander. (File 27223-37, Mar. 20, 1918.)

Pay on promotion.—All officers of the Navy advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates stated in their commissions. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892; see note to sec. 1561, R. S.)

Suspension from promotion of officers who fail to qualify when examined is required by section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 11, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), and May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89).

Sec. 1381. [Supply Corps; acting appointments on ships at sea.] When the office of paymaster or assistant paymaster becomes vacant, by death or otherwise, in ships at sea, or on foreign stations, or on the Pacific coast of the United States, the senior officer present may make an acting appointment of any fit person, who shall perform the duties thereof until another paymaster or assistant paymaster shall report for duty, and shall be entitled to receive the pay of such grade while so acting.—(17 July, 1861, c. 4, s. 4, v. 12, p. 258.)

Acting appointments in general; see note to section 1410, Revised Statutes.

Pay of officer under acting appointment; see section 1564, Revised Statutes.

Restrictions upon employment of persons to receive and pay money for use of the naval service on foreign stations, are contained in section 1550, Revised Statutes.

Status of appointee while acting.—“An officer duly appointed to act in any grade shall, while serving under such appointment, be entitled to the same command, precedence, and honors as if he held a commission in that grade of the same date as his appointment.” (Art. R-1048, Navy Regs., 1913.)

In determining the meaning of the Revised Statutes, and of subsequent acts of Congress, “the reference to any officer shall include any person authorized by law to perform the duties of such office, unless the context shows that such words were intended to be used in a more limited sense.” (Sec. 1, R. S.)

The words “paymaster or assistant paymaster” have been construed as including “any officer of the Pay Corps on duty”; (Art. R-3006, Navy Regs., 1913; see also 22 Comp. Dec., 171); and as including assistant paymasters of the Marine Corps, by virtue of section 1621, Revised Statutes (22 Comp. Dec., 171).

Acting appointment not an office.—“An acting paymaster appointed by the senior officer present is not an officer. He is not appointed as required by the Constitution, takes no oath of office, and gives no bond as paymaster.” (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25; see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

“From the above it will be seen that, strictly speaking, there is no such office in the Navy as acting assistant paymaster to which appellant could have been appointed. As a matter of law he was given an acting appointment to perform the duties of the assistant paymaster as pay officer on board a vessel at sea. * * * There is no evidence in the papers in the case that he took any oath as acting assistant paymaster, and even though he did it would not make him an incumbent of the office of acting assistant paymaster, because there is in law no such office. The distinction is between one acting as assistant paymaster, and holding the office of acting assistant paymaster. He continued to hold office under his appointment as a paymaster's clerk.” (21 Comp. Dec., 548.)

Acting appointee continues to hold his regular office.—“An acting appointment of a paymaster's clerk to perform the duties of pay officer on board a naval vessel at sea, under section 1381, Revised Statutes, does not change his official status as a paymaster's clerk.” (21 Comp. Dec., 548.)

Not entitled to dual compensation.—“A naval officer acting as paymaster is appointed to discharge the duties of an office which he does not hold, and is prohibited from receiving dual compensation by the Revised Statutes, sections 1763, 1765.” (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

It is true that Revised Statutes, sections 1381 and 1564, provide that any person performing the duties of paymaster by appointment of the senior officer, shall be entitled to receive the pay of such grade while so acting. Those sections must be construed with reference to other provisions of the statute, and while they may operate literally if the appointee holds no office under the Government, as may be the case, if he holds an office he can not escape from the prohibitions of the Revised Statutes, sections 1763, 1765. It does not appear that Congress intended to allow an officer two salaries when temporarily discharging the duties of acting paymaster by appointment under section 1381. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

Entitled to larger compensation of the two positions.—“It is the liberal custom of the Treasury Department to allow a person holding more than one office the compensation of that which is the larger.” (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

“The offices of engineer and paymaster in the Navy are incompatible, and he who holds them is not entitled to the compensation of both, but is entitled to the larger of the two.” (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

Not entitled to pay officer's longevity pay.—“Where a paymaster's clerk of the Navy is appointed, under sections 1381 and 1564 of the Revised Statutes, to perform the duties of a paymaster, such acting paymaster is entitled to receive the base pay of the paymaster whose duties he is appointed to perform, but not his longevity pay.” (18 Comp. Dec., 491; see also 21 Comp. Dec., 548; Ostrander v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 218, 222; Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

Where the officer whose place is vacant held the grade of paymaster, with the rank of lieutenant commander, there being two ranks in the grade of paymaster—namely, lieutenant commander and lieutenant; held, that a paymaster's clerk appointed to perform the paymaster's duties is entitled to pay based upon the rank of lieutenant commander. (18 Comp. Dec., 491.)

"The claimant was paid the salary of a paymaster in the first five years of service. He claims the pay of paymaster in the fourth five years, in whose place he was acting. Increase of pay for length of service in the Navy is founded on the theory that an officer acquires experience and efficiency by the long performance of the same duties. It is not to be presumed that Congress intended to pay from the beginning the increased compensation allowed for length of service to one who is appointed temporarily to discharge the duties of paymaster." (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25; 18 Comp. Dec., 491.)

Termination of acting appointment.—Under section 1381 the continuance of the acting appointment "does not depend upon a discharge or revocation. It terminates when another paymaster reports for duty, and the pay continues at farthest only to the time when the acting officer's accounts are made up and filed." (Ostrander v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 218.)

By virtue of an appointment under this law the claimant was authorized to perform the duties of the invalid officer "until another paymaster or assistant paymaster should report for duty," and no longer. No phraseology in the appointment could confer greater rights than are herein authorized. Words which confer more, if any such are employed, are simply void. (Ostrander v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 218.)

A paymaster's clerk in the Navy, authorized under section 1381, Revised Statutes, to perform the duties of assistant paymaster, was delinquent in settling his accounts in the latter capacity. During the period of delinquency he was a witness before a naval general court-martial. Held, That from the date his accounts should have been settled until he was discharged as a witness before the general court-martial his status was that of paymaster's clerk, to which status he reverted on the date that his accounts should have been settled. Held, further, That a waiver of delinquency which was granted in forwarding his accounts to the Treasury Department did not operate to place him in the duty status of settling accounts, and consequently did not entitle him during that period to the pay of the officer whose duties he was appointed to perform. (21 Comp. Dec., 548.)

Temporary absence of officer not a vacancy.—The office of paymaster or assistant paymaster must become vacant before the conditions exist in which a person may be appointed to act "until another paymaster or assistant paymaster shall report for duty." The temporary absence of a paymaster from his ship or station does not create a vacancy in his office as contemplated by the statute. (10 Comp. Dec., 135; compare sec. 179, R. S., and cases noted thereunder.)

Where an officer was acting in a double capacity, as pay officer of a vessel and general

storekeeper at the naval station, and while absent performing his duties as pay officer of the ship was directed to turn over to a pay clerk such of the duties of his station as could be legally executed by said clerk during his absence. Held, That this did not operate to detach the officer from the office of general storekeeper, and did not create a vacancy therein, so as to authorize the appointment of an acting assistant paymaster during such temporary absence. (10 Comp. Dec., 135.)

Inherent power of President to provide for acting appointments.—Section 1381 applies in terms to a vacancy in the office of "paymaster or assistant paymaster." However, by Navy Regulations 1920 (Art. 1228), provision is made for acting appointments by the senior officer present in case of the death, etc., of "any officer of the Supply Corps on duty." (See also Art. 1229.)

Statutory authority was not necessary for the President to make a valid regulation providing that "on foreign stations a commander may, when absolutely necessary, give acting appointments to fill vacancies which may be occasioned by death or other circumstances; but in such cases he shall take the earliest opportunity to make known the circumstances to the Secretary of the Navy, and state his reasons for making such acting appointments." This regulation was published in the Navy Regulations of 1818, commonly called the "Blue Book," under the head of "Appointments." After its promulgation it was considered "as entitled to respect and obedience. Many acting appointments, including acting pursers, have been made under it, which have received the recognition of the President, the Navy Department, and the accounting officers of the Treasury and the courts of law. * * * To fill up a vacancy by an appointment of one to act ad interim and for a particular exigency in a distant service, is in its nature an executive, ministerial, and administrative power." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 357.)

A statute which provides that an officer shall not act unless first approved by the Senate, must have a construction consistent with the exception to the power of the Senate, contained in the Constitution, whereby the President is authorized to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session, so that the statute shall not be in conflict with the Constitution. That is to say, there is an exception not expressed in the statute but necessarily implied. The Constitution itself, in relation to the power of the President to fill up vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate, must have a reasonable construction, adapted to the end, utility, and practical effect intended in conferring that power. In the cases of officers of the Navy, on far distant service, in the different seas and oceans, vacancies will happen which can not abide to be filled until the President may be informed and exercise his appointing power. To meet such exigencies, the President may provide by regulation for the temporary filling of such vacancies by the naval commander. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 357; in this connection, see sec. 1378, R. S.)

In the absence of legislative authority, the commander of a squadron of the Navy on a foreign station has power to appoint a provisional or acting disbursing officer in the absence of any such officer duly appointed by the President. Although such appointment be subsequently disapproved by the Secretary of the Navy, still the acts which the acting officer may have performed while so acting are not thereby invalidated. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 357.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 177 and 181, Revised Statutes, and to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 3.

Sec. 1382. [Supply Corps; paymaster of the fleet.] The President may designate among the paymasters in the service, and appoint to every fleet or squadron a paymaster, who shall be denominated "paymaster of the fleet."—(24 May, 1828, c. 121, s. 2, v. 4, p. 313. 21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 7, v. 13, p. 54.)

Pay of fleet paymasters was fixed at $4.400 per annum by section 1556, Revised Statutes. (See note to that section.)

See section 1373, Revised Statutes, as to appointment of fleet surgeons; and section 1393, Revised Statutes, as to appointment of fleet engineers.

The word "paymasters" as used in this section has been construed to mean any officer of the Supply Corps, and not as restricting details for this duty to officers in the grade of "paymaster." (See Art. R-1826 (2), Navy Regs., 1913, as amended.)

Must be designated by the President.—No designation other than that made by the President entitles a naval paymaster to the place and perquisites of paymaster of the fleet. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 156; followed 5 Comp. Dec., 466; compare Art. R-1826 (2), Navy Regs., 1913.)

The powers conferred by sections 1381 and 1382, respectively, are quite distinct. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 156.)

Secretary of the Navy acts for the President.—"The action of the Secretary of the Navy in approving the designation of the fleet officers named by general squadron order may be regarded as the action of the President, and as a sufficient compliance with the law which authorizes him to make such appointment. The action of the head of a department within the scope of his authority is to be taken as the action of the President himself." (5 Comp. Dec., 888, citing Wolsey v. Chapman, 101 U. S., 755, 769; Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet., 498, 513; U. S. v. Eliason, 16 Pet., 291; 4 Comp. Dec., 463; see also note to sec. 1393, R. S.)

For other cases, see note to section 417, Revised Statutes.

Approval by Secretary of the Navy not retroactive.—"The designation by the commander in chief of a naval squadron of a paymaster of the Navy as paymaster of the fleet does not entitle him to the increased pay of that position, and a subsequent approval of such designation by the Secretary of the Navy can not have a retroactive effect." (5 Comp. Dec., 466.)

Where designation was made by a commander in chief, and subsequently (more than a year later), was approved by the President, he did not become entitled from the date of his designation to pay as paymaster of the fleet. There is not any relation by the subsequent approval to the time of the designation by the Admiral. The latter act has no significance in point of law, no more than as any other recommendation made to an appointing power. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 156; followed 5 Comp. Dec., 466.)

Termination of appointment.—In the case of Denig v. U. S. (37 Ct. Cls., 383) it was shown that the officer (fleet engineer) had no duties to perform as fleet engineer from the date the commander in chief was detached until his designation by the new commander in chief was approved by the Secretary of the Navy, his vessel in the meantime being separated from the rest of the fleet and no duty required of claimant as fleet engineer. It was held that the officer was not entitled to pay as fleet engineer during the interim, "even if the detachment of the commander in chief was not of itself a revocation of his appointment as fleet engineer." (10 Comp. Dec., 817.)

Pay when not performing duty.—"The effect of this decision [Denig v. U. S., noted in preceding paragraph] is that, although Denig's appointment as fleet engineer continued unrevoked during said fifty-four days, he was not entitled to receive the pay of fleet engineer during that period, because the flagship upon which he was serving was separated from the rest of the fleet and no duties were required of him as fleet engineer." (10 Comp. Dec., 817.)

"An officer of the Navy serving as paymaster of a fleet is not entitled while on leave of absence to the pay of a fleet paymaster, but only to the shore pay of his rank." (10 Comp. Dec., 817.)

Sec. 1383. [Supply Corps; bonds of officers.] Every paymaster, passed assistant paymaster, and assistant paymaster shall, before entering on the duties of his office, give bond, with two or more sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, for the faithful performance thereof. Paymasters shall give bonds in the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, passed assistant paymasters in the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, and assistant paymasters in the sum of ten thousand dollars.—(30 Mar., 1812, c. 47, s. 6, v. 2, p. 699; 1 Mar., 1817, c. 24, s. 1, v. 3, p. 350; 22 June, 1860, c. 181, s. 3, v. 12, p. 83; 17 July, 1861, c. 4, s. 5, v. 12, p. 258; 14 July, 1862, c. 175, s. 1, v. 12, p. 575; 3 May, 1866, c. 72, s. 2, v. 14, p. 43.—U. S. v. Tingley, 5 Pet., 115.)

Deficiency, when discovered, shall be reported by accounting officers to head of department, who shall immediately notify all obligors thereof; but failure to give such notice shall not discharge the sureties. (Act Aug. 8, 1888, sec. 1, 25 Stat., 387.)

Disbursing clerks in executive departments: See section 176, Revised Statutes, and note thereto, as to bonds required to be furnished.

Disbursing officers against whom a warrant of distress has been issued for failure to account for public moneys, must furnish bond in a prescribed sum before an injunction shall issue upon their complaint to stay proceedings on such warrant. (Sec. 3636, R. S.)

Examination of bonds shall be made at least once in two years by officers having power to take and approve such bonds, and by officers having power to fix the amount thereof, for purpose of ascertaining sufficiency of sureties and of approving or fixing the amount. (Act Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 5, 28 Stat., 807.)

Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks are required to give bond in such sum as the Postmaster General may deem sufficient. (Act May 27, 1908, 35 Stat., 417, as amended by act Aug. 24, 1912, secs. 3 and 11, 37 Stat., 554, 560.) All bonds taken by the Post Office Department shall be made to the United States of America. (Sec. 403, R. S.)

Pay of naval officer required to give bond commences, upon original entry into the service, upon date of approval of his bond. (See sec. 1560, R. S.)

Premium on bonds furnished by surety or bonding company for any officer or employee of the United States shall not be more than 35 per centum in excess of the rate of premium charged for a like bond during the calendar year 1908. (Act Aug. 5, 1909, 36 Stat., 125.) The United States shall not pay any part of the premium or other cost of furnishing a bond required by law or otherwise of any officer or employee of the United States. (Same act.)

President is authorized, if in his opinion the interest of the United States require the same, to regulate and increase the sums for which bonds are or may be required by law of officers employed in the disbursement of the public moneys under the direction of the Navy Department. (Sec. 3639, R. S.)

Renewal of bonds necessary at least once every four years; but where not so renewed, liability of principal or sureties shall not be affected. (Act Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 5, 28 Stat., 807; see also sec. 1384, R. S.)

Special disbursing agents, other than officers of Army or Navy, are required to give bond. (Sec. 3614, R. S.)

Storekeepers on foreign stations: Civilian storekeepers appointed by Secretary of the Navy on foreign stations are required to give bond in amount fixed by Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1415, R. S.)

Storekeepers on foreign stations: Officers of the Navy acting in such capacity are required to give bond in amount fixed by Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1439, R. S.)

Suit on bonds: Sureties discharged if suit not instituted within five years after discovery of indebtedness. (Act Aug. 8, 1888, sec. 2, 25 Stat., 387.)

Suit on bonds: Judgment at return term shall be granted by court when suit is brought by United States upon a bond, unless the defendant pleads "non est factum," or makes a motion to the court, verifying such plea or motion by his oath, and the court thereupon requires the production of the original bond, in which case a continuance may be granted until the next succeeding term. (Sec. 957, R. S.)

Suit on bonds: Judgment that plaintiff recover so much as is due according to equity shall be rendered in suits to recover forfeitures annexed to bonds, where the forfeiture, breach, or nonperformance appears by default or confession of the defendant, or upon demurrer; and when the sum for which judgment should be rendered is uncertain, it shall, if either of the parties requests it, be assessed by a jury. (Sec. 961, R. S.)

Suit on bonds: Copies of bonds duly certified and authenticated are admissible in evidence in suits against delinquent officers, unless defendant pleads "non est factum" or makes his motion to the court, verifying such plea or motion by his oath, in which case the court may, if it appears to be necessary for the attainment of justice, require the production of the original bond. (Sec. 886, R. S.)

Surety or guaranty company which complies with necessary requirements may be accepted as sole surety on a bond. (Act Aug. 13, 1894, 28 Stat., 279, as amended by act Mar. 23, 1910, 36 Stat., 241.)

I. WHO ARE REQUIRED TO GIVE BONDS.

See statutes noted above, under this section.

Pay directors and pay inspectors, although not specified in the above section of the Revised Statutes, are required to give bond by Navy Regulations, 1913 (art. R-3002), which provide that "before entering upon the duties of his office every officer of the Pay Corps shall give bond for the faithful performance thereof, with sufficient surety, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, and under such regulations or instructions as may be issued from time to time by proper authority"; and by Naval Instructions, 1913 (art. I-3901), which provide that "officers of the Pay Corps of the Navy, * * * and such other officers or officials as the Secretary of the Navy may direct, are required to furnish bonds for the faithful performance of their duties."

"While there is no express statutory authority requiring pay directors and pay inspectors to give bond, the department, in view of the fact that such officers have or may have disbursing accounts, requires that they give bond in the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars." (File 26284-94, May 8, 1909.)

The Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts has no disbursing account and is not held personally responsible for the disbursement of public moneys under the bureau. Therefore in the absence of an express statutory requirement it is not considered necessary that he furnish a bond. * * * Should there be such a change in the business methods of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts as would place public funds in the hands of the Paymaster General, in any capacity, it is considered in such case that the public interests would indicate that a bond be required." (File 26284-94, May 8, 1909, Memo. of Solicitor, Navy Dept.)

"Chief pay clerks, pay clerks, and acting pay clerks will be required to furnish bond for the faithful performance of their duties in the sum of five thousand dollars; and will be responsible under said bond for all money and stores in their custody." (Art. R-3318A, par. 7, Navy Regs., 1913, file 3980-1283, Oct. 18, 1916, 201 S. and A. Memo. 4423, Dec. 1, 1917; C. N. R. 11, Dec. 1, 1918. See 24 Comp. Dec., 650; 25 Comp. Dec., 550; and see decisions of the Supreme Court, noted below, as to the power of the head of a department to demand a bond in cases not required by statute; see also above, as to pay directors and pay inspectors.)

Enlisted men on duty involving the handling of Government stores and money may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to give bond. (File 3980-1283, Oct. 18, 1916, May 2, 1917, and July 31, 1917.)

Pay Officers, Naval Reserve Force, whether of the Fleet Naval Reserve or Naval Coast Defense Reserve, must furnish bond in conformity with section 1383, Revised Statutes, before their pay can commence. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 30, 1917, file 26254-2224.5; see also Comp. Dec., Apr. 14, 1917, file 26254-2222.1; Comp. Dec., Apr. 7, 1917, file 26254-2224.2.)

Pay Officers, Naval Militia, assigned to duty under the provisions of section 11 of the Naval Militia Act of February 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 286, repealed by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708), not called into the service of the United States and not required to disburse Federal funds, are not required to give bond as officers of the Navy. (Comp. Dec., July 6, 1917, file 26254-2224.7.)

The head of a department has power to demand a bond from an officer appointed to a place of trust, although there is no statutory authority to take such bond. It was held in United States v. Tingey (5 Pet., 115) that the United States had the right to take a bond to insure the faithful performance of duty on the part of an individual or officer where such bond was voluntarily given and was not in violation of any provision of law; but that no officer of the Government has a right, under color of his office, to require from any subordinate officer, as a condition of holding office, that he should execute a bond "with a condition different from that prescribed by law." The power of the Government to take bonds in cases where not required by any law or regulation, but only by direction of the head of a department, was recognized again in United States v. Bradley (10 Pet., 343, 359). (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571, 586, 587; but see, contra, 24 Comp. Dec., 650; compare 25 Comp. Dec., 550.)

It is in the discretion of the President whether or not to require bond of an officer of the Engineer Corps employed as disbursing agent of the Government. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 24; compare sec. 3614, R. S.)

Although the general functions and duties of certain officers do not include specifically the disbursement of public money, and those officers are not required by statute to give bond, yet the head of the department may lawfully assign to them duties within the general scope of their employment other than and in addition to those prescribed, whenever the exigencies of the public service require it. Where the particular duty thus assigned involves the receipt or disbursement of public money, it is competent for the Secretary to take a bond for the protection of the Government against loss, although such bond may not be required by statute; and the bond would be valid and binding upon both principal and sureties if voluntarily given by the officer. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 391.)

The term "voluntary bond" does not mean that it must have been offered and pressed upon the Government when never asked for or demanded by it. It is a voluntary bond when it is not demanded by any particular statute or regulation based thereon, and when it is not exacted in violation of any law or valid regulation of a department. The Government in such cases has the right to demand a bond, in the absence of any law; but can not extort a bond from a reluctant officer with a condition therein contained different from that which a statute calls for. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571; see also U. S. v. Maurice, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15747; Jessup v. U. S., 106 U. S. 147; U. S. v. Rogers, 28 Fed. Rep., 607; Boehm v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl., 241; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 24.)

The head of a department may "require" an officer to execute a "voluntary" bond in such penalty as the former may deem adequate to protect the public interests. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 627.)

Although there is no statute specially providing for the execution of a bond by one holding a particular office, the order of the head of the department that a bond be executed is one which the Secretary has power to make. "The consideration or the condition of the bond must not be in violation of law; it must not run counter to any statute; it must not be either malum prohibitum nor malum in se. Otherwise and for all purposes of security, a bond may be valid, though no statute directs its delivery." (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571; but see 24 Comp. Dec., 650. Compare 25 Comp. Dec., 550.)

In Moses v. U. S. (166 U. S., 571), and U. S. v. Dieckerhoff (202 U. S., 302), the court concluded by laying down the general rule that if the bond does not run counter to a statute, and is neither malum prohibitum nor malum in se, it is binding upon all parties. And even though it run counter to a statute in one or more of its provisions, the bond is valid as to the others, providing they are properly severable from those which are invalid. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 70, 72; citing also U. S. v. Mora, 97 U. S., 421, and U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall., 395.)

Having the right to take a bond in a case where it is not required by statute, the Government has the right to demand it from the officer and to say to him that if he do not give it he will not be continued in the office. Such a demand, when complied with, does not amount to the illegal exaction or extortion of the bond. The case of a bond so procured differs radically from a case in which a bond is extorted from a reluctant officer with a condition therein contained different from that which a statute calls for. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571.)

The chief of an office in the War Department has the power to designate one of the officers detailed for service under him as a "property and disbursing officer," to whom shall belong, as provided for in the order of such chief, the custody of all Government property and funds pertaining to the office; and such chief has the power, under the general direction of the Secretary of War, to provide that the property and disbursing officer shall be responsible for the due execution of his duties as such. Where in such a case the Secretary of War directed the property and disbursing officer so designated to give bond as such officer, he thereby recognized and in effect provided that there should be such an office. A bond having accordingly been given for such faithful performance, and such officer having been guilty of the forgery of vouchers and the embezzlement of public moneys officially received by him, such conduct was a plain violation of his duty as such officer, and the condition of the bond, as it plainly covered such conduct, was violated thereby. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571.)

"A distinction is drawn in this class of cases between a bond compulsorily executed, as in the case under consideration, and a bond or other obligation voluntarily given to the Government for which there is no statutory authority. In this latter case the bond has been held to be valid." (Constable v. National Steamship Co., 154 U. S., 51, 78.)

"The United States, for instance, as incident to the general right of sovereignty, have the capacity, within the sphere of their constitutional powers, and through the instrumentality of the proper department, to enter into contracts and take bonds, not prohibited by law, and appropriate to the just exercise of those powers, although not expressly directed or authorized to do so by any legislative act." (Van Brocklin v. State of Tennessee, 117 U. S., 154.)

Where a bond given by an officer is objectionable in point of form, the direction of the head of the office to execute a new bond must be considered as that of the head of the department, and the bond given in compliance therewith can not be considered as having been extorted from the officer and his sureties contrary to statute. (Soule v. U. S., 100 U. S., 8.)

"Every one is presumed to know the law. Ignorance standing alone can never be the basis of a legal right. If a bond is liable to the objection taken in this case and the parties are dissatisfied, the objection should be made when the bond is presented for execution. If executed under constraint, the constraint will destroy it. But where it is voluntarily entered into, and the principal enjoys the benefits which it is intended to secure, and a breach occurs, it is then too late to raise the question of its validity. The parties are estopped from availing themselves of such a defense. In such case there is neither injustice nor hardship in holding that the contract as made is the measure of the right of the Government and of the liability of the obligors." (U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall., 395, 409.)

Where a statute directs a bond to the Government to be given by persons exercising certain employments, and to be conditioned for the performance of several particular acts which it specifically states, and the agent of the Government takes a bond conditioned, not in the specific way that the statute directed but for the party's compliance with "all the provisions" of the act, "and such other acts as are now or may hereafter be in this behalf enacted," the bond, if it has been voluntarily given, and is not contrary to law or public policy, is valid as against a party who has enjoyed benefits under it. And this although the statute which required the bond to be conditioned in a particular way contain numerous other provisions which it makes the duty of persons exercising employments under it to comply with, but for which it does not contemplate the giving of any bond. (U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall., 395.)

II. NECESSITY OF FURNISHING BOND BEFORE ENTERING UPON DUTY.

Requirement held to be mandatory.—Where public officers are required to give bond previously to entering upon the execution of their respective offices, held that they can not execute their offices before giving bond, because the bond is a preliminary to the execution. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 687.)

Requirement held not mandatory.—Where a statute required that paymasters in the Army "shall, previously to entering on the duties of their offices, give good and sufficient bonds to the United States, fully to account for all moneys and public property which they may receive, in such sum as the Secretary of War shall direct," held that an officer's "appointment as paymaster was complete when his appointment was duly made by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The giving of the bond was a mere ministerial act for the security of the Government, and not a condition precedent to his authority to act as paymaster.

Having received the public moneys as paymaster, he must account for them as paymaster." (U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet., 343, 364.)

Where a statute required an officer, "before he enter upon the duties of his office," to give bond: Held That the emoluments of the office "were the considerations allowed him for the execution of the duties of his office; and his appointment and commission entitled him to receive this compensation, whether he gave any security or not"; held, further, that he was a de jure as well as a de facto officer prior to furnishing bond. (U. S. v. Linn, 15 Pet., 290, 313.)

"When a person has been nominated to an office by the President, confirmed by the Senate, and his commission has been signed by the President, and the seal of the United States affixed thereto, his appointment to that office is complete. Congress may provide, as it has done in this case, that certain acts shall be done by the appointee before he shall enter on the possession of the office under his appointment. These acts then become conditions precedent to the complete investiture of the office; but they are to be performed by the appointee, not by the executive; all that the executive can do to invest the person with his office has been completed when the commission has been signed and sealed; and when the person has performed the required conditions, his title to enter on the possession of the office is also complete." (U. S. v. Le Baron, 19 How., 73, 78.)

In view of former decisions (U. S. v. Bradley, U. S. v. Linn, and U. S. v. Le Baron, above noted), "it can not be held that the execution by Glavey of the bond required by the act of 1882 was a condition precedent to his right to exercise the functions of the office to which he was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Congress did not so direct. His appointment was complete, at least, when he took the required oath and transmitted evidence of the fact to the Secretary. After taking the oath, evidencing thereby his acceptance of the appointment, he was entitled to proceed in the execution of the duties of his office, and became liable for any failure to properly discharge them." (Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595, 604. In this case the statute did not require the bond to be executed before entering on the duties of the office.)

"When an office with a fixed salary has been created by statute, an appointment thereto is complete when duly made by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and the giving of a bond required by law is a mere ministerial act for the security of the Government, and not a condition precedent to his authority to act in performance of duties of the office." (Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595; see also U. S. v. Eaton, 169 U. S., 331.)

The provisions of section 1383, Revised Statutes, are directory only and do not preclude a paymaster who has given bond and whose bond has been approved from the receipt of the pay of that office for a period prior to the date of its approval (citing 4 Comp. Dec., 496). There is, however, a separate general statute (sec. 1560, R. S.) which does preclude assistant paymasters of the regular naval service from the receipt of pay prior to the date of the approval of their bond as assistant paymasters. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 7, 1917, file 26254-2224:2.)

Pay commences prior to furnishing bond.—Pay of disbursing officers may commence prior to furnishing bond—that is, upon acceptance of appointment or entering upon duty—the same as other officers, although statute requires that said officers shall give bond "before entering upon the duties of their respective offices." (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 38; see also U. S. v. Eaton, 169 U. S., 346; Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595; U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet., 343; U. S. v. Linn, 15 Pet., 290.)

The giving of a bond required by law by a person appointed to an office is a ministerial act, and not a condition precedent to the performance of duty or to the right to compensation. (9 Comp. Dec., 101.)

Statutes which require that an officer shall give a bond before entering upon the duties of his office are directory only, and a receiver of public moneys who after his appointment entered upon the duties of his office prior to giving a bond, is entitled to the compensation of the office from the date of his entry upon duty. (20 MSS. Comp. Dec., 473; see also 4 Comp. Dec., 496.)

[Prior to the above decisions, it was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that where there are certain acts to be done by the appointee, as for instance the giving of a bond, those acts are conditions precedent to the complete investiture of the office, and accordingly where a statute required an officer to give bond satisfactory to his chief, he was not entitled to be paid for his services prior to the date of approval of his bond by his chief. (2 Comp. Dec., 26; see also 2 Comp. Dec., 330; 2 Comp. Dec., 448; and 3 Comp. Dec., 447.)]

Compensation can not be paid prior to furnishing bond.—It has been repeatedly held that officers are not entitled to salary or compensation where they have failed to give the bond required by a statute providing that such bond shall be given before the officer "enters upon the duties of his office." In the case of U. S. v. Eaton (169 U. S., 331), it was held that the requirement as to giving bond by a consular officer before entering upon the duties of his office was directory, and in that case, where the officer did actually give bond, he was entitled to compensation for a period during which he performed the duties of the office before his official bond was received and approved. The Comptroller has regarded this decision of the Supreme Court as meaning that the statutory provision is directory as to the time of performance merely; it is nowhere suggested in the Eaton case that the requirement as to the giving of the bond was merely directory. All the provisions of a statute are meant to be obeyed, or they would not be enacted. Accordingly, held that an officer who was appointed and took the oath of office, but died before execution of bond required to be given before entering upon duty, was not entitled to an allowance of salary for the period between the date of oath and his death, notwithstanding that the failure to give bond was due to his absence from the United States when appointed, and his death prior to his qualifying under such appointment, and not to fault or neglect on his part. (15 Comp. Dec., 418; citing 8 Comp. Dec., 201; compare 21 Comp. Dec., 49.)

In the case of Glavey v. U. S. (182 U. S., 595), it was decided that an officer was entitled to the salary of his office although he had failed to execute an official bond; but in that case, although the statute required that he should "execute a proper bond," the bond itself was to be "in such form and upon such conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe," and there was no inhibition as to his entering upon duty before giving such bond. The bond was not given for the reason that the Secretary of the Treasury failed to prescribe the form of the bond or the conditions thereof and did not require any bond of the officer. It will be readily seen that the law and facts in the Glavey case differ materially from those in a case where the statute requires the bond to be given by the officer before entering upon the duties of his office and can not be construed to entitle the latter officer to salary where he failed absolutely to give a bond. (15 Comp. Dec., 418.)

Where an officer was temporarily appointed to a vacancy, but did not take the oath of office nor give bond, and was subsequently given a new appointment to the same position for which he duly qualified: Held, That he was not entitled to the salary of the office under the first appointment until he had qualified by taking the proper oath and giving bond as required by law; and that the fact that he had qualified under the second appointment would not prohibit him from subsequently qualifying under the previous appointment, it being understood that he had accepted such previous appointment and immediately entered upon the duties of the office thereunder. (17 Comp. Dec., 95; see also Comp. Dec., Jan. 30, 1917, file 26254-2189, regarding pay of Navy mail clerks.)

An officer is not invested with the office until he gives the bond required by law; nor can he recover the salary of the office where he has neglected to give bond. (Dainese v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 64.)

An appointee is not invested with an office nor entitled to the salary thereof until he complies with the conditions imposed by law, such as taking the oath of office and giving bond, if one be required. (Williams v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 46.)

Compensation of naval officer commences upon date of approval of bond.—The pay of a naval officer required to give bond commences upon original entry into the service upon date of approval of his bond. (Sec. 1560, R. S.)

The Navy Regulations provide that, when an officer is required to give bond, "his pay shall begin upon the date of approval of his bond by the Secretary of the Navy, provided he has already accepted his appointment and taken the oath of office" (Art. R-4416, Navy Regs., 1913); but "an officer of the Pay Corps, when promoted, is entitled to increased pay from the date of his promotion, his bond in the lower grade being binding until his new bond in the higher grade is approved" (Art. R-4418, Navy Regs., 1913, as amended by C. N. R. 7, Sept. 15, 1916).

There is no statute requiring the pay of an assistant paymaster on his advancement to the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) to commence from the date of the approval of his bond. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 7, 1917, file 26254-2224:2.)

While section 1383, Revised Statutes, is directory only, and does not preclude a paymaster who has given bond and whose bond has been approved, from the receipt of the pay of that office for a period prior to the date of its approval, section 1560, Revised Statutes, does preclude assistant paymasters of the regular naval service, in common with all other regular naval officers, from the receipt of pay prior to the date of the approval of their bond. The same law is made applicable to assistant paymasters on their original entry into the Naval Reserve Force, and the pay of the latter is likewise prohibited from beginning prior to the date of the approval of their bond. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 7, 1917, file 26254-2224:2; see also Comp. Dec., Apr. 14, 1917, file 26254-2222:1.)

Section 1560, Revised Statutes, as applied to the Naval Reserve Force, relates to the original entry of a Naval Reserve officer into the Naval Reserve Force; the fact that the officer originally entering that force had previously served in the Navy would not differentiate him from one who had entered it without previous naval service. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 30, 1917, file 26254-2224:5.)

Should a former officer be reappointed to the regular naval service as a passed assistant paymaster or paymaster, directly from civil life, he would come within the purview of section 1560, and his pay would be, by that section, precluded from commencing from a date prior to that of the approval of his bond. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 30, 1917, file 26254-2224:5.)

The payment of compensation to an officer of the Navy upon his original entry into the service, for a period from the date he accepted his appointment until the date his bond was approved by the proper authority, is in violation of section 1560, Revised Statutes. The evident object of that section is to protect the Government by insuring the giving of the required security in handling the public funds. Before approval of his bond the officer is in a status similar to that of a de facto officer, as he is not fully qualified as an officer de jure. Where, therefore, he has been paid his salary under the circumstances stated, he is entitled to retain same, it appearing that he subsequently gave bond a few days before his discharge from the service took effect. (18 Comp. Dec., 596.)

Where a candidate for appointment as assistant paymaster in the Navy after his commission has been issued but prior to its receipt by him and prior to receipt of notice by him that he had been commissioned and prior to accepting the office or taking the oath of office or entering upon duty, executed an official bond in anticipation of his appointment: Held, That under section 1560, Revised Statutes, and the Navy regulations pursuant thereto, he was not entitled to pay prior to the date of his acceptance of the appointment and taking the oath of office. (19 Comp. Dec., 358.)

The appointment as a temporary assistant paymaster of an acting pay clerk, temporary, who, as such acting pay clerk had given a bond for $5,000, was not an original entry into the service within the meaning of section 1560, Revised Statutes, but was substantially a promotion, and he is entitled to pay as assistant paymaster prior to approval of his bond as such. (25 Comp. Dec., 550; compare 24 Comp. Dec., 650.)

Date of bond.—"Every bond shall bear date even with or subsequent to the date of the commission or appointment." (Art. I-3903, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

"Every bond shall bear date even with or prior to that of the affidavits of the sureties and to that of the certificates as to their sufficiency." (Art. I-3904, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

III. DATE FROM WHICH BOND TAKES EFFECT

From date of delivery.—"A bond may not be a complete contract until it has been accepted by the obligee; but if it be delivered to him to be accepted if he should choose to do so, that is not a conditional delivery, which will postpone the obligor's undertaking to the time of its acceptance, but an admission that the bond is then binding upon him and will be so from that time, if it shall be accepted. When accepted, it is not only binding from that time forward, but it becomes so upon both from the time of delivery. This is the offer which the obligor makes when he hands the bond to the obligee, and in that sense the obligee received it." (Broome v. U. S., 15 How., 143, 153. In this case the statute did not require the officer to give bond before entering upon duty, but within three months thereafter.)

It is not necessary that the bond be handed to the officer charged with its approval. It may be handed to an agent appointed by that officer to receive it, or it may be put into the possession of any person to deliver it, or it may be transmitted by mail. If done in any one of these ways, it is a delivery from the moment that the collector and his sureties part with it. It is from that moment in the course of transmission, with the intention that the law may act upon it through the agency of the approving officer, and his subsequent approval is an acceptance with relation to the time beginning the transmission. A written acceptance dated after a delivery is not to be taken as the time from which the completeness of the contract is to be computed; but such an acceptance has a relation to the time of delivery, making that time the beginning of its obligation upon the parties to the bond. (Broome v. U. S., 15 How., 143.)

"The possession of the bond by the Treasury Department was prima facie evidence of delivery." (Duncan v. U. S., 7 Pet., 435, 447.)

The general rule of law is that, like a deed, an official bond becomes operative from the date of its delivery. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the delivery will be presumed to have been made on the day of its date. But where it is provided by statute that the official bond to be given by an officer shall be approved by another officer, other considerations arise. In Broome v. United States [above noted] it was held that an official bond, when accepted, is binding from the time of its delivery; but in that case the statute provided that the officer should give bond "within three months after he enters upon the execution of the duties of his office"; and in United States v. Le Baron [noted below] the court distinguished this case from one where no time is allowed after entering upon the duties of the office for giving the bond required by law, and held that in the latter case the bond speaks only from the time of its acceptance and "can not be intended to relate back to any earlier date." But in Glavey v. United States (182 U. S., 595) the court, after reviewing prior decisions, including United States v. Le Baron, held that the giving of an official bond required by law to be given by an officer is a mere ministerial act for the security of the Government, and not a condition precedent to his authority to act in the performance of the duties of his office. "I think, therefore, the principle enunciated in Broome v. United States, supra, that when a bond is accepted it becomes binding from the time of delivery must be regarded as controlling. This principle is sometimes expressed in different language, it being held that a subsequent approval of an official bond must be deemed to relate back to the time the bond was delivered for approval." (14 Comp. Dec., 428; compare 17 Comp. Dec., 86, noted below, under "Intention of parties controlling.")

From date of approval.—"The bond of an officer of the Pay Corps takes effect from the date of its approval by the Secretary of the Navy." (Art. R-3002 (3), Navy Regs. 1913.)

In Broome v. United States [noted above] it was held that a bond may be deemed to be delivered when it is put in course of transmission to the officer whose duty it is to examine and approve or reject such bonds. But this decision proceeded upon the ground that the act of Congress there under consideration allowed the officer to exercise his office for three months without a bond; and that consequently the approval and delivery were not necessarily simultaneous acts, nor need the approval precede the delivery; and the distinction was adverted to between the case then presented and one in which the statute required the officers to give bond with approved security on their appointment, and allowed them no time, after entering on their offices, to comply with this requirement. In the latter case the bond must be accepted by the head of the department as sufficient in point of amount and security before it can have any effect as a contract; otherwise the officer might enter on the office merely on giving a bond which, on its presentation, the head of the department might reject as insufficient. In other words, the person appointed might act without any operative bond, which was not intended by Congress. The purpose of the surety was to become security for one legally authorized to exercise the office, not for one who enters on it unlawfully because he failed to comply with the requirement to furnish an approved bond; and this purpose can be accomplished only by holding that the appointee can not act, and the bond can not take effect, until it is approved. Our opinion is, therefore, that this bond speaks only from the time when it reached the head of the department and was accepted by him; that until that time it was only an offer or proposal of an obligation which became complete and effectual by acceptance; and that, unlike the case of an officer's bond which is not a condition precedent to his taking office and which may be intended to have a retrospective operation, the bond in this case can not be intended to relate back to any earlier date than the time of its acceptance, because it is only after its acceptance that there can be any such holding of the office as the bond was meant to apply to. (U. S. v. Le Baron, 19 How., 73; compare Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595, and 14 Comp. Dec., 428, noted above, under "From date of delivery.")

The officer was required by law to give bond before entering upon the duties of his office. According to the principles laid down in the case of United States v. Le Baron, a bond given under that provision must be considered to speak and to take effect, not from the day of its date, but from the date upon which it was approved. (14 Op. Att'y. Gen., 7.)

"It is settled that a bond of that character takes effect on the date of acceptance, and it is from that time it speaks." (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571, citing U. S. v. Le Baron, 19 How., 73 and 4 Wall., 642, 647.)

For cases as to what constitutes approval, see below, "VI. Approval of Bond."

Intention of parties controlling.—Where the bond is tendered under such circumstances as to show that it is intended, if accepted, to be effective from its date, it relates back, when accepted, to its date. Where, however, it is executed under such circumstances as to show that it is tendered as an offer of an obligation to take effect when approved, it neither relates back nor is completely executed until approved. In such case the date of approval will be taken as the date of final delivery, and all accounts under such bond should be started by taking that as the date of delivery. (17 Comp. Dec., 86.)

It is not ordinarily a prerequisite to the legal holding of an office that a bond be approved when a person enters upon the duties of his office. A bond afterwards given may relate back to his entry upon office, or may be effective from the time it was delivered, or when it was approved, or when he entered upon office, depending upon the circumstances of its execution. (17 Comp. Dec., 86.)

The liability upon a renewal bond in some instances commences when it is delivered, in other instances when it is approved. No inflexible rule can be laid down covering all cases as to when the liability of one bond ceases and when the other commences. These are questions of law, in no way depending upon the convenience of the auditors in stating accounts under them. (17 Comp. Dec., 86.)

The presumption that delivery was made on the date of the bond would not obtain where it was clear that the delivery of the bond was a mere offer, or was intended as an escrow. In such case it could only become operative from its date by relating back to the time of its execution. (17 Comp. Dec., 86.)

May be made retroactive.—A bond voluntarily given by an officer of the United States for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, under a statute requiring such officers to give bond "for the faithful discharge of the duties of their respective offices," may be worded so as to operate retroactively. Such a bond does not contain provisions or conditions differing from or in any wise inconsistent with those prescribed or required by law. (29 Op. Att'y. Gen., 28.)

The manifest purpose and intent of the law is that the United States shall be fully secured for the faithful discharge by public officers of their duties, and therefore it is in entire conformity with the purpose of the act to require that a bond given by such an officer shall cover his entire term. It frequently occurs, however, that the public interests require that an officer enter upon the discharge of his duties before he is able to give the requisite bonds, or, as the statute contemplates, a new bond may be necessary in order to increase or strengthen existing bonds. To hold, therefore, that in such a case the bond could not be made to cover his prior service, even if voluntarily given, would be to say that the statute requires the Government to go unprotected to that extent. Such a view is contrary to sound principles of public policy, and is not required by any consideration of justice or protection to the official who gives the bond. (29 Op. Att'y. Gen., 28.)

Where an officer was temporarily appointed to a vacancy, but did not take the oath of office nor give bond, and was subsequently given a new appointment to the same position, for which he duly qualified: Held, That the fact that he had qualified under the second appointment would not prohibit him from subsequently qualifying under the previous appointment by taking the proper oath and giving bond as required by law, it being understood that he had accepted such previous appointment and immediately entered upon the duties of the office thereunder. (17 Comp. Dec., 95.)

IV. FORM OF BOND.

In general.—In the case of some officers the form of bond is prescribed by statute (e. g., see sec. 2619, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 27, 1877, chap. 69, sec. 1, 19 Stat., 245). In the case of other officers, the form of the bond, by express terms of the statute requiring it, is to be prescribed by or to be subject to the approval of the President, head of department, or other officer named therein (e. g., see sec. 1697, R. S.). In most cases, however, where official bonds are required, the form thereof is tacitly or impliedly left by Congress to be regulated or fixed by the officers by whom the bonds are to be approved. Section 1383, Revised Statutes, belongs to this class of cases (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 274).

Must be under seal.—"The term bond, ex vi termini, imports a sealed instrument, and, as a general rule, independent of any statute providing otherwise, sealing is necessary to constitute a perfect bond. * * * The seal is not a mere formality of execution, but a matter of substance which gives to the paper certain legal effects which cannot be attached to an unsealed paper. * * * (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 507.)

Where an act of Congress directs the security to be taken by bond, an instrument not under seal was not a bond and was not in form the instrument required by the act of Congress. (U. S. v. Linn, 15 Pet., 290; see also Moses v. U. S., 166 U.S., 571; U. S. v. Linn, 1 How., 104.)

Where the bond sued on had no seal opposite the name of one of the obligors, and there was no evidence that he had adopted the seal of any of the other parties to the instrument, it was held that the instrument was not his bond, because in fact there was no evidence of any seal belonging to him ever having been affixed, and no such seal was on the instrument when it was produced on the trial. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U.S., 571, 582.)

Bonds must be sealed, and for abundant caution they should be sealed with wax or wafer and paper cap, which are everywhere acknowledged to be seals; although scrolls or any other sealing would be valid which is a good sealing in the place where they are executed. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 93.)

"Seals of wafer or wax shall be attached to the bond at the place indicated, opposite the places for the signatures of the principal and sureties." (Art. I-3905, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

"In all cases where a seal is necessary by law to any commission, process, or other instrument provided for by the laws of Congress, it shall be lawful to affix the proper seal by making an impression therewith directly on the paper to which such seal is necessary; which shall be as valid as if made on wax or other adhesive substance." (Sec. 6, R. S.)

In an action on an official bond, although the copy of the bond sued on, which was certified from the Treasury Department of the United States, exhibited a scroll instead of a seal, it may be presumed that the original bond had been executed according to law. (Duncan v. U. S., 7 Pet., 435.)

A corporation may adopt for the purpose and use a seal other than its corporate seal on a bond so as to make the bond a corporate deed of the corporation. An agent of a corporation, appointed by an instrument under the corporate seal of the corporation, may on its behalf adopt a special seal so as to make it, in executing the purpose for which he was appointed, the corporate seal of the corporation. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 507.)

For other cases, see below "Alteration of bond."

May be valid instrument although not under seal.—Although an unsealed instrument purporting to be an official bond is not a "bond" and does not meet the statutory requirement, nevertheless held that such instrument was good at common law. The actual difference between an instrument under seal and one not under seal is that in the one case the seal imports a consideration and in the other it must be proved. There ought to be some very strong grounds to authorize a court to declare a contract absolutely void which has been voluntarily made upon a good consideration and delivered to the party for whose benefit it was intended. The mere want of seals is not such a departure from the statute as to warrant the court, upon any supposed principles of public policy, to pronounce the instrument utterly void; it being good at common law, and given in furtherance of the great object of the statute, and as security for the faithful discharge of the duties required of the office. (U. S. v. Linn, 15 Pet., 290.)

"The United States v. Linn was an action against a receiver of public moneys and his sureties. The statute in that case required that the receiver should 'give bond,' with approved security, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, for the faithful discharge of his trust.' The instrument given was without seal, and was, therefore, not the security required by the statute. The counsel for the defendants insisted that the instrument was void for the reasons, among others, that it was not the form of security required by the statute; that the prescribing of one security was an implied prohibition of all others; and that if the instrument in question could be sustained, the statute might in all cases be disregarded and a mortgage of realty or personality or any other imaginable security might be substituted for that which the statute required. The court responded: 'If this is a contract, entered into by competent parties and for a lawful purpose, not prohibited by law, and is founded upon a sufficient consideration, it is a valid contract at common law. A mortgage, or any other approved security voluntarily given, would no doubt be valid.'" (U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall., 395, 408.)

Names of parties.—The law recognizes but one Christian name; hence the bond with sureties, and the oath of office of a receiver of public moneys, subscribed "Benjamin F. Edwards," where the commission had issued to "Benjamin Edwards," are valid. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 332.)

"A mistake in the baptismal name of an obligor to a bond, executed by his attorney duly authorized to execute a bond in his right name, does not vitiate the bond, the error being shown to be purely accidental." (Dolton v. Cain, 14 Wall., 472.) See 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 128, holding that a bond, to be accepted by the Government, ought to be executed by the parties, and not by their attorney.

Where the statute requires the giving of security to secure payment "to the Treasurer of the United States," this does not mean that the bond should be made payable to the Treasurer of the United States; it may be made payable directly to the United States and conditioned that payment shall be made to the Treasurer and not depart from any express provision of the law. But if the statute should be construed to mean that the bond shall be payable to the Treasurer, still we are of opinion that a bond in which the United States is the obligee, and which is conditioned that payment shall be made to the Treasurer, is a valid and binding obligation. The authorities show that the United States can, without the authority of any statute, make a valid contract, and that when the form of a contract is prescribed by the statute a departure from its directions will not render the contract invalid. The bond is good at common law. (Jessup v. U. S., 106 U. S., 147.)

Where the United States of America are the obligees, a misdescription of the incorporate or political name in the bond by calling them "United States of North America" furnishes no valid ground of exception, there being an averment of identity in the declaration. (U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet., 343.)

Witnesses.—The attestation of witnesses to a bond is merely for convenience of proof. The law does not require such witnesses, but it is expedient and safe always to require them. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 285.)

No attestation is necessary to their validity, although witnesses may be useful and convenient to make proof of handwriting in case of necessity. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 93.)

Acknowledgment.—"An acknowledgment is the act of one who executes a deed on going before some competent officer or court and declaring it to be his act and deed. The functions of an acknowledgment are twofold, to authorize the deed to be given in evidence without further proof of its execution, and to entitle it to be recorded. * * * Bonds differ from deeds in that the former are not required to be recorded. For that reason, no acknowledgment as to them is, in my opinion, necessary." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 507.)

Certificate of sufficiency.—There is no law requiring a United States judge or a United States attorney to certify as to the sufficiency of guarantors or bondsmen, and no fees are chargeable against the Government for such service. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 181. See below "Expense of furnishing bond," under "X. Miscellaneous.")

Where the law then in force required the bond of a purser in the Navy to be approved by the judge or attorney for the United States of the district in which the purser resided, it was held that to save the necessity of proof on this subject, the residence should be expressed in the body of the instrument; held, further, that the certificate of the district attorney approving the sureties is, to all substantial purposes, an approval of the bond. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 93.)

Where the law required that the sureties on a naval officer's bond shall be approved by the judge or attorney for the United States of the district in which such naval officer shall reside, it was held that the certificate of a district attorney was sufficient although he did not use the word "approved," which was used in the statute; but his certificate that the sureties were "good and sufficient" was, to all substantial purposes, an approval. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., -93.)

By Naval Instructions, 1913 (art. I-3910), it is provided that "the sufficiency of the sureties shall be certified to by a judge or a clerk of a United States court for the district in which the sureties reside, or by a United States attorney for such district."

[The act of March 1, 1817, chapter 24, section 1, 3 Stat., 350, which is one of the statutes cited by the revisers in their note to section 1383, provided that the sureties on bonds of naval officers "shall be approved by the judge or attorney for the United States, for the district" in which such naval officers shall reside. However, this provision of the original law was not embodied in the Revised Statutes, and was therefore repealed by section 5596, Revised Statutes. In this connection see below, "Renewal of bonds," under "V. Sufficiency of Sureties."]

Temporary appointment.—Where a temporary appointment of an officer has been made by the President, the recital in the official bond should be in conformity with the nature of the appointment. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 53.)

Parties jointly and severally bound for full amount.—The form of bond required to be given by a public officer—whether the parties thereto are to be jointly and severally or may be only jointly bound, and whether each surety is to bind himself for the full amount of the penalty or may restrict his liability to a less amount—where not made the subject of statutory regulation is left to the determination of the officers by whom the bond is to be approved. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 274.)

The form ordinarily made use of in practice is that wherein the principal and sureties are jointly and severally bound for the full amount of the penalty. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 274.)

This form being preferable to any other, and its use sanctioned by long practice, the adoption of a different form, though it may not be inconsistent with the terms of the statute so to do, would not be warranted unless the circumstances of the particular case were such that the public interests could not otherwise be served. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 274.)

Departure from statutory form.—"The authorities show that the United States can, without the authority of any statute, make a valid contract, and that when the form of a contract is prescribed by the statute, a departure from its directions will not render the contract invalid. The bond is good at common law." (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 458, 460, quoting Jessup v. U. S. 106 U. S., 152; see also to same effect 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 70, 72, citing Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571, and U. S. v. Dieckerhoff, 202 U. S., 302.)

Nothing but very strong and express language should induce a court of justice to adopt the interpretation that a bond taken in a form not prescribed by the statute, because of mutual mistake or accident and wholly without design, should be utterly void; it would be a very mischievous interpretation of the act to suppose that it intended such consequence. (U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet., 343; U. S. v. Linn, 15 Pet., 290.)

The case of United States v. Bradley (10 Pet., 343, 365), holding that bonds not taken in the prescribed form are not utterly void, "has been frequently sustained by the Supreme Court, and was cited as the law in the case of Jessup v. The United States (106 U. S., 151), where a number of the decisions of the Supreme Court upon this question are reviewed. The decisions of the Supreme Court sustaining the validity of bonds executed under directory statutes, where mistakes and omissions have occurred therein, are as follows: Jessup v. United States (106 U. S., 147), United States v. Mora (97 U. S., 421), United States v. Bradley (10 Pet., 362), Farrar v. The United States (5 Pet., 373)." (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 458.)

Where a statute expressly requires a public officer to give bond for the faithful disbursement of public money, and in the bond given the words which relate to disbursement are omitted, and the only words inserted are "that he shall faithfully discharge the duties of his office," held that, "the court feel no difficulty in maintaining, that where the conditions are cumulative, the omission of one condition can not invalidate the bond, so far as the other operates to bind the party." (Farrar v. U. S., 5 Pet., 373.)

"It is a settled principle of law that where a bond contains conditions, some of which are legal and others illegal, and they are severable and separable, the latter may be disregarded and the former enforced." (U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall., 395, 408.)

In a case where the statute specified the precise form of the bond to be given by certain public officers (sec. 2619, R. S.), and certain words prescribed by the statutory form were omitted in the bond furnished, held that "the statute authorizing the execution of the bond is a directory one," and that "the omission of the words as stated does not impair the validity" of the bond, but that the bond is a valid one, "either under the statute or at common law." (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 458.)

When the legal effect of an official bond is questionable, it should be rejected. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 263.)

For other cases, see below, "VII. Condition of Bond."

Alteration of bond.—If any material change is made in a bond subsequent to its execution, the instrument is thereby rendered void, unless it can clearly be shown that after the change the parties assented to it and still acknowledge the signing and sealing to be their act. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 285.)

"A party who claims under an instrument which appears on its face to have been altered, is bound to explain the alteration; but not so, when the alteration is averred by the opposite party, and does not appear upon the face of the instrument." (U. S. v. Linn, 1 How., 104.)

An obligation to the United States, duly signed by the sureties, was presented to the proper Government official and rejected by him as lacking seals; it was taken away by the principal and returned with proper seals. Held, That it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the sureties consented to the seals being attached. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571.)

An erasure and interlineation in a bond, increasing the amount of the penalty, does not invalidate that instrument or impair its legal effect if in fact it was made prior to its execution. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 285.)

Whether an instrument that was produced on the trial and had no seals attached to it, had had them attached when the instrument was originally executed, many years prior thereto, has been held to be a question of fact which should be submitted to the jury. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571.)

After a bond had been signed by the obligors, the omission of seals to the signers of the instrument was noted; thereupon one of the obligors took a pen and added scrolls by way of seals to each name subscribed as makers of the instrument. Held, That "the adding of the scroll by Linn to his own name did not vitiate the instrument as to him; he had a right to add the seal, or at least he can have no right to set up his own act in this respect to avoid his own deed. It was therefore his deed, and the plea of non est factum as to him is false." (U. S. v. Linn, 1 How., 104, 107.)

Where a commissary general of the Army had omitted, through mistake, to sign his official bond, but had delivered it to the proper department signed only by the sureties, such bond is probably incurably defective as a statutory bond, though perhaps it may avail as a bond at common law. Advised that it be returned to be signed by the officers, and attested specially in the form prescribed by the Attorney General. This might have the desired effect. At all events, it would not impair the obligation of the bond as to those who signed it at the proper time, whatever that obligation might be; and it would be obligatory on the principal, at least from the time of its execution by him, which is all that could be effected by an original bond now executed by him. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 718; but see above, "III. Date from Which Bond Takes Effect.")

V. SUFFICIENCY OF SURETIES.

Certificate of sufficiency.—See above, under "IV. Form of Bond," and see below, "Renewal of bonds."

Married woman as surety.—"In case a married woman be offered as surety, an additional certificate shall be required to the effect that such surety holds her property in her own right, and is competent to bind herself as surety in such cases, under the laws of the State in which she resides." (Art. I-3910, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

In determining whether or not a married woman is competent to contract as surety on a bond, it is first necessary to determine whether the contract is to be considered as a contract made in the State where she signed or in the District of Columbia, as the laws of the State and of the District of Columbia may be different in regard to the capacity of married women to make contracts. Upon this point, held that the place of contract must be considered at Washington, D. C. Although the bond was actually signed in Missouri, it was there executed imperfectly and only with the intention that it should be delivered in Washington and there acquire its validity. This view of contracts made elsewhere and yet intended to have force and effect at Washington is maintained in the cases of Cox v. United States (6 Pet., 172) and Duncan v. The United States (7 Pet., 435). The validity of her contract is therefore to be decided by the law prevailing in the District of Columbia. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 472, holding that, under the laws of the District of Columbia a married woman can not bind her separate property as surety on a bond. See sec. 1155, D. C. Code.)

A bond would not be rendered invalid by reason of the fact that one of the sureties was the wife of the principal, even if she were not competent to contract. It would still be a sufficient contract as against the other surety or sureties who might be upon it. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 472.)

"The wife of a principal shall not be accepted as a surety." (Art. I-3907, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

For other cases, see below, "VIII. Conflict of Laws."

Surety induced to execute by misrepresentation.—A bond perfect upon its face, apparently duly executed by all whose names appear thereto, purporting to be signed and delivered and actually delivered without a stipulation, can not be avoided by the sureties upon the ground that they signed it on a condition that it should not be delivered unless it was executed by other persons who did not execute it, where it appears that the obligee had no notice of such condition and there was nothing to put him upon inquiry as to the manner of its execution, and that he had been induced upon the faith of such bond to act to his own prejudice. (Dair v. U. S., 16 Wall., 1.)

In any case, if the bond is so written that it appears that several were expected to sign it, the obligee takes it with notice that the obligors who do sign it can set up in defense the want of execution by the others, if they agreed to become bound only on condition that the other cosureties join in the execution. (Dair v. U. S., 16 Wall., 1, 6; see also, Fawling v. U. S., 4 Cranch, 219, and Duncan v. U. S., 7 Pet., 435, 448.)

"A person who signs, as surety, a printed form of Government bond, already signed by another as principal, but the spaces in which for names, dates, amounts, etc., remain blank, and who then gives it to the person who has signed as principal, in order that he may fill the blanks with a sum agreed on between the two parties as the sum to be put there, and with the names of two sureties who shall each be worth another sum agreed on, and then have those two persons sign it, makes such person signing as principal his agent to fill up the blanks and procure the sureties, and if such person fraudulently fill up the blanks with a larger sum than that agreed on between the two persons and have the names of worthless sureties inserted, and such sureties to sign the bond, and the bond thus filled up and signed be delivered by the principal to the Government, who accepts it in the belief that it has been properly executed, the party so wronged can not on suit on the bond again set up the private understandings which he had with the principal." (Butler v. U. S., 21 Wall., 272; see also Veach v. Rice, 131 U. S., 293, 318.)

Surety company as surety.—The Secretary of the Navy has power, under section 1383, Revised Statutes, to approve a pay officer's bond in which the sureties are corporations, or a corporation joined with a natural person, if he deem such sureties sufficient. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 175; see also 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 57; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

The act of August 13, 1894 (28 Stat., 279), authorizing guaranty companies to become sureties on official bonds, is permissive only, and where an officer elects to furnish such surety it is for his personal convenience and not for the purpose of furnishing better security to the United States. (13 Comp. Dec., 375.)

The act of August 13, 1894 (28 Stat. 279), authorizing the acceptance of bonds and undertakings of surety and fidelity companies does not permit the imposition of conditions and regulations by Government officials relative to the percentage of capital stock to liability on a single official bond, or the minimum rates to be charged for such insurance, etc. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 421.)

If the laws of a State under which a surety company is incorporated limit the amount of liability to a certain percentage of the capital, which can be incurred on account of any one partnership or association, and if a greater amount of liability is incurred it is to be secured by a collateral agreement of indemnity, such provision is thereby made a part of its charter, and to that extent it is restricted in its dealings with the United States. (22 Op. Atty., Gen., 421.)

The validity of the bond or the obligation of either of the sureties is not impaired by the fact that one of them (a surety company) has not the written authority of the Attorney General to do business as required by the act of Congress of August 13, 1894. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 276.)

Bonds of surety companies, executed in States in which they are not licensed, for principals residing in those States, or for contracts to be performed therein, are valid and enforceable against such companies, no matter how flagrant their violation of the law of the State may have been as regards failure to qualify to do business in the State. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 127.)

The execution of a bond by a surety company at its home office, or outside of the boundaries of the State wherein it is not licensed, for a principal residing in such State or for a contract to be performed there, would not be the doing of business by the surety within the State. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 127.)

The Treasury Department should not accept the bond of a surety company in a State where the company is forbidden by the laws of the State to do business, notwithstanding the company may have complied with the provisions of section 2 of the act of August 13, 1894. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

The act of August 13, 1894, requires the appointment of a process agent in the district where the principal resides, and also in the district where the contract is to be performed. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

Surety companies may, under the provisions of the act of August 13, 1894, appoint process agents in Porto Rico but not in the Philippine Islands. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 208.)

A surety company may be accepted as surety on the official bond of an officer of the Government who is to discharge his duties in the Panama Canal Zone, provided the surety company has appointed process agents in the judicial district in which the principal in the bond resided at the time it was made or guaranteed and in the judicial district in which the office is located to which it is returnable, and provided the company has also complied with all other legal requirements. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 208.)

The Canal Zone is not within the contemplation of the act of August 13, 1894, which provides that surety companies doing business outside of the States or Territories under which they are incorporated shall appoint agents residing within the jurisdiction of the court where such suretyship is to be undertaken upon whom process may be served. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 136.)

A surety company of Kansas City, Mo., having the power to guarantee the fidelity of persons holding positions of public or private trust and the power to execute and guarantee bonds and undertakings in judicial proceedings, possesses appropriate corporate powers to entitle it to certificate as a sole surety under the provisions of the acts of Congress of August 13, 1894 (28 Stat., 279), and March 23, 1910 (36 Stat., 241). (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 411.)

Voluntary bonds given by an employee or officer of the United States to a superior officer, do not come within the purview of the act of August 13, 1894, which prescribes the character and qualifications of guaranty companies which may be accepted on official bonds required by law. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 28.)

Renewal of bonds.—Every officer of the Supply Corps "shall give a new bond, with sufficient surety, every four years, or whenever required to do so by the Secretary of the Navy; and all such bonds shall be examined every two years for the purpose of ascertaining the sufficiency of the surety thereon." (Art. R-3002, Navy Regs., 1913; see sec. 1384, R. S., and act of Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 5, 28 Stat., 807.)

Prior to the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 807), new or additional bonds, under certain contingencies, such as the death or insolvency of the surety, etc., might be and were required of public officers, and the purpose of that act was to make general what was theretofore sporadic and subject to the discretionary power of some Government department or official. It is believed that the failure to give such renewal at any time would operate to disqualify the defaulting official from exercising the office to which he had been appointed just as the failure to give the bond required by law on the original appointment would operate. (13 Comp. Dec. 375; see below, "Failure to give new bond," under "X. Miscellaneous.")

"As there is no express statutory requirement that the Paymaster General of the Navy give a bond and as the public interests do not require that he furnish one, it is not considered necessary to call upon the present Paymaster General to renew his last bond given as a pay director at the expiration of the four-year period, June 22, 1909. Nothing in this opinion should be considered as applying to the renewal of bonds of pay directors or pay inspectors, officers of which rank while not required by statute to furnish bond are properly required by the Department so to do, for the reason that public funds may from time to time be placed in their hands." (File 26284-94, May 8, 1909, Memo. of Solicitor, Navy Dept.)

Where a bond given by an officer is objectionable in point of form, the direction of his official superior to execute a new one must be considered as that of the head of the department, and the bond given in compliance therewith can not be considered as having been extorted from the officer and his sureties contrary to statute. (Soule v. U. S., 100 U. S., 8.)

For other cases, see below, "IX. Liability of Sureties."

Biennial examination of official bonds.—The law as it now stands provides for the biennial examination of the bonds of all pay officers of the Navy, without providing adequate machinery for or defraying the cost of such examination. Prior to the act of March 2, 1895, it was the practice of the Navy Department to require pay officers to renew their bonds at the end of each five years. By the terms of the present law it is made compulsory to renew them every four years at least, and to examine them every two years. The Secretary of the Navy requested the Attorney General's opinion upon "the question of having the necessary examination into the character and value of the property of the sureties on the official bonds approved by this Department made by the United States attorneys for the respective districts in which the various bondsmen reside. The opinion of the Attorney General, rendered March 30, 1895, stated: "I am not advised of any statute which either requires or authorizes a United States attorney to make an examination of the character suggested, and am of the opinion that he can not be called upon to render any such service to any officer of the Navy Department charged with the duty of approving official bonds." (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 154.) The aforesaid opinion having rendered it impossible to refer official bonds to the Department of Justice for the certification as to the solvency of the sureties thereon, the Navy Department has been constrained to adopt the only remaining available method of making the required biennial examinations of bonds, i. e., to forward to each pay officer concerned a "certificate of sufficiency of sureties" for execution, said certificate containing forms for the justification of the several sureties on such officer's bond, and also a form for the certification, by a United States attorney or a judge or clerk of a United States court, to the effect that he has personally inquired into the solvency of the sureties and is satisfied that they are sufficient for an amount double that of the bond. In case the surety is a corporation qualified to become sole surety on a bond, under the act approved August 13, 1894, the certificate differs slightly in detail from the one just described. (Ann. Rept. Judge Adv. Gen. to the Sec. of the Navy, 1895; see also 2 Comp. Dec., 444, and 3 Comp. Dec., 135, noted below, under "X. Miscellaneous * * * Expense of furnishing bond.")

VI. APPROVAL OF BOND.

What constitutes approval.—There is no rule which can be applied to determine what constitutes the approval of official bonds. Every case must depend upon the laws directing such an approval. The purpose for which such a bond is required must be looked to. The character of the office and its duties must be examined. The time within which such a bond must be given and approved, and whether it is retrospective or for the future only, must be considered before it can be determined how and when the approval must be made. (Broome v. U. S., 15 How., 143.)

The statute does not require the approval to be in writing. It may be so, or may be done verbally; or it may not be done in either way. Receiving the bond, and retaining it for a considerable time without objection, will be sufficient evidence of acceptance to complete the delivery, especially when the exception is taken by the party who had done all he could to complete it. Presumptive evidence is admissible to prove the approval and acceptance of a bond, such as its being in the possession of the obligee, having been retained without objection, and the obligor continuing to act under it without having called for a more formal acceptance. (Broome v. U. S., 15 How., 143.)

The law prescribes no form of acceptance; nor does it even require that the acceptance should be evidenced by writing. The date of acceptance should be indorsed on the bond for the security of the sureties bound in the old bond; yet the parties to the new bond are bound by the acceptance in fact of their bond, and this acceptance may be shown as any other fact is required to be. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 187.)

The receipt of the instrument, its indorsement, its being filed among the archives of the department, or its record, and so forth, may be invoked as evidence of its acceptance by the officer authorized to require it. The more obvious and ordinary mode of evidencing this fact, it is true, is by the signature of the officer authorized to act; but it is by no means indispensable. The abbreviation employed by the head of a department is in legal contemplation his signature, if used for that purpose; and if in any case it should become material to establish it by evidence, the same testimony would avail as would suffice to verify his name written out at length. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 187, citing U. S. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat., 64.)

"The possession of the original bond by the proper officers of the United States, was prima facie evidence that it had been delivered and accepted." (U. S. v. Wilkinson, 12 How., 246, 253.)

Power of approving officer.—The officer charged with the approval of the bond may accept the sureties or reject them. He may call at any future time for other sureties, if circumstances shall occur, or information shall be received, which make it necessary that the United States shall have a more responsible security. Or he may call for a new bond. He may decide upon the sufficiency of the sureties before they have made themselves such, or after they have signed the bond. (Broome v. U. S., 15 How., 143, 154.)

Delegation by Secretary of power of approval.—"The duty of approval of all bonds that have heretofore been transmitted to this office for examination and recommendation only, has, by order of the Secretary, devolved upon the Solicitor * * *." (Ann. Rept. of the Solicitor to the Sec. of the Navy, 1917, p. 8.)

VII. CONDITION OF BOND.

Departure from statutory form.—See cases noted above, under "IV. Form of Bond."

Binds officer as insurer of Government funds.—When a receiver of public money binds himself in a penal sum to perform the duties of his office without exception, he "makes himself an insurer by express contract" of moneys coming into his hands. "There is an established difference between a duty created merely by law, and one to which is added the obligation of an express undertaking. The law does not compel to impossibilities, but it is a settled rule that if performance of an express engagement becomes impossible by reason of anything occurring after the contract was made, though unforeseen by the contracting party and not within his control, he will not be excused * * *. If, as we have seen, his liability is to be measured by his bond, and that binds him to pay the money, then the cause which renders it impossible for him to pay is of no importance, for he has assumed the risk of it." (Boyden v. U. S., 13 Wall., 17, 21, holding that it is no defense to an action upon the bond of a receiver of public moneys that he had been by irresistible force robbed of the moneys sued for. See also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 167.)

The liability of a public officer on his bond for moneys collected for the United States and not paid over, is determined by his bond; and, if the case can be likened to that of private contracts at common law, it is that of a common carrier, to transmit them to the Treasury, in doing which he is not exonerated by ordinary diligence, but must answer for loss by larceny and even robbery. (U. S. v. Morgan, 11 How., 154, 158. See also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 164.)

Officers of the Navy are liable upon their bonds for public stores committed to their charge, even though such stores are destroyed by inevitable accident. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 355.)

In an action on the bond of a paymaster in the Army for not paying over or accounting for public money that came into his hands, held, no defense that, without any want of proper care and vigilance on the part of the paymaster, a certain part of the moneys had been stolen from him. (U. S. v. Dashiell, 4 Wall., 182; see also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 165.)

"By his bond he had insured the safekeeping and prompt payment of the public money which came to his hands. His obligation was therefore no less stringent than that of a common carrier, and in some respects it was greater." (Bevans v. U. S., 13 Wall., 56, 60; see also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 168.)

Held, no defense to an action on the bond of a receiver of public moneys that the money, for the nonpayment of which the United States sued, had been feloniously stolen, taken and carried away from his possession by some unknown person or persons, without fault or negligence on his part. (U. S. v. Prescott, 3 How., 578, 587; see also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 163.)

Does not bind officer for losses due to overruling necessity or the public enemy.—"No rule of public policy requires an officer to account for moneys which have been destroyed by an overruling necessity or taken from him by a public enemy, without any fault or neglect on his part." (U. S. v.

Thomas, 15 Wall., 337; see also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 168.)

An action was brought on the bond of a surveyor of customs at Nashville, he being also a depository of public moneys at that city. The special defense was that the moneys in question were seized by the Confederate authorities, against the will and consent of the surveyor and by the exercise of force which he was unable to resist, being a loyal citizen and endeavoring faithfully to perform his duty. Held, That the act of a public enemy, in forcibly seizing or destroying property of the Government in the hands of a public officer, against his will, and without his fault, is a discharge of his obligation to keep such property safely, and of his official bond, given to secure the faithful performance of that duty and to have the property forthcoming when required. (U. S. v. Thomas, 15 Wall., 337; see also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 168.)

"The Thomas case does not materially modify the decisions in previous cases. The general rule announced in these cases * * * is that the obligations of a public officer, who received public moneys under a bond conditioned that he would discharge his duties according to law, and safely keep such moneys as came to his hands, by virtue of his office, are not to be determined by the principles of the law of bailment, but by the special contract evidenced by his bond conditioned as above stated; consequently, it is no defense to a suit brought by the Government upon such a bond that the moneys, which were in the custody of the officer, had been destroyed by fire occurring without his fault or negligence. This rule, so far from being modified by the Thomas case, is reaffirmed by it, subject, however, to the exception (which, indeed, some of the prior cases had in effect intimated), that it was a valid defense that the failure of the officer to account for public moneys was attributable to overruling necessity or to the public enemy. The case now before us [loss by fire without negligence] is not embraced by either exception. The result is that the special defense here made can not, in view of former adjudications, avail the superintendent or his sureties." (Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 156, 170.)

"Where a receiver of public moneys has such moneys in his hands, which would not have been in his hands at all, if he had paid them over with the promptness that the acts of Congress and the Treasury regulations made in pursuance of them, prescribing the duties of receivers, in this respect made it his duty to do, and which therefore—inasmuch as the duties of receivers under their official bonds are defined by those acts and Treasury regulations—it was also his duty under his official bond to do—evidence that the moneys were forcibly taken from him by the agents of the so-called 'Confederate States,' usurping the authority of the rightful government, and compelling obedience to itself exclusively throughout the State in which the receiver was, held to have been rightly refused in a suit by the Government on the official bond of such receiver, as short of meeting the necessity of the case; it having been owing to the default of the receiver in not paying over promptly and at the right times, that the moneys were exposed to seizure at all by the rebel usurping government." (Bevans v. U. S., 13 Wall., 56.)

In accordance with a Confederate statute a postmaster in North Carolina paid Government moneys in his hands over to a party claiming against the United States: Held, That he was responsible on his bond for the moneys so paid. "We cannot concede that a man who, as a citizen, owes allegiance to the United States, and, as an officer of the Government holds its money or property, is at liberty to turn over the latter to an insurrectionary government which only demands it by ordinances and drafts drawn on the bailee, but which exercises no force or threat of personal violence to himself or property in the enforcement of its illegal orders." In this case it was not proved that the postmaster would have suffered any inconvenience or been punished by the Confederate authorities if he had refused to pay the draft of the insurrectionary post office department on him. (U. S. v. Keebler, 9 Wall., 83; see also Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S., 165.)

Officer may be relieved from liability for losses for which he is responsible under the terms of his bond.—By the Judicial Code (act Mar. 3, 1911, secs. 145, 147, 36 Stat., 1136, 1137), it is provided that the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to relieve any disbursing officer of responsibility on account of loss, by capture or otherwise while in the line of his duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, where such loss occurred without fault or negligence on the part of the officer, but he has been held responsible therefor.

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 132), the accounting officers are required to relieve any disbursing officer of the Navy of responsibility for loss or deficiency of Government funds, when determined by the Secretary of the Navy that the officer was not guilty of fault or negligence and was in the line of his duty. The same act (41 Stat., 153) contained similar provisions with respect to unauthorized payments made during the "present emergency" under military necessity or as the result of accidental circumstances for which the officer was not responsible.

In cases of hardship not covered by statute relief must be sought from Congress. The court is not authorized to make other exceptions than those made by the statute. (U. S. v. Keebler, 9 Wall., 83, 89.)

Condition of bond is prospective; does not cover past transactions.—The condition of the bond was prospective, and fraud in respect to past transactions, not within the condition, could not render the instrument void prospectively. (U. S. v. Boyd, 5 How., 29.)

The condition of a bond can not, by implication, be held retrospective, and to cover all defaults of the officer from the date of his commission, merely because it recites the date from which he had been appointed. The court is precluded by the authorities from maintaining that the sureties are liable by implication, contrary to the plain prospective obligation of the bond, "that the said Boyd shall faithfully execute and discharge the duties of his office." If intended to cover past derelictions, the bond should have been made retrospective in its language. (U. S. v. Boyd, 15 Pet., 187, 208; Farrar v. U. S., 5 Pet., 374, 389.)

For other cases, see above, "III. Date from which Bond takes Effect."

Binds officer as long as he remains in office.—"Bonds of officers of the United States, given for the faithful discharge of their duties, which are not in terms limited to a specified period expressed in dates, remain in force so long as such officers continue in office, even though another and different bond be given by way of renewal." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 70.)

"A provision in an official bond, shortening the life of the bond from the entire period during which the office is held until such time as 'a new official bond shall be accepted by the proper authority and substituted' therefor, runs counter to the statute and would be without effect. In its other particulars, the bond would be good." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 70. See above, "Departure from statutory form," under "IV. Form of Bond.")

Although the limitation is intended "to overcome the embarrassing effect of existing law, under which renewal bonds do not operate as a discharge of the bonds theretofore given," it is nevertheless unauthorized. Heads of departments are given wide latitude in the conduct of their departments by section 161, Revised Statutes, the only restriction contained in that section being that they shall not prescribe regulations inconsistent with law. However, such an attempt to surrender the legal rights of the Government as is contemplated by the proposed limitation upon the duration of official bonds is so vital as to be clearly within that restriction, and can not, therefore, be of any legal effect. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 70.)

In view of section 1385, Revised Statutes, it becomes a serious question whether or not a bond given as assistant paymaster would not be binding upon the sureties as long as the officer remained in the Pay Corps of the Navy, even after his promotion to passed assistant and to full paymaster. It is to be presumed that this condition of affairs is not desired, and it would seem necessary that some provision be made in the form of bond which would obviate the legal effect of section 1385. (10 Comp. Dec., 44; but see 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 70, noted above.)

The bond of an officer of the Supply Corps in the lower grade continues binding "until his new bond in the higher grade is approved." (Art. R.-4418, Navy Regs., 1913, as amended by C. N. R. 7, Sept. 15, 1916; see sec. 1385, R. S.)

For other cases, see below, "Where new bond is given," under "IX. Liability of Sureties, and "Amount of bond," under "X. Miscellaneous."

Binds officer for faithful disbursement of public moneys, whatever their amount.—"Although when the bond was executed it might not have been supposed that the officer would have such large sums to disburse, that fact forms no defense to an action on the bond, which was conditioned for the honest disbursement of the public moneys, whatever might be their amount." (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571, 592.)

Binds officer for faithful performance of duties imposed by subsequent laws.—

"The bond of a receiver of public money is given to insure the performance of all of his duties, and those duties are defined by the acts of Congress and by Treasury regulations made under the acts." (Bevans v. U. S., 13 Wall., 56, 61.)

"The official bond of parties covers not merely duties imposed by existing law, but duties belonging to and naturally connected with their offices or business imposed by subsequent law, but the new duties must have some relation to or connection with such office or business, and not be disconnected from and foreign to both." (U. S. v. Singer, 15 Wall., 111.)

Where the condition of the bond is that the party shall in all respects faithfully comply with all the provisions of law in relation to the duties upon which he is engaged, this signifies an intention to stipulate that the principal in the bond should comply with duties subsequently imposed by law. Both parties, it must be assumed, knew that Congress might, at any time, enact new provisions imposing new duties or varying those already imposed; and the defendants must have understood that it never could have been intended that a new bond should be required with every modification made in relation to the existing duties. (U. S. v. Powell, 14 Wall., 493.)

Bonds of public officers are required to secure the faithful discharge of the duties ordinarily imposed upon the principal obligor, without reference to the time when the law was passed imposing the duties, and where the language of the bond is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace duties subsequently imposed of a character corresponding with those required at the date of the bond, the construction which gives a prospective, as well as a retrospective, operation to the condition of the bond may well be adopted as both reasonable and just to all concerned. (U. S. v. Powell, 14 Wall., 493.)

The Navy Department, in requiring the principal in the bond to perform duties which would have been performed by an officer of a different character if there had been such an officer at the navy yard, did not thereby require of him the performance of duties against defaults in which his sureties had not undertaken to protect the Government. (Strong v. U. S., 6 Wall., 788.)

Does not cover duties imposed by subsequent laws, in certain cases.—"Exceptional cases may doubtless arise, as where the condition of the bond is in terms, or by a fair and reasonable construction, limited to existing duties, or where the appointment is a temporary one to expire at the end of the next session of the Senate. Different rules are applied in the case of a temporary appointment, as the commission is for a different tenure, and unless there is something in the act under which the first commission issued, showing that it contemplated a permanent and continuing responsibility under laws subsequently passed, the rule is that the liability of sureties must be strictly confined to the duties created by the acts passed antecedent to the date of the bond." (U. S. v. Powell, 14 Wall., 493, 502.)

A bond given by an officer under a recess appointment of the President, and who is subsequently appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, is to be restricted to the duties and obligations created by the statutes passed antecedently to the date of the bond. (U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., 720.)

It must be admitted that any substantial addition by law to the duties of the obligor of a bond, after the execution of the instrument, materially enlarging his liabilities, will not impose any additional responsibility upon his sureties unless the words of the bond, by a fair and reasonable construction, bring such subsequently imposed duties within its provisions. (U. S. v. Powell, 14 Wall., 501.)

"If, after an official bond has been signed, the nature of the office be changed by law, the bond ceases to be obligatory. In such a case the office is no longer the same, within the meaning of the bond." (Gausson v. U. S., 97 U. S., 584, 592; Converse v. U. S., 21 How., 463.)

Where bonds were given by pay officers of the Army for the performance of particular duties specified therein, it is manifest that such bonds have no effect in securing the performance of any other duties than those to which they expressly point; because this would be to vary the contract of the sureties without their consent. The duties contemplated in future for the paymasters, being variant from those to which their bonds are adapted, will be no longer secured by those bonds; and it consequently becomes requisite that new bonds should be given in every case in which new and different duties are to be performed. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 733.)

Public officers ought to give new bonds with sureties when required to exercise additional duties (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 575); are required to give new bonds with sureties, conditioned for the performance of the new duties required by a subsequent law, as well as those before required (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 584); are not required to give bonds in a larger amount than before, unless it shall be deemed necessary by the proper officers of the department; but they are required to give new bonds with new conditions, embracing the new duties devolved upon them as well as those previously required (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 586); if the proper department shall deem it expedient, it may, in lieu of a new bond embracing all the duties of the officer, take a new bond in a suitable penalty embracing the new duties only, leaving the old one outstanding (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 600; see also 3 Op. Atty. Gen., 610).

The addition of duties different in their nature from those which belonged to the office when the official bond was given will not impose upon the obligor in the bond as such additional responsibilities, but such an addition of new duties does not render void the bond of the officer as a security for the performance of the duties at first assumed. It will still remain a security for what it was originally given to secure. (Gausson v. U. S., 97 U. S., 584, 590.)

A collector of internal revenue, directed to act as disbursing agent, must give bond as such in addition to his bond as collector; his accounts in the two capacities are kept in separate books at the Treasury. (Hall v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 39.)

The reimbursement to the United States of moneys paid by them to their own officers or agents in pursuance of a law in existence when the bond was executed, is not a duty so connected with or naturally belonging to the business of the principal as to be within the reasonable contemplation of the parties to the bond at the time of its execution. "It would be extending the liabilities of obligors on such bonds beyond principle and precedent to hold them responsible for the reimbursement of moneys paid by Government to its own officers or agents, because, subsequent to their payment, Government declares that such reimbursement shall be made." (U. S. v. Singer, 15 Wall., 111.)

VIII. CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Local law of a particular State can not affect the contract.—An official bond, given in pursuance of a law of the United States, is not to be governed by the laws of the State in which it was signed, but must be considered as having been executed at the seat of the Government of the United States and to be governed by the principles of the common law. (Duncan v. U. S., 7 Pet., 435.)

"This is an official bond, and was given in pursuance of a law of the United States. By this law, the conditions of the bond were fixed, and also the manner in which its obligations should be enforced. It was delivered to the Treasury Department at Washington, and to the Treasury did the paymaster and his sureties become bound to pay any moneys in his hands. These powers, exercised by the Federal Government, can not be questioned. It has the power of prescribing, under its own laws, what kind of security shall be given by its agents for a faithful discharge of their public duties. And in such cases, the local law cannot affect the contract; as it is made with the Government, and in contemplation of law, at the place where its principal powers are exercised." (Duncan v. U. S., 7 Pet., 435.)

Liability of parties governed by rules of common law.—The general rule of law is well settled that the law of the place where the contract is made, and not where the action is brought, is to govern in enforcing and expounding the contract, unless the parties have a view to its being executed elsewhere, in which case it is to be governed according to the law of the place where it is to be executed. Although the official bond of a naval officer was signed at New Orleans, it is very clear that the obligation imposed upon the parties thereby looked for its execution to the city of Washington. It is immaterial where the services of the officer were to be performed; his accountability for nonperformance was to be at the seat of government; he was bound to account, and the sureties undertook that he should account, for all public moneys received by him with such officers of the Government of the United States as are duly authorized to settle and adjust his accounts. The bond was given with reference to the laws of the United States on that subject, and such accounting is required to be with the Treasury Department at the seat of government; the officer is bound by the terms of the bond to pay over such sums as may be found due to the United States on such settlement, and such paying over must be to the Treasury Department or in such manner as shall be directed by the Secretary. The bond is therefore, in every point of view in which it can be considered, a contract to be executed at Washington; and the liability of the parties must be governed by the rules of the common law. (Cox v. U. S., 6 Pet., 172; see also Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S., 124, 139.)

Construction of bond governed by decisions of Federal courts.—"A bond given in pursuance of a law of the United States is governed, as to its construction, not by the local law of a particular State, but by the principles of law as determined by this court, and operative throughout the courts of the United States." (Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S., 497, 514.)

Competency of married woman as surety depends upon law prevailing in District of Columbia.—See 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 472, cited above under "V. Sufficiency of Sureties."

IX. LIABILITY OF SURETIES.

In general.—"Nothing is plainer than the rule that a surety in a bond is liable to the same extent to which his principal is liable, by force of the bond." (Gausson v. U. S., 97 U. S., 584, 590.)

All the provisions of the statutes regulating the institution of suits and the recovery by judgment of unpaid balances from delinquent officers, are as much a part of their bonds as if they were recited in them; and officers and their securities are, in contemplation of law, apprised of those provisions when their bonds are executed. (U. S. v. Hawkins, 10 Pet., 125.)

"The Government is not responsible for the laches or the wrongful acts of its officers * * *. Every surety upon an official bond to the Government is presumed to enter into his contract with a full knowledge of this principle of law, and to consent to be dealt with accordingly. The Government enters into no contract with them that its officers shall perform their duties. A government may be a loser by the negligence of its officers, but it never becomes bound to others for the consequences of such negligence, unless it be by express agreement to that effect." (Hart v. U. S., 95 U. S., 316.)

Strictissimi juris.—"The obligation of the surety is strictissimi juris, and he can not be called upon to pay more than the penalty of his bond." (Leggett v. Humphreys, 21 How., 66.)

It is perfectly clear as to the sureties in an official bond that a judgment cannot be rendered beyond the penalty, to be discharged on payment of what is due, which of course can only be, where it is less than the penalty. (Farrar v. U. S., 5 Pet., 373.)

"The liability of a surety is not to extend, by implication, beyond the terms of his contract; this undertaking is to receive a strict interpretation, and not to extend beyond the fair scope of its terms." (U. S. v. Boyd, 15 Pet., 187; Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat., 702.)

"Nothing can be clearer, both upon principle and authority, than the doctrine that the liability of a surety is not to be extended by implication beyond the terms of his contract. To the extent and in the manner and under the circumstances pointed out in his obligation, he is bound, and no further. It is not sufficient that he may sustain no injury by a change in the contract, or that it may even be for his benefit. He has a right to stand upon the very terms of his contract; and if he does not assent to any variation of it, and a variation is made, it is fatal. And courts of equity, as well as of law, have been in the constant habit of scanning the contracts of sureties with considerable strictness. * * * The undertaking of the surety is to receive a strict interpretation, and is not to be extended beyond the fair scope of its terms." (Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat., 680, 702.)

Money received prior to giving bond.—"It matters not at what time the moneys had been received, if, after the appointment, they were held by the officer in trust for the United States, and so continued to be held, at and after the date of the bond." (U. S. v. Boyd, 15 Pet., 187, 207.)

If an officer, before the date of his official bond, receive money belonging to the United States with orders from the Comptroller to pay it into a United States depository, which he neglects to do, the sureties on his official bond, executed afterwards, are not liable therefor upon the bond, although the money remain in the officer's hands after the execution of the bond. (U. S. v. Giles, 9 Cranch, 212; see also Farrar v. U. S., 5 Pet., 373.)

Money falsely claimed by principal to be in his hands.—The sureties are responsible for all the public moneys which were in the hands of their principal at the date of the bond, or that may have come into them afterwards, and not properly accounted for; but not for moneys which the officer may choose falsely to admit in his hands in his accounts with the Government. (U. S. v. Boyd, 5 How., 29, 50.)

The sureties can not be concluded by a fabricated account of their principal with his creditors; they may always inquire into the reality and truth of the transaction existing between them. (U. S. v. Boyd, 5 How., 29.)

The returns of the receiver to the Treasury Department are not conclusive evidence in an action by the Government against the sureties upon the receiver's bond. If the sums of money stated in such returns were not actually in the hands of the receiver, the sureties are allowed to show how the fact was. (U. S. v. Boyd, 5 How., 29.)

In United States v. Boyd (5 How., 29), the receipts which had been returned to the Treasury Department, upon which the indebtedness was found, and which had been given on entries of public lands without exacting the money, in fraud of the Government, were all given before the execution of the official bond, upon which the suit was brought. The sureties were not, therefore, responsible for the fraud; and it was these transactions on the part of the receiver, which had transpired anterior to the time when the sureties became answerable for the faithful execution of his duties, in respect to which it was held that they could not be estopped by his returns to the Government. No part of them fell within the time covered by the official bond. (U. S. v. Girault, 11 How., 22.)

In this case the defense is attempted that the receiver never had received money which he admitted receiving in his returns to the Treasury Department. This is not a good defense, because the sureties in the bond were bound to protect the United States from the commission of the very fraud which they attempt to set up as a defense. (U. S. v. Girault, 11 How., 22, distinguishing U. S. v. Boyd, 5 How., 29, noted above.)

Money received after termination of office.—"The sureties are not responsible for moneys placed by the Government in the hands of the principal after the legal termination of his office; but they are responsible for moneys which came into his hands, while in office, and which he subsequently failed to account for and pay over." (U. S. v. Nicholl, 12 Wheat., 505; Bryan v. U. S., 1 Black, 140, 149.)

The liability of sureties upon the official bond of an officer is limited to acts done by him during his term of office. They are not responsible for defaults committed in relation to public moneys received by him after the term for which he was appointed. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 214.)

A surety in the bond of a public officer is entitled to credit for all payments made by his principal during the time he remained in office, and is chargeable only with the moneys received by him during the same time and which he subsequently fails to account for and pay over. (Bryan v. U. S., 1 Black, 140.)

Failure of principal to account after removal from office.—There may have been no breach of the bond at the time of his removal from office, but the liability of the receiver to account remained, and the bond continued in force until he had fully accounted and thus had fulfilled all the conditions of his bond. (Smith v. U. S., 170 U. S., 372, 380.)

Money received in a different capacity.—The sureties of a bond of a quartermaster of the Army are not liable for his default in safely keeping and disbursing money advanced to him as acting chief commissary. (8 Comp. Dec., 269.)

Money disbursed as accommodation to another officer.—If B, without a receipt from A, upon a requisition for money, volunteers to pay demands which it is A's duty to pay, or pay the orders of A and permit the receipts for the sums paid by him to get into A's possession, by whom they are exhibited at the Treasury and allowed in the final settlement of his account, without A's having given credit to B, or to the Government, for the amount, it assumes the character of a private transaction between A and B, or becomes a debt due from A, as an individual, to B, as a private person; and the latter can not claim the amount at the Treasury, as an allowance in the settlement of his account, nor as a legal and equitable credit in a suit against him by the United States. (U. S. v. Hawkins, 10 Pet., 124.)

Principal under suspension.—The suspension of an officer involves the suspension of his bond; the bond required of the person designated to take the place of the former being substituted therefor while the person so designated is performing the duties of the office. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 318.)

One bonded officer acting as assistant to another.—"The bond of an officer of the Pay Corps acting as an assistant to another pay officer covers the public property actually in his custody, and for which he has receipted, but does not release the senior from a proper supervision over the acts of his subordinate." (Art. R-3002 (5) Navy Regs., 1913.)

Acts done colore officii.—The sureties on the official bond of a public officer are liable for acts done by the officer colore officii, although he acts without sufficient warrant. (Lamar v. McCulloch, 115 U. S., 163, 187, citing Lammon v. Fensier, 111 U. S., 17.)

Money transferred by Government to officer's agent.—A transfer of moneys by the Government to an agent of the officer does not affect the liability of the surety as a transfer to the officer himself. The fidelity or responsibility of the agent through whom the Government sees fit to transfer public money is not within the obligation assumed by the surety. (Bryan v. U. S., 1 Black, 140.)

Public moneys.—Where an officer receives moneys as public moneys, and charges himself with them in his accounts with the Government, his sureties are estopped to raise an objection to the payment of the moneys to the officer, which he could not raise and which is not raised by the parties paying or the United States. Their responsibility for the moneys so received is therefore clear. (Potter v. U. S., 107 U. S., 126, 130; King v. U. S., 99 U. S., 229.)

"Public money in the sense of the law, and as used in this bond, is money which legally comes to the receiver by virtue of his office, and as a public officer, and while carrying out the duties of his office, and he cannot be permitted to say that it was not public money when so received. Being public money, he is bound to account." (Smith v. U. S., 170 U. S., 372, 381; 12 Comp. Dec., 678, 688.)

A sum of money deposited with a pay officer of the Navy by a civil officer as security for the return of an enlisted man of the Navy delivered to the State authorities for trial is not public money. (17 Comp. Dec., 635; see also 16 Comp. Dec., 219, citing Branch v. U. S., 100 U. S., 673, 674, and Courdet v. U. S., 175 U. S., 178, 183.)

"It may be assumed, as a general doctrine of administrative law, that public officers, whether of deposit or disbursement, can make the Government and their sureties responsible only for official acts. As a plain corollary from this doctrine, it may in like manner be assumed that, if any citizen of the United States deposit his own private money for safe-keeping, or for transmission and remittance, in the hands of a public officer, such as a collector of customs, assistant treasurer of the United States, a paymaster in the Army, or a purser in the Navy, no liability in the premises can be thereby cast on the Government. It is quite immaterial in such a case what writings may have passed between the depositor and the bailee, what engagements the latter may have entered into with the former." Accordingly, held, that the official bond of an officer of the Navy is not liable for private funds paid him by his predecessor. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 357, 366.)

For other decisions as to what constitutes public money, see note to section 236, Revised Statutes, under "II. Jurisdiction of Accounting Officers."

Where new bond is given.—Where, under the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 807), which provides that "every officer whose duty it is to take and approve official bonds shall cause all such bonds to be renewed every four years after their dates," an officer renews his bond by giving a bond during the same term of office, the new bond does not operate to release the sureties on the first bond from liability for future transactions, but the sureties on the old and new bonds are jointly and severally liable therefor. (5 Comp. Dec., 918.)

Where the law relating to the bonds of persons in the Navy required that every person then in service, etc., shall, instead of the bond required by a former act, enter into a new bond with sureties conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, etc., the sureties on the old bond are discharged from all responsibility for moneys received by any person after he has given the new bond, the latter being, by the act, a substitute for the former. (U. S. v. Wardwell, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16640, per Story, circuit justice.)

An act of Congress which requires new sureties to be given by certain public officers on or before a specified date does not expressly or by implication discharge the former sureties from their liability. (U. S. v. Nicholl, 12 Wheat., 505; see below, "Failure to give new bond," under "X. Miscellaneous.")

Whether the new bond is retroactive or not, a full account of the money on hand should be made in order to avoid any dispute between the sureties as to which bond is liable in the event of default. Furthermore, the new bond is merely cumulative, the former bond remaining in force throughout the term of his office. This being so, it would seem advisable to adhere to the present practice of requiring such account. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 28.)

The rules as to the settlement of their accounts by disbursing officers on rebonding should be adhered to, when possible, and only departed from when it is shown that great hardship would result from a strict compliance with them; in other words, in cases where the law could excuse a noncompliance. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 21, 1903, 23 S. and A. Memo., 183.)

The regulation requiring that when a new bond is given the officer should close his accounts under the former bond and deposit any unexpended balance before an advance is made under the new bond, in order that the liability of the sureties on the respective bonds may be definitely fixed, contains requirements demanded by proper care for the interests of the Government. It is not doubted that the regulation may be waived, even retroactively, but the effect of waiver and the departure from the usual practice upon the liability of the sureties is a more difficult question. Of course the surety is bound by the terms of his contract, but it is a maxim of law that the liability of sureties is strictissimi juris, and that liability sometimes depends upon fine distinctions made by the courts and upon questions which in the abstract seem without significance, but when applied in certain cases turn out to be matters of great importance. It therefore seems best in all cases in dealing with official bonds to follow closely the beaten tracks, and strictly to adhere to the law and regulations made in pursuance thereto. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 21, 1903, 23 S. and A. Memo., 183.)

"Where an action was brought by the United States upon the official bond of a receiver of public money, a plea that the United States had accepted another bond from the receiver was bad. The new bond could be no satisfaction for the damages that had accrued for the breach of the condition of the old one." (U. S. v. Girault, 11 How., 22.)

When an officer is continued in office for more than one term, but gives different sureties the liability of the sureties is to be estimated just as if a new person had been appointed to fill the second term. (U. S. v. Eckford, 1 How., 250; but see sec. 1385, R. S.)

"The retrospective obligation of the bond is as much limited by the term of the new appointment as the prospective. And in this view it would be as logical and just to hold that the sureties are liable for defalcations after the expiration of the term as for those which occurred before its commencement. There is no such condition in the instrument. It recites the new appointment and by consequence limits the obligation to the term of office fixed by law." (U. S. v. Eckford, 1 How., 250, 260.)

"Where there were two consecutive commissions and two sets of sureties, the latter set were responsible for all money which remained in the hands of the principal at the expiration of the first commission. If it was misapplied during the first term of office, it was incumbent upon the second set of sureties to show that it was so." (Bruce v. U. S., 17 How., 437.)

The second commission, issued under the appointment with the advice and consent of the Senate, operates as a revocation of the first commission issued under the appointment by the President, which was to continue until the end of the next session of the Senate and no longer; and the liability of the sureties in the bond did not extend beyond the duration of the first commission. (U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., 720.)

The bond given by a naval officer under his first commission, which was issued upon a temporary appointment made during a recess of the Senate, ceased to have effect after the acceptance of a new commission under an appointment made with the consent of the Senate. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 333.)

A former disbursing officer in the Navy reappointed to that office should give a new bond; but not definitely decided that the original sureties of the officer are wholly discharged of responsibility after the reappointment: "This point should be saved on behalf of the United States." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 175.)

The issuing of a new appointment and commission to any officer of the Supply Corps of the Navy shall not affect or annul any existing bond, but the same shall remain in force and apply to such new appointment and commission. (See sec. 1385, R. S.; and see above, "Binds officer as long as he remains in office," under "VII. Condition of Bond.")

Where disbursing officer is allowed to remain in office after defalcation.—On a suit by the Government against the sureties of a public officer on his official bond, it is no defense that the Government, through the accounting officers of the Treasury, had full notice of the defalcation and embezzlement of funds of the United States, and yet neglectfully permitted the said officer to remain in office. (Jones v. U. S., 18 Wall., 662. In this case it was contended that the knowledge of the Government that the officer had embezzled its funds should have caused his immediate dismissal; thus terminating the liability of his sureties and limiting it to the amount then due, and that, when the Government chooses to continue in office an officer known to have committed such an act, it takes upon itself the trust of his future honesty.)

Where a statute expressly directs a defaulting officer to be recalled at the expiration of six months from the time of his fault, his sureties are not discharged but remain liable for his defaults thereafter until he is actually recalled. (U. S. v. Nicholl, 12 Wheat., 505, 509, citing U. S. v. Vanzandt, 11 Wheat., 184.)

An omission of the proper officer to recall a delinquent paymaster under the injunction of a statute requiring such recall does not discharge his surety. The provisions of the statute are merely directory and intended for the security of the Government but form no part of the contract with the surety. The statute does not ipso facto remove the delinquent paymaster from office but only make it the duty of the proper officer to remove him. The officer whose duty it may be to recall him acts upon his own responsibility to the Government by declining to do so; but until he acts otherwise the paymaster is authorized, notwithstanding his delinquency, to receive and to disburse the funds which may be placed in his hands. The circumstance of new funds being placed in his hands after his delinquency does not discharge the surety. (U. S. v. Vanzandt, 11 Wheat., 184.)

An officer of the Supply Corps of the Navy, under arrest awaiting action upon charges of embezzlement, may be released temporarily and put on duty by the commanding officer of a ship, or other competent authority, should an emergency of the service or other sufficient cause make such measure necessary. (See art. R-1410, Navy Regs., 1913; file 26251-8072:4, Oct. 17, 1913; see also file 26251-8072:6, Oct. 28, 1913; 26251-8344, Dec. 24, 1913.)

Certificate given in ignorance of fraud does not discharge sureties.—A certificate given to a disbursing officer, before the discovery of his fraud, that his accounts had been examined, found correct, and were closed, did not operate to release him or his sureties from liability on the bond. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571.)

Such certificates were undoubtedly prima facie evidence of the facts they certified to, and in the absence of any evidence of mistake or fraud attacking the integrity of the items, or any of them appearing on the books and upon which the certificates were based, they would be conclusive in favor of the officer in any action against him. * * * They would not, however, be conclusive as against evidence of forgery of any vouchers upon which the accounts had been founded and the settlement arrived at; this is too plain for argument. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571, 594.)

Laches of Government officers not a discharge.—The failure of the receiver to account and pay quarterly, as prescribed by the rules of the Treasury Department, was no legal defalcation of which the securities can avail themselves. Laches are not imputable to the Government. The regulations requiring settlements to be made by its officers at short periods are designed for the protection of the Government, and merely directory to the officers and form no part of the contract. (U. S. v. Boyd, 15 Pet., 187, 208.)

Where the act of Congress does not in terms discharge the obligors from the direct claim of the United States on them, on the failure of the proper officer to commence a suit against the defaulter within the time it prescribes, their liability continues; they remain debtors of the United States; the responsibility of the proper officer under the statute is superadded to, not substituted for, that of the obligors. The claim of the United States upon an official bond, and upon all parties thereto, is not released by the laches of the officer to whom the assertion of the claim is entrusted by law; such laches have no effect whatsoever on the right of the United States, as well against the sureties as the principal in the bond. (Dox v. Postmaster General, 1 Pet., 318; see also Postmaster General v. Early, 12 Wheat., 136.)

"Sound policy requires, that the accounts of disbursing officers should be adjusted at the proper department, with as much dispatch as is practicable; this is alike due to the public and to the persons who are held responsible as sureties; to the individual who has received advances of money, no lapse of time nor change of circumstances can weaken the claim of Government for reimbursement; but there may be some cases of hardship where, after a great lapse of time, and the insolvency of the principal, the amount of the defalcation is sought to be recovered from the sureties. The law on this subject is founded upon consideration of public policy; while various acts of limitation apply to the concerns of individuals, none of them operate against the Government; on this point, there is no difference of opinion among the Federal or State courts." (Smith v. U. S., 5 Pet., 292.)

"The fiscal operations of the Government are extensive and often complicated; it is extremely difficult, at all times, and sometimes, impracticable, to settle the accounts of public officers with as little delay as attends the private accounts of a mercantile establishment; but it is always in the power of an individual who may be held responsible for the faithful conduct of a public agent, to see that his accounts are settled, and the payment of any balance enforced. A notice to the Government, by the surety, that he is unwilling to continue his responsibility, would induce it, in most instances, to take the necessary steps for his release." (Smith v. U. S., 5 Pet. 292.)

In general, laches is not imputable to the Government; and where the laws require quarterly or other periodical accounts and settlements, a mere omission to bring a suit, upon the neglect of the officer or agent to account, will not discharge his sureties. (U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., 720.)

Failure to institute suit operates as discharge.—Section 2 of the act of August 8, 1888 (25 Stat., 387), is absolute as regards the discharge of sureties if suit on the bond be not instituted "within five years after such statement of said account" by the accounting officer of the Treasury. It makes no exception in case the accounting officer does not make such statement as early as he should, or when a deficiency is discovered by him. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 612.)

It was not intended by the act of August 8, 1888, section 1 (25 Stat., 387), that the accounting officer should delay notice until it has become certain that there is a deficiency; nor, on the other hand, should he always report a deficiency whenever, from the account of a disbursing officer, it may appear prima facie that there is one. This may be from insufficient vouchers or evidence, or from clerical error or omission, or in one or more of various ways not inconsistent with a proper disbursement of the moneys in his hands. Whenever, in the exercise of a sound judgment and after a reasonable time allowed for explanation and correction, it appears to the accounting officer that there is a probable deficiency, he should notify the head of the department as provided in section 1 of the act. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 613.)

The five-year limitation fixed by section 2 of the act of August 8, 1888 (25 Stat., 387), within which suits may be brought upon the official bonds of disbursing officers, begins to run from the time the accounting officers of the Treasury make the statement of the account showing an indebtedness to the United States. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 611.)

Giving time to principal might discharge sureties.—In general, laches is not imputable to the Government, but quaere, Whether in case there is an express agreement between the Government and the principal, giving time to the latter and suspending the right of the former to sue, the sureties are not discharged, as in a similar case between private individuals? (U. S. v. Nicholl, 12 Wheat., 505.)

"A mere proposition to give time, and suspend the right to sue, upon certain conditions and contingencies, which are not proved to have been complied with, or to have happened, will not discharge the sureties." (U. S. v. Nicholl, 12 Wheat., 505.)

The President has no authority to release the sureties on a bond given to the United States by a public officer for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 62.)

X. MISCELLANEOUS.

Bond should not be surrendered to officer.—It is a sound regulation, conformable to law, for the head of a department not to give up to officers their original bonds on the execution of new ones. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 312.)

There is no act authorizing a withdrawal of official bonds, except for the purposes of suit. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 312.)

Accounts in the Treasury are never closed. In neither the legal nor mercantile sense of the term is an account between the Government and one of its officers ever "finally adjusted," nor is his official bond ever canceled or surrendered. (Smith v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 114, 118; see U. S. v. Smith, 105 U. S., 620.)

Amount of bond.—A paymaster of the Navy who, on promotion from passed assistant paymaster, filed an additional bond with the same sureties in a penal sum equal to the difference between the amount of his bond as passed assistant paymaster and that required of him as paymaster, sufficiently complied with the provisions of the statutes fixing the amount of bond which shall be required of a paymaster. (10 Comp. Dec., 44. See sec. 1385, R. S., and see above, "Binds officer as long as he remains in office," under "VII. Condition of Bond.")

Expense of furnishing bond.—If the bond given by an officer is required by law, the expense is not chargeable to the United States, since it is the duty of persons receiving appointments from the Government to prepare and tender to the proper officer the oaths and bonds required by law; in other words, to qualify themselves for the office. (U. S. v. Van Duzee, 140 U. S., 171; see also 13 Comp. Dec., 386, and 2 Comp. Dec., 262.)

If the bond is not required by law, but is a voluntary bond, there is no authority for charging the expense of furnishing it to the United States, in the absence of an appropriation for such expenses. (12 Comp. Dec., 678.)

The expense incurred by an officer in furnishing the bond required by law of all disbursing officers of the Government is not a proper charge against the Government, even though the officer serves without compensation. (2 Comp. Dec., 262.)

An officer is not entitled to reimbursement for premium paid by him to a guaranty company as surety on his original and renewal bonds. (13 Comp. Dec., 375, affirming 12 Comp. Dec., 678.)

The incidental expenses incurred by a special examiner of the Pension Office in investigating the sufficiency of the sureties on a pension agent's bond, by direction of the Interior Department, are a proper charge against the appropriation for investigation of pension cases. (2 Comp. Dec., 444; but see act Aug. 5, 1909, 36 Stat., 125; and see above, "Certificate of sufficiency," under "IV. Form of Bond.")

When the Secretary of the Navy, in order to ascertain the sufficiency of the sureties on the bond of a pay officer, as is required of him by section 5 of the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 807), orders certain evidence to be procured by the officer himself, the latter is entitled to be reimbursed for the expenses incurred in executing the order. (3 Comp. Dec., 135; but see act Aug. 5, 1909, 36 Stat., 125.)

Rate of premium.—The provision of the act of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat., 125), regulating the charge which may be made by surety or bonding companies for becoming surety on the official bonds of officers or employees of the United States, contemplates that the charge shall not be more than 35 per cent above the rate paid during 1908 on any bond belonging to the same general class, provided that charge did not constitute an isolated instance of an unusual or extortionate premium. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 597.)

In determining what the charge was during 1908 for other bonds of like character, departments may exclude any premium which was so high as to be outside the range of the usual or customary charge, and include any charge even though it be the highest paid, if it be not so high as to fall within the inhibition above stated. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 597.)

The rate of premium paid by the incumbent of any particular office during 1908 on an official bond may be used as the base for computing the rate which shall be paid upon the bond of the incumbent of the same office under the act of August 5, 1909, provided such rate did not constitute an isolated instance of an unusual or extortionate premium. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 28.)

Sec. 1384. [Supply Corps; new bonds required.] Officers of the Pay Corps shall give new bonds with sufficient sureties, whenever required to do so by the Secretary of the Navy.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 206, s. 4, v. 5, p. 535.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), which changed the designation of the Pay Corps to "Supply Corps."

See note to section 1383, Revised Statutes, under "V. Sufficiency of Sureties," "IX. Liability of Sureties," and "X. Miscellaneous;" see also act of March 2, 1895, section 5 (28 Stat., 807).

Sec. 1385. [Supply Corps; bonds not affected by new commissions.] The issuing of a new appointment and commission to any officer of the Pay Corps shall not affect or annul any existing bond, but the same shall remain in force, and apply to such new appointment and commission.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 6, v. 16, p. 536.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), which changed the designation of the Pay Corps to "Supply Corps."

See note to section 1383, Revised Statutes, under "VII. Condition of Bond—binds officer as long as he remains in office;" and "IX. Liability of Sureties—where new bond is given." See also 10 Comp. Dec., 44, noted under section 1383, Revised Statutes, "X. Miscellaneous."

Sec. 1386. [Supply Corps; when clerks allowed officers. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1386. Paymasters of the fleet, paymasters on vessels having complements of more than one hundred and seventy-five persons, on supply-steamers, store-vessels, and receiving-ships, paymasters at stations and at the Naval Academy, and paymasters detailed at stations as inspectors of provisions and clothing, shall each be allowed a clerk."—(14 July, 1862, c. 164, s. 3, v. 12, p. 565; 26 May, 1864, c. 96, v. 13, p. 92.)

It was repealed by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942, 943), which made provision for the appointment of acting pay clerks, pay clerks, and chief pay clerks to the total number of one for each 250 enlisted men allowed by law in the Navy, and provided that said clerks "shall be assigned to duty with pay officers under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe." For number of enlisted men allowed by law, see note to section 1417, Revised Statutes. See also act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), providing for temporary appointment of additional officers for service during the existing war.

It had previously been amended by clauses in the annual naval appropriation act, under the heading, "Pay of the Navy," increasing the number of positions for which such clerks were allowed, the latest amendment having been contained in the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), which made appropriation for "clerks to paymasters at yards and stations, general storekeepers ashore and afloat, and receiving ships and other vessels; two clerks to general inspectors of the Pay Corps; one clerk to pay officer in charge of deserters' rolls; not exceeding ten clerks to accounting officers at yards and stations."

Pay, allowances, and retirement.—By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), it was provided that "all paymasters' clerks shall, while on duty, receive the same pay and allowances as warrant officers of like length of service in the Navy;" this provision was superseded by the following clause in the act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 606): "All paymasters' clerks shall, while holding appointment in accordance with law, receive the same pay and allowances and have the same rights of retirement as warrant officers of like length of service in the Navy." The latter provision was, in turn, superseded by the act of March 3, 1915, above cited, which provided that "pay clerks and acting pay clerks shall have the same pay, allowances, and other benefits as are now or may hereafter be allowed other warrant officers and acting warrant officers, respectively;" and that "all pay clerks shall, after six years' service as such, be commissioned chief pay clerks and shall on promotion have the rank, pay, and allowances of chief boat-swain."

The status of clerks to officers of the Pay Corps prior to the act of March 3, 1915, above cited, was the subject of numerous decisions. They were held not officers of the Navy in the case of United States v. Mouat (124 U. S., 303); were held to be officers in a qualified sense in the case of United States v. Hendee (124 U. S., 309); and were held to be officers in the constitutional as well as the popular sense, by the Attorney General, in view of certain changes which had been made in the Navy Regulations (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 157); but a contrary opinion was expressed by the Court of Claims in the case of Ashton v. United States (51 Ct. Cls., 65), which modified a previous decision by that court in the case of Katzer v. United States (49 Ct. Cls., 294).

They were at all times held amenable to trial by court-martial as officers of the Navy (see Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 13; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109; U. S. v. Bogart, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14616; In re Reed, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11636; In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596; but see, Ex parte Van Vranken, 47 Fed. Rep., 888, reversed 163 U. S., 694).

Their status as officers of the United States is now definitely established by the act of March 3, 1915, above cited, which vests the appointment of acting pay clerks in the Secretary of the Navy, the appointment of pay clerks in the President, the same as other warrant officers, and the appointment of chief pay clerks in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the same as other commissioned officers of the Navy. (See note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, as to who are officers of the United States.)

Sec. 1387. [Supply Corps; when clerks not allowed officers. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1387. No paymaster shall be allowed a clerk in a vessel having the complement of one hundred and seventy-five persons or less, excepting in supply-steamers and store-vessels."—(26 May, 1864, c. 96, v. 13, p. 92.)

It was repealed by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942, 943).

See note to section 1386, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1388. [Supply Corps; clerks to passed assistant and assistant paymasters. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1388. Passed assistant paymasters and assistant paymasters attached to vessels of war shall be allowed clerks, if clerks would be allowed by law to paymasters so attached."—(3 Mar. 1863, c. 118, s. 5, v. 12, p. 818.)

It was repealed by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942, 943).

See note to section 1386, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1389. [Supply Corps; loans to officers prohibited.] It shall not be lawful for any paymaster, passed assistant paymaster, or assistant paymaster, to advance or loan, under any pretense whatever, to any officer in the naval service, any sum of money, public or private, or any credit, or any article or commodity whatever.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 206, s. 6, v. 5, p. 536. 22 June, 1860, c. 181, s. 3, v. 12, p. 83.)

Advances of pay to naval officers in certain cases are authorized by sections 1563 and 3648, Revised Statutes, as modified by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1181), and are prohibited in other cases by the latter section.

Loans of public money or unauthorized withdrawals thereof by any disbursing officer are punishable as embezzlement by section 87 of the Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105). See section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Mileage books and transportation tickets may be furnished officers and others by the Secretary of the Navy in advance of travel, and may be paid for prior to actual performance of the travel involved. (Act Apr. 27, 1904, sec. 1, 33 Stat., 403.)

No money shall be paid to any person as compensation who is in arrears to the United States. (Sec. 1766, R. S. See note to sec. 236, R. S., under "VI. Set-off.")

The words, "paymaster, passed assistant paymaster, or assistant paymaster," as used in the above section, have been construed to include "any officer of the Supply Corps." (See Art. 1745, Navy Regs., 1920.)

An order of the commanding officer, pursuant to section 285, Revised Statutes, does not authorize an advance of public money by an officer of the Supply Corps to the commanding officer or to any other person by his order. (Art. 1749 (2), Navy Regs., 1920.)

Sec. 1390. [Engineer Corps; organization of. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1390. The active list of the Engineer Corps of the Navy shall consist of seventy chief engineers, who shall be divided into three grades, by relative rank, as provided in Chapter Four of this Title;

"Ten chief engineers;

"Fifteen chief engineers; and

"Forty-five chief engineers, who shall have the relative rank of lieutenant commander or lieutenant.

"And each and all of the above-named officers of the Engineer Corps shall have the pay of chief engineers of the Navy, as now provided.

"One hundred first assistant engineers, who shall have the relative rank of lieutenant or master; and

"One hundred second assistant engineers, who shall have the relative rank of master or ensign; and the said assistant engineers shall have the pay of first and second assistant engineers of the Navy respectively, as now provided."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 7, v. 16, p. 536; 24 Feb., 1874, c. 35, v. 18, p. 17.)

It was amended by act of February 24, 1874, section 1 (18 Stat., 17), which changed the title of first assistant engineer to passed assistant engineer, and changed the title of second assistant engineer to assistant engineer.

It was superseded by act of August 5, 1882, section 1 (22 Stat., 286), which provided that the active list of the Engineer Corps should thereafter consist of 10 chief engineers with the relative rank of captain, 15 chief engineers with the relative rank of commander, 45 chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant commander or lieutenant, 60 passed assistant engineers, and 40 assistant engineers with the relative rank for each as previously fixed by law.

By the same act it was provided that when vacancies occurred in any of the grades of the Engineer Corps, "no promotion shall be made to fill the same until the number in said grade shall be reduced below the number which is fixed by the provisions of this act for such grade."

Further changes were made by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which provided that thereafter "only one-half of the vacancies in the various grades in the Staff Corps of the Navy shall be filled by promotion until such grades shall be reduced to the numbers fixed for the several grades of the Staff Corps of the Navy" by act of August 5, 1882, above noted; by act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878), which authorized the appointment of five assistant engineers from among former graduates of the Naval Academy, and "enlarged" the Engineer Corps for the purpose of such additional appointments; and by act of December 16, 1892 (27 Stat., 405), which provided that the reduction in the numbers of the Engineer Corps provided for in act of August 5, 1882, "shall be considered as having ceased on the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-one."

The Engineer Corps was abolished by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), section 1 of which act provided "that the officers constituting the Engineer Corps of the Navy be, and are hereby, transferred to the line of the Navy, and shall be commissioned accordingly."

As the officers who constituted the Engineer Corps were transferred to the line of the Navy, it follows that the corps was abolished. But it will be observed that, while such officers were transferred to the line, the duties of engineers are not abolished. There will continue to be engineers and chief engineers, though under another name. (Denig v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 383, 392. See also note to sec. 1393, R. S.)

The appointment and assignment of line officers for engineering duty only are authorized by acts of February 16, 1914, section 21 (38 Stat., 283), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580).

The detail of an officer from the Engineer Corps as professor in any established scientific school or college was authorized to be made by the President upon application of such school or college, for the purpose of promoting a knowledge of steam engineering and iron ship-building, such details not at any time to exceed 25. (Act Feb. 26, 1879, 20 Stat., 322; see also act Jan. 13, 1891, 26 Stat., 716, and note to sec. 1225, R. S.)

Former engineer officers who under the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), perform engineering duty on shore only "shall be eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them." (Act June 30, 1914, 38 Stat., 394; act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 930; see note to sec. 1404, R. S.)

The effect of the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 930), so far as concerns former engineer officers now of the line is to remove the restriction which existed in the case of certain of said officers by which they were eligible only for engineering duty on shore. Such officers are now eligible for any shore duty assignable to other line officers of their rank. (File 26806-140, June 9, 1916.)

Line officers assigned to engineering duty only shall retain "the right to succession to command on shore in accordance with their seniority." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580.)

The detail of an officer from the Engineer Corps of the Army or Navy as superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department building was authorized by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 553.)

The transfer of the Engineer Corps of the Navy to the line by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), does not preclude the appointment of a naval officer on the active list, formerly an officer of that corps, and now restricted to the performance of engineering duty, to the superintendency of the State, War, and Navy building, as provided in the act of

March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 553). (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

The act of March 3, 1883, does not authorize the detail as superintendent of the State, War, and Navy building of a retired officer of the Navy transferred from the Engineer Corps to the line for engineering duty only by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508; see also note to sec. 1462, R. S.)

The detail of officers in the Engineer Corps in the Army or Navy to perform services under the act of March 12, 1914 (38 Stat., 305), providing for the location, construction, and operation of railroads in the Territory of Alaska, was authorized by section 1 of that act.

"Grades" and "ranks" in Engineer Corps.—Under this section it was held that chief engineers constituted only one grade in the Navy, although divided into four different ranks; that their rank changed with their seniority in that grade, but such change of rank did not constitute a change in office or grade; accordingly, that their changes in rank might be indicated by notification from the Secretary of the Navy, and that no examination or appointment or confirmation by the Senate was necessary; that the mere fact that different rank is assigned to officers whose office is designated by the same title does not necessarily put such officers in different grades; the office remains the same. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 358, citing Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S., 414, as to difference between rank and office; and explaining 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 417; see also Rutherford v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 339; and see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3, under "Advancement in rank only." As to difference between "rank" and "grade," see generally, notes to secs. 1362 and 1457, R. S.)

Sec. 1391. [Engineer Corps; appointments in, how made. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1391. Engineers shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."—(31 Aug., 1842, c. 279, s. 6, v. 5, p. 577. 3 Mar., 1845, c. 77, s. 7, v. 5, p. 794. 25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 7, v. 14, p. 223.)

It was superseded by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), by which the Engineer Corps was abolished. (See note to preceding section.)

Sec. 1392. [Engineer Corps; qualifications for appointment and promotion. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1392. No person under nineteen or over twenty-six years of age shall be appointed a second assistant engineer in the Navy; nor shall any person be appointed or promoted in the Engineer Corps until after he has been found qualified by a board of competent engineers and medical officers designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and has complied with existing regulations."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 8, v. 16, p. 536; 24 Feb., 1874, c. 35, v. 18, p. 17.)

It was superseded by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), as amended by acts of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878), and July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124), noted more fully under sections 1394 and 1521, Revised Statutes, which made provision for the filling of all vacancies in the Engineer Corps by appointment from graduates of the Naval Academy. See also note to section 1390, Revised Statutes, concerning the abolishment of the Engineer Corps, and see U. S. v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474, in which this section was cited.

Sec. 1393. [Engineer of the fleet.] The President may designate among the chief engineers in the service, and appoint to every fleet or squadron, an engineer, who shall be denominated "engineer of the fleet."—(21 Apr., 1864, c. 63, s. 7, v. 13, p. 54.)

Pay of fleet engineers was fixed at $4,400 per annum, by section 1556, Revised Statutes. See note to that section.

See section 1373, Revised Statutes, as to appointment of fleet surgeons; and section 1382, Revised Statutes, as to appointment of fleet paymasters.

Section 1393 is not repealed by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), abolishing the Engineer Corps of the Navy. The office of "engineer of the fleet" continues, notwithstanding the provision in the later statute that "the officers constituting the Engineer Corps of the Navy are transferred to the line of the Navy and shall be commissioned accordingly." The duties of chief engineer in the Navy continue, though the officers have become merged in the line and are designated by another name. (Denig v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 383.)

What officers eligible for appointment as fleet engineer.—It was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury (7 Comp. Dec., 24) that as the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), practically abolished the Engineer Corps of the Navy, and with it the grade of chief engineer, by transferring that corps to the line, the provision of section 1556 of the Revised Statutes for a special rate of pay for engineers of the fleet became inoperative, since there existed thereafter no grade from which the President might designate engineers of the fleet in pursuance of section 1393. The Court of Claims, however, in the case of Denig v. U. S., above cited, laid down a different rule and held that, where an officer of the Navy who on March 3, 1899, belonged to the grade of chief engineer, has since that date been duly designated to perform the duties of engineer of the fleet, he is entitled to the pay provided for that position by section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, notwithstanding the provision of the Navy personnel act transferring the Corps of Engineers to the line of the Navy. The comptroller subsequently followed the decision of the Court of Claims in the Denig case, and laid down the rule as follows (8 Comp. Dec., 842): "An officer of the Navy who, on March 3, 1899, belonged to the grade of chief engineers and who was duly designated as engineer of the fleet, is entitled to pay at the rate of $4,400 per annum while performing such duty." Both the Denig case and the above decision were limited by the fact that the officer was a chief engineer on March 3, 1899, the date the Navy personnel act was approved. (9 Comp. Dec., 301.)

It must be conceded, as stated by the Court of Claims, that the duties of chief engineers were not abolished by the Navy personnel act; that it was therefore in the power of the President to designate some officer to perform those duties; and that whether he designated such officer to perform them as chief engineer or by some other title is immaterial in so far as the performance of the duties is concerned. The Court of Claims has decided that the change effected by the Navy personnel act was merely a change of name or of official title; accepting this decision as a judicial interpretation of the law, the distinction is immaterial between the case of a person who was a chief engineer at the time the law was changed and who continued to perform the duties of chief engineer, and the case of a person who was a passed assistant engineer at the time and who continued to perform the duties of passed assistant engineer until promoted to lieutenant commander and assigned to the duties of chief engineer. If the former is held to be a chief engineer under a different official title, the latter may also be. The Navy Regulations proceed upon the theory that the limitation of appointments of engineers of the fleet to the grade of chief engineer no longer applies, and that the statute is satisfied if such appointments are made from among lieutenant commanders, irrespective of whether the appointees were formerly chief engineers or not. Accordingly, held that an officer of the Navy who, on March 3, 1899, belonged to the grade of passed assistant engineer with the relative rank of lieutenant, and who was subsequently promoted to the grade of lieutenant-commander and thereafter designated an engineer of the fleet, is entitled to pay at the rate of $4,400 per annum while performing such duty, under authority of section 1556, Revised Statutes. (9 Comp. Dec., 301.)

Retired officer eligible for appointment as fleet engineer.—A retired officer of the Navy is "in the service" within the meaning of section 1393, and therefore eligible for assignment to said duties. A lieutenant-commander in the Navy who was retired with the rank of commander and afterwards assigned to sea duty under the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), as fleet engineer, was entitled while serving under that assignment to the pay of a fleet engineer, which is $4,400 per annum. (12 Comp. Dec., 185; compare 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508, noted under sec. 1390, R. S.; see also note to sec. 1462, R. S.)

Appointment does not require advice and consent of the Senate.—Section 1393, Revised Statutes, authorizes the President to appoint an engineer of the fleet; the consent of the Senate not having been required by Congress, such consent is unnecessary, and the President may make such appointment without submitting the same to the Senate for confirmation. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82.)

It is universally true that when Congress, in pursuance of its authority under the provision of the Constitution (Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2), sees fit to give the sole power of appointment to the President, it does so by language appropriate to that end, such as the unqualified phrase "may appoint." Under such language the President is vested with power of appointing alone. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 136.)

For other cases, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, under, "II. Constitutional power of appointment."

Section 1393 is rather permissive of a power that existed in the President to designate fleet engineers when in his judgment they become necessary, though said section carries with it the right to the additional compensation provided for by section 1556. The necessity for the appointment of a fleet engineer must be left to the discretion of the President, and when he acts the presumption is that he has performed his duty according to law. (Denig v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 383, 393.)

Secretary of the Navy acts for the President.—The provision of the statute is satisfied when the Secretary of the Navy, acting, as he does in such matters, for the President, approves the designation of officers selected by a commander in chief to act as his general staff. (Denig v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 383, 391. See also note to sec. 1382, R. S.)

Under sections 1373, 1382, and 1393, Revised Statutes, which authorize the designation and appointment by the President of certain officers of the fleet, officers designated and appointed by an order of the commander in chief of a naval force, approved by the Secretary of the Navy, are entitled to the pay provided for those positions, respectively, from the date of such approval. (5 Comp. Dec., 888.)

Chief of Bureau of Navigation does not act for the President.—An officer ordered by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation to duty as fleet engineer is not entitled to the pay provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, for fleet engineers. To entitle an officer to the pay of fleet engineer, such designation must be made by the Secretary of the Navy acting for the President. There is no authority for the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation to act for the President in making such designation. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 14, 1912, 132 S. and A. Memo., 1994. See also Truitt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 398, and Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, 336, noted under sec. 158, R. S.)

Commander in chief acts for President when authorized by Navy Regulations.—The statute requires the appointment to be made by the President. However, the Navy Regulations of 1900 (par. 2 of art. 367), provide that "when not designated by the department, the senior engineer, medical, pay, and marine officers of the fleet or squadron may be detailed by the commander in chief to act as fleet staff officers." The Navy Regulations are issued by the authority of the President. The above provision must therefore be construed as authority from him to the commander in chief of a naval force, under certain conditions, to designate certain officers to act as fleet officers, and the action of the commander in chief in pursuance of the regulation becomes the action of the President. Where the designation of an engineer of the fleet was made in accordance with the above regulation, he is entitled to the pay of fleet engineer from the date of his designation as such; if not, the beginning of such pay dates from the time when his designation was approved by the department. (9 Comp. Dec., 301, citing 5 Comp. Dec., 889.) [Art. 367 (2) Navy Regs., 1900, was embodied in Navy Regulations, 1913, as art. R-1826 (2), except that the latter article did not authorize the commander in chief to designate the senior engineer as a fleet staff officer, the engineer of the fleet under said Regulations not being a member of the fleet staff, but instead, under arts. R-1816, 1817, being made a member of the personal staff of the commander in chief. By changes in Navy Regulations and Instructions, No. 6, of Apr. 15, 1916, the designations "personal" staff and "fleet staff" were abolished.]

The duties of a fleet engineer, as defined by Naval Instructions, are duties relating to the vessels of a fleet, in connection with their stores, engines, boilers, machinery, etc., and the exercise of supervision over the other engineer officers of the fleet, rather than duties of a peculiarly confidential and personal nature to the commander in chief; and are not in themselves of a character for the performance of which the law confers additional pay as aid. (Comp. Dec., June 10, 1914, 160 S. and A. Memo., 3256; see also act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128, as to pay of aids to rear admirals.)

An engineer of the fleet is a member of the fleet staff of a flag officer, and as such has special duties to perform, in consideration of which he receives increased pay. The position is somewhat analogous in this respect to that of aid, who is a member of the personal staff of the flag officer, and who receives additional pay for the additional services performed as such. (12 Comp. Dec., 185.) [Under Navy Regulations, 1913, the fleet engineer was not a member of the fleet staff, but of the personal staff of the flag officer. By changes in Navy Regulations and Instructions, No. 6, of Apr. 15, 1916, the designations "personal" staff and "fleet staff" were abolished.]

Sec. 1394. [Engineer Corps; appointments from cadet engineers. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1394. Cadet engineers who are graduated with credit in the scientific and mechanical class of the Naval Academy may, upon the recommendation of the academic board, be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate as second assistant engineers."—(31 Aug., 1842, c. 279, s. 6, v. 5, p. 577; 4 July, 1864, c. 252, s. 2, v. 13, p. 393; 24 Feb., 1874, c. 35, v. 18, p. 17.)

It was amended by act of February 24, 1874, section 1 (18 Stat., 17), which changed the title of second assistant engineer to "assistant engineer."

It was superseded by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), which provided that thereafter no appointments of cadet-engineers should be made to the Naval Academy, but that all undergraduates at the Academy should be styled naval cadets, and final graduates of the academy should be appointed to the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy, and to the Marine Corps, as necessary to fill vacancies.

Said act was in turn superseded by act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878), which made provision for separating students at the Naval Academy into a "line and Marine Corps division," and an "Engineer Corps division," and provided that "the vacancies in the lowest grades of the commissioned officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy" should be filled "by appointments from the final graduates of the engineer division at the end of their six years' course," and that "if the number of vacancies in the lowest grades aforesaid, occurring in any year shall be greater than the number of final graduates of that year, the surplus vacancies shall be filled from the final graduates of following years, as they shall become available."

The latter act was amended by act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124), which provided that, in case the number of vacancies in the grade of assistant engineer should exceed the number of naval cadets in the engineer division of the class finally graduated in any one year, the Secretary of the Navy should select a number equal to such excess from the final graduates of said class in the line division, and such final graduates should be appointed to fill vacancies in the grade of assistant engineer.

The appointment of cadet engineers to the Naval Academy was authorized by section 1522, Revised Statutes. The act of August 5, 1882, above noted, prohibited further appointments of cadet-engineers and changed the title of all undergraduates at the Naval Academy to "naval cadets." This title of naval cadet was changed to "midshipman" by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686).

The Engineer Corps was abolished by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, noted above, under section 1390, Revised Statutes.

See section 1521, Revised Statutes, and U. S. v. Redgrave (116 U. S., 474), in which this section was cited.

Sec. 1395. [Chaplains; number and appointment of.] There shall be in the Navy, for the public armed vessels of the United States in actual service not exceeding twenty-four chaplains, who shall be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.—(21 Apr., 1806, c. 35, s. 3, v. 2, p. 390. 16 Apr., 1814, c. 58, s. 5, v. 3, p. 125. 4 Aug., 1842, c. 121, s. 1, v. 5, p. 500.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403), which created the grade of acting chaplain in the Navy and provided that "hereafter the total number of chaplains and acting chaplains in the Navy shall be one to each twelve hundred and fifty of the total personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps as fixed by law, including midshipmen, apprentice seamen, and naval prisoners." The same act provided that "original appointments" should be made by the Secretary of the Navy in the grade of acting chaplain, and that acting chaplains should be commissioned as chaplains after three years' sea service, and after successfully passing the prescribed examination. "Provided, That not more than seven acting chaplains shall be commissioned chaplains in any one year." The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), which temporarily increased the personnel of the Navy, provided (sec. 4) that "temporary chaplains and temporary acting chaplains in the Navy may be appointed for service during the period of the war in the proportion of the personnel of the Navy as now prescribed by existing law."

Pay of chaplains: See act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), providing that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service." (See also note to sec. 1556, R. S.)

Rank of chaplains: See act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403).

Sec. 1396. [Chaplains; qualifications of.] A chaplain shall not be less than twenty-one nor more than thirty-five years of age at the time of his appointment.—(14 July, 1862, c. 164, s. 7, v. 12, p. 565.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403), which provided that chaplains should be commissioned from acting chaplains who shall have had three years' sea service, and shall have established their physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy by examination by a board of chaplains and medical officers of the Navy.

Temporary chaplains and temporary acting chaplains appointed for war service in accordance with act of May 22, 1917, section 5 (40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 716), shall be not more than 50 years of age. Special age limits were also prescribed for officers transferred to the Regular Navy from the temporary Navy and Naval Reserve Force, by act of June 4, 1920, section 5 (41 Stat., 835).

Age of candidates for appointment.—See cases noted under section 1370, Revised Statutes.

The act of June 30, 1914, does not prescribe the age limit of appointees as acting chaplains. Section 1396, Revised Statutes, prescribes that chaplains on the date of appointment as such shall be between the ages of 21 and 35 years, and not being specifically repealed, and not being in conflict with the act of 1914, still governs appointments to the grade of chaplain. If, after serving at least three years in the grade of acting chaplain, appointees as chaplains must be between the ages of 21 and 35 years, the act of 1914 impliedly requires that appointees as acting chaplains shall be of such an age at the time of appointment that when they have served at sea as acting chaplains for at least three years it will be possible for them to qualify under the terms of section 1396 for appointment as chaplains. (File 15721-7, Aug. 31, 1914.)

The Secretary of the Navy has instructed that acting chaplains at the time of appointment as such shall be between the ages of 21 and 31½ years. (File 15721-15, Feb. 11, 1918.)

Sec. 1397. [Chaplains; form of worship.] Every chaplain shall be permitted to conduct public worship according to the manner and forms of the church of which he may be a member.—(1 June, 1860, c. 67, s. 1, v. 12, p. 24.)

Commanders of vessels and naval stations to which chaplains are attached shall cause divine service to be performed on Sunday whenever the weather and other circumstances allow it to be done. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 2.)

Officers, seamen, and others in the naval service are earnestly recommended diligently to attend at every performance of the worship of Almighty God. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 2.) Students at Naval Academy not to pursue studies on Sunday. (Sec. 1526, R. S.)

General courts-martial are enjoined to sit from day to day "Sundays excepted." (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 45.) Unnecessary work on Sundays by persons under naval jurisdiction is prohibited by Naval Instructions, 1913 (art. 86), and General Order No. 456, March 15, 1919.

Unbecoming behavior during divine service shall be punished as a general or summary court-martial may direct. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 3.)

Sec. 1398. [Chaplains; annual report by.] Chaplains shall report annually to the Secretary of the Navy the official services performed by them.—(1 June, 1860, c. 67, s. 1, v. 12, p. 24.)

Neglect or refusal of any officer to make any report within the time prescribed by law is punishable by fine of not more than $1,000.

(Sec. 101, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1107.)

Sec. 1399. [Professors of Mathematics, number of.] The number of professors of mathematics in the Navy shall not exceed twelve.—(3 Aug., 1848, c. 121, s. 12, v. 9, p. 272. 31 May, 1872, c. 240, s. 1, v. 17, p. 192.

“Hereafter no further appointments shall be made to the corps of professors of mathematics, and that corps shall cease to exist upon the death, resignation, or dismissal of the officers now carried in that corps on the active and retired lists of the Navy.” (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 577.)

Rank of professors of mathematics: See section 1480, Revised Statutes.

Historical note.—The act of August 3, 1848, section 12 (9 Stat., 272), provided, “That the number of professors of mathematics in the Navy shall not exceed twelve; that they shall be appointed and commissioned by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall perform such duties as may be assigned them by order of the Secretary of the Navy, at the Naval School, the Observatory, and on board ships of war, in instructing the midshipmen of the Navy or otherwise.”

The act of May 21, 1864, section 3 (13 Stat., 85), provided, “That there shall be added three professors to the number of professors of mathematics now authorized by law, who shall be appointed and commissioned as now provided by law, and who shall be a professor of ethics and English studies, a professor of Spanish, and a professor of drawing, at the Naval Academy.”

By act of April 17, 1866, section 7 (14 Stat., 38), it was provided “that hereafter no vacancy in the grade of professor of mathematics in the Navy shall be filled.”

The act of May 31, 1872 (17 Stat., 192), provided that “there shall be three professors of mathematics who shall have the relative rank of captain; four that of commander; and five that of lieutenant commander or lieutenant.”

The act of 1848, with reference to the number of professors of mathematics, is embodied in section 1399 Revised Statutes; the act of 1864, concerning additional professors for duty at the Naval Academy, is embodied in section 1528, Revised Statutes; and the act of 1872, conferring relative rank upon twelve professors of mathematics, was carried into the Revised Statutes as section 1480.

[The interpretation of these sections of the Revised Statutes has been, in practice, that section 1399 limits the total number of professors of mathematics to twelve; and that section 1528 relates to the assignment to duty of three of these twelve professors of mathematics.]

The appointment of additional professors of mathematics has been authorized in specific cases as follows:

By act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 345), the appointment was authorized of a professor of mathematics of the rank of commander, “to be an extra number in the list of professors of mathematics in the Navy.”

By act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 579), the appointment was authorized of “two additional professors of mathematics in the Navy, who shall be extra numbers in said list.”

By act of May 6, 1910 (36 Stat., 352), the appointment was authorized of a particular individual (Guy K. Calhoun) “as additional professor of mathematics in the Navy, as an extra number.”

By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 906), the appointment was authorized of two particular individuals (Nathaniel Matson Terry and William Woolsey Johnson) as “professors in the corps of professors of mathematics in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant as extra numbers not in the line of promotion,” and it was further provided that in these cases “limitations as to age at the time of appointment shall not apply nor shall age constitute a claim for retirement.” [“Limitations as to age” for appointment as professor of mathematics are not fixed by any law, other than that prescribing the age for retirement of officers. See note to section 1444, Revised Statutes.]

Increases in number of professors of mathematics not favored.—The Navy Department considers it inadvisable to make any further increase in the corps of professors of mathematics. There is no need for such increase, either at the Naval Academy or for the service at large. There are already certain additional professors of mathematics, some of whom are on duty at the Naval Academy, and the policy of the department is to reduce to a minimum the number of instructors at the academy who are not seagoing naval officers. (File 26289-11, Dec. 17, 1911. See note to sec. 1401, R. S. and see act of Aug. 29, 1916, noted above.)

Sec. 1400. [Professors of mathematics; appointment of. Obsolete.]

This section provided as follows:

“SEC. 1400. Professors of mathematics shall be appointed and commissioned by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.”—(3 Aug., 1848, c. 121, s. 12, v. 9, p. 272.)

It is rendered obsolete by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), quoted under section 1399, Revised Statutes.

Appointments as professors of mathematics were prohibited unless appointees had passed a physical examination before a board of naval surgeons and a professional examination before a board of professors of mathematics in the Navy, and received a favorable report from said boards. (Act Jan. 20, 1881, 21 Stat., 317. See 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 103, noted under sec. 1401, R. S.)

See note to section 1528, Revised Statutes, concerning civilian professors at the Naval Academy.

Civilian professors not entitled to preference in appointment.—Section 1528, Revised Statutes, does not entitle civilian professors of English, Spanish, and drawing at the Naval Academy to be promoted as a matter of right to the corps of professors of mathematics, for assignment to these subjects. The contention that the appointing power is thus restricted in its selection to the civilian professors serving at the academy is without support in the law or the practice of the Navy Department extending through a long period of years. Accordingly, held that a vacancy existing in the regular corps of professors of mathematics in the Navy may be filled by the appointment of any candidate possessing the necessary qualifications, and that no person can claim that he is entitled to be appointed thereto as a matter of law. (File 26289-11, Dec. 17, 1911.)

The provisions of section 1528, Revised Statutes, concerning the assignment of three professors of mathematics to special duty, relates to the performance of duty by such professors after appointment, and does not purport to restrict the appointing power in the matter of filling vacancies. (File 26289-11, Dec. 17, 1911.)

Candidate must qualify physically for general duty.—A candidate for appointment

as professor of mathematics to fill a vacancy in said corps was found by the board of medical examiners "physically qualified to perform all his duties as professor of mathematics, U. S. Navy, for duty in connection with instruction in drawing at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md." Held, that such a qualified finding is erroneous and irregular. Should the candidate be appointed he would be commissioned as an officer of the Navy and be subject to all the laws and regulations governing commissioned officers, including the benefit of the retirement laws and the provisions of section 1401, Revised Statutes, relating to the duties to which professors of mathematics may be assigned. The duty to be assigned this particular individual, should he be commissioned, is not a question which the board of medical examiners is authorized to consider in connection with his physical qualifications for appointment. The finding of the board in this case, if approved, might be construed as a restriction upon the department in exercising its discretion in the matter of assignment to duty of the candidate after his appointment and commissioning as a professor of mathematics of the Navy. Such a condition of affairs would operate as a dangerous precedent in making the assignment to duty of officers of the corps of professors of mathematics permanent, would have the practical effect of reducing the number of officers of that corps who would be available for the duty contemplated by law and by regulations, and would be in contravention of the existing laws and regulations. (File 26289-13:2, Aug. 3 and July 28, 1913.)

Sec. 1401. [Professors of mathematics; duties of.] Professors of mathematics shall perform such duties as may be assigned them by order of the Secretary of the Navy, at the Naval Academy, the Naval Observatory, and on board ships of war, in instructing the midshipmen of the Navy, or otherwise.—(3 Aug., 1848, c. 121, s. 12, v. 9, p. 272.)

Nautical Almanac: Secretary of the Navy may place the supervision of the Nautical Almanac in charge of any officer or professor of mathematics in the Navy who is competent for that service. (Sec. 436, R. S.)

Naval Academy: Three professors of mathematics shall be assigned to duty at the Naval Academy, one as professor of ethics and English studies, one as professor of the Spanish language, and one as professor of drawing. (Sec. 1528, R. S.)

Assignment to duty governed by this section.—While the law provides that "three professors of mathematics shall be assigned to duty at the Naval Academy, one as professor of ethics and English studies, one as professor of the Spanish language, and one as professor of drawing" (sec. 1528, R. S.), it is also provided by another section of the Revised Statutes (sec. 1401) that "professors of mathematics shall perform such duties as may be assigned them by order of the Secretary of the Navy, at the Naval Academy, the Naval Observatory, and on board ships of war, in instructing the midshipmen of the Navy, or otherwise." Under the contemporaneous and long continued construction of the Navy Department, the former provision has been treated as advisory and not mandatory. (File 26289-11, Dec. 17, 1911; see also note to sec. 1400, R. S.; and see notes to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, under "I. General powers of Congress and President," and Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, under "I. Powers of Commander in Chief.")

"Professors of mathematics" a misnomer; duties not necessarily mathematical.—The heads of the departments of ethics and English studies, of Spanish and other modern languages, and of drawing, at the Naval Academy, should, although the title is a misnomer, be commissioned as "professors of mathematics" (sec. 1528, R. S.), after passing the examinations required by the act of January 20, 1881 (21 Stat., 317). The purpose of section 1528, that persons known to the law and the naval register as "professors of mathematics" should be engaged in teaching these other branches of learning, is too obvious for construction. That the name did not indicate the sole duty of the office is further apparent from the express declaration of the act of August 3, 1848, section 12 (now secs. 1399-1401, R. S.), "that the number of professors of mathematics in the Navy shall not exceed twelve; that they shall be appointed and commissioned by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall perform such duties as may be assigned them by order of the Secretary of the Navy at the naval school, the observatory, and on board ships of war, or otherwise." Section 1528, Revised Statutes, shows that, certainly as to three of these professors, the duties to be assigned them were not to be mathematical in their nature. (17 Op. Attv. Gen., 103.)

Policy of the Navy Department.—In practice the policy of the Navy Department has been to secure seagoing officers as instructors at the Naval Academy, and to reduce to a minimum the number of instructors at the Academy who are not seagoing naval officers; and for this reason it has been considered inadvisable to make any further increase in the corps of professors of mathematics. (File 26289-11, Dec. 17, 1911.) [But see provision in naval appropriation acts, under "Naval Academy," that "no part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as an instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform duties which were performed by civilian instructors on January first, nineteen hundred and thirteen." This was contained in the naval appropriation acts of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 906), June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 408), March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 947), August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 607), and March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1187). It was omitted in the naval appropriation act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 733).]

See act of August 29, 1916, noted under section 1399, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1402. [Construction Corps; number and appointment of naval constructors.] The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint naval constructors, who shall have rank and pay as officers of the Navy.—(25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 7, v. 14, p. 223. 3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 9, v. 16, p. 536.)

Appointments as naval constructors are to be made by promotion of assistant naval constructors who have had not less than eight nor more than fourteen years' service as assistant naval constructors. (Act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 10, 30 Stat., 1006.)

Appointments as naval constructors are to be made "from the highest members" in the Construction Corps, "according to seniority." (Sec. 1480, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 27, 1877, 19 Stat., 244.)

Number of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors on the active list was fixed at 40 by act March 3, 1899, section 10 (30 Stat., 1006). This number was increased by act July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 683), which authorized the appointment of 6 additional assistant naval constructors. A further increase was made by act March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), which authorized the appointment of 29 "additional naval constructors and assistant naval constructors, in all seventy-five." By act March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 945), the transfer was authorized to the grade of assistant naval constructor of not more than 24 line officers of the Navy, making a total of 99 naval constructors and assistant naval constructors authorized by law. (See note to sec. 1403, R. S.) By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576, 577), it was provided that "the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following staff corps, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be based on percentages of the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy as follows: * * * Construction Corps, five per centum. * * * The total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following mentioned staff corps at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the various grades of the respective corps as follows: * * * Construction Corps: One-half naval constructors with the rank of rear admiral to eight and one-half naval constructors with the rank of captain, to fourteen naval constructors with the rank of commander, to seventy-seven naval constructors and assistant naval constructors with rank below commander. * * * When there is an odd number of officers in the grade or rank of rear admiral in the line, or in each corps, the lower division thereof shall include the excess in number, except where there is but one. Wherever a final fraction occurs in computing the authorized number of any corps, grade, or rank in the naval service, the nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number: Provided, That at least one officer shall be allowed in each grade or rank. For the purpose of determining the authorized number of officers in any grade or rank of the line or of the staff corps, there shall be excluded from consideration those officers carried by law as additional numbers, including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, and nothing contained herein shall be held to reduce below that heretofore authorized by law the number of officers in any grade or rank in the staff corps." The temporary appointment of additional officers during the period of the existing war was authorized by the act of May 22, 1917, section 4

(40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), which also authorized temporary appointments and promotions to fill, during the period of the war, the deficiency existing prior to May 22, 1917, in the total number of commissioned officers authorized by the act of August 29, 1916. By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834), it was provided "that the number of commissioned officers of the line, permanent, temporary, and reserve on active duty shall not exceed 4 per centum of the total authorized enlisted strength of the Regular Navy, and the number of staff officers on active duty of whatever kind shall be in the same proportions as authorized by existing law. * * * That nothing herein shall be construed as reducing the permanent commissioned * * * strength of the Regular Navy as authorized by existing law."

Pay of all officers of the Navy is prescribed by act of May 13, 1908, and amendments, noted under section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Rank of naval constructors is fixed by act of March 3, 1899, section 10, as amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577). Advancement in rank of staff officers, up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander, is regulated by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576). Advancement to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the Staff Corps of the Navy are to be made by selection upon recommendation of a board of officers of the corps concerned. (Act of July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718.)

"Vacancies in the Construction Corps shall be filled in the manner now prescribed by law, at such annual rate as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 577.)

Number not to be increased by implication.—It will be observed from the statutes that in legislating with respect to naval constructors Congress has been very careful to limit their number. The number thus fixed by law should not be increased without legislation sufficiently explicit to clearly justify it. When Congress has seen fit to make increases in the numbers of officers in the Navy, either generally or in particular corps or grades, it has generally used specific and apt language to accomplish that object. Accordingly, held that where, in accordance with law, a naval constructor with the rank of captain, who had served as Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, with the rank of rear admiral and title of Chief Constructor while so serving, was given a permanent commission with the title of Chief Constructor and the rank of rear admiral, and continued on the active list as such, although no longer Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, the sole purpose of the law authorizing such action was to make permanent the rank, title, and emoluments which this officer had theretofore temporarily held as chief of bureau, and that Congress did not intend thereby to increase the number of officers in the Construction Corps of the Navy; and therefore the commissioning of this officer as a Chief Constructor in the Navy with the rank of rear admiral did not create a new grade in the Navy, nor did the same fact create a vacancy in the grade of naval constructor with the rank of captain or in the total number of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors as provided by law. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 526. The act of June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 607, 608, providing for the issuance of permanent commissions to officers, under the circumstances in this case, as Chief Constructor with the rank of rear admiral, was repealed by act August 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 328. See note to sec. 421, R. S.)

Sec. 1403. [Construction Corps; appointment of assistant naval constructors.]

Cadet engineers who are graduated with credit in the scientific and mechanical class of the Naval Academy may, upon the recommendation of the academic board, be immediately appointed as assistant naval constructors.—(4 July, 1864, c. 252, s. 2, v. 13, p. 393.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), which provided that thereafter no appointments of cadet-engineers should be made to the Naval Academy, but that all undergraduates at the Academy should be styled "naval cadets." This title of naval cadet was changed to "midshipman" by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686).

Authority is given the Secretary of the Navy by section 1522, Revised Statutes, to make provision by regulations for educating at the Naval Academy as naval constructors such persons as may show a peculiar aptitude therefor, and to afford such persons all proper facilities for such a "scientific mechanical education" as will fit them for said profession.

Appointments to the grade of assistant naval constructor may be made by transfer from officers of the line of the Navy who have had not less than three years' service in the grade of ensign and have taken, or are taking, satisfactorily, a post-graduate course in naval architecture under orders from the Secretary of the Navy; the total increase in the number of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors by reason of such transfers not to exceed 24, of which not more than 5 may be made in any one calendar year. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 945.) By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), it was provided that "vacancies in the Construction Corps shall be filled in the manner now prescribed by law, at such annual rate as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe," and "that hereafter ensigns of not less than one year's service as such shall be eligible for transfer to the Construction Corps."

By act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103), it is provided that "midshipmen on graduation * * * may be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the lowest commissioned grades of the * * * staff corps of the Navy."

Number of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors: See note to section 1402. Revised Statutes.

Rank of assistant naval constructors is fixed by act of March 3, 1899, section 10, as amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577).

Sec. 1404. [Construction Corps; duties of. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1404. Naval constructors may be required to perform duty at any navy yard or other station."—(3 Mar., 1845, c. 77, s. 2, v. 5, p. 794.)

It was superseded by the following provision in the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 394), repeated in act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 930): " * * * officers of the Construction Corps shall be eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them."

"Line officers may be detailed for duty under staff officers in the manufacturing and repair departments of the navy yards and naval stations, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed." (Act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 614.)

Sea duty.—"Naval constructors and assistant naval constructors shall when practicable be detailed for service afloat in such fleets or on such repair ships as the department may designate." (Art. R-3122, Navy Regs., 1913.)

General nature of duties.—Naval constructors are appointed by the President and have rank and pay as officers of the Navy, and may be required to perform duty at any navy yard or other station. Their duties in general are to have general superintendence and charge of the construction and repair of all ships, and to cause thorough examination at least once a month of all ships in reserve to see that they are carefully guarded against deterioration or decay. (Stocker v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 300.)

Performance of duty under War Department.—The statute creating the office of naval constructor is broad enough to include the requirement of service on vessels in the employment of the War Department, and gives the Government the right to demand such services when required, and at such times and places as may seem expedient; and this right is not affected by the omission to include such duty by specific mention in the Navy Regulations. (Stocker v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 300.)

Where a naval constructor is detailed by the Secretary of the Navy to inspect a vessel, the fact that she is chartered by the War Department as an Army transport does not burden the officer with services not incident to his office. The duties required of him were of the general nature performed by him in the Navy. Additional compensation for such inspection service is prohibited by Revised Statutes, section 1765. (Stocker v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 300.)

The Army and Navy constitute the military force of the Government, and their duties are to cooperate when necessity or emergency demands it. For this purpose they are a unit under the authority of one Commander in Chief. The Army has no officer corresponding to a naval constructor, and when it becomes necessary to use ships at sea to transport the troops of the Army it becomes and is the duty of the Navy, with all its equipment and forces, when properly directed, to give necessary assistance and protection to such transportation. (Stocker v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 300.)

See also section 1437, Revised Statutes, providing that "the President may detail, temporarily, three competent naval officers for the service of the War Department in the inspection of transport vessels, and for such other services as may be designated by the Secretary of War." (This statute was not cited by the Court of Claims in the case above noted.)

Military duties are not compatible with grades of the Construction Corps.—Duties of a purely military nature, such as contemplated by Article R-1003, paragraphs 1 and 4, Navy Regulations, 1913 (military command and senior officer present), are not compatible with the grades of the Construction Corps, and are not, therefore, within the scope of the clause above quoted from the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915. (File 26806-140, June 9, 1916.)

The law does not say that officers of the Construction Corps shall be eligible for any shore duty which they may individually be competent to perform; but for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade. It is not the competency of the particular officer to perform certain duties, but the compatibility of those duties with the grade of naval constructor that governs. Military duties, such as are required of the commandant of a navy yard and his aid or executive, are not compatible with the grade of naval constructor, even though there may be found in that grade some officer who by special training or experience might be individually competent to perform such duties. (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915.)

Construction officer can not be commandant of navy yard.—Section 1542, Revised Statutes, provides that the commandants of the several navy yards are to be officers of the line; that is, they are to be "officers not below the grade of commander," which grade exists only in the line of the Navy. In conformity with this law, line officers have from time immemorial been selected for duty as commandants of navy yards. The duties of commandant have thus become part of the duties of the line. The Navy Regulations provide that, in the absence of the commandant, "the line officer next in rank," if not restricted to special duty, shall become the acting commandant. The words in the act of June 30, 1914, "compatible with their rank and grade," which Congress wrote into the law evidently for some purpose, would be rendered meaningless if naval constructors could nevertheless be assigned to duty which, from its very nature, as well as in accordance with military usage and specific provisions of law and regulations, belongs exclusively to other grades. Any argument which might be advanced to show that it is compatible with the grade of naval constructor to perform the duties of commandant, might be urged with equal force to show that it is compatible with said grade to perform the duties of the pay corps, medical corps, professors of mathematics, chaplains, or civil engineers. The duties performed by the different grades in the Navy are well understood, are defined by regulations, orders, and customs of the service, as well as by law in some cases. It must be presumed that Congress in enacting the act of 1914 legislated with reference to the duties of the various grades as they then existed, and if it had intended that naval constructors could be assigned to duties belonging to other grades, it would have omitted the restriction expressed by the phrase "compatible with their rank and grade." These words were put into the law as a limitation upon the Secretary's authority; they must be given effect; and they exclude assignment of naval constructors to duty in command of a navy yard. (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915.)

Construction officer can not be aid or executive of commandant or succeed to command.—Section 1469, Revised Statutes, which limits details as aid or executive of commandants at naval stations to officers of the line, is not repealed or modified by the act of June 30, 1914, which authorizes the assignment of construction officers to duties "compatible with their rank and grade." (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915.)

A naval constructor can not under the law be assigned to duty as aid or executive to the commandant of a naval station, nor succeed to command of a naval station in the absence of the commandant. (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915.)

The duties of aid to a commandant may be compatible with the rank of a construction officer, but are not compatible with his grade. All commissioned officers of the Navy, both of the line and staff, have rank, and therefore, if rank only were considered, there would be nothing incompatible in ordering a naval constructor to perform any duty which might be assigned to any officer of corresponding rank in the line or in any staff corps. Grade and not rank is the distinguishing characteristic by which the duties of commissioned officers are known and defined. A naval constructor may have the rank of commander; so also may a medical officer in command of a naval hospital. Therefore it would not be incompatible with the rank of a naval constructor to command a naval hospital, but certainly it would be incompatible with his grade to perform such duty. Similarly with reference to officers of the line; regardless of rank, the military duties performed by such officers are as incompatible with the grade of naval constructor as are the duties of a medical officer in command of a naval hospital. A naval constructor assigned to duty as aid or executive to the commandant would, in so acting, perform duties of a purely military character, duties which have always been limited to the line, duties of so important a character that the law itself says they shall be performed not only by "a line officer," but "when not impracticable" by the line officer

"next in rank" to the commandant; duties which are wholly foreign to the grade of naval constructor, which are not embraced in a naval constructor's special training and experience, and which are as incompatible with the grade of naval constructor as are the duties of that grade incompatible with the grade of a line officer. (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915. As to distinction between "rank" and "grade" see generally, notes to secs. 1362 and 1457, R. S.)

Construction officer can not be assigned duties belonging to other grades, either in line or staff.—Staff officers presumably know something about the duties performed by line officers, and line officers know something about the duties performed by staff officers; but these officers are all specially trained in the duties pertaining to their respective grades, and these are the duties which they are supposed to be fitted to perform. A line officer might individually know something about the treatment prescribed by medical officers for certain ailments, but the law does not contemplate that he should be intrusted with the responsibility of treating such ailments. Similarly the law does not contemplate that a medical officer or naval constructor should be intrusted with the responsibility of discharging the duties for which line officers have been specially trained and equipped. Congress, in deliberately and specifically limiting the duties of construction officers to such as are "compatible" with their "grade" did not intend that they should be assigned to duties belonging to other grades, either in the line or staff. (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915.)

Construction officers may exercise command in the line or other staff corps incident to performance of their duties.—The act of June 30, 1914, limits the detail of officers of the construction corps in accordance with its provisions, to "shore duty" and to such shore duty as is "compatible with their rank and grade." The intention of this law was evidently to enlarge the power of the Secretary of the Navy in assigning construction officers to duty, but at the same time to prohibit their assignment to duty of a wholly different character from that which they had customarily performed. The only effect of the statute was to remove any disability which had previously stood in the way of assigning construction officers to duties pertaining to their grade. This disability was found in the law prohibiting staff officers from exercising command in the line or in other staff corps [sec. 1488, R. S., as amended by act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 7, 30 Stat., 1006]. A clause in the naval appropriation act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 614), partially removed this disability, but was restricted in its scope, limiting the detail of line officers under staff officers to the manufacturing and repair departments of navy yards and naval stations. It had the same effect as if it had specifically stated that line officers may not be detailed for duty under staff officers except in the manufacturing and repair departments of the navy yards and naval stations. The act of 1914 is broader, and construction officers may, by its authority, be detailed to any shore duty "compatible with their rank and grade," notwithstanding that they are thereby placed in command of line officers or officers of other staff corps. (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915.)

The only effect of said act of June 30, 1914, is to remove the obstacle which theretofore prevented the assignment of construction officers to duty properly embraced by their grade, where the performance of such duty might involve the exercise of command in the line or other staff corps. (File 5038-20:1, Jan. 18, 1915.)

Sec. 1405. [Warrant officers; number and appointment of.] The President may appoint for the vessels in actual service as many boatswains, gunners, sailmakers, and carpenters as may, in his opinion, be necessary and proper.—(21 Apr., 1806, c. 35, s. 3, v. 2, p. 390. 4 Aug., 1842, c. 121, s. 1, v. 5, p. 500. 3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 1, v. 9, p. 172.)

Acting appointments as warrant officers. See note to section 1410, Revised Statutes.

Appointments from enlisted men provided for by sections 1407 and 1417, Revised Statutes.

Duties of warrant officers. See sections 1416 and 1438, Revised Statutes.

Pay of warrant officers. See section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Rank of warrant officers. See section 1491, Revised Statutes.

Temporary appointments as warrant officers of the Navy may be made by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 5, 40 Stat., 85, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 716.)

Sailmakers.—So much of this section as provides for the appointment of sailmakers has become obsolete, there being no officer in that grade now in the Navy, and no such appointments having been made since May 4, 1888. (See Annual Navy Registers.) The Navy Register of 1917 (pp. 158, 159) shows one officer serving in the grade of chief sailmaker.

(See note below as to the promotion of warrant officers.)

“The sailmaker was, as in the British service, to report the condition of the sails to the boatswain. He has at the present day ceased, for obvious reasons, to have importance in the Navy.” (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 620.)

Machinists.—The appointment of 100 warrant machinists was authorized by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 14 (30 Stat., 1007). The appointment of 50 additional warrant machinists was authorized by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108); and provision for the appointment of as many warrant machinists “as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint, not to exceed twenty in any one year,” was made by act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 324), repeated in the naval appropriation act for each subsequent year until the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 575), when the limitation upon the number to be appointed in any one year was omitted.

The title of “warrant machinist” was changed to “machinist” by act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 771).

Pharmacists.—The appointment by the Secretary of the Navy of 25 pharmacists in the Hospital Corps of the Navy, “with the rank, pay, and privileges of warrant officers, removable in the discretion of the Secretary,” was authorized by act of June 17, 1898, section 1 (30 Stat., 474). By section 4 of the same act (30 Stat., 475), it was provided that “all benefits derived from existing laws, or that may hereafter be allowed by law, to other warrant officers or enlisted men in the Navy shall be allowed in the same manner to the warrant officers or enlisted men in the Hospital Corps of the Navy.”

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572), the President was authorized to appoint “as many pharmacists as may be deemed necessary,” who “shall have the same rank, pay, and allowances as are now or may hereafter be allowed other warrant officers.”

Pay clerks.—A grade of warrant officers designated as pay clerks was established by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942), appointments thereto being regularly made by promotion from the grade of acting pay clerk; and it was provided “that pay clerks and acting pay clerks shall have the same pay, allowances, and other benefits as are now or may hereafter be allowed other warrant officers and acting warrant officers, respectively.”

The total number of pay clerks was not specifically fixed, but the act above cited provided that the total number of chief pay clerks, pay clerks, and acting pay clerks shall not exceed one for each 250 enlisted men allowed by law in the Navy.

Clerks to assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps are not warrant officers.—The provision of the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942), in regard to warranting pay clerks of the Navy, is not sufficiently broad to include clerks to assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps. The fact that the grades of warrant officers, at the time of the statute's enactment, existed exclusively in the Navy proper, and that there were no warrant officers designated as such by law in the Marine Corps, strongly accentuates the view that the Marine Corps was not in contemplation of Congress when this legislation was enacted. It is clear that Congress did not intend its legislation with reference to clerks to pay officers in the Navy to apply to clerks to assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps, but on the contrary intended that the pay, allowances, and other benefits allowed the latter class of clerks should be the same as in the Army. (File 5460-81, May 12, 1916. By act July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 735), the title of clerks for assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps was changed to “pay clerk,” and it was provided that pay clerks “shall hereafter receive the same pay, allowances, and other benefits now provided by law for clerks for assistant paymasters.”)

The warrant grades of marine gunner and quartermaster clerk were established by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), which provided that officers in said grades "shall have the rank and receive the pay, allowances, and privileges of retirement of warrant officers in the Navy."

Mates are not warrant officers.—See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes.

Promotion of warrant officers.—Boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers were, after ten years from date of warrant, to be commissioned as chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, and chief sailmakers, to rank with but after ensign, by act of March 3, 1899, section 12 (30 Stat., 1007). This provision was amended by act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 346), providing for the promotion of the officers mentioned after six years from date of warrant, instead of ten years, as theretofore.

Machinists are, after six years from date of warrant, to be commissioned as chief machinists. (Act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 771.)

Pharmacists were, after six years from date of warrant, to be commissioned as chief pharmacists, by a provision in the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 345). Under that provision it was held that the total number of pharmacists and chief pharmacists was limited to 25, that being the maximum number fixed by previous law for the grade of pharmacist, and the provision for the promotion of pharmacists not being intended to increase the total number of officers in the Navy. (File 27213-3, May 6, 1913; 27213-4, Dec. 5, 1913.) Prior to the act of August 22, 1912, the commissioning of pharmacists as chief pharmacists was not authorized, as sections one and four of the act approved June 17, 1898 (noted above under "Pharmacists"), did not have that effect. (File 27213, Apr. 24, 1909.) By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572, 573), it was provided that "pharmacists shall, after six years from the date of warrant, be commissioned chief pharmacists after passing satisfactorily such examinations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, and shall, when so commissioned, have the same rank, pay, and allowances as now or may hereafter be allowed other commissioned warrant officers"; and the restriction upon the number of pharmacists and chief pharmacists was removed.

Pay clerks are, after six years' service as such, to be commissioned as chief pay clerks. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942.)

By act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 716), temporarily increasing the number of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, it was provided (sec. 5) that "the additional temporary officers authorized in the various grades and ranks of the Navy and Marine Corps in accordance with the next preceding section may be temporarily appointed to serve in the grades or ranks to which appointed or promoted * * * by temporary appointment of * * * warrant officers * * * of the Navy, and warrant officers * * * of the Marine Corps."

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834, 835), provision was made for the issuance of permanent commissions and warrants to officers who served temporarily in commissioned and warrant grades during the World War.

Commissioned warrant officers on the active list with creditable records shall, after six years from date of commission, receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade); and after twelve years from date of commission the pay and allowances of a lieutenant. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 578.)

Ensigns and assistant paymasters appointed from warrant officers.—The appointment annually of not more than six ensigns from among the boatswains, gunners, or machinists, having not less than six years' service as warrant officers, was authorized by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1129). This provision was amended by act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), providing that 12 ensigns may be so appointed annually instead of 6. It was further amended by act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 346), providing that such appointments may be made from among boatswains, gunners, and machinists having four years' service as warrant officers, instead of six years as previously required. It was again amended by act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 771), which provided that chief boatswains, chief gunners, and chief machinists should be eligible for appointment as ensigns under the same restrictions as imposed by law upon the appointment of boatswains, gunners, and machinists to that grade.

The law does not require that warrant officers who qualify for ensign be commissioned as of July 30 of each year. By act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1129), it was provided that "whenever in view of the vacancies in the grade of ensign on July thirtieth of any year unfilled by graduates of the Naval Academy, the Secretary of the Navy shall so recommend, the President may appoint to that grade, as of July thirtieth, from among the boatswains, gunners, or warrant machinists, not exceeding six in any one calendar year." The same act contained restrictions concerning the qualifications of warrant officers eligible for such appointment as ensign. At the time this law was enacted the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign were limited by law. However, by act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), the appointment was authorized of such total numbers of lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns as may be qualified for said grades under existing law, thereby making said grades unlimited in number. In the same act it was provided that "hereafter, in each calendar year there may, under the restrictions imposed by existing law, be appointed from the boatswains, gunners, and warrant machinists of the Navy, twelve ensigns." This act amended the prior law in so far as same authorized appointments of ensigns from warrant officers to be made only in the case of vacancies existing in the grade of ensign on July 30 of each year and required that such appointments be made as of July 30. Accordingly, since the act of 1903, it has not been required that the appointments of ensigns from warrant officers be made as of July 30, but same were authorized to be made at any time "in each calendar year," subject to the limitation upon the number to be so appointed. (File 28687-4, Sept. 16, 1916.)

imposed by existing law, boatswains, gunners, and warrant machinists shall be eligible for appointment to the grade of ensign after four years' service as warrant officers." Under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577) [which limited the number of officers in the various grades and ranks of the Navy, including the lowest grades of the line, in accordance with computations to be made by the Secretary of the Navy on January 1 and July 1 of each year, and provided that the numbers in each grade and rank resulting from such computations should not be varied between said dates], warrant officers qualifying for the grade of ensign should be commissioned in such grade on January 1 or July 1 of each year, and can not be commissioned between said dates except to fill vacancies occurring in the authorized number of officers in the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign, computed in accordance with the act of August 29, 1916. (File 28687-4, Sept. 16, 1916.)

The act of May 22, 1917, section 6 (40 Stat., 86), authorizing computations to be made "during the period of the present war," at such times other than January 1 and July 1 as the Secretary of the Navy "may deem necessary," suspends temporarily the restriction contained in the act of August 29, 1916, upon varying the number of officers between specified dates. The result is that additional appointments of commissioned officers in the lowest grades, line and staff, may be made at any time that eligibles become available. Such additional appointments may be made permanently where vacancies exist in the permanent service, and eligibles are available for permanent appointment, or may be made temporarily to fill any existing deficiency therein until eligibles are available for regular appointment in accordance with existing law. (File 28687-22, June 14, 1917. By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), permanent provision was made for computations by the Secretary of the Navy at least once each year and at such times as the Secretary may direct.)

Chief pay clerks and pay clerks between the ages of 21 and 35 years are eligible for appointment as assistant paymasters, but shall not have any preference for such appointment except as to this modification of the limitations fixed by section 1379, Revised Statutes, as to the ages of appointees. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 943.)

As to temporary appointment of warrant officers to commissioned rank, see act of May 22, 1917, as amended by act of July 1, 1918, noted above, under "Promotion of warrant officers."

Warrant officers belonging to line and staff of Navy.—See note to section 1362, Revised Statutes.

Appointments by President and Secretary of the Navy.—See note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2, under "II. Constitutional power of appointment."

Section 1405 authorizes the President to appoint as many boatswains, gunners, sailmakers, and carpenters as may in his opinion be necessary and proper. The consent of the Senate not having been required by Congress, such consent is unnecessary, and the President may make such appointments without submitting the same to the Senate for confirmation. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82; see also 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 136.)

By act of May 22, 1917, section 5 (40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 716), temporary appointments as warrant officers were authorized to be made by the Secretary of the Navy.

Warrant officers not commissioned officers.—Warrant officers designated as boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers are appointed under authority of section 1405, Revised Statutes, and in addition thereto Congress has from time to time authorized the appointment of other warrant officers in the Navy. Such officers have always been regarded as a separate and distinct class from commissioned officers, whose appointments in the Regular Navy are evidenced by commissions signed by the President and under the seal of the United States. Accordingly, held that a warrant officer is not a commissioned officer within the meaning of the provision in the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), that certain commissioned officers of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances as are provided for officers of the Army. (6 Comp. Dec., 495.)

"Warrant" and "commission," outside of naval technicality, are synonymous words. There is no difference in form between a commission and a warrant as used in the Navy, except that one recites that the appointment is made "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and the other does not. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325; quoting Brown v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 537, 543.)

Within the meaning of Articles II, III, and IV of the War Risk Insurance Act, unless the context otherwise requires, "the term 'commissioned officer' includes a warrant officer." (Act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 401.)

See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes, under "Mates are not warrant officers."

Retirement of warrant officers.—See note to section 1448, Revised Statutes.

The laws relating to the retirement of officers of the Navy having been uniformly held by the officers charged with their execution to be applicable to warrant as well as commissioned officers, such holding is sustained, although it must be conceded that were the question a new one the true construction of the law would be open to doubt. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568.)

A mate who served during the Civil War was not entitled to retirement with higher rank and pay as allowed by law to officers of the Navy having such service, because he was not one of the mates to whom Congress had granted the benefit of the retirement laws relating to warrant officers. (See note to sec. 1408, R. S.) If appointed a boatswain, this mate would be entitled, on account of his Civil War service, to retirement with the rank and retired pay of a chief boatswain six months after such appointment. Held, that he may validly waive his right to retirement as chief boatswain, in consideration of his appointment as boatswain and retirement with that rank. (File 3031-57, July 31, 1908, case of Thomas G. McDonough, appointed a boatswain in the Navy Aug. 6, 1908, and retired as boatswain Feb. 6, 1909, upon his own application after 30 years' service. Compare U. S. v. Andrews, 240 U. S., 90.)

Revocation of warrant.—See note to section 1409, Revised Statutes.

Ages of candidates for appointment.—Candidates from civil life for machinist in the Navy must by law be "not above thirty years of age." (Act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 14, 30 Stat., 1007.)

No person shall be appointed a pay clerk in the Navy "unless his accumulated previous service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, together with his possible future service prior to attaining the age of sixty-two years, will amount to at least thirty years." (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942.)

In making temporary appointments authorized by the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 85, sec. 5), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 716), "the maximum age limit shall be fifty years for * * * enlisted men of the Navy to warrant rank."

A candidate for appointment as boatswain or gunner in the Navy, other than such as are provided for in section 1407, Revised Statutes, must be under thirty-five years of age. (Arts. R-3313, 3314, Navy Regs., 1913.)

A candidate for appointment as machinist in the Navy, who at the time of making application is enlisted in the Navy, other than such as are provided for in section 1407, Revised Statutes, "must not be more than thirty-five years of age." (Art. R-3315, Navy Regs., 1913.)

A candidate for carpenter in the Navy, other than such as are provided for in section 1407, Revised Statutes, must be under thirty-five years of age. (Art. R-3316, Navy Regs., 1913.)

No person shall be appointed a pharmacist unless his accumulated previous service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, together with his possible future service prior to attaining the age of 64 years, will amount to at least 30 years.

Special age limits for officers appointed to the Regular Navy by transfer from the temporary Navy and Naval Reserve Force were prescribed by act of June 4, 1920, section 5 (41 Stat., 835).

For cases construing statutory ages for appointment in the Navy, see note to section 1370, Revised Statutes.

The Navy Department does not deem it desirable to make an exception in the case of a mate who makes application to take the examination for boatswain in the Navy, and who, at the date of the next examination, would be about nine and one-half years over the maximum age prescribed for candidates for that grade. (File 3031-55, June 16, 1908.)

Sec. 1406. [Warrant officers; title.] Boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers shall be known and shall be entered upon the Naval Register as "warrant officers in the naval service of the United States."—(2 July, 1864, c. 219, s. 2, v. 13, p. 373.)

Amendment to this section has been made by the acts noted under section 1405, creating the additional grades of warrant officers designated as machinists, pharmacists, and pay clerks.

Sailmakers now obsolete. See note to section 1405.

Sec. 1407. [Warrant officers; seamen promoted for heroism. Medals of honor.] Seamen distinguishing themselves in battle, or by extraordinary heroism in the line of their profession, may be promoted to forward warrant officers, upon the recommendation of their commanding officer, approved by the flag-officer and Secretary of the Navy. And upon such recommendation they shall receive a gratuity of one hundred dollars and a medal of honor, to be prepared under the direction of the Navy Department.—(17 May, 1864, c. 89, s. 3, v. 13, pp. 79, 80.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1099), which extended the benefits of a gratuity and medal of honor under this section to "any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who shall have distinguished himself in battle or displayed extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession."

Appointment as warrant officer does not discharge man from his enlistment. (Sec. 1409, R. S.)

Appointment of warrant officers from enlisted men is further provided for by section 1417, Revised Statutes, as amended, which provides that nothing contained therein shall be held to abrogate the provisions of section 1407, Revised Statutes.

Appointment of acting warrant officers, see note to section 1410, Revised Statutes.

By resolution May 4, 1893 (30 Stat., 741), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to issue a rosette or knot to persons awarded medals of honor under the law embodied in this section, "to be worn in lieu of the medal, and a ribbon to be worn with the medal"; also, additional ribbons in place of those lost or destroyed without fault of persons to whom issued.

Campaign badges and ribbons for officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps who have participated in engagements and campaigns deemed worthy of such commemoration, authorized by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 132).

Duplicate medals in lieu of lost medals issued prior to April 15, 1904, by authority of any law, for distinguished or meritorious services, may be prepared and delivered without charge to persons to whom original medals were presented, when loss was without fault of beneficiary. (Res. Apr. 15, 1904, 33 Stat., 588.)

Foreign decoration or other thing, accepted by consent of Congress, shall not be publicly shown or exposed upon the person of the officer receiving same. (Act Jan. 31, 1881, sec. 2, 21 Stat., 604; see note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9, clause 8.) The acceptance and wearing of foreign medals and decorations under certain prescribed conditions was authorized by the Army act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 872), which act applies to the Navy and Marine Corps. (Op. Atty. Gen., May 9, 1919, file 9644-55.)

Life-saving medals of honor are to be awarded by Secretary of the Treasury to any persons "making signal exertions in rescuing and succoring the shipwrecked and saving persons from drowning in the waters over which the United States has jurisdiction." (Act June 20, 1874, sec. 7, 18 Stat., 127; act June 18, 1878, sec. 12, 20 Stat., 165; act May 4, 1882, sec. 9, 22 Stat., 57; act Jan. 21, 1897, 29 Stat., 494; Navy Regs., 1913, art. R-3663.)

Life-saving medals of honor are to be awarded to any persons who, by extreme daring, endanger their own lives in saving or endeavoring to save lives from any wreck upon railroads within the United States; also, rosettes or knots to be worn in lieu of such medals, and ribbons to be worn with medals and replaced when lost or destroyed without fault of person to whom issued. (Act Feb. 23, 1905, 33 Stat., 743.)

"Medal of honor roll" established in the Navy Department, upon which shall be entered names of persons awarded medals of honor under certain conditions, and who are certified by the Secretary of Navy to be entitled to a special pension. (Act Apr. 27, 1916, 39 Stat., 53.)

Officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard may be awarded medals of honor for distinguished conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism in the line of their profession. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 931.)

Officers and enlisted men of the naval service may be awarded medals of honor, distinguished service medals, and Navy crosses, with rosettes or other devices to be worn in lieu thereof, under certain prescribed conditions. (Act Feb. 4, 1919, 40 Stat., 1056.)

Pensions are to be allowed certain medal of honor men, in addition to other pensions or benefits. (Act Apr. 27, 1916, 39 Stat., 53.)

Spanish War medals, commemorating battle of Manila Bay, were authorized for issuance to officers and men of the Asiatic Squadron under command of Commodore George Dewey, by resolution June 3, 1898 (30 Stat., 746); and medals commemorative of the naval and other engagements in the waters of the West Indies and on the shores of Cuba during said war were authorized for issuance to officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps who participated therein, by resolution of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1465), and act of February 27, 1906 (34 Stat., 35), which also authorized issuance of a bronze bar instead of a second medal to any person entitled to receive recognition in more than one instance.

Wearing, upon occasions of ceremony, of distinctive badges adopted by certain military societies by officers and men of the Army and Navy who are members of such organizations in their own right is authorized by following statutes: Resolution September 25, 1890, 26 Stat., 681 (Mexican and Civil War societies); resolution May 11, 1894, 28 Stat., 583 (Regular Army and Navy Union of the United States); act February 2, 1901, sec. 41, 31 Stat., 758 (Spanish-American War and Philippine Insurrection societies); resolution January 12, 1903, 32 Stat., 1229 (Chinese Relief Expedition societies); resolution March 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1423 (Army and Navy Union of the United States).

"Forward warrant officers."—Formerly warrant officers' rooms were forward, and they were then called "forward" officers, but this name is no longer used. (Hamersly's Naval Encyclopedia, 1884, p. 834.)

By Navy Regulations, 1913 (Art. R 3661) it is provided that seamen distinguishing themselves in battle, or by extraordinary heroism in the line of their profession, may be promoted to "warrant officers," if found fitted, etc., as provided in this section.

Appointment of enlisted man as warrant officer not a "promotion."—The appointment of enlisted men to be warrant or commissioned officers is not regarded as a promotion. (5 Comp. Dec., 142. But note language of sec. 1407 refers to promotion. As to difference between appointment and promotion, see note to sec. 1458, R. S.)

The term "flag officer" is defined by the Navy Regulations, as used therein, to mean "all officers of the line of the Navy above the rank of captain." (Art. R-1605, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Flag officer is a generic term, signifying a naval officer of rank high enough to command a fleet or one of the subdivisions of a fleet; is the naval equivalent of the military term "general officer." The symbol of his rank is a flag, as distinguished from the broad pennant of a commodore. There are three grades of flag officers—admiral, vice admiral, and rear admiral. (Johnson's Universal Encyclopedia.)

Previous to the abolishing of the grade of commodore, officers of that rank were included among flag officers. (International Encyclopedia.)

Flag officers are admiral, vice admiral, rear admiral, and commodore. (Hamersly's Naval Encyclopedia.)

Falconer's Marine Dictionary mentions as flag officers, admiral, vice admiral, and rear admiral.

The King's Regulations (British Navy) do not include commodore among flag officers.

Officers not below the grade of commander may be assigned by the President to the command of squadrons with the rank and title of "flag-officers." (Secs. 1434, 1464, R. S.)

The annual Navy Register, under the heading "Flag Officers of the Navy," enters the names of line officers on the active list in the grade of "Rear Admirals." (See Navy Register, 1921, pp. 10 and 11.)

Special examination for promotion of warrant officer appointed for heroism.—

An enlisted man was promoted to boatswain, not by virtue of his professional qualifications for the position, but for an act of bravery in face of the enemy, as authorized by this section. In due time he was examined for promotion to chief boatswain, in accordance with the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 12 (30 Stat., 1007), as amended by act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 346), providing for promotion of warrant officers after six years from date of warrant, subject to prescribed examinations. He was found not professionally qualified and suspended from promotion in accordance with section 1505, Revised Statutes. He was again examined, at the end of his period of suspension, and found not professionally qualified by reason of deficiency "in his knowledge of writing and spelling the English language to a degree that would incapacitate him from performing the duties of a chief boatswain," and also lack of "knowledge of signals and rules of the road." If this finding were approved, the candidate must "be dropped from the service" under the provisions of section 1505. However, the Navy Department "does not believe that a warrant officer of the Navy, appointed under such conditions, should be dropped from the naval service on account of a failure to pass a written professional examination." Held, that the finding of the examining board in this case need not be either approved or disapproved in its present form, but the record may be returned for a further examination of the candidate in the subjects of signals and rules of the road, with directions that the board omit from consideration his deficiency in "writing and spelling the English language," and amend its finding accordingly; or the record may be disapproved and the candidate ordered before another board for such examination as may be considered necessary, as the law does not prescribe the nature of the examination required, i. e., whether written or oral, the character of questions to be asked the candidate, nor the subjects covered thereby. Further, held that action upon the record can not be indefinitely withheld, and the officer continued in the grade of boatswain, as the law requires the entire record be presented to the President for his approval or disapproval of the finding, and if approved, the officer must be dropped from the service. (File 26260-684, Jan. 8, 1910. The President disapproved the finding of the board and directed that the candidate be examined orally in such subjects as might be necessary to establish his professional qualifications for promotion. Upon such oral examination he was found qualified and promoted. (File 26260-684:2, June 3, 1910.)

Marines entitled to gratuity and medal of honor under this section and not under Army statutes.—Section 1216, Revised Statutes, as amended, which empowers the President to grant a certificate of merit to an enlisted man of the Army who has distinguished himself in the service and has been recommended therefor by the commanding officer of the regiment or the chief of the corps to which such man belongs, applies only to enlisted men of the Army and not to members of the Marine Corps who have been similarly commended. The latter are provided for by a specific provision which in its original form (sec. 1407, R. S.) conferred upon seamen a gratuity and medal of honor for distinguished and heroic service; and by the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1099), this reward was expressly extended to any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who shall have distinguished himself in battle or displayed extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession. In view of the clear distinction created by the terms of the law between the enlisted men of the Army and of the Navy and Marine Corps, respectively, in regard to extraordinary reward for distinguished service, section 1612, Revised Statutes, assimilating the Marine Corps to the Army in respect to ordinary pay, allowances, and bounty for reenlisting, is not applicable to the special reward for gallant service so as to bring the Marine Corps within section 1216. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

Time of making award.—The change in the language, "upon such promotion," found in the original law (acts July 16, 1862, and May 17, 1864), to "upon such recommendation," as found in section 1407, clearly changed, after the passage of the Revised Statutes, the conditions upon which the gratuity should be received. (3 Comp. Dec., 736.)

By section 3 of the act approved May 17, 1864 (13 Stat., 79), a seaman "distinguishing" himself in battle, etc., could receive the gratuity and medal of honor, as provided therein, only on being promoted. By section 1407 the act of 1864 was enlarged by not requiring the promotion of the seaman as a prerequisite to his receiving the gratuity of $100 and the medal of honor. (7 Comp. Dec., 844.)

[See 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 580, holding that in the Army "a medal of honor cannot be awarded where the application or recommendation therefor is made after the officer or private has been discharged from the military service"; following 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 127, which held that "the President cannot grant a certificate of merit (to an enlisted man of the Army who has distinguished himself in service) if the recommendation therefor by the commanding officer or chief of his corps was made after the enlisted man was discharged from the military service"; construing sections 1216 and 1285, Revised Statutes, as amended; see also, 8 Comp. Dec., 875; 9 Comp. Dec., 160.]

Amendment of 1901 held to be retro-active.—Neither section 1407 nor the law on which it was based included the Marine Corps; the term "seamen" has a limited application in the Navy and applies only to a certain class of enlisted men. The words of the act of 1864 and section 1407, "seamen distinguishing themselves" are prospective. Congress changed the language in the act of March 3, 1901, above quoted, to embrace any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps, "who shall have distinguished himself," and provided that he should receive the benefits of gratuity and medal of honor authorized for seamen in section 1407. The act of 1901 is a beneficial statute and should be liberally construed. The words quoted, when taken in connection with the subject matter with which Congress was legislating, and the other language of the act, render the act retrospective in its operation and give to the act the same effect as if it had been a part of section 1407 when it was enacted. The Judge Advocate General of the Navy, in an opinion construing the act of 1901, held that said act is retroactive to the date of the enactment of section 1407 of the Revised Statutes; that had Congress intended that the act of 1901 should be limited in its benefits to the future only, it is not unreasonable to suppose that it would have employed the language used in previous acts, instead of changing the language so as to be susceptible of both past and future application. (7 Comp. Dec., 844. Compare cases noted in Introduction, under "Statutory Construction," VI, C, 7; and compare, file 8627-189, May 12, 1915.)

Jurisdiction to determine merits of case.—By the act of 1901 it devolves upon the commanding officer, the flag officer, and the Secretary of the Navy to determine when an enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps shall have so distinguished himself in battle or displayed extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession as to entitle him to a medal of honor by virtue of said act, and if he is so entitled, and has received a medal of honor as provided for in said act, but has not received the gratuity of $100, he is entitled to receive same. (7 Comp. Dec., 844.)

Appropriation available for payment of gratuity.—The gratuity of $100 allowed seamen in the Navy by section 1407, Revised Statutes, is in the nature of extra compensation or extra pay, and is properly payable from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy." The act of June 19, 1878 (20 Stat., 167), which established a "General account of advances" in the Navy, and provided "that 'Pay of the Navy' shall hereafter be used only for its legitimate purpose, as provided by law," was intended to prohibit the use of the appropriation "Pay of the Navy" for the purpose of paying in the first instance items properly chargeable to other appropriations, subject to transfer upon settlement by the accounting officers to the appropriation properly chargeable with such items, as had theretofore been the practice, and not to change the purposes for which the appropriation "Pay of the Navy" could be properly used. (3 Comp. Dec., 736.)

Medal is personal property of man to whom awarded.—A medal of honor is the personal property of the man to whom awarded, and the naval authorities can not prevent him from wearing same after his discharge for bad conduct or undesirability, and when he is not under naval jurisdiction. Buttons, cap ornaments, figures, letters, and chevrons, etc., are part of a marine's uniform, furnished to him under a clothing allowance, and may properly be removed and retained when he is so discharged; but medals of honor, campaign badges, and insignia received because of past meritorious services do not come under the same category. (File 26519-3:1, Dec. 19, 1914, and Jan. 13, 1915; see also 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 529, and act June 3, 1916, sec. 125, 39 Stat., 216, forbidding unauthorized wearing of uniform.)

Withholding medal after award but prior to delivery.—By desertion, an enlisted man forfeits his right to pay and allowances earned but not received, and the term "allowances," as defined in United States v. Landers (92 U. S., 77), includes medals of honor, good conduct medals, and campaign badges. Accordingly, medals of honor, awarded but not delivered, should be refused in cases of men who have subsequently deserted during the enlistment in which the award was made, even though they were not tried therefor by court-martial and dishonorably discharged. However, if the desertion occurs in a subsequent enlistment, the man does not thereby forfeit any medal or badge earned but not delivered in a previous enlistment. (File 26519-3, Dec. 1, 1914.)

"If the man is not a deserter, but his service for other reasons has not been honorable, he must, nevertheless, be given any medal of honor to which he would otherwise be entitled, his right thereto being absolute under the law." (File 26519-3, Dec. 1, 1914.)

Whether section 1407 has been repealed as to medals.—While the act of February 4, 1919 (40 Stat., 1056) authorizing the presentation of medals of honor, etc., to persons in the naval service does not expressly repeal the provisions of section 1407, Revised Statutes, as enlarged by the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1099), yet as the scope of the later legislation indicates that Congress was dealing with the entire subject involved, the subsequent provision is to be regarded as a complete substitute for the earlier law. (26 Comp. Dec., 464; but see file 9644-489.)

Sec. 1408. [Mates; rating of enlisted men as.] Mates may be rated, under authority of the Secretary of the Navy, from seamen and ordinary seamen who have enlisted in the naval service for not less than two years.—(17 May, 1864, c. 89, s. 3, v. 13, p. 79. 3 Mar., 1865, c. 124, s. 3, v. 13, p. 539.)

Mates of steam vessels licensed under Title LII of the Revised Statutes shall be subject to draft in time of war, only for the performance of duties such as required by their license, and while performing such duties in the service of the United States shall be entitled to the highest rate of wages paid in the Merchant Marine of the United States for similar services; and if killed or wounded while performing such duties under the United States, they or their heirs, or their legal representatives shall be entitled to all the privileges accorded to soldiers and sailors serving in the Army and Navy, under the pension laws of the United States. (Act May 28, 1896, sec. 2, 29 Stat., 188, which relates also to licensed masters, pilots, and engineers.)

Pay of mates who were serving as such on August 1, 1894, was fixed by act of that date (28 Stat., 212); the pay of other mates was fixed by section 1556, Revised Statutes. The pay of all mates was increased 25 per cent by act May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128). (See below, "Pay and allowances of mates.")

Retirement of mates who were serving as such on August 1, 1894, was provided for by act of that date (28 Stat., 212). As to retirement of other mates, see act March 3, 1899, section 17 (30 Stat., 1008), relating to the retirement of enlisted men and appointed petty officers, and amendments to said act; see also cases noted below.

Term of enlistment in the Navy, see note to section 1418, Revised Statutes.

Historical note.—From the year 1799 master's mates in the U. S. Navy were warrant officers, except when acting under temporary and probationary appointments. Warrants were issued to them after at least one year's sea service under a probationary appointment. No such warrants were, however, issued after 1843, and in 1847 a regulation of the Navy Department forbade commanding officers to make such probationary appointments. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

On October 7, 1863, the Secretary of the Navy issued the following circular: "Seamen enlisted in the naval service may hereafter, as formerly, be advanced to the rating of master's mate, and such rating may be bestowed by the commander of a squadron, subject to the approval of the department, or by the commander of a vessel, with the previous sanction of the department. Seamen so rated will be entitled to the same pay, rank, and privileges as appointed or warranted master's mates, but will not be released by their rating from the obligations of their enlistment, and may be disrated by the order or with the sanction of the department. They will not, while rated as master's mates, be considered as subject to trial by a summary court-martial, nor be disrated by transfer, as in the case of petty officers. Seamen rated as master's mates will not be discharged with that rating, and will be considered as disrated to seamen upon the expiration of their enlistment, but upon their immediate reenlistment the rating of master's mate may be considered as renewed. The acceptance of such renewed rating will be considered as renunciation of any claim to additional pay for reenlistment. All ratings of master's mates made by order of the commander of a squadron, and all such ratings renewed by reenlistment, will be reported to the department as early as practicable." (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

Prior to 1843, "masters mates" were recognized by the law as warrant officers, or as "warranted master's mates," and appear to have been sometimes appointed by the President and sometimes rated (that is, promoted from lower grades) by commanding officers. But shortly after this time they seem to have fallen into disuse, and no further appointments were made, although the grade was not formally abolished and those who had been previously appointed continued to hold their offices and receive their pay. At the outbreak of the civil war, however, a great increase in all the naval forces became necessary, and the Secretary of the Navy made temporary appointments of "acting masters and master's mates," which were confirmed by act of Congress of July 24, 1861, c. 13, 12 Stat., 272. By act of March 3, 1865, c. 124, 13 Stat., 539, their names were changed to that of "mates," and the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to increase their pay and to rate them from seamen and ordinary seamen who had enlisted in the naval service for not less than two years. By the act of July 15, 1870, c. 294, 16 Stat., 321, 330, they were formally recognized as a part of the naval forces and their pay was fixed at $900 when at sea, $700 on shore duty, and $500 on leave or waiting orders. These amounts were raised in 1894, 28 Stat., 212. Act of August 1, c. 176. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

The act of March 3, 1865 (13 Stat., 539, sec. 2), provided as follows: "That acting masters' mates shall be styled mates, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to increase their pay to the sum of not exceeding sixty dollars per month." (9 Comp. Dec., 600.)

The appointment of mates as at present designated was first authorized by Congress in the acts of May 17, 1864, and March 3, 1865 (13 Stat., 79, 539), now embodied in the Revised Statutes, section 1408. The quota was not fixed, but from a maximum of about 842 on January 1, 1865, the number gradually diminished until July 1, 1894, when there were 27 remaining, the majority of whom had had service during the civil war. Prior to August 1, 1894, there had been no authority for the retirement of mates, but on that date a law was passed increasing the pay of mates then in the service and providing that said mates should have the benefits of retirement the same as warrant officers. (File 3031-40, Mar. 11, 1908.)

One purpose of the act of August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), was, by increasing the rates of pay for active service, to make the retired pay of mates large enough to induce the retirement of these officers, which was also provided for in this act. At the time of the enactment of this legislation, it was the intention to allow the grade of mate to gradually go into abeyance, but it now appears to be the purpose of the naval authorities to revive it, which may be done under the authority conferred by section 1408 of the Revised Statutes. (4 Comp. Dec., 124. See also file 26255-14, May 4, 1909, quoting debates in Congress upon act of Aug. 1, 1894, to the effect that after retirement of mates then in the service no further appointments were to be made to that grade.)

Mates are enlisted men and should be discharged upon expiration of enlistment.—The contract of an enlisted man is a contract to serve the Government in that capacity for a period specified. In this case, upon the expiration of the mate's term of enlistment, his contract was performed and was no longer a bar to his discharge by the Government. Strictly in this case the mates should have been given their discharges on the expiration of their enlistments. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319.)

"Mates in the Navy should be discharged from the service on the expiration of their enlistments." (File 3031-16, Aug. 15, 1907.)

"I do not agree with the Attorney General that strictly mates should be discharged on the expiration of their enlistments, as section 1409, supra, clearly contemplates that no further enlistment after their rating as mates is necessary for their continuance in the service as mates. Of course they may be discharged at any time, and the Secretary of the Navy, upon the suggestion contained in the Attorney General's opinion, has ordered the discharge of mates and has directed that they may reenlist in the rating of mate, thus establishing a new practice." (14 Comp. Dec., 457; compare Navy Department circular of Oct. 7, 1863, quoted above, under "Historical Note.")

Mates are enlisted men who are rated by the Secretary of the Navy, and such rating does not discharge them from their enlistment. They may be reenlisted and discharged the same as other enlisted men. (File 3031-57, June 25, 1908; file 7657-445, June 21, 1917.)

Status of mates when not discharged upon expiration of enlistment.—An enlisted man in the Navy who was appointed as mate and continued to serve as such after the expiration of his term of enlistment without receiving a discharge is still in the service and entitled to his discharge and may be permitted to reenlist with the benefits of continuous service. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319.)

As far as concerns any question here, the contract of an enlisted man differs in no respect from a contract by one individual to serve another during a specified period. In either case, if the man continues to perform the service until the end of the period specified, and if the other party has also performed, the contract is at an end. Under such circumstances an enlisted man could not require the Government to retain him in the service, nor would the Government ordinarily compel him to remain. This does not refer to those special circumstances, such as absence from the United States, etc., which might exceptionally affect this general statement. But in this case, as in a case of a contract between individuals, if neither party desires to terminate the service, but it continues without any express contract, it will be held to be a continuance of the service upon the same terms as before, but not for any definite period. That the mates in this case were not discharged upon expiration of their enlistments was due to the Government, which is estopped to say that these men are not in the service as before. Being in the service and their terms of enlistment having expired, they are, of course, entitled to be discharged; and where they have rendered the continuous service required by the regulations, may be permitted to reenlist with the benefits thereof. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319.)

Where a mate was not discharged from the service on the expiration of his enlistment, in accordance with the Navy Department's instructions of August 15, 1907, he should be given a discharge to take effect from the date on which issued. (File 3031-19, Oct. 25, 1907.)

A mate of the Navy who was not discharged at the expiration of the term of his enlistment continues to be an enlisted man so long as he holds the position or rating of mate. (14 Comp. Dec., 457, following 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319.)

Mates are not "officers of the Navy."—The act of June 30, 1876, section 1 (19 Stat., 65), provided that "officers of the Navy" should be allowed mileage while traveling on public business. Mates being rated by the Secretary of the Navy "from seamen and ordinary seamen who have enlisted in the naval service for not less than two years" (sec. 1408, R. S.), and not being otherwise appointed, can not be classed as officers within the meaning given thereto by the court in the case of U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303, 307 [noted under Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, "I. Officers of the United States"]. In the act of 1876 Congress is presumed to have used the word in the sense in which "officers" has been defined; and there being no language in the act conveying a different sense, the court must give it the meaning the word unequivocally imports. Held, therefore, that claimant, a mate, was not an officer within the meaning of the law; that he was not appointed by the President or by a court of law, and that the action of the Secretary of the Navy in rating or promoting him from seaman, as provided in section 1408, was not sufficient action on the part of the Secretary as head of the Navy Department to constitute him an appointed officer, nor even an officer within the meaning of the mileage act. (Baxter v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 75.)

The rating of an enlisted man of the Navy as mate is not an appointment by the Secretary of the Navy. He remains in the service all the time, and this rating is in effect but an order which he must obey after being rated. The question of acceptance does not, therefore, arise, because he has no choice whether he will or will not accept the rating and perform the duties. (13 Comp. Dec., 514.)

For other cases, see note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2, under "I. Officers of the United States," and see below, "Mates are 'officers of the Navy' for certain purposes."

Mates are not warrant officers.—The personnel of the Navy is divided, generally, into commissioned officers, noncommissioned or warrant officers, petty officers, and seamen of various grades and denominations. That a mate is not a commissioned officer is entirely clear; it is equally clear that he is above the grade of seaman, and the real question is whether he is a noncommissioned or warrant officer, a person "temporarily appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer" or a "petty officer." (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

Mates are not warrant officers. The act of August 1, 1894, providing that "the law regulating the retirement of warrant officers in the Navy shall be construed to apply to the twenty-eight officers now serving as mates in the Navy" "would be quite unnecessary if, under the general provisions of law, they fell within the designation of warrant officers." (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

The argument that a "warrant" is defined to be "an instrument conferring authority upon persons, inferior to a commission," and that mates must therefore be warrant officers, because they are appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, proves too much, since all petty officers hold some sort of designation from a superior authority; and if a warrant be an instrument inferior to a commission, this would make all petty officers warrant officers. On the other hand, as by section 1405 warrant officers are appointed by the President, it would seem to follow that if they held their appointments from an inferior authority they were not to be considered as warrant officers. After some hesitation and apparent confusion of opinion on the part of the Navy Department, this was the construction of the Revised Statutes finally settled upon by the Navy Regulations of 1893, article 28, and we think it is correct. The only difficulty in the case seems to have arisen from certain acts prior to the Revised Statutes, notably the act of 1813, which dealt with warranted "master's mates," under which mates continued to be classified by the Navy Department as warrant officers until the Revised Statutes were adopted. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593. See also note to sec. 1405, R. S., under "Warrant officers not commissioned officers.")

Mates retired with the rank and pay of warrant officer, in accordance with the Attorney General's opinion, on account of Civil War service, do not obtain the grade of warrant officers, but continue to be mates and should be so designated. The Navy Department can not, therefore, confer upon them the title of a grade of warrant officers to which they do not belong. (File 3031-28, Dec. 12, 1907.)

Mates are not "temporarily appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer."—We think there is no authority for saying that they are temporarily appointed to the duties of a warrant officer within the exception to section 1410, Revised Statutes. While the words "acting master's mates," sometimes employed prior to the Revised Statutes, might indicate, by the use of the word "acting," a person temporarily appointed to the duties of a master's mate, officers who are recognized by law and whose pay is fixed by a permanent statute can not be said to be temporarily appointed. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

Mates are "petty officers."—Mates are petty officers, and as such are entitled to rations or commutation therefor, under sections 1579 and 1585, Revised Statutes. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593, affirming 30 Ct. Cls., 108; see also Baxter v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 108.)

Mates had not been regarded as petty officers by the Treasury Department nor by the Navy Department prior to the adoption of the Navy Regulations of 1893. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

Mates are officers not holding commissions or warrants and not entitled to them within the meaning of section 1410, Revised Statutes, and are therefore petty officers, promoted by the Secretary of the Navy from seamen of inferior grades, who have enlisted for not less than two years, and they are distinguished from other petty officers only in the fact that their pay is fixed by statute instead of by the President. The exception of mates from other petty officers, in section 1569, indicates that they are petty officers. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

Mates are "officers of the Navy" for certain purposes.—Mates whose names are borne on the retired list of officers of the Navy, in accordance with the act of August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), are officers of the Navy, but they are neither commissioned nor warrant officers, although with respect to the law regulating retirements, they are placed upon the same footing as warrant officers under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), providing for advanced rank on retirement of officers who served during the Civil War. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

Although commissioned officers of the Navy are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, warrant officers by the President alone, and mates by the head of a department, all are alike officers of the United States, and in accordance with the acts of 1894 and 1906, all are alike entitled to the benefits of the advancement provided for by the last-mentioned act whenever otherwise qualified. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433. But see above, "Mates are not 'officers of the Navy.'")

Not only is it expressly provided in section 1409 that when an enlisted man becomes a mate, his duties and rights as an enlisted man remain unaffected, but the same provision is made with respect to warrant officers; and if the fact of enlistment should be held a bar to securing the benefits of the act of 1906 in the case of mates, this might be equally true with respect to warrant officers as well. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

Mates who were in the Navy on August 1, 1894, are officers within the meaning of section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), and of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), both relating to advanced rank on retirement of officers who served during the Civil War. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 615.)

"For the purposes of retirement certain mates are considered as officers." (File 3031-28, Dec. 12, 1907.)

Article I-4912 (3), Naval Instructions, 1913, provides for the witnessing of signatures, and states that "in the case of enlisted men each signature shall be witnessed by an officer." Article R-4384 (1), Navy Regulations, 1913, requires that pay receipts shall bear "an officer's signature as witness to the genuineness of that of the man," and that "no officer shall witness a receipt unless it be actually signed in his presence and he be personally acquainted with the signer." Held, "as it is not specified that the witnessing officer be of any particular rank, but merely that the signature shall be witnessed by an officer, and as it was decided by the Attorney General (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433), that a mate is an officer of the Navy, the department sees no objection to the witnessing of the pay receipts of enlisted men by a mate in the Navy." (File 4856-15, June 18, 1913.)

In the summary court-martial case of W. J. Stookey, chief commissary steward on the receiving ship at Mare Island, in 1908, Mate G. Johnson was recorder of the court. Accused applied to have the proceedings set aside on the ground that Mate Johnson was not an officer, and that article 27 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.), required an "officer" to act as recorder; that the court-martial was therefore illegal. The point was decided that Mate Johnson was an officer, and that the court was therefore legal. Accused was discharged pursuant to sentence. (File 26287-47, Aug. 22, 1908; see also file 4856-15, May 14, 1913, letter from captain of the yard, navy yard, Mare Island, Cal.)

"Mate Johnson has acted as recorder of several courts-martial recently, and performed this duty for a long time on the receiving ship, which would seem to establish the point definitely." (File 4856-15, May 14, 1913, letter from captain of the yard, navy yard, Mare Island, Cal.)

Article R-4512 (1), Navy Regulations, 1913, provides that certain "officers," including mates on duty at certain stations or any such "officers" on special duty or on detached service on shore, are entitled to commutation for quarters, etc.

Certain mates held to be both "officers of the Navy" and "enlisted men."—Mates who were in the Navy on August 1, 1894, are officers of the Navy for the purpose of retirement, although enlisted men, and entitled as such to discharge upon expiration of enlistment. A person can, under the provisions of sections 1409 and 1410, Revised Statutes, be at the same time an officer of the Navy and an enlisted man. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

"The status of mates in the Navy is in the highest degree anomalous."—They have been considered as petty officers, appointed from the enlisted force, and regarded as enlisted men. This view has been re-enforced by an opinion of the Attorney General, dated July 22, 1907, in which it is held that a man who was enlisted for service in the Navy for a period of four years and was appointed as mate and continued to serve as such after the expiration of his term of enlistment without receiving any discharge, may have his appointment as mate revoked and be permitted to reenlist, with the benefit of continuous service. This condition has, however, been complicated by a later opinion, given October 15, 1907, in which the Attorney General holds that certain mates whose names are borne on the retired list of the officers of the Navy, having been placed there in accordance with the statute approved August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), are entitled to advancement in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), to the lowest grade of warrant officers. Hence, for the purposes of retirement, certain mates are considered as officers * * *. Also, it may be stated that, although mates are considered as enlisted men for the purposes of discharge and reenlistment, yet they are debarred from the benefits of the additional pay allowed other enlisted men for succeeding reenlistments. They are usually appointed from chief petty officers having long and creditable records, who may receive a maximum pay of approximately * * *, but upon appointment as mate their pay drops immediately to * * *, notwithstanding the greater responsibilities of the position." (File 3031-32, Feb. 12, 1908.)

There are no similar grades in the Army to those of warrant officers and mates. (File 3031-40, Mar. 11, 1908.) [By act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 881), the grades of master, first mate, second mate, chief engineer, and assistant engineer were established in the Army Mine Planter Service of the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army, "who shall be warrant officers appointed by and holding their offices at the discretion of the Secretary of War." By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), the appointment was authorized of not more than 1,120 warrant officers, including band leaders.]

Retirement of mates who were in the service August 1, 1894.—There was doubt whether the law relating to the retirement of officers of the Navy [secs. 1443-1455, 1588, R. S.], applied to any but commissioned officers, but this doubt was, by the Navy Department, resolved in favor of warrant officers, which construction was confirmed by the Supreme Court in Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568. However, it was never held to apply to mates; and in order that the 28 officers then serving as mates might have the benefit of its provisions, the act of August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), was passed. This act went no further than merely to extend the provisions of the retirement law to these mates, and had not the effect of promoting them on retirement to the rank and pay of retired warrant officers, but entitled them to be placed on the retired list with the rank of mate and three-fourths the sea pay of that grade. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 334.)

Doubtless "warrant officers" were specially mentioned in the act of August 1, 1894, because they were the only noncommissioned officers to whom the statute had been construed to apply, and it was intended thereby to emphasize the purpose that section 1588, Revised Statutes, was to be just as applicable to these mates as to warrant officers, by entitling them to three-fourths of the pay of their grade, and not to confer upon them on retirement the retired pay of an advanced grade. Furthermore, this act was thus construed by the Navy Department ever since its passage, which fact would be controlling in case of doubt. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 334.)

Prior to the act of August 1, 1894, mates had not enjoyed the privilege of retirement. The "law regulating the retirement of warrant officers," which by the terms of this act was to be construed to apply to certain mates, is contained in sections 1443-1455, Revised Statutes. (See Brown v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 537; 113 U. S., 568.) The retired pay of officers of the Navy at the time of the enactment of this law was fixed by section 1588 of the Revised Statutes. Were the question a new one, it would still seem plain that the purpose of the act of 1894 was merely to extend to mates the same privilege of retirement, with three-fourths of their sea pay, that was enjoyed by warrant officers of the Navy. (File 26255-14, May 4, 1909.)

Retirement of mates who served during the Civil War.—The mates who were in the service on August 1, 1894, were placed by the act of that date on the same footing as warrant officers for purposes of retirement; and when such mates had creditable Civil War service, they are entitled, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the benefit of the advancement provided in the case of retired officers under the circumstances enumerated in the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554). While the effect of such advancement will not be to place them in a different grade, they will obtain the rank and retired pay belonging to the next higher grade, being that of the lowest grade of warrant officers. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

The retired pay of a mate in the Navy, whether retired under section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), or under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), is the retired pay of a warrant officer with the same length of previous service, which is three-fourths of the sea pay of such officer. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 599.)

The only mates who have the benefits of retirement with the rank and retired pay of warrant officers, are those who were in the service at the time of the passage of the act approved August 1, 1894, and who had creditable Civil War service in accordance with the terms of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554). (File 3031-38, Mar. 6, 1908.)

Where a mate was retired by reason of age, in accordance with the act of August 1, 1894, but was not on such retirement advanced in rank on account of Civil War service, in accordance with section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007); and thereafter his retirement was corrected in conformity with the Attorney General's opinion (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433) above noted: Held, that he should be given the advancement from the date of his retirement (September 26, 1899) and not from the date of the Navy Department's letter to him of November 26, 1907. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 599.)

Mates who were in the service on August 1, 1894, were entitled to retirement by act of that date under the following circumstances: (a) After 40 years' service; (b) upon reaching the age of 62 years; (c) for physical disability incurred in line of duty (file 3031-40, Mar. 11, 1908). By section 17 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1008), provision was made for the retirement of enlisted men, upon their own application, after thirty years' service. This law was applicable to mates who were not already entitled to retirement, under laws relating to officers. [See cases noted below.] On March 31, 1899, a mate (one of those in the service on Aug. 1, 1894) was, upon his own application, placed upon the retired list in accordance with section 17 of the Navy personnel act, the Navy Department deciding that he was entitled to the benefits of retirement as an enlisted man after thirty years' service, although he could not otherwise have been retired (as an officer) until April 16, 1902, the date on which he would have attained the age of 62 years. Thereafter it was contended by this mate that he was erroneously retired by the Navy Department under the law relating to enlisted men, and was entitled to retirement under the laws relating to warrant officers, which would give him the retired pay of advanced rank on account of civil war service: Held, that his contention should be sustained, and his retirement corrected so as to show him retired with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, namely, that of a warrant officer having twelve years' service, in accordance with the act of August 1, 1894, and section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, and that he should be given the benefit of such increased rank and pay from April 16, 1902, the earliest date on which he could have been retired under the laws relating to officers. By accepting the erroneous decision of the Navy Department, this mate did not waive or forfeit any legal right which he had to be retired otherwise. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 615; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 66.)

The mates held by the Attorney General to be entitled to the rank and pay of "the lowest grade of warrant officer," under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), should be nominated to have the "rank and retired pay of a warrant officer in the Navy," and not to have the rank and retired pay of any particular grade of warrant officer, inasmuch as all warrant officers are on the same footing as relates to rank, pay, and allowances. (File 3031-21, Nov. 20, 1907.)

The nomination of a deceased mate, in whose case the President approved a recommendation that he be advanced one grade under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), but who died after such approval but prior to nomination, should read in the usual form, with the addition thereto of the word "died," with the date on which death occurred. (File 3031-21, Nov. 20, 1907; see also 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312, noted under sec. 1458, R. S., "Death of officer before promotion complete.")

Retirement of mates as enlisted men.—Mates rated as such since August 1, 1894, are entitled to retirement under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1217), providing for the retirement of enlisted men after thirty years' service. (File 3031-17, Sept. 13, 1907.)

A mate whose rating as such was subsequent to the passage of the act of August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), is an "enlisted man" within the meaning of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1217), providing for the retirement of enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The rating of an enlisted man as mate did not discharge him from his enlistment, and the term "enlisted man" in the general sense in which it is used in the above act is broad enough to bring him within its provisions. (18 Comp. Dec., 575.)

Mates may be retired after thirty years' service under the acts of March 3, 1899, section 17 (30 Stat., 1008), and March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1217); there is no restriction as to age. (File 3031-38, Mar. 6, 1908.)

The provisions of the Revised Statutes relating to the retirement of commissioned officers (secs. 1448-1455) have been held to apply to warrant officers; but in order that they might apply to mates who were in the service on August 1, 1894, a special act approved on that date was required. Mates who were not in the service on that date were not as such eligible to retirement until the passage of the act of March 3, 1899, section 17 of which provided for the retirement of enlisted men or appointed petty officers after thirty years' service. The manner of computing the 30 years' service was somewhat modified by an act approved June 22, 1906, the provisions of which are embodied in the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1217). The act of 1899 provides specially for the retirement of enlisted men and appointed petty officers; the act of 1907, which has been held to apply to mates, refers to enlisted men, with no mention of officers or petty officers. Commissioned and warrant officers were obviously not entitled to thirty-year retirement by the language of the act of 1899 as modified by the act of 1907, and did not become entitled thereto until the act of May 13, 1908. (File 3031-57, June 25, 1908.)

Inasmuch as retirement for enlisted men and appointed petty officers after thirty years' service is covered in prior acts which specifically refer to such persons, and as it has already been held that mates are eligible to retirement thereunder, it must be held that the words "an officer of the Navy," in the thirty-year retirement clause of the act of May 13, 1908, did not include mates appointed since August 1, 1894. Accordingly held that such mates may be retired in conformity with the laws relating to enlisted men, but may not retire as officers under the thirty-year retirement clause in the act of May 13, 1908; and that such mates may not on retirement be given the rank of the next higher grade on account of Civil War service, as provided for officers by the act of June 29, 1906. (File 3031-57, June 25, 1908.)

Waiver of retirement privileges.—A mate appointed since August 1, 1894, but who had service as an enlisted man during the Civil War, not being entitled to retirement with the rank of the next higher grade, as authorized by law for commissioned and warrant officers having Civil War service, may be appointed a boatswain shortly before retirement on condition that, in consideration of said appointment and his retirement as boatswain, he waive his right to retirement with the rank of chief boatswain, to which, upon appointment as boatswain, he would legally become entitled on account of his Civil War service. (File 3031-57, July 31, 1908, case of Mate Thomas G. McDonough, appointed a boatswain in the Navy Aug. 6, 1908, and retired as boatswain Feb. 6, 1909, upon his own application after 30 years' service. Compare U. S. v. Andrews, 240 U. S., 90.)

By accepting retirement, under an erroneous decision of the Navy Department, with a lower rank and rate of pay than that to which he was legally entitled, a mate did not waive or forfeit any legal right which he had to be retired otherwise; and his retirement should be corrected, retroactively, so as to confer upon him the higher rank and pay to which he was entitled. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 615; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 66, noted more fully above, under "Retirement of mates who served during the Civil War.")

Pay and allowances of mates.—The pay of mates is fixed by law; those in the service August 1, 1894, by the act of that date (28 Stat., 212); those appointed since, by section 1556 of the Revised Statutes. When a man is appointed a mate his pay does not depend upon his length of service, it merely depends upon the character of his duty—whether at sea, on shore, or on leave, or waiting orders; he receives no increase for longevity, as do the warrant and other officers. (File 3031-40, Mar. 11, 1908. See also 4 Comp. Dec., 124. The pay of all mates was increased 25 per cent by act of May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128.)

Although mates are considered as enlisted men for the purposes of discharge and reenlistment, yet they are debarred from the benefits of the additional pay allowed other enlisted men for succeeding reenlistments. They are usually appointed from chief petty officers having long and creditable records, whose pay upon appointment as mate may immediately be reduced, notwithstanding the greater responsibilities of the position. (File 3031-32, Feb. 12, 1908.)

The pay of an enlisted man as mate begins on the date of his rating as mate, or on the date such rating is made to take effect, without regard to the date of the administering to him of an oath for the performance of his duties as such; his rating is not an appointment, but an order which he must obey, and which he has no choice but to accept. (13 Comp. Dec., 514.)

Where a mate of the Navy, upon being honorably discharged while serving as such after the expiration of the term of his enlistment, reenlists in the rating of mate within four months from such discharge, he is entitled to the four months' gratuity pay provided by section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 3, 1899, computed on the pay he was receiving at the time he was discharged. (14 Comp. Dec., 457; file 3031-19, Oct. 25, 1907; Comp. Dec., Feb. 27, 1908, file 3031-35, 84 S. and A. Memo., 589.)

Mates in the Navy are petty officers, and their pay being specifically fixed by section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, and any additional pay or allowance thereto being prohibited by section 1558 of the Revised Statutes, they are not entitled upon reenlistment within the provisions of section 1573 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 3, 1899, in the rating of mates, to the increase of pay per month provided therein for enlisted men who reenlist within such provisions. (14 Comp. Dec., 457; see also 9 Comp. Dec., 600; Comp. Dec., Feb. 27, 1908, file 3031-35, 84 S. and A. Memo., 589.)

Mates of the Navy being specifically excepted from the provisions of section 1569 of the Revised Statutes, under authority of which the extra compensation for good-conduct medals and bars, seamen gunners' certificates, and petty officers' certificates, is provided, they are not entitled to such extra compensation. (14 Comp. Dec., 457; see also 9 Comp. Dec., 600, and file 3031-7, Jan. 12, 1907.)

Mates are not entitled to one-fourth additional pay for detention beyond expiration of enlistment, as provided by section 1422, Revised Statutes, as amended, for the reason that this is additional pay to that specifically provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, and therefore prohibited by section 1558, Revised Statutes. Also, the detention of mates who were not discharged upon expiration of enlistment, was not such a detention in the service as contemplated by the statute. (14 Comp. Dec., 457.)

A mate honorably discharged on account of the expiration of his enlistment, while serving after the expiration of the term of his enlistment, is entitled to travel allowance on discharge provided for enlisted men by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555). This is not pay, but a provision to assist enlisted men of the Navy to return to their homes or places where the Government took them into the service; is a beneficial statute, and following the rule in such cases, the Comptroller has been liberal in construing it and other similar provisions for enlisted men of the military service. (14 Comp. Dec., 457.)

Mates, although their pay is fixed by law, instead of by the President, are in other respects entitled to the emoluments of petty officers, among which are rations. The exception of mates from section 1569, Revised Statutes, merely indicates that Congress, having already fixed their pay, such pay need not be fixed by the President. But they are still within the exception of "petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships," who are inferentially allowed a ration by section 1579, and the exception of petty officers, from those who are not entitled to rations under section 1579, indicates that as such they are entitled to a ration. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593.)

In the case of United States v. Fuller (160 U. S., 593), affirming the judgment of the Court of Claims (30 Ct. Cls., 108), it was held that "mates are petty officers, and as such entitled to rations or commutation therefor." The claimant, therefore, being a petty officer, clearly has a right to recover the commutation price of a Navy ration while serving as a mate on board a receiving ship. (Baxter v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 75; 12 Comp. Dec., 728.)

The status of a mate as to rations, or commutation thereof, while serving at sea, is not affected by his discharge and reenlistment in the rating of mate. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 27, 1908, file 3031-35, 84 S. and A. Memo., 589.)

While on shore duty a mate would be entitled, while performing such duty, to commutation of quarters, provided he did not occupy public quarters. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 27, 1908, file 3031-35, 84 S. and A. Memo., 589.)

The act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1107), provided under the head of Pay of the Navy, for "commutation of quarters for officers on shore, not occupying public quarters, including * * * mates, who shall hereafter receive the same commutation for quarters as second lieutenants of the Marine Corps." (12 Comp. Dec., 728.)

For other references to the pay of mates, see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Mates eligible for appointment and pay as Navy mail clerks.—"A mate being an enlisted man is eligible for selection and designation as Navy mail clerk under the act of May 27, 1908" (35 Stat., 417). It has been held that, as the pay of mates is fixed by section 1556, Revised Statutes, they are not entitled to any additional pay as enlisted men or as mates, by reason of section 1558, Revised Statutes. The prohibition in the latter section, however, applies only to compensation for performance of duties as mate, and the additional allowances refer to such allowances for duties required by the enlistment and rating as mate. Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks perform new and additional duties, which are not those of enlisted men or of mates, and were not contemplated by the prohibition contained in section 1558. Accordingly, held, that a mate is entitled to receive the pay provided for Navy mail clerk, when duly designated as such, in addition to his pay as mate. (Comp. Dec., Oct. 21, 1908, 92 S. and A. Memo. 870.)

Revocation of appointment.—The appointment of a mate should not be revoked, unless requested by the holder. If so requested, it may be revoked, in which case he would be considered as holding a permanent appointment in the rating from which last advanced, and if discharged in that rating, should be reenlisted therein. (File 3031-19, Oct. 25, 1907.)

Mates cannot legally be rated from men enlisted for less than two years.—To entitle an enlisted man to the pay provided by section 1556 of the Revised Statutes for mates, he must have been rated during an enlistment of not less than two years. A man rated as mate on August 24, 1897, while serving in an enlistment of one year, was not entitled to the pay of mate on that rating. He was actually discharged from his enlistment on December 13, 1897, and served thereafter under his appointment as mate, without reenlistment, until November, 1907. As he was recognized by the Navy Department as a mate and performed the duties of a mate, he may be considered as a de facto mate during that service (Aug. 24, 1897 to Nov., 1907); and having received the pay provided by law for a mate, he is, for the reasons stated in the case of Badeau v. U. S. (130 U. S., 439), entitled to retain it. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 30, 1908, 83 S. and A. Memo., 565, 566; see also note to sec. 236, R. S., under VIII (C), "Mistake of law.")

Appointment as warrant officers.—Mates appointed to the grades of warrant officers are not "promoted" to said grades, but are "appointed" thereto, in the same manner as any enlisted man of the Navy might have been appointed. The grade of boatswain is not the next higher grade above the rating of mate, any more than is any other warrant grade, or in fact any other corps of the Navy. (File 3031-12, July 10, 1907. For other cases see note to sec. 1453, R. S., under "'Promotion' and 'appointment' compared.") the date of the next examination, would be about 9½ years above the maximum age prescribed for candidates for that grade. (File 3031-55, June 16, 1908; see note to sec. 1405, R. S., under "Ages of candidates for appointment.")

A mate may be appointed a boatswain a few months before he becomes eligible for retirement, on condition that he waive his right to retirement with the rank of chief boatswain on account of civil war service, to which he would become entitled upon his appointment as boatswain. (File 3031-57, July 31, 1908, case of Thomas G. McDonough, appointed a boatswain in the Navy Aug. 6, 1908, and retired as boatswain Feb. 6, 1909, upon his own application after 30 years' service. Compare U. S. v. Andrews, 240 U. S., 90.)

Sec. 1409. [Mates and warrant officers; not discharged from enlistment.]

The rating of an enlisted man as a mate, or his appointment as a warrant officer, shall not discharge him from his enlistment.—(17 May, 1864, c. 89, s. 3, v. 13, p. 79. 3 Mar., 1865, c. 124, s. 3, v. 13, p. 539.)

Historical note.—Section 3 of the act of March 3, 1865 (13 Stat., 539), provided "that hereafter mates may be rated, under authority of the Secretary of the Navy, from seamen and ordinary seamen who have enlisted in the naval service for not less than two years, and such rating of an enlisted man, or his appointment as an officer, shall not discharge him from his enlistment." The substance of this section was embodied in sections 1408 and 1409 of the Revised Statutes, the portion relating to the appointment of an enlisted man as an "officer" being interpreted to mean his appointment as a "warrant officer." (9 Comp. Dec., 600.)

Sec. 1409 does not apply to appointments as commissioned officers.—A man while serving an enlistment as chief yeoman was appointed paymaster's clerk and then given an appointment as assistant paymaster. Held, that the continuity of his service was broken by his acceptance of a commission; that his enlistment was as effectually terminated by his appointment as assistant paymaster as though he had served out the term for which he enlisted; and that "it certainly can not be ruled that an appointment as a commissioned officer causes no separation from an enlisted service under which the appointee was serving, and that no break in the enlisted service would be occasioned if the service as commissioned officer continued for four months." (Comp. Dec., Nov. 29, 1899, 11 MS. Comp. Dec., 628; and Feb. 15, 1900, 12 MS. Comp. Dec., 547; see also Comp. Dec., June 24, 1903, 27 S. and A. Memo., 222.)

Service as a commissioned officer is incompatible with service as an enlisted man. (Comp. Dec., June 24, 1903, 27 S. and A. Memo., 222.)

The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), contemplates the preservation of the enlisted status of men temporarily appointed to warrant and commissioned rank under that act; otherwise there would be nothing to which they could "revert" upon the termination of their temporary appointment as required by section 7 of said act. Accordingly, there is no legal objection to providing that enlisted men, temporarily appointed warrant or commissioned officers, shall not be discharged from their enlistments upon the acceptance of such appointments; and, if their enlistments expire while holding under temporary appointments as warrant or commissioned officers they shall not be discharged until the termination of their temporary appointments. Upon reverting to his former status, if his enlistment has expired while holding such temporary appointment, the man will immediately be given his discharge and final settlement. The act thus applied creates the apparent anomaly of a person occupying the dual status of officer and enlisted man, but such a status is not unknown to the naval service (citing sec. 1409, R. S.). Withholding their discharges and final settlements under such circumstances does not amount to detaining them in the service; by their acceptance of such appointments under the conditions imposed by the statute they are deemed to have voluntarily waived their right to discharge upon the expiration of their terms of enlistment and to have accepted all of the conditions imposed by the statute, including the requirement as to reverting upon the termination of their temporary appointments. (File 7657-445, June 21, 1917.)

Applies only to mates and warrant officers.—The Navy Regulations, 1900, article 861, provided: "When enlisted men accept * * * appointments as paymasters' clerks their enlistments terminate on the date of taking the oath under such * * * appointments, and service thereunder for a longer period than four months debars them from all benefits of previous enlisted service in computing increased pay under subsequent enlistments." An enlisted man who accepted an appointment as paymaster's clerk while this regulation was in force thereby terminated his enlistment. Section 1409 of the Revised Statutes is not applicable to this case, as the claimant, a paymaster's clerk, is neither a mate nor warrant officer. (10 Comp. Dec., 529. Note: The title "paymaster's clerk" was changed to "pay clerk" and the status of pay clerks changed to that of warrant officers, by act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942, which also created a subordinate grade designated as "acting pay clerk" and the commissioned grade of chief pay clerk. The acceptance of an appointment as acting pay clerk ipso facto terminates the appointee's enlistment. File 26254-2020:4, Mar. 15, 1918; C. M. O 30, 1918, p. 24.)

May be extended by regulations to include others than mates and warrant officers.—The Navy Regulations, 1896, article 821, provided that "an enlisted man rated as a mate or appointed a warrant officer or clerk is not thereby discharged from his enlistment." This regulation was a repetition of section 1409 with the addition of the word "clerk." A departmental regulation has the force of law when not contrary to positive law, and there is no such law that would negative the regulation quoted. Accordingly, held that an enlisted man appointed a paymaster's clerk while this regulation was in force, and who continued to serve out the unexpired portion of his enlistment after his appointment as paymaster's clerk was revoked, was continuously in the service as an enlisted man and that there was no break in his enlistment by reason of his service as temporary paymaster's clerk, but that the service was fully authorized by article 821 of the Navy Regulations then in force, and therefore the appellant is entitled to the benefits of continuous service authorized by section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended by section 16 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1008). (Comp. Dec., June 24, 1903, 27 S. and A. Memo., 222. See note to preceding paragraph concerning change in status of paymaster's clerks.)

Clerical service is not incompatible with service as an enlisted man. Enlisted men are frequently required to perform clerical duties, and in such cases in the Army are entitled to extra pay for such duty. (Comp. Dec., June 24, 1903, 27 S. and A. Memo., 222.)

Regulation can not extend provisions of this section to include other than mates and warrant officers.—Statutory law can not be amended by regulation, and it is well settled that where certain grants are made, or privileges conferred by statute, such grants or privileges can not be enlarged or extended by regulation to persons or classes to whom they are not extended by the statute. It is not within the power of the executive to write the words "or paymaster's clerks" into section 1409. That would be legislation. The history of the regulations shows that the Navy Department formerly attempted to do this by framing a regulation in the terms of section 1409 except that the words "or clerk" were inserted after the words "warrant officer"; but in a later edition of the regulations this was corrected. The views expressed by the Comptroller of the Treasury in his decision of June 24, 1903 [noted above], are contrary to this conclusion, but nevertheless held, that the power to extend such a statutory provision by means of a Navy regulation, although it would be convenient to do so in many instances, does not exist; further, held, that the existing regulation, which provides that when enlisted men accept appointments as paymaster's clerks their enlistments terminate on the date of taking the oath under such appointments, can not be waived in an individual case, because, while any Navy regulation may be annulled, amended, suspended, or waived by the same power that framed it in the first instance, this rule is subject to the proviso that such action must not be in conflict with any statute. (File 8627-03, Dec. 30, 1903; see, generally, note to sec. 161, R. S.)

Revocation of warrant officer's appointment.—The President has no power to revoke the warrant of a boatswain in the Navy and discharge him from the service, without the sentence of a court-martial, in disregard of sections 1229 and 1624 (art. 36) of the Revised Statutes. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

A boatswain is an officer of the Navy within the restrictions of the above sections of the Revised Statutes (1229 and 1624, art. 36), concerning dismissal. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325; see also 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 635.)

The tenure of a boatswain's office is fixed by legislation. After it was thus established, it was not within the power of the President to limit it by the incorporation in the warrant of the provision that it was to continue in force during the pleasure of the President. The revocation of the warrant effects a discharge from the office, and, by a reasonable construction of sec. 1229, a dismissal from service. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

The question is not affected by the provisions of section 1409. A warrant officer may, before the term of his enlistment has expired, by the sentence of a court-martial, or by resignation of his office, be returned to the condition of an enlisted man; but there is no statutory authority for the President to relegate to his former inferior position a regularly warranted officer, who has been promoted from his place as an enlisted man, for the purpose of discharging him. This is contrary to the spirit, if it is not to the very letter, of the law of section 1229, Revised Statutes. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

"While it would be most desirable that authority should be given to the President to revoke the commission or warrant of an officer convicted of an offense and sentenced to imprisonment by a civil court, yet no such exception is found in the law to the sweeping provisions of section 1229." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

Revocation of rating as mate.—See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes.

Reduction of warrant officer to ordinary seaman.—Under article 9 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.), an officer who absents himself from his command without leave may, by the sentence of a court-martial, be reduced to the rating of an ordinary seaman. Inasmuch as such a sentence deprives a warrant officer of his position as a warrant officer in the U. S. Navy, and as article 53 (sec. 1624, R. S.) provides that no sentence extending to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer shall be carried into execution until confirmed by the President, it is deemed advisable as a matter of policy, although not specifically required by the statute, to submit the record of the general court-martial in such case to the President for confirmation of the sentence adjudged. (File 26251-11440, Mar. 30, 1916; C.M.O. 11-1916.) [In this case the sentence was confirmed by the President April 13, 1916; shortly thereafter, the warrant officer thus reduced to ordinary seaman was tried by general court-martial as an ordinary seaman on other charges, sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the Navy, and upon approval of the sentence by the Secretary of the Navy it was duly carried into effect. G. C. M. Rec., No. 31934.]

Deposit accounts of mates and warrant officers.—Upon the appointment of an enlisted man as a mate, his deposit account should be treated as though his enlistment had expired, i. e., he should be paid principal and interest to the date of his appointment as mate. (File 16407, July 28, 1903, and 3031-5, Nov. 27, 1906, construing act Feb. 9, 1889, sec. 1, 25 Stat., 657. Note: These rulings were made before the practice of discharging mates upon expiration of enlistment, as explained in note to sec. 1408, R. S., was commenced.)

While serving under an acting appointment as warrant officer, the status of an enlisted man clearly continues as that of an enlisted man; he must qualify for a permanent appointment by probationary service, or otherwise would be discharged from the service as an enlisted man. He should accordingly, while serving under such acting appointment, be permitted to make deposits, and to draw interest on deposits already made. Upon permanent appointment his deposit account should be treated as though his enlistment had expired, that is, he should be paid principal and interest to the date of his appointment, as was held by the Navy Department in the case of mates, before the present practice was commenced of discharging and reenlisting them. (File 26254-2020, June 6, 1916.)

The act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), provides that deposits may be made by "any enlisted man or appointed petty officer of the Navy." Had it been intended to include warrant officers it would undoubtedly have specifically so provided, as it did with petty officers. Warrant officers are not in practice discharged after a fixed period of service, but their tenure of office is practically for life, unless sooner terminated by resignation, sentence of court-martial, or in other exceptional manner. While section 1409, Revised Statutes, provides that the appointment of an enlisted man as a warrant officer "shall not discharge him from his enlistment," nevertheless, since the act of February 9, 1889, does not include warrant officers, it is necessary that upon appointment as such their deposits, made while enlisted men, be returned in the same manner as though discharged; otherwise the men might be deprived of deposits for life. (File 26254-2020, June 6, 1916.)

Warrant officers not regarded as enlisted men.—In the case of an enlisted man appointed as warrant officer, although his appointment does not discharge him from his enlistment, he is not reenlisted upon the expiration of his enlistment contract, but continues on under his sole status as warrant officer. He is not regarded as an enlisted man after he gets his warrant, even before the expiration of his enlistment. There is no reason for preserving his enlisted status after he has received his warrant, because he does not at any time, by operation of law, revert to his previous status as an enlisted man. (File 7657-445, June 21, 1917.)

Discharge and reenlistment of acting warrant officer.—Inasmuch as section 1409 clearly contemplates the concurrence of the status, duties, and obligations of an enlisted man and that of a warrant officer, and in view of the practice of the Bureau of Navigation in the matter, held, that there is no objection to the reenlistment of an acting warrant officer whose term of four years has expired; this with a view to preserving to the man his continuous service should he fail to be warranted. (File 7267-03.)

Discharge and reenlistment of mates.—See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1410. [Acting officers; petty officers; secretaries and clerks.] All officers not holding commissions or warrants, or who are not entitled to them, except such as are temporarily appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer, and except secretaries and clerks, shall be deemed petty officers, and shall be entitled to obedience, in the execution of their offices, from persons of inferior ratings.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 18, v. 12, p. 610.)

Acting appointments as pay officers. See section 1381, Revised Statutes.

Acting assistant surgeons. See section 1411, Revised Statutes.

Acting chaplains. See act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403).

Acting ensigns for engineering duty only were authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580).

Acting ensigns and acting lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy, and acting second lieutenants and acting first lieutenants, in the Marine Corps, for aeronautic duty only, were authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 583).

Acting flag officers. See sections 1434 and 1464, Revised Statutes.

Acting machinists. See act of March 3, 1899, section 15 (30 Stat., 1007).

Acting pay clerks. See act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942).

Acting warrant officers.—The Secretary of the Navy may legally appoint acting gunners in the Navy, and the power to make such appointments is strongly implied by section 1410, Revised Statutes. A right to appoint gunners to an undefined extent (see sec. 1405, R. S.) does not conclude against the power to appoint acting gunners also. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 564. Note: By act July 15, 1870, sec. 13, 16 Stat., 334, it was provided "that all acts or parts of acts authorizing the appointment of temporary acting officers in the Navy be, and the same are hereby, repealed, except as to assistant surgeons.")

An acting gunner is not, as such, even a petty officer. Accordingly, the laws (secs. 1229 and 1624, art. 36, R. S.) making provision as to dismissals of "officers" from the naval service, do not apply to the case of an acting gunner. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 564.)

Acting appointments as boatswains, gunners, and carpenters are issued pursuant to Navy Regulations, 1913, article R-3312. Other acting appointments are specifically authorized by laws noted above.

Acting commissioned officers.—"An officer duly appointed to act in any grade shall, while serving under such appointment, be entitled to the same command, precedence, and honors as if he held a commission in that grade of the same date as his appointment." (Art. R-1048, Navy Regs., 1913.)

In accordance with the general custom, acting officers, both in the Army and Navy, do not hold commissions. (File 13707-38:7, Aug. 20, 1914.)

"Officers" and "enlisted men" defined.—The term "all officers" in section 1410, Revised Statutes, is a general designation, which includes petty officers. (Muse v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 441.)

Petty officers and warrant officers in the Navy are generally spoken of as officers, and the Revised Statutes, section 1410, recognizes the usage; but all petty officers are not officers within the sense of the Constitution or of penal statutes. (Muse v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 441; see also note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, under "I. Officers of the United States.")

Within the meaning of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.), "unless there be something in the context or subject matter repugnant to or inconsistent with such construction, officers shall mean commissioned and warrant officers; superior officers shall be held to include mates and petty officers of the Navy and noncommissioned officers of the Marine Corps, in addition to the officers enumerated." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, p. 86.)

Within the meaning of the Articles of War relating to the Army, "unless the context shows that a different sense is intended, * * * the word 'officer' shall be construed to refer to a commissioned officer." (Sec. 1342, R. S., art. 1, as amended by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 650.)

Within the meaning of the War Risk Insurance Act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 401), "the term 'commissioned officer' includes a warrant officer, but includes only an officer in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States. * * * The terms 'man' and 'enlisted man' mean a person, whether male or female, and whether enlisted, enrolled, or drafted into active service in the military or naval forces of the United States, and include noncommissioned and petty officers, and members of training camps authorized by law." (See sec. 22 of act cited.)

The Navy consists of officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and seamen. Some of the warrant and petty officers of the Navy may be officers technically, because appointed by the head of a department; and others may be officers only by courtesy, because they are appointed by the chief of a bureau or the commander of a ship; but the two terms, "officers" and "enlisted men" are manifestly used in section 1600, Revised Statutes, to include the four classes of the Navy. (Muse v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 441.)

"There are three sorts of officers known to the Navy, viz., commissioned, warrant, and petty (sec. 1410); and inasmuch as, by section 1624, article 30, petty officers may be 'discharged from the service with bad conduct discharge,' by order of a summary court-martial, it seems that by 'officers' in article 36 is meant at most only warrant and commissioned officers." (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 635.)

Cadets at the Naval Academy, by statutory definition, are not to be included in general in legislation confined to "officers" of the Navy. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 635; see also Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324; and see note to sec. 1512, R. S.)

The expression "officers or enlisted men," in a statute relating to longevity, is not to be construed distributively as requiring that a person should be an enlisted man or an officer nominated and appointed by the President, or by the head of a department, but was meant to include all men in service, either by enlistment or regular appointment. (U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309.)

Section 1410, Revised Statutes, which defines who are petty officers, most clearly classes clerks as officers not holding commissions or warrants, and not entitled to them, but still officers of the Navy. Excepting clerks from those "officers" who would otherwise be petty officers, leaves them classed among the officers previously described. (Hendee v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 134; affirmed 124 U. S., 309. See note to sec. 1386, R. S., concerning present status of paymasters' clerks.)

Section 1410, Revised Statutes, classes paymaster's clerks in the Navy among "all officers not holding commissions or warrants, or who are not entitled to them," by excepting them, with others, from such officers as are to be deemed petty officers. (Mouat v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 293, 297; reversed, U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303.)

The confused condition of our statute law relating to the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and seamen of the Navy may be best illustrated by the fact that a paymaster's clerk was held to be an officer and was held not to be an officer by the same court, on the same day, and through the same judge; these decisions, of course, meant that a paymaster's clerk was and was not an officer within the intent of certain statutes, the one decision relating to mileage, the other to longevity pay. (Brown v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 379, 383, citing U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303, and U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309.)

A clerk to a pay officer, appointed by authority of section 1386, Revised Statutes, was not one of the petty officers who, under section 1410, Revised Statutes, are entitled to obedience in the execution of their offices from persons of inferior ratings. (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109.)

For other cases see note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, under "General legislation not applicable to retired officers," and "Retired officers may be included in general legislation."

Mates are petty officers.—See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes.

Temporary officers.—There is a class recognized in the Navy who are neither commissioned nor warrant officers, who perform the duties of the station in which they are temporarily placed. They are generally, though not necessarily, styled acting, as acting boatswain, acting gunner, etc., and have an appointment with that title. Temporary appointments are also recognized by section 1410, Revised Statutes. The appointment referred to in this section is confined to "officers not holding commissions or warrants, or who are not entitled to them." The officer receives no commission or warrant. He is simply appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

Officers holding temporary appointments in the Navy are not either commissioned or warrant officers, as is recognized by section 1410, Revised Statutes. Legislation, therefore, as to the manner in which such officers are to be cashiered, etc., does not apply in the present case (where party was appointed "an acting master in the Navy on temporary service," and was dismissed from the service by the Secretary of the Navy). The assignment of a reason in the letter of dismissal was surplusage and perhaps might well have been omitted. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 560.)

Mates are not "temporarily appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer" within the exception to section 1410, Revised Statutes. While the words "acting master's mates," sometimes employed prior to the Revised Statutes, might indicate, by the use of the word "acting," a person temporarily appointed to the duties of a master's mate, officers who are recognized by law, and whose pay is fixed by a permanent statute, can not be said to be temporarily appointed. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593; for other decisions concerning status of mates see note to sec. 1408, R. S.)

Acting assistant dental surgeons in the regular Dental Corps of the Navy, appointed with a view to permanent as distinguished from temporary service, and having the same rights in respect to rank, pay, and retirement as other officers in the Regular Navy, are not temporary officers, but are officers of "permanent tenure" within the meaning of the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 903, since repealed). Strictly speaking, the term "permanent tenure" is a misnomer in any case where applied to officers of the Navy, as all such officers are subject to removal in various ways. The expression was used by Congress as applying to officers whose tenure of office is for life unless sooner terminated in some authorized manner generally applicable to officers of the Regular Navy. (File 13707-38:9, Sept. 2, 1914.)

Secretary to the Admiral of the Navy.—

The necessary implication of this section is that secretaries are officers not holding commissions or warrants and not entitled to them. If secretaries do not hold commissions and are not entitled to them, it follows that they are not appointed by the President, because appointments by the President are always evidenced by a commission. Accordingly the appointment of the secretary allowed the Admiral of the Navy, by section 1367, Revised Statutes, does not belong to the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, but devolves upon the Admiral as one personal to himself. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

Sec. 1411. [Acting assistant surgeons.] The Secretary of the Navy may appoint, for temporary service, such acting assistant surgeons as the exigencies of the service may require, who shall receive the compensation of assistant surgeons.—(3 Mar., 1865, c. 124, s. 6, v. 13, p. 539. 15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 13, v. 16, p. 334.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of February 15, 1879, section 2 (20 Stat., 295), which provided "That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Navy shall not appoint acting assistant surgeons for temporary service, as authorized by section fourteen hundred and eleven, Revised Statutes, except in case of war."

By act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 380), it was provided that "The President is hereby authorized to appoint for temporary service twenty-five acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the relative rank and compensation of assistant surgeons." The words "the relative rank of" as used in sections of the Revised Statutes in defining the rank of officers were amended to read "the rank of" by the Navy personnel act, March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006).

See sections 1381 and 1410, Revised Statutes, concerning acting appointments in general.

Appointments by the President and Secretary of the Navy.—See note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2, under "II. Constitutional power of appointment."

It is universally true that when Congress, in pursuance of its authority under the provision of the Constitution (Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2), sees fit to give the sole power of appointment to the President, it does so by language appropriate to that end, such as the unqualified phrase, "may appoint." Under such language the President is vested with power of appointing alone. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 136; see also 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82.)

For form of commission which has been issued by the President to officers appointed acting assistant surgeons in the Navy under the act of May 4, 1898, see Nelson v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 157. [In practice, commissions are no longer issued to acting assistant surgeons.]

Acting assistant surgeons are "officers" on the active list of the Navy.—The term "officer or enlisted man" in act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128, since repealed), providing for allowance of death gratuity, includes all persons in the service and applies to acting assistant surgeons. (File 26543-10, Sept. 11, 1908.)

An acting assistant surgeon in the Navy, appointed under the act of May 4, 1898, is an officer on the active list of the Navy within the meaning of the death gratuity law of May 13, 1908 (since repealed). (15 Comp. Dec., 176.)

Acting assistant surgeons are not officers of the Regular Navy.—Congress by their legislation have recognized the distinction between officers in the permanent and temporary service in the Navy. Thus by section 1370, Revised Statutes, as amended by the naval appropriation act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 369, 380), in respect to assistant surgeons, it was provided that "no person shall be appointed assistant surgeon until he has been examined and approved by a board of naval surgeons designated by the Secretary of the Navy, nor who is under twenty-one or over thirty years of age, inclusive." That provision, as its language imports, was to guard against the appointment of incompetent surgeons in the Navy, and evidently applies to appointments to be made in the regular or permanent service as contradistinguished from appointments in the temporary service, for in the next succeeding clause or paragraph in the same act is the provision authorizing the President "to appoint for temporary service twenty-five acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the relative rank and compensation of assistant surgeons" (without requiring an examination, or fixing any limitations as to age). (Taylor v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 155, 161.)

Acting assistant surgeons are not "medical officers of the Navy," within the meaning of the act of July 28, 1892 (27 Stat., 321), but are officers in the temporary service of the Navy, and are not eligible for duty as members of marine examining boards. (File 15229-12; see also file 947 M, June 13, 1910.)

Acting assistant surgeons are officers merely in the temporary service, and not officers of the Regular Navy. (9 Comp. Dec., 827.)

The act of February 15, 1879 (20 Stat., 294), provides for a board to make an examination of "the eighteen acting and three acting passed assistant surgeons now in the service, should they desire to present themselves," and authorized the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint those found qualified as assistant surgeons "in the Regular Navy of the United States," and to muster out those found not qualified, except that, "in the event of physical disqualifications which occurred in the line of duty, such officer may, upon the recommendation of a retiring board, be placed upon the retired list." (File 27231-51:5, July 10, 1915.)

Again, the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 684, 697), provided that "assistant surgeons under the age of fifty years, appointed for temporary service during the War with Spain, having creditable records, who are now in the Navy, may be given permanent commissions." (Taylor v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 155, 161.)

[Section 4693, Revised Statutes, providing the classes of persons entitled to pensions specified "any officer" of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, disabled "while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty," and in addition specified "any acting assistant or contract surgeon," disabled "while actually performing the duties of assistant surgeon or acting assistant surgeon with any military force in the field, or in transitu, or in hospital." The fact that a pension was granted to a contract surgeon by the express terms of the statute was held not to authorize a court to hold that it was because he was an officer in the Army. See Byrnes v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 302.]

Not eligible for retirement.—That an acting assistant surgeon can not legally be retired for physical disability is not open to doubt, as acting assistant surgeons have always been appointed and discharged from the Navy entirely in the discretion of the Executive. (File 27231-51:5, July 10, 1915; see also file 27231-106, Oct. 22, 1917.)

In no case has any acting assistant surgeon been placed on the retired list, with three exceptions which were expressly authorized by the law enacted "to abolish the Volunteer Navy of the United States," viz, the act of February 15, 1879, section 1 (20 Stat., 294). (File 27231-51:5, July 10, 1915.)

Except in the cases specifically provided for by the act of 1879, the appointments of these temporary officers have invariably been revoked for physical disability; their retirement being not only unauthorized by existing law, but contrary to the best interests of the Navy. Thus, one purpose of the law is to authorize temporary appointments, when required, of doctors who are able to perform the duties for which appointed, regardless of whether they are qualified for the regular Medical Corps. For example, in the present case the officer was appointed an acting assistant surgeon after he had resigned from the regular Medical Corps following his failure to meet the professional requirements for that corps. Similarly, other acting assistant surgeons are appointed who are above the age limit for entering the regular Medical Corps and who could not, therefore, possibly serve the required period before reaching the retirement age. Others may be appointed for temporary service who could not qualify physically for the regular corps, the requirements for which are naturally more severe because of the privilege of retirement to which its members are entitled. If acting assistant surgeons were legally entitled to retirement, the Navy Department could not, in the interest of the Government, recommend the appointment of any applicant unless he possessed all of the requirements necessary for the regular service, and thus one object of the law would be defeated. (File 27231-51:5, July 10, 1915.)

When applicants accept appointments as acting assistant surgeons, they are chargeable with knowledge of the law as above stated, and of the fact that such appointments are revoked when for any reason the appointees are either unable to serve, or are no longer needed. (File 27231-51:5, July 10, 1915.)

Concerning the retirement of acting assistant surgeons for physical disability, "the law on the subject has been reviewed at length, and the conclusion reached, after consideration of all matters bearing on the subject, is that an acting assistant surgeon of the Navy, appointed for temporary service under the provisions of the act of May 4, 1898, is not eligible for retirement on account of physical disability." (File 27231-51:4, June 30, 1915.)

The Secretary of the Navy declines to request an opinion of the Attorney General as to the retirement of acting assistant surgeons, as the question has been decided by the Navy Department, and the Attorney General does not possess the power to review the decisions of other executive departments. Even when requested by the head of a department, the Attorney General has consistently declined to render opinions when it appears that the officer requesting the opinion has already decided the case and requests the Attorney General's opinion merely at the instance of claimants or interested parties who seek to have the existing decision reversed. (File 27231-51:6, July 15, 1915.)

[NOTE.—The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), authorizing temporary appointments in the Navy, to continue in force “not later than six months after the termination of the present war,” provided (sec. 9) that “any person originally appointed temporarily, as provided in this act, shall not be entitled to any rights of retirement, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty.” See also act June 4, 1920, section 2 (41 Stat., 834).]

Revocation of appointment for physical disability.—In view of the fact that acting assistant surgeons can not, under the law, be retired for physical disability, the most liberal arrangement which is possible in their case is to direct that the revocation of appointment be made to take effect three months after date; this is, in itself, in the nature of a gratuity, which is not expressly authorized by law, but which, under special circumstances, the Secretary of the Navy has decided may legally be regarded as within the range of executive discretion to grant. (File 27231-51:7, July 14, 1915; see also 27231-51:5, July 10, 1915.)

Implied resignation of acting appointment by acceptance of appointment in Regular Navy.—The appointment of an acting assistant surgeon (appointed under the act of May 4, 1898) to the regular service as an assistant surgeon, while still holding a position in the temporary force, operated as a discharge from his former position, and an appointment to the latter; and although the two services are for some purposes to be regarded as continuous the one with the other, yet the position of assistant surgeon held by him in the temporary force is a different and distinct position from that of assistant surgeon in the permanent force to which he was afterwards appointed. (Taylor v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 155, 159, quoting decision of Comptroller of the Treasury.)

Implied resignation of position in Regular Navy by acceptance of acting appointment.—An assistant surgeon failed in his professional examination for promotion, was suspended from promotion in accordance with section 1505, Revised Statutes, and during the period of such suspension resigned from the Navy. Thereafter he was appointed an acting assistant surgeon in the Navy, which position he later resigned. It was then contended that he was insane at the time of his resignation as an assistant surgeon, and that said resignation was accordingly invalid and should be revoked. Held, that even though he was insane at the time of his resignation as an assistant surgeon the finding of the board of medical examiners established his sanity at the time he was appointed an acting assistant surgeon, and his acceptance of such appointment was tantamount to the resignation of his former office of assistant surgeon in the Navy, if he still held such office at the time of his acting appointment. However, the evidence clearly establishes this officer's sanity, inasmuch as he was found physically and mentally qualified by a board of examiners at the time of his appointment as an assistant surgeon, at the time of his examination for promotion, and again at the time of his appointment as an acting assistant surgeon. In the absence of evidence definitely establishing as a fact that he was of unsound mind when he resigned as assistant surgeon, his sanity under the circumstances stated must be conclusively presumed; his resignation of that office was accordingly valid, and he can be reinstated in the Navy only by a new exercise of the appointing power. (File 27231-51:1, Feb. 24, 1913.)

Rank and pay of acting assistant surgeons.—By act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 369, 380), the President was authorized “to appoint for temporary service twenty-five acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the relative rank and compensation of assistant surgeons.” When this act was passed, the pay of officers in the naval service was generally regulated by section 1556, Revised Statutes. By section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004, 1007), it was provided that commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps “shall receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law, for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army.” The effect of this act was to increase the pay of naval officers generally, and therefore to enhance the pay of assistant surgeons. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137.)

The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), raised the rank of assistant surgeons in the Navy by providing that “assistant surgeons shall rank with assistant surgeons in the Army.” The effect of this act was to give assistant surgeons in the Navy a higher rank—that is, to raise them from the rank of ensign, under section 1474, Revised Statutes, to that of lieutenant (junior grade), corresponding with the rank held by assistant surgeons in the Army. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137.)

The act of 1898 provided for a standard by which to determine the rank and pay of acting assistant surgeons, and that standard is the rank and pay in force at the time when the services of the acting assistant surgeons are rendered; accordingly held that under section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), and the acts of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1167), and May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of acting assistant surgeons was enhanced and assimilated to that of assistant surgeons, and did not remain fixed as regulated by section 1556, Revised Statutes. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137.)

It may not be doubted that the relation which the act of 1898 established between the rank and pay of acting assistant surgeons and assistant surgeons in reason must rest upon the substantial identity of the services to be rendered by the incumbents of both offices. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137.)

The pay of acting assistant surgeon in the Navy was temporarily increased by specific provision in the act of May 18, 1920, section 1 (41 Stat., 602). See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes.

The act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 380), is permanent legislation in so far as it authorizes the appointment of acting assistant surgeons for temporary service. Although passed at a time when the United States was at war with Spain, it is not limited in its application to the emergencies then existing or presently arising. If Congress had intended that the authority conferred upon the President to appoint acting assistant surgeons for temporary service should be a temporary grant of power, such limitations would have been expressly inserted. Accordingly, held that the power conferred upon the President by said act was not exhausted by its exercise during the emergencies then existing and which led to its passage, but still exists and may be exercised whenever necessity therefor arises. (9 Comp. Dec., 827.)

Sec. 1412. [Volunteer officers; transfer to Regular Navy, etc.] Officers who have been, or may be, transferred from the volunteer service to the Regular Navy shall be credited with the sea-service performed by them as volunteer officers, and shall receive all the benefits of such duty in the same manner as if they had been, during such service, in the Regular Navy.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 3, v. 14, p. 516.)

"An act to abolish the Volunteer Navy of the United States," approved February 15, 1879 (20 Stat., 294), made provision for transferring to the Regular Navy line officers and medical officers in the Volunteer Navy, and for mustering out volunteer officers not qualified to discharge the duties of their position.

Any line officer of volunteers may be advanced in grade if given a vote of thanks by Congress for heroism. (Sec. 1508, R. S.)

Honorably discharged volunteer officers and sailors are eligible for admission to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. (Act May 26, 1900, 31 Stat., 217.)

Other provisions for crediting officers of the Navy with service in the Volunteer Army or Navy are contained in the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473).

Pay of officers in a volunteer naval service, when authorized by law, is provided for by section 1559, Revised Statutes.

Previous service to be credited to officers appointed to any corps of the Navy or to the Marine Corps, after serving in a different corps of the Navy or of the Marine Corps. (Act June 10, 1896, 29 Stat., 361.)

Previous service to be credited to certain surgeons in the Navy appointed for meritorious services during yellow fever epidemics. (Act June 10, 1896, 29 Stat., 361.)

"Sea service" defined: See section 1571, Revised Statutes. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), it was provided that "on and after June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and twenty, no captain, commander, or lieutenant commander shall be promoted unless he has had not less than two years' actual sea service on seagoing ships in the grade in which serving. * * * Provided, That the qualification of sea service shall not apply to officers restricted to the performance of engineering duty only." This requirement as to sea service was modified in its application to exceptional cases during war or national emergency by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718). A requirement of three years' sea service prior to promotion of acting chaplains is contained in act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403).

Service as midshipman at the Naval Academy or as cadet at the Military Academy not to be credited to officers of the Navy who were appointed to said academies after March 4, 1913. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 891.)

Staff officers appointed since March 4, 1913, not to be credited with constructive service for purposes of precedence. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892.)

Staff officers and others appointed from civil life since March 4, 1913, not to be credited with constructive service for purposes of pay. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 891.)

Transfer of officers from the temporary Navy and Naval Reserve Force to the Regular Navy was authorized by act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834-836.)

Vessels in merchant marine may be taken possession of by President for naval purposes. (Act Sept. 7, 1916, 39 Stat., 731.)

Volunteer Naval Reserve established. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 592, as amended by act of July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 710.)

Volunteer Patrol Squadrons: See act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 600).

The effect of the law embodied in this section is to give the officers concerned the full benefit of sea duty performed by them while in the volunteer service. Such duty may go to complete the period of sea service required in certain grades of the Regular Navy prior to promotion, or may be properly taken into account in the matter of assignment to duty. It does not confer upon the officers referred to the right to have their commissions or their rank antedated. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 198; see also 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 45, 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 189, and 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 399.)

By the regulations of the Navy in force when this law was adopted a certain period of sea service, formerly two years and later one year, was required of officers in the four grades from ensign to lieutenant commander, inclusive, before, as a general rule, they were nominated for promotion to the next higher grades. (See Regulations of 1865, p. 46, par. 257; Regulations of 1870, p. 130, par. 299.) Besides, officers of the Navy generally are credited with their sea service with a view to its being taken into consideration in their future assignment to duty. The design of the provision referred to, then, was to give the transferred officers the full benefit of their former sea service, in so far as it might go to complete the period of such service required in their respective grades previous to nomination for promotion, and in so far as it ought properly to be taken into account in the matter of assignment to duty. Beyond these advantages the provision would seem to confer nothing. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 358.)

Sec. 1413. [Civil Engineer Corps; and Storekeepers.] The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint a civil engineer and a naval store-keeper at each of the navy-yards where such officers may be necessary.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 172, s. 1, v. 14, p. 490. 17 June, 1868, c. 61, s. 1, v. 15, p. 69.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which provided that "no appointments shall be made of civil engineers in the Navy on the active list under section fourteen hundred and thirteen of the Revised Statutes in excess of the present number, twenty-one."

Further amendment was made by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 671), which provided that "the appointment of six additional civil engineers is hereby authorized, three to be appointed during the present calendar year, and the other three in the calendar year of nineteen hundred and three."

"One additional civil engineer, in all twenty-eight, and twelve assistant civil engineers, of whom six shall have the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) and six the rank of ensign," were authorized by act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197). By act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1184), it was provided that "officers of the Corps of Civil Engineers hereafter appointed shall, from the date of their original appointment, take rank and precedence with lieutenants (junior grade)."

One civil engineer (Leonard Martin Cox), was authorized by name to be restored to the Corps of Civil Engineers, to be "carried as an additional to the number of the grade to which he may be appointed under this act, or at any time thereafter." (Act Mar. 4, 1907, 34 Stat., 1407.) The total number of civil engineers in the Navy was thereby increased, temporarily, to 29. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), it was provided that "the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following staff corps, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be based on percentages of the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy, as follows: * * * Corps of Civil Engineers, two per centum * * *. The total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following mentioned staff corps at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the various grades of the respective corps as follows: * * * Corps of Civil Engineers: One-half civil engineers with the rank of rear admiral to five and one-half civil engineers with the rank of captain, to fourteen civil engineers with the rank of commander, to eighty civil engineers and assistant civil engineers with the rank below commander.

* * * When there is an odd number of officers in the grade or rank of rear admiral in the line or in each corps, the lower division thereof shall include the excess in number, except where there is but one. Whenever a final fraction occurs in computing the authorized number of any corps, grade, or rank in the naval service, the nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number: Provided, That at least one officer shall be allowed in each grade or rank. For the purpose of determining the authorized number of officers in any grade or rank of the line or of the staff corps, there shall be excluded from consideration those officers carried by law as additional numbers, including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, and nothing contained herein shall be held to reduce below that heretofore authorized by law the number of officers in any grade or rank in the staff corps." The temporary appointment of additional officers during the period of the existing war was authorized by the act of May 22, 1917, section 4 (40 Stat., 85), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), which also authorized temporary appointments and promotions to fill during the period of the war the deficiency existing prior to May 22, 1917, in the total number of commissioned officers authorized by the act of August 29, 1916. By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834), it was provided that "the number of staff officers on active duty of whatever kind shall be in the same proportions as authorized by existing law."

"Promotions in the corps of civil engineers shall be after such examination as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe." (Act Mar. 3, 1903, 32 Stat., 1197.) Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank. Advancement in rank of staff officers up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander is regulated by act August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576).

Advancement to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the Staff Corps of the Navy are to be made by selection upon recommendation of a board of officers of the corps concerned. (Act July 1, 1913, 40 Stat., 718.)

Rank of civil engineers is fixed by section 1478, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577).

Rank of assistant civil engineers. See acts of March 3, 1903, and March 4, 1917, noted above.

Storekeepers; civilians may be appointed for foreign stations. (Sec. 1414, R. S.)

Storekeepers; bonds required of civilians. (Sec. 1415, R. S.)

Storekeepers; officers required to act as. (Sec. 1438, R. S.)

Storekeepers; bonds required of officers acting as. (Sec. 1439, R. S.)

Storekeepers; mileage was allowed for travel by section 1566, Revised Statutes, now superseded.

Storekeepers; pay of officers acting as. (Sec. 1567, R. S.)

Storekeepers; pay of civilians. (Sec. 1568, R. S.)

Storekeeper at Naval Academy to be detailed from Pay [now Supply] Corps. (Sec. 1527, R. S.)

Historical note.—Prior to the act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat., 490), civil engineers were appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; since then, under authority of that act (now embodied in sec. 1413, R. S.), they have been commissioned by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; they were appropriated for as part of the civil establishment at the several navy yards and stations under the control of the Bureau of Yards and Docks until 1870, when their pay was regulated by section 3 of the act of July 15 of that year (now embodied in section 1556, Revised Statutes), fixing the annual pay of officers of the Navy on the active list, and appropriations for their pay have been made since 1870 under the head of "Pay of the Navy." (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 126.)

Prior to 1867 civil engineers in the Navy were appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and their duties were shore duties—the superintendence and charge of buildings in navy yards. (Brown v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 379.)

The authority of the President under the act of March 3, 1871 (now embodied in sec. 1478, R. S.), "to determine and fix the relative rank of civil engineers," was not exercised until February 24, 1881. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 126.)

In 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 203, it was held that civil engineers, in the absence of action by the President conferring rank upon them as authorized by law, were civil officers, and not naval officers, and might be removed by nomination and confirmation of a successor in any case; and that no notice of dismissal need be sent the officer so removed. Also held that section 1413, Revised Statutes, "necessarily implies that such appointments are only to be made where such officers are found necessary, and inferentially that their services may be dispensed with when unnecessary; and indicates that the appointment is to some extent a local one, and that the appointee can not be a naval officer in the full sense of the term."

In 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 126, it was held that civil engineers are not merely "civil officers connected with the Navy," but are officers in the Navy, plainly included among those contemplated by the amended section 1480, Revised Statutes, as belonging to the "staff corps of the Navy," and possessing, under a then recent order issued pursuant to section 1478, Revised Statutes, defined relative rank with other officers in the Navy; and accordingly, that they may be retired from active service and placed on the retired list under the statutory provisions (secs. 1443 et seq.) regulating the retirement of officers in the Navy. (It had previously been held, in 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 165, that civil engineers appointed under sec. 1413, R. S., are officers of the Navy within the meaning of arts. 36 and 37 of sec. 1624, R. S.; and in 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 597, that they were persons belonging to the Navy and as such subject to the jurisdiction of naval courts-martial.)

In Brown v. U. S. (32 Ct. Cls., 379), it was held that the acts of March 2, 1867 (sec. 1413, R. S.), and July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 321, 330, sec. 3), and March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 526, 536), did not change the legal status of civil engineers in the Navy, but were merely a legislative recognition of civil engineers as officials who were then and always had been in the naval and not in the civil service; that both the Navy Department and the accounting officers of the Treasury had uniformly held that civil engineers in the Navy were in the naval service; and accordingly that civil engineers in the Navy prior to the act of March 2, 1867 (sec. 1413, R. S.), were officers and were in the naval service within the intent of the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), relating to longevity pay.

Civil Engineer Corps, increases for benefit of designated individuals not favored.—"The Department is not satisfied as to the necessity for increase in the corps of civil engineers, and even if an increase should be deemed advisable, believes that it should be made in the regular way, by an authorized increase in the corps, and not by a bill designed to benefit a particular individual to be appointed as an additional number." (File 532-43, Mar. 31, 1908.)

"If the corps is to be increased it would seem that the increase should be made first and the candidate qualify afterwards, rather than to pass a special law creating a vacancy for any person, however worthy." (File 532-42, Feb. 29, 1908.)

As to unconstitutionality of such legislation, see note to Constitution, Article II section 2, clause 2, "Congress cannot designate appointee," under "III. Power of Congress."

Superintendent of State, War, and Navy Building.—The act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. 553), does not contemplate that an officer of the Corps of Civil Engineers of the Navy shall be eligible for appointment as superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Building. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508. See also notes to secs. 1390 and 1462, R. S.)

Sec. 1414. [Civilian storekeepers on foreign stations.] The Secretary of the Navy may appoint citizens who are not officers of the Navy to be storekeepers on foreign stations, when suitable officers of the Navy can not be ordered on such service, or when, in his opinion, the public interest will be thereby promoted.—(17 June, 1844, c. 107, s. 1, v. 5, p. 700. 3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 3, v. 9, p. 72.)

Except as provided in this section, the Secretary of the Navy shall order a suitable commissioned or warrant officer to take charge of the naval stores at foreign stations where a storekeeper may be necessary. (Sec. 1438, R. S.)

Pay of civilian storekeepers on foreign stations is fixed by section 1568, Revised Statutes.

Supply officer to be general storekeeper.—At each navy yard and station there shall be an officer of the pay [supply] corps detailed as the general storekeeper. (Art. R-4622, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Appointment must be made by the Secretary of the Navy.—The appointment of a civilian naval storekeeper by the commander of a squadron is not authorized by law, and is therefore void, and furnishes no ground upon which the salary for that office can be claimed. (Larkin v. U. S., 5 Ct. Cls., 535.)

It is clear that under the law embodied in this section a citizen could only be appointed to the office of naval storekeeper by the Secretary of the Navy when a suitable naval officer could not be ordered on such service or when in the Secretary's opinion the public service would be promoted by the appointment of a citizen. The commander of a squadron certainly had no authority to make such an appointment. Possibly he might under a necessity have ordered a commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy to discharge the duties of the office temporarily [see section 1438, Revised Statutes], but it cannot be contended that he had any authority of law to order a citizen or to clothe him with the functions of the office. (Larkin v. U. S., 5 Ct. Cls., 535.)

Sale of stores to officers and enlisted men.—The Secretary of the Navy is not authorized, in the absence of a provision of law therefor, to purchase for sale to officers and enlisted men of the Navy articles not included in the regular naval stores. (6 Comp. Dec., 321.)

Sections 1414 and 1438 of the Revised Statutes refer only to such naval stores and provisions as are authorized to be issued to the Navy, and do not include anything more than the components of the Navy ration as prescribed by law; and the appropriation for subsistence of the Navy is not available for the purchase of any article of subsistence except such as the law authorizes to be purchased and issued to the enlisted men of the Navy, and can not be used for the purchase of articles of subsistence which may be authorized to be purchased and sold in the commissary stores of the Army under section 144, Revised Statutes, and the act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat., 108). (6 Comp. Dec., 321.)

See laws noted under section 418, Revised Statutes, with reference to sale of naval stores to persons in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and to civilian employees.

Sec. 1415. [Civilian storekeepers to give bond.] Every person who is appointed store-keeper under the provisions of the preceding section shall be required to give a bond, in such amount as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy, for the faithful performance of his duty.—(17 June, 1844, c. 107, s. 1, v. 5, p. 700; 3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 3, v. 9, p. 172.)

On general subject of bonds, see note to section 1383, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1416. [Civil offices at yards may be discontinued. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1416. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, when in his opinion the public interest will permit it, to discontinue the office or employment of any measurer and inspector of timber, clerk of the yard, clerk of the commandant, clerk of the storekeeper, clerk of the naval constructor, and the keeper of the magazine employed at any navy yard, and to require the duties of the keeper of the magazine to be performed by gunners." 10 Aug., 1846, c. 176, s. 1, v. 9, pp. 98, 99.

It was superseded by a clause in the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 754), noted below under "Clerks to commandants of yards and stations."

Clerks to commandants of yards and stations.—By section 1556, Revised Statutes, provision was made for the pay of clerks to commandants of yards and stations, and payment in accordance therewith was specifically authorized in the annual naval appropriation act under "Pay of the Navy," including the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127). By naval appropriation act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 754), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to fix the pay of the "clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force at navy yards and naval stations" on a per annum or per diem basis as he may elect; it was further provided therein "that the number may be increased or decreased at his option, and shall be distributed at the various navy yards and naval stations by the Secretary of the Navy to meet the needs of the naval service." The same act repealed "so much of section fifteen hundred and fifty-six of the Revised Statutes as relates to pay of clerks to commandants of navy yards and naval stations," and omitted the specific provision theretofore made under "Pay of the Navy" for such clerks.

The term "officer or enlisted man" as used in the death gratuity law of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), does not apply to commandant's clerks. (File 5460-31.)

Service as commandant's clerk is not military service, and the Navy Department does not approve of proposed legislation crediting such service to officers of the Navy or Marine Corps for longevity purposes. (File 26255-2742, Jan. 21, 1913.) But see contra. 25 Comp. Dec., 745.

Sec. 1417. [Enlisted men, number of; advancement to warrant officers.] The number of persons who may at one time be enlisted into the Navy of the United States, including seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, mechanics, firemen, and coal-heavers, and including seven hundred and fifty apprentices and boys, hereby authorized to be enlisted annually, shall not exceed eight thousand two hundred and fifty: Provided, That in the appointment of warrant-officers in the naval service of the United States, preference shall be given to men who have been honorably discharged upon the expiration of an enlistment as an apprentice or boy, to serve during minority, and re-enlisted within three months after such discharge, to serve during a term of three or more years: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be held to abrogate the provisions of section fourteen hundred and seven of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

This section was expressly amended and re-enacted to read as above by act of May 12, 1879 (21 Stat., 3). As it appeared in the second edition of the Revised Statutes, it read as follows:

"SEC. 1417. [The number of persons who may at one time be enlisted into the Navy of the United States, including seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, mechanics, firemen, coal heavers, apprentices, and boys, shall not exceed eight thousand five hundred.] [The number of persons whomay at one time be enlisted into the Navy of the United States, including seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, mechanics, firemen, coal heavers, apprentices, and boys, shall not exceed seven thousand and five hundred.]"—(7 June, 1864, c. 111, v. 13, p. 120; 17 June, 1868, c. 61, s. 2, v. 15, p. 72; 30 June, 1876, c. 159, v. 19, p. 66; U. S. v. Thompson, 2 Spr., 103.)

The number of enlisted men has from time to time been increased as follows:

"The number of persons who may at one time be enlisted into the Navy of the United States, including seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, mechanics, firemen, and coal heavers, and including one thousand five hundred apprentices and boys, hereby authorized to be enlisted annually, shall not exceed nine thousand." (Act Mar. 3, 1893, 27 Stat., 730.)

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to enlist as many additional seamen as in his discretion he may deem necessary, not to exceed one thousand." (Act Mar. 2, 1895, 28 Stat., 826.)

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to enlist at any time after the passage of this act as many additional men as in his discretion he may deem necessary, not to exceed one thousand." (Act June 10, 1896, 29 Stat., 361.)

Subsequent acts fixed the number of enlisted men in the Navy as follows:

11,000 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and boys, including men in the engineers' force and for the Coast Survey Service and Fish Commission; and

750 Boys under training at training stations and on board training ships. (Act Mar. 3, 1897, 29 Stat., 648.)

12,750 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and boys, including men in the engineers' force and for the Coast Survey Service and Fish Commission;

1,000 Boys under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men detailed for duty with Naval Militia. (Act May 4, 1898, 30 Stat., 369. Provision was made by the same act for a temporary increase of the enlisted force during the existing War with Spain.)

17,500 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice boys, including men in the engineers' force and for the Coast Survey Service and Fish Commission;

2,500 Apprentices under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men detailed for duty with Naval Militia. (Act Mar. 3, 1899, 30 Stat., 1025.)

22,500 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice boys, including men in the engineers' force, and for the Fish Commission;

2,500 Apprentices under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men detailed for duty with Naval Militia. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1108.)

- 25,500 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice boys, including men in the engineers' force, and for the Fish Commission;
- 2,500 Apprentices under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men detailed for duty with Naval Militia. (Act July 1, 1902, 32 Stat., 662.)

- 2,500 Apprentices under training at training stations and on board training ships. (Act Mar. 3, 1903, 32 Stat., 1177.)
- 31,500 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentices, including men in the engineers' force, and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission; and
- 2,500 Apprentices under training at training stations and on board training ships. (Act Apr. 27, 1904, 33 Stat., 324.)
- 34,500 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentices, including men in the engineers' force, and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission;
- 2,500 Apprentices under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement. (Act Mar. 3, 1905, 33 Stat., 1092.)
- 36,000 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force, and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission;
- 2,500 Apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement. (Act Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1176.)
- 42,000 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force, and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission;
- 2,500 Apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement. (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 127.)
- 44,000 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission;
- 3,500 Apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement. (Act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 606.)
- 48,000 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission;
- 3,500 Apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships; and Men undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement. (Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 328.)
- 48,000 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission;
- 3,500 Apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships;
Men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia; and Men undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement. (Act March 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 938.)
- 68,700 Petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission;
- 6,000 Apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships;
Men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia;
Men sentenced by court-martial to discharge;
Men furloughed without pay, subject to recall in time of emergency;
Men in the Hospital Corps; and
- 350 Enlisted men of the Naval Flying Corps. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 572, 575, 582.)
- 87,000 "The President is hereafter authorized whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to increase the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy to eighty-seven thousand men." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 575.)
- 150,000 "The authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby temporarily increased from eighty-seven thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand, including four thousand additional apprentice seamen." (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 1, 40 Stat., 84.)

131,485 "The authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby increased from eighty-seven thousand to one hundred and thirty-one thousand four hundred and eighty-five." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 714.)

181,485 "The authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby temporarily increased from one hundred and thirty-one thousand four hundred and eighty-five to one hundred and eighty-one thousand four hundred and eighty-five; the authorized number of apprentice seamen is hereby temporarily increased from six thousand to twenty-four thousand; and the authorized number of enlisted men of the Flying Corps is hereby temporarily increased from three hundred and fifty to ten thousand. * * * Provided further, That the number of enlisted men for instruction in trade schools shall not at any time exceed fourteen thousand, which number is hereby temporarily authorized: Provided further, That the President is authorized, at any time during the period of the present war, when in his judgment it becomes necessary, temporarily to increase the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy, as provided for herein, by the addition of fifty thousand men." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 714, expressly amending and reenacting section 1 of the act approved May 22, 1917, 40 Stat., 84.)

241,000 "The total authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby temporarily increased from 131,485 during the period from July 1, 1919, to September 30, 1919, to 241,000 men, and from October 1, 1919, to December 31, 1919, to 191,000 men, and from January 1, 1920, to June 30, 1920, to 170,000 men and the President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to increase the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy to 191,000 men * * *. The foregoing total authorized enlisted strength shall include the hospital corps, apprentice seamen, those sentenced by court-martial to discharge, enlisted men of the Flying Corps, those under instruction in trade schools and members of the Naval Reserve Force so serving. * * * Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as affecting the permanent * * * enlisted strength of the Regular Navy as authorized by existing law." (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 138.)

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to employ on active duty, with their own consent, members of the Naval Reserve Force in enlisted ratings, the number so employed not to exceed during any fiscal year the average of twenty thousand men: Provided, That the number of naval reservists, so employed on active duty, together with the total number of enlisted men in the Regular Navy, shall not exceed the total enlisted strength of the Navy as authorized by law." (Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 834.)

Apprentice seamen under training.—By act of April 24, 1896, section 2 (29 Stat., 97), it was provided that "all apprentices of the Navy, whether at a training station or on board an apprentice training ship, shall be additional to the number of enlisted persons allowed by law for the Navy." The term "apprentices" was changed to "apprentice seamen" by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 553).

The expression "any enlisted man in the Navy," as used in the naval appropriation act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 330), is broad enough to include a minor enlisted as apprentice seaman, although the same act in another connection specifically mentions "any enlisted man or apprentice." (20 Comp. Dec., 429; see also note to sec. 1418, R. S.)

Men under sentence of dishonorable discharge.—The act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1092), provided that "the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement." This provision was repeated in the subsequent naval appropriation acts, each year, until the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 575), which provided that "hereafter the number of enlisted men of the Navy shall be exclusive of those sentenced by court-martial to discharge." The latter clause is permanent legislation, and modifies that contained in the previous acts relating to the same subject. (File 28687-4, Sept. 16, 1916.)

Men detailed for duty with Naval Militia.—The Naval Militia act of February 16, 1914, section 2 (38 Stat., 283), authorized the Secretary of the Navy to detail enlisted men for duty with the Naval Militia as "ship keepers," and provided "that such enlisted men shall be in addition to the number now or hereafter allowed by law for the regular Naval Establishment." Section 17 of the same act (38 Stat., 288) authorized the Secretary of the Navy, upon application of the governor of any State or Territory or the commanding general, District of Columbia Militia, to detail enlisted men of the Navy to report to the officers mentioned "for duty in connection with the Naval Militia," but did not provide that men so detailed should be in addition to the number allowed by law for the Navy. The naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 938), authorized 48,000 petty officers, etc., as in the previous year, but omitted therefrom the clause "including * * * men detailed for duty with Naval Militia," which appeared in the prior acts, and instead made specific provision "for the pay of enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia," in addition to the 48,000 otherwise authorized.

Prior to the act of March 3, 1915, above noted, it was held that "the total number of enlisted men appropriated for by the current naval appropriation act includes 'men detailed for duty with Naval Militia,' under the general authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy to detail officers and enlisted men and report to the governors of the various States, etc., but does not include men attached to vessels of the Navy loaned to the Naval Militia under section 2 of the Naval Militia law, who act as ship keepers, and, under the provisions of that act are 'in addition to the number now or hereafter allowed by law for the regular Naval Establishment.'" Also, that "the department is authorized to enlist the full number of men appropriated for, if necessary, in addition to the number detailed as ship keepers pursuant to section 2 of the Naval Militia law; and that the enlistment of such additional number of men in excess of appropriations is not prohibited by sections 3679 and 3732, Revised Statutes, as amended." (File 3973-106; Feb. 8, 1915.)

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708), "all laws heretofore enacted by the Congress relating to the Naval Militia" were repealed. By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 817) the Naval Militia was revived until June 30, 1922.

Men detailed for duty with Coast and Geodetic Survey.—See note to section 264, Revised Statutes.

Men detailed to nautical schools in the Philippines are additional to the authorized enlisted strength. (Act June 30, 1906, 34 Stat., 817.)

Enlisted men of the Hospital Corps.—The naval appropriation act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572), provides that the Hospital Corps shall consist of chief pharmacists, pharmacists, and enlisted men; that its authorized strength shall equal $3\frac{1}{2}$ per centum of the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps; and that it shall be "in addition" to such authorized enlisted strength.

Enlisted men of the Flying Corps.—The naval appropriation act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 582), provides that "the Naval Flying Corps shall be composed of 150 officers and 350 enlisted men, and that the said number of officers, student flyers, and enlisted men shall be in addition to the total number of officers and enlisted men which is now or may hereafter be provided by law for the other branches of the naval service." (See laws noted above as to temporary increase of the Flying Corps.)

Enlisted men furloughed without pay.—The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), authorized the Secretary of the Navy to furlough enlisted men, without pay, for the unexpired portion of their enlistment, in lieu of discharge by purchase, and subject to recall in time of emergency; enlisted men so furloughed to be "in addition to the authorized number of enlisted men of the Navy."

A soldier on furlough is a soldier of the United States and is in the service, but not on duty. (Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 226.)

When an enlisted man is furloughed without pay for the unexpired portion of his enlistment, his deposit, if any, with interest, should be paid on the date the furlough is granted. (File 7657-402:1, Oct. 18, 1916, construing act Feb. 9, 1889, sec. 1, 25 Stat., 657, providing for payment of deposits and interest on discharge.)

An enlisted man furloughed without pay is nevertheless an enlisted man in the Navy, and as such is entitled to treatment in Navy hospitals. (File 7657-411, Nov. 18, 1916, and Feb. 5, 1917.)

The Navy Department is not authorized to defray the burial expenses of an enlisted man of the Navy who died while furloughed under the act of August 29, 1916 (23 Comp. Dec., 504). Although the Navy Department recognizes as binding the decision of the comptroller in this case, no modification is made in the previous holding of this department with reference to medical treatment of men on furlough. File 7657-411:2, Mar. 15, 1917.)

The "authorized enlisted strength" of the Navy as used in the naval appropriation act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 575), refers to the 68,700 men who are exclusive of all such classes of enlisted men as are appropriated for in addition to the authorized enlisted strength. The 6,000 apprentice seamen are within the latter classification, as are also enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, enlisted men sentenced to discharge, enlisted men detailed to the Naval Militia, and enlisted men of the Flying Corps. The words "authorized enlisted strength" are sufficiently broad to include all enlisted men authorized by law, but it is evident that these words are used in the act of August 29, 1916, in their technical signification as intended to refer merely to the specific numbers of 68,700 men, and 87,000 men, authorized for ordinary times and for national emergency, respectively. (File 28687-4, Sept. 16, 1916.)

"The phrase 'authorized enlisted strength,' as applied to the personnel of the Navy, shall mean the total number of enlisted men of the Navy authorized by law, exclusive of the Hospital Corps, apprentice seamen, those sentenced by court-martial to discharge, those detailed for duty with Naval Militia, those furloughed without pay, enlisted men of the Flying Corps, and those under instruction in trade schools." (Act May 22, 1917, 40 Stat., 84, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 714.)

The words "total authorized enlisted strength of the active list," as used in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), are intended to designate all classes of enlisted men for whom appropriation is made; that is to say, they include the 68,700 enlisted men proper, and also apprentice seamen, enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, enlisted men of the Flying Corps, naval prisoners sentenced to discharge, and enlisted men detailed to the Naval Militia. (File 28687-4, Sept. 16, 1916.)

Authorized number of men is daily average.—The naval appropriation act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403), provided, "That hereafter the number of enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps provided for shall be construed to mean the daily average number of enlisted men in the naval service during the fiscal year."

Naval reserve.—A naval reserve of enlisted men was established by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 940), to consist of men enlisted therein, or transferred thereto from the Regular Navy, and it was provided that "members of the naval reserve may, in time of peace, be required to perform not less than one month's active service on board a vessel of the Navy, during each year of service in the naval reserve, and such active service shall not exceed two months in any one year"; and that "in time of war they may be required to perform active service with the Navy throughout the war, not to exceed the term of enlistment in the case of those enlisted in the naval reserve." This was held to be superseded by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 587), establishing a Naval Reserve Force to consist of six classes, viz, the Fleet Naval Reserve, the Naval Reserve, the Naval Auxiliary Reserve, the Naval Coast Defense Reserve, the Volunteer Naval Reserve, and the Naval Reserve Flying Corps. (23 Comp. Dec., 190. The act last cited also established a Marine Corps Reserve and National Naval Volunteers, and was amended by acts of March 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1174; April 25, 1917, 40 Stat., 38; May 22, 1917, 40 Stat., 84; July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708, 712; July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 138-141; and June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 817, 824, 834, 837.)

Retired enlisted men.—A retired list of enlisted men and appointed petty officers in the Navy was authorized by act of March 3, 1899, section 17 (30 Stat., 1008), which has been amended by subsequent enactments (see acts June 26, 1906, 34 Stat., 451; Mar. 2, 1907, 38 Stat., 1217); and by act of March 3, 1915 (34 Stat., 941), it was provided that "the Secretary of the Navy is authorized in time of war, or when, in the opinion of the President, war is threatened, to call any enlisted man on the retired list into active service for such duty as he may be able to perform." The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 591), enacted that "the Secretary of the Navy is authorized in time of war or when a national emergency exists to call any enlisted man on the retired list into active service for such duty as he may be able to perform. While so employed such enlisted men shall receive the same pay and allowances they were receiving when placed on the retired list." By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 719), it was provided that any retired enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps ordered into active service "shall be eligible for promotion and he shall be entitled to the pay and benefits of continuous service of such rank and for such length of time as he is or has been employed in active service, and when relieved of active service shall retain upon the retired list the rank and service held by him at the time of such relief, with the pay and allowances of such rank on the retired list."

Retired enlisted men form no part of the organization of the Army. They sever their connection with the Army when they go upon the retired list for the purpose of receiving at the hands of the Government retired pay. They are in effect pensioners. They have no military duty to perform and can not be required to perform any. It is true that in the act of April 25, 1914 (38 Stat., 350), known as the volunteer act, provision is made for the employment of retired enlisted men for the performance of certain military duties, and, while so employed, they doubtless become "troops of the United States." (Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 226, citing Murphy v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 511, 521.)

Enlisted men of the insular force are in contemplation of law enlisted men or apprentices of the U. S. Navy, and therefore are entitled to the clothing bounty provided by law for "enlisted men and apprentices of the Navy," and, where detained in the service after expiration of their term of enlistment, to the one-fourth additional pay provided for by section 1422, Revised Statutes. (12 Comp. Dec., 189.)

In pursuance of the authority conferred by section 1569, Revised Statutes, the President on April 5, 1901, issued an Executive order providing that "the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enlist in the insular force, United States Navy, which is hereby established, not to exceed 500 Filipinos in the following ratings and at the rates of pay indicated * * *." [Art. R-4429, Navy Regs., 1913] Although, under the foregoing Executive order the men are enlisted in what is designated as the insular force, U. S. Navy, they are nevertheless enlisted men in and of the Regular Navy of the United States. The fact that they are attached to a part or branch thereof termed the insular force can not affect the conclusion just stated; for said insular force was established under and by virtue of the statutes relating to and governing the Navy of the United States, and unless said insular force be a part of the Regular Navy there would exist no authority for the establishment of such force. (12 Comp. Dec., 189.)

Men enlisted for vocational training.—"In cases of dismemberment, of injuries to sight or hearing, and of other injuries commonly causing permanent disability, the injured person shall follow such course or courses of rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training as the United States may provide or procure to be provided. Should such course prevent the injured person from following a substantially gainful occupation while taking same, a form of enlistment may be required which shall bring the injured person into the military or naval service. Such enlistment shall entitle the person to full pay as during the last month of his active service, and his family to family allowances and allotment as hereinbefore provided, in lieu of all other compensation for the time being." (War Risk Insurance Act of Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 304, 40 Stat., 407.) [This section was repealed by act of June 27, 1918, sec. 10 (40 Stat., 620), and other provisions substituted therefor by section 2 of the same act (40 Stat., 617), allowing pay, etc., without enlistment.]

Apprentices at navy yards not enlisted men.—Service as an apprentice in a navy yard is not service as an enlisted man within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), entitling officers to credit for previous service in the Army or Navy. (Davis v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 21.)

There was no statute authorizing the employment of persons as apprentices in connection with navy yards, and whatever was done in that particular was under Navy regulations. In the year 1852 the Navy Department adopted certain regulations "for the admission of apprentices into the navy yards of the United States," under which the claimant became an apprentice. Those regulations (which were not the first on the subject) prescribed the manner in which a boy might become an apprentice in the navy yards by being examined before a board. The applicant had to be over fifteen and less than seventeen years of age, possessed of a good character, and having the physical ability to perform the labor incident to the situation. (Davis v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 21.)

The regulations of 1852 [above referred to] were in force at the time the claimant became an apprentice, and were the authority on the part of the naval officer to enter into the agreement by which his relations were established and upon which he now seeks a benefit under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473). The act of June 30, 1789 (1 Stat., 575), and all subsequent acts to and including the act of March 3, 1837 (5 Stat., 153), had reference to the employment of boys in the regular naval service on board ships and not their employment in the navy yards as provided for in the regulations of 1852 and former regulations. (Davis v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 21.)

The relation between the defendants and claimant was established by the agreement providing for the apprenticeship of the claimant, which was executed by his father and him jointly with the agent of the defendants, and which simply provided for the performance of duty ordinarily incident to an indentured apprentice. He was not required to take an oath, perform any naval or military duty, but simply to well and truly serve the United States, be obedient to all persons in authority over him, and subservient to all laws and regulations that might be established for the government of navy yards. He was required to furnish his own tools, board, clothing, and medical attendance. The service which he was to perform was not subject to the restraints, inconveniences, and powers incident to military or naval service, but such restrictions as are legally and ordinarily incident to the relation of master and apprentice. No statute of the United States had provided for the enlistment of men or boys to be employed in the navy yards of the United States, and the regulations did not provide for any such enlistment, if that could be done by mere regulations. If the claimant had failed to perform his duty and had deserted from the service, it can not be said that he would have been amenable to the laws of war and liable to be shot for desertion. (Davis v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 21.)

Section 1417 provides for the enlistment in the Navy of "apprentices and boys;" sections 1418 and 1419 provide for the enlistment of minors. Nowhere do we find in the statutes any reference to the service of boys in the navy yards spoken of as an enlistment in the Navy. The service which boys as apprentices were called upon to perform was on board ship. (Davis v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 21; see also 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 89.)

In the absence of any law providing for the enlistment of boys into the Navy to be employed as apprentices in the navy yards, the fact that claimant's connection with the service was founded on the ordinary contract of apprenticeship, that he took no oath and was not subject to the performance of any military duty or subject to the restrictions of military life, that he was not amenable to the highest obligation of a soldier—continued service, and that his whole duty was the result of a contract or agreement made by him and his father founded on the regulations of the Navy, it is determined, as a conclusion of law, that he does not come within the act of March 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 473. (Davis v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 21.)

A militiaman, when brought into the service of the United States in accordance with law, is an "enlisted man on the active list" of the Navy within the meaning of laws providing for payment of a gratuity to the beneficiary of any enlisted man on the active list of the Navy in case of the latter's death from causes not the result of his own misconduct. The active force of the Navy is increased by laws providing for the induction of the militia into the service of the United States. (See 23 Comp. Dec., 36. But see act June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 824), which excludes from the benefits of death gratuity members of forces of the Navy other than the Regular Navy and Marine Corps.)

Enlisted men of the Coast Guard.—The Navy is made up of and embraces its component parts; hence in law and in fact it embraces the Coast Guard in time of war just as certainly as it does any other military force operating under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy. Accordingly the word "Navy" is broad enough to include the Coast Guard in time of war, service in the Coast Guard at such time is service in the Navy, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard in time of war are enlisted men of the Navy. However, the word "Navy" as used in a law, may have a broad or restricted meaning, depending upon the context. As used in the act of August 31, 1918, section 3 (40 Stat., 956), providing that "men registered under the provisions of this act who have served in the Navy of the United States shall, upon their own application, be permitted to reenlist in the naval or marine service of the United States with and by the approval of the Secretary of the Navy," it includes a registrant who served in the Coast Guard in time of war. (File 28798-773, Nov. 22, 1918.)

Advancement of apprentices to warrant officers.—When section 1417, Revised Statutes, was reenacted in 1879 to read as above, special inducements were offered to honorably discharged boys to reenlist within three months after so discharged. (See sec. 1573, R. S.) These benefits, as well as certain additional inducements, have since been made applicable to enlisted men or apprentices who reenlist within four months after being honorably discharged. (See sec. 1573, R. S., as amended.) The provision in section 1417, as reenacted, limiting preference in appointment as warrant officers to such apprentices or boys who reenlist within three months after being honorably discharged has remained unchanged.

By the Navy Regulations, 1913 (Art. R-3310), it is provided, with reference to appointments as boatswains, gunners, machinists, and carpenters, that such appointments shall be made "only after competitive professional examinations," and that "when candidates from the naval service and from civil life possess equal qualifications, preference shall be given to those from the naval service."

As to term of enlistment, see note to section 1418, Revised Statutes.

As to appointment of warrant officers, see further sections 1405-1407, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Sec. 1418. [Enlistment, age and term of.] Boys between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years may be enlisted to serve in the Navy until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years; other persons may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding five years, unless sooner discharged by direction of the President.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of May 12, 1879 (21 Stat., 3), as amended by act of February 23, 1881, section 2 (21 Stat., 338), the amendment made by the latter act consisting in substituting the word "fourteen" for "fifteen" as used in the former act.

As originally enacted this section read as follows: "Sec. 1418. Boys between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years may be enlisted to serve in the Navy until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years; other persons may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding five years, unless sooner discharged by direction of the President." [See § 1624; art. 19.]—(2 March, 1837, c. 21, s. 1, v. 5, p. 153; In re McNulty, 2 Lowell, 270.)

Other amendments to this section were made by act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), which provided that "hereafter the term of enlistment of all enlisted men of the Navy shall be four years," and act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 330), which provided that "the term of enlistment of all enlisted men of the United States Navy other than those who are enlisted during minority shall be four years," and made further provision in the same act for extension of enlistments, prior to expiration of the four-year term, for periods of one, two, three, or four years, and for the discharge of any enlisted man within three months before the expiration of his term of enlistment or extended enlistment, "without prejudice to any right, privilege, or benefit that he would have received, except pay and allowances for the unexpired period not served, or to which he would thereafter become entitled, had he served his full term of enlistment or extended enlistment." By act April 25, 1917 (40 Stat., 38), extension of minority enlistments in the Navy and Marine Corps was authorized under similar conditions as provided by law for extending other enlistments. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 560), it was provided that enlisted men who serve one year at sea shall, in time of peace, if they so elect, be given an honorable discharge without cost; and the same act (39 Stat., 580) authorized the furlough of enlisted men, without pay, for the unexpired portion of enlistment, in lieu of discharge by purchase, subject to recall in time of emergency. So much of said act as authorized honorable discharges after one year's service at sea was repealed by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1171). By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 586), it was provided that the Secretary of the Navy shall establish regulations governing the term of enlistment of the enlisted men of the Flying Corps. By act of May 22, 1917, section 3 (40 Stat., 85), it was provided "that enlistments in the Navy and Marine Corps, during such time as the United States may be at war, shall be for four years, or for such shorter period or periods as the President may prescribe, or for the period of the present war." By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 134), it was provided that "until June 30, 1920, enlistments in the Navy may be for terms of two, three, or four years, and all laws now applicable to four year enlistments shall apply, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, to enlistments for a shorter period with proportionate benefits upon discharge and reenlistment." By act of June 4, 1920, section 7 (41 Stat., 836), the provision of the act last quoted was reenacted without limitation as to time.

Detention of men after expiration of enlistment, or their reentering to serve until their return to the United States, is authorized by section 1422, Revised Statutes.

Detention of men after expiration of enlistment to make good time lost on account of injury, sickness or disease resulting from intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

Discharge of minors who swear falsely as to their age is required by the following provision in the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 931): "Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the naval service shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen, unless in case of minors, a certificate of birth or a verified written statement by the parents, or either of them, or in case of their death a verified written statement by the legal guardian, be first furnished to the recruiting officer, showing applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, which shall be presented with the application for enlistment; except in cases where such certificate is unobtainable, enlistment may be made when the recruiting officer is convinced that oath of applicant as to age is credible; but when it is afterwards found, upon evidence satisfactory to the Navy Department, that recruit has sworn falsely as to age, and is under eighteen years of age at the time of enlistment, he shall, upon request of either parent, or, in case of their death, by the legal guardian, be released from service in the Navy, upon payment of full cost of first outfit, unless, in any given case, the Secretary, in his discretion, shall relieve said recruit of such payment." Provisions somewhat similar to this, but applicable to the fiscal year only, had been contained in the annual naval appropriation act for previous years, under "Bureau of Navigation."

Enlistment of minors under 14 years of age is punishable under section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 19, as amended.

Oath of allegiance to be taken by enlisted men of the Navy is that which was prescribed for the Army by the law in force on March 3, 1899. (Act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 25, 30 Stat., 1009.) The oath then prescribed for enlisted men of the Army was contained in section 1342, R. S., art. 2, as follows: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States, and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the rules and articles of war."

Punishment of fraudulent enlistment is prescribed by act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 716), amending section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 22.

Reenlistment of men with special benefits within four months after their discharge is provided for by section 1573, Revised Statutes, and amendments noted thereunder. See also section 1417, Revised Statutes, as amended. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 590), it was provided that enlisted men who enroll in the Fleet Naval Reserve within four months after their discharge from the regular service, and who reenlist in the regular service within four months after discharge from such reserve, shall have the same benefits as though they had reenlisted in the regular service within four months after discharge therefrom.

Refund of enlistment bounty where men are discharged within six months of enlistment, for causes other than disability incurred in line of duty, is provided for by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 556); and the Secretary of the Navy may require similar refund in cases where men are discharged during the first year of enlistment by request, for inaptitude, as undesirable, or for disability not incurred in line of duty. (Act Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1176.) The furnishing of such bounty on enlistment was authorized by act of March 1, 1889 (25 Stat., 781), and amendments thereto. (See sec. 1569, R. S.) Refund of uniform gratuity by members of the Naval Reserve Force severing their connection with the service without compulsion on the part of the Government is provided for by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 589), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 711).

Term of enlistment in the Marine Corps is prescribed by section 1608 of the Revised Statutes and amendments thereto.

Term of enlistment.—Section 1418 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the term of enlistment during minority in the case of persons enlisted in the Navy before arriving at the age of 18 years, and for not exceeding five years in the case of other persons, was amended by section 16 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, which provided "that hereafter the term of enlistment of all enlisted men of the Navy shall be four years." (5 Comp. Dec., 929.)

The act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1008), makes the term of enlistment for all persons four years. (Thomas v. Winne, 122 Fed. Rep., 395.)

Section 1418, as amended by act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), provided that boys between 14 and 18 years of age may be enlisted in the Navy until they arrive at the age of 21, while other persons may be enlisted for a term not exceeding four years. (Ex parte Lisk, 145 Fed. Rep., 860.)

There is no provision of law for the enlistment for four years of anyone under 18 years of age. However, where a minor of 15 years fraudulently enlists for a term of four years he may be held to serve out that term and need not be required with consent of his father to agree to remain in the service during minority. The enlistment is a valid one unless avoided by the United States. (File 24368-7, Feb. 14, 1912.)

Prior to the enactment of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), the enlistment of men in the Navy, under section 1418, was for a period not to exceed five years, but the enlistment period had been for three years, and under section 1426 honorable discharges were granted to men enlisting for three years, and upon reenlistment for three years within three months after discharge they became entitled to the gratuity provided by section 1573. (16 Comp. Dec., 815.)

Section 1418, Revised Statutes, required enlistments in the Navy to be for not exceeding five years, and section 1608 declared that enlistments in the Marine Corps should be for not less than five years. Thus it will be seen that the statutes fixed a maximum term of enlistment in the Navy, and a minimum term of enlistment in the Marine Corps, each at five years. At the same time, honorable discharges were granted to those who had fulfilled the three-year enlistment in the Navy (sec. 1426, R. S.). By act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), the term of enlistment in the Navy was changed to four years, and by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1132), enlistment in the Marine Corps was reduced to not less than four years. (In re Brykezyński, 207 Fed. Rep., 813.)

The laws relating to the granting of honorable discharges, and to extra pay on reenlisting after such discharges within a certain time, as well as the regulation granting an increase of monthly pay on reenlisting within three months after an honorable discharge, were based upon enlistment for not less than three years. The increase in monthly pay for reenlisting is now fixed by law, instead of by Navy regulation (sec. 1573, R. S., as amended by sec. 16, Navy personnel act Mar. 3, 1899). Accordingly a man, having served out his previous enlistment of three years, so as to entitle him to an honorable discharge and having enlisted for the regular term of four years within the time prescribed, comes within the operation of the new law and is entitled under his new enlistment to the four months' reenlistment pay and the increase per month to the rate of pay he was receiving when discharged, as authorized by the amended section 1573, instead of three months' reenlistment pay and the addition of $1 per month as under the law and regulations prior to the passage of the Navy personnel act. (5 Comp. Dec., 929.)

Detention of men after expiration of enlistment.—Enlistments in our service are required by law to be for a prescribed period, the last day of the term being as much fixed by the contract as the first. Consequently, unless there exists some law when the contract is entered into providing for a contingent prolongation of the term; or unless the soldier before the term is up consents to an extension thereof, with the last day of the term his engagement necessarily expires. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 161; 12 Comp. Dec., 342; compare Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, noted below.)

A man whose enlistment has expired, and in whose case there is no legal authority for retaining him in the service in point of law is entirely discharged, although no discharge certificate is issued to him. Nevertheless, if he voluntarily remain in a place subject to naval jurisdiction to await a certificate of discharge or for other purposes, he would be liable in a limited degree to the regulations necessary to the peace and subordination of the garrison, and might be imprisoned if necessary to prevent unlawful violence on his part, and to keep him until he could be placed in the hands of the proper civil authorities having jurisdiction to punish him. (U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537, noted more fully under Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, "Persons not subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial.")

It would seem that where a man has completed his period of enlistment and earned an honorable discharge, if a certificate of discharge is inadvertently not issued at the time, it may thereafter be issued as of the date he was entitled thereto, and his continuance in the service, under a purported extension of enlistment for four years, which is not valid as an extension, may be regarded as a reenlistment for four years. (File 7657-295, July 27, 1915; but see Comp. Dec., Aug. 14, 1915, 174 S. and A. Memo., 3759; and compare file 7657-65, noted under sec. 1422, R. S., "Detention of enlisted man awaiting discharge papers.")

When an enlisted man voluntarily continued to serve after expiration of his enlistment without being discharged and reenlisted, it will be held to be a continuance of his enlistment upon the same terms as before, but for no definite period. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319, noted more fully under sec. 1408, R. S., "Status of mates when not discharged upon expiration of enlistment.")

An enlisted man, enlisted for minority, extended his enlistment for periods aggregating two years. Such extension was not authorized in the case of persons enlisted for minority. He should therefore be considered as in the service under his original enlistment from which he has not been discharged and entitled to the same rate of pay thereunder as if no attempted extension of enlistment had been made, but he is not entitled to the additional pay allowed by section 1422, Revised Statutes.

The contract of an enlisted man in the Navy calls for four years actual service—not for service during a term of four years. Nothing is said in the contract respecting continuity of the service, but, on the contrary, article 879, Navy Regulations [1905] provides that "enlisted men who are apprehended or who surrender themselves as deserters or stragglers from the Navy shall not be entitled to discharge until they have served out the period of their unauthorized absence." The Comptroller has said, with regard to this provision (12 Comp. Dec., 342): "I do not think that this requirement has the effect of extending his term of enlistment, but requires that he shall be held in the service after the expiration of his term of enlistment." That this was not the intention of the regulation in question, however, would seem to be clear from its further provision: "This does not apply to those enlisted for the period of their minority." (File 3031-11, July 15, 1907.)

"The Department decided, May 12, 1908 [file 2471-5], that the term of enlistment in the Navy having been fixed by law at four years, no authority existed for retaining enlisted men in the Navy after expiration of enlistment for the purpose of making up time lost by absence. Article 879, Navy Regulations, 1905, which required enlisted men of the Navy to serve out the period of their unauthorized absence before being entitled to discharge, was accordingly revoked by the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President." (File 26251-6297:2, July 10, 1913; compare Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, noted below.)

"As enlistments in the Marine Corps are governed by the laws and regulations relating to the Navy, the Department holds that Marine Corps General Order No. 40, of October 19, 1909 [concerning the detention of marines after expiration of enlistment to make good time lost by unauthorized absence], is without sanction of and in fact contrary to the requirements of law and that the practice of requiring men to make up time lost by absence either in accordance with article 48 of the Articles of War or otherwise will immediately be discontinued." (File 26251-6297:2, July 10, 1913; compare Comp. Dec., Dec. 4, 1905, 58 S. and A. Memo., 30; and Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, noted below.)

A period of desertion must be deducted from the contract period of enlistment, and the latter accordingly extended until the man has fully served the term for which he contracted. The man's contract is to "serve" for a certain period and can not be performed by desertion. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615:8.)

The Supreme Court of the United States has specifically held that the detention of enlisted men in the Marine Corps after expiration of enlistment is governed by laws relating to the Navy. [See notes to sections 1422 and 1621, Revised Statutes.] The fact that pay of the Marine Corps is assimilated by section 1612, Revised Statutes, to the Army, and that under certain circumstances enlisted men of the Army may by law be retained to make good time lost by unauthorized absence, does not mean that the term of enlistment in the Marine Corps must be changed to conform to the conditions in the Army. (File 26251-6297:4, Aug. 19, 1913; see also file 26251-6297:6, Nov. 8, 1913; 26251-6297:7, May 18, 1914; Comp. Dec., June 3, 1914, 160 S. and A. Memo., 3250.)

Article 879, Navy Regulations, 1905, authorizing the retention of enlisted men who are apprehended or who surrender themselves as deserters or stragglers until they have served out the period of their unauthorized absence, was stricken from the Navy Regulations, with the approval of the President, on May 20, 1908. A man's enlistment expired February 9, 1908, while in desertion. Thereafter, he was convicted of desertion and sentenced to a period of confinement. Prior to expiration of his confinement he was inadvertently restored to duty on probation: Held, that the Secretary of the Navy, having convened the court and having approved and confirmed its proceedings, possessed the power to remit the forfeitures mentioned in its sentence, in whole or in part less than the whole, and could make such remission dependent upon any condition consistent with law (citing 13 Comp. Dec., 726); it is not necessary to decide in this case whether, in the absence of a regulation, the Secretary of the Navy may hold a man in service to make good time lost by desertion; in this case the prisoner was actually held in service for duty, and while so held he was entitled to the pay of the rating in which he was held. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 20, 1908, 93 S. and A. Memo., 896.)

An enlisted man serving sentence of court-martial was placed on probation. During the probationary period his enlistment expired. He continued to serve, voluntarily, without re-enlisting or expressly extending his enlistment. While in this status he committed an offense for which he was tried by court-martial and sentenced to imprisonment. Held, that the court-martial had jurisdiction and he is legally held to serve out the sentence, but that so much of the original sentence as remained unexecuted should be regarded as fully remitted, his conduct from the time he was placed on probation until the expiration of his enlistment having been satisfactory. (File 26251-17942:2, May 5, 1919, citing 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319, Comp. Dec., Nov. 20, 1918, 93 S. and A. Memo., 896, etc.)

The contract of enlistment in the Navy is not merely for four years, but for four years and until discharged. "A soldier can not discharge himself," and until he has been discharged by competent authority his original contract continues binding upon him. An examination of 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 161 (above noted), shows that the question was not specifically presented to the Attorney General for determination in that case, and was not thoroughly considered by him. Certainly, the Attorney General could not have meant to hold that an enlisted man would be justified in leaving his command immediately upon expiration of his enlistment, regardless of the exigencies of the service, or other sufficient cause which might, in the opinion of his superiors, justify his retention for a reasonable period. The Navy Regulations recognize that delays may occur in discharging men after the expiration of enlistment, by providing that the commanding officer "shall make all necessary efforts to prevent delay in discharging men whose terms of service have expired" (Art. 543, Navy Regs., 1909), and the Comptroller of the Treasury has repeatedly decided that enlisted men are entitled to pay until their discharges are issued and delivered, or until such action is taken as to make the man legally chargeable with notice of his discharge, notwithstanding that pay for service after expiration of enlistment may not be expressly provided for by any statutory enactment. (See 2 Comp. Dec., 94, 95; 7 Comp. Dec., 391; and Comp. Dig., 1902, p. 146, "Discharge, time and place of taking effect.") Of course the commanding officer would not be justified in arbitrarily detaining an enlisted man without sufficient cause, and in such a case the man would be entitled to secure his release by force, if necessary, even to the point of taking the life of any one who might endeavor to prevent him, as held by Mr. Justice Story, in U. S. v. Travers, 2 Wh. Cr. 509, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537. (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911.)

The regulations for many years have contained a provision that the pay of an enlisted man under treatment in a hospital on a foreign station "continues until he is regularly discharged from the service, even after his term of enlistment has expired." (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911, citing art. 792, par. 7, Navy Regs., 1909; Comp. Dec., Aug. 18, 1903, 31 S. and A. Memo., 242. See also, art. R-3582 (7), Navy Regs., 1913.)

An enlisted man may be detained in the service after the expiration of his enlistment for the purpose of disciplinary proceedings against him for offenses committed prior to the expiration of his enlistment; in such case, not having been discharged from his contract of enlistment, and being detained for sufficient cause, the terms of his contract continue binding upon him and his status as an enlisted man of the Navy is unchanged. Should he, during the period of such detention, leave the service without permission and with the obvious intention of not returning, he might be regarded as a deserter, but his offense would more properly be charged as breaking arrest, and escape. (File 26251-5447; compare note to sec. 1422, R. S., and note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, "Persons subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial." See also file 26509-259, Mar. 12, 1918, recommending legislation for trial by court-martial of prisoners for offenses committed after expiration of enlistment.

For other cases, see note to section 1422, Revised Statutes.

Existing contracts of enlistment may be extended by Congress.—The decision rendered by the Supreme Court in Wilkes v. Dinsman (7 How., 88, 126) expressly held that an enlisted man is subject to any new laws which may be enacted for the better government of the Navy, even where such laws extend the period of his original contract of enlistment. The Attorney General, something more than 25 years after this decision of the Supreme Court, held that the term of enlistment could be extended only under authority of some law which exists "when the contract is entered into." (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 161.) The question presented to the Attorney General did not require any opinion as to the conditions under which the contract of enlistment might be extended beyond the original term, so the above quotation from his opinion is not to be accorded the weight due to a formal determination of a doubtful question. (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911.)

By act of June 3, 1916 (39 Stat., 187, sec. 31), it was provided that "all enlistments in the Regular Army, including those in the Regular Army Reserve, which are in force on the date of the outbreak of war, shall continue in force for one year, unless sooner terminated by order of the Secretary of War, but nothing herein shall be construed to shorten the time of enlistment prescribed."

By the Selective Draft Act of May 18, 1917, section 7 (40 Stat., 81), it was provided that "all enlistments, including those in the Regular Army Reserve, which are in force on the date of the approval of this act and which would terminate during the emergency, shall continue in force during the emergency unless sooner discharged; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to shorten the period of any existing enlistment."

[In 23 Comp. Dec., 45, it was held that an enlisted man of the Marine Corps may lawfully be paid travel allowance on discharge only at the rate authorized by laws in effect on date of discharge, notwithstanding the fact that the law in force at the time of his enlistment authorized payment of such allowance at a higher rate; and in 23 Comp. Dec., 33, it was held that enlisted men of the Army must be demoted in rank when required by laws reorganizing the Army in order to comply with the provisions of such laws reducing the number of men in the higher rank, notwithstanding that they are deserving men and that their demotion is not believed by the War Department to be within the spirit of the new law.]

Extension of enlistments in Marine Corps.—The act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), authorizing enlisted men of the Navy, by their voluntary agreement, to extend their enlistments for a period of one, two, three, or four years "from the date of expiration of the then existing four-year term of enlistment," applies to the Marine Corps by virtue of section 1621, Revised Statutes, which makes the Marine Corps subject to the laws established for the government of the Navy; and the Supreme Court decision in the case of Wilkes v. Dinsman (7 How., 88), in which it was held that the law now embodied in section 1422, Revised Statutes, authorizing the detention of persons enlisted for the Navy after the expiration of their enlistment under certain conditions, authorized the detention of enlisted men of the Marine Corps. The conclusion in this case might also be based upon the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1132), providing that "hereafter enlistments into the Marine Corps shall be for a period of not less than four years." In the absence of a law expressly providing for the extension of enlistments in the Navy and made applicable to the Marine Corps by section 1621, Revised Statutes, it might well be argued that the extension of enlistments in the Marine Corps by voluntary agreement of the man concerned would be authorized under the foregoing enactment of 1901, which does not fix any maximum term of enlistment. (File 26507-214:8, Apr. 5, 1915; 23 Comp. Dec., 349; compare 23 Comp. Dec., 22; see also act Apr. 25, 1917, 40 Stat. 38, authorizing extension of minority enlistments in the Marine Corps.)

Minors over 18 may be enlisted without consent of parents or guardians.—Under the act of Congress of March 2, 1837, section 1 (5 Stat., 153) [afterwards embodied in sections 1418 and 1419, Revised Statutes], a minor of the age of 18 can enlist in the Navy without the consent of his parents or guardian. (Rush v. Watson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16650a.)

The enlistment of minors in the naval service above the age of 18 is valid, without the consent of the parents or guardian. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 258.)

The period at which persons reach their majority and become sui juris with respect to the ordinary affairs of life can not abridge the power of the General Government to prescribe the rules and conditions under which voluntary or compulsory services are to be rendered by citizens. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

The phrase "other persons" in the act of March 2, 1837 [section 1418, Revised Statutes], includes minors above 18, as well as men of full age. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

The enlistment of minors in the naval service is lawful and can not be set aside at the instance of their parents, except in so far as such enlistments are forbidden by Congress. (In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369, citing U. S. v. Bainbridge, 1 Mas., 71 [Fed. Cas. No. 14497]; In re Roberts, 2 Hall, L. J., 192; Com. v. Barker, 5 Bin., 423; Ex parte Browne, 5 Cranch, C. C., 554 [Fed. Cas. No. 1972].)

Neither section 1419, Revised Statutes, nor any other law requires the consent of parents and guardians for the enlistment of minors over 18 in the Navy. It is clear that Congress has authorized the enlistment in the Navy of minors over 18, and that the consent of parents and guardians is not necessary to make the enlistment valid. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

If a statute authorizes a minor by enlistment to bind himself during his minority, he can bind himself for a further period. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

Under sections 1418, 1419, and 1624 (art. 19), Revised Statutes, relating to enlistments in the Navy, which prohibited the enlistment of boys under the age of 16 [now 14], but permitted the enlistment of boys between the ages of 16 and 18 [now 14 and 18] with the consent of their parents or guardian until they shall arrive at the age of 21, and provided for the enlistment of "other persons" for terms not exceeding five years, the consent of the parents or guardian of a minor over the age of 18 is not essential to his valid enlistment, and he can not be discharged from such enlistment by a court on a writ of habeas corpus at suit of his parents or guardian. (In re Norton, 98 Fed. Rep., 606.)

Section 1418 provides that boys between the ages of 14 and 18 may be enlisted to serve in the Navy until they shall reach 21; other persons may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding five years, etc.; section 1419 provides that minors between 14 and 18 shall not be enlisted without the consent of their parents or guardians; section 1420 provides that no minor under the age of 14 shall be enlisted: Held, that a minor between the ages of 18 and 21 may be enlisted without the consent of parents or guardian, being included in the term "other persons" in section 1418. (Thomas v. Winne, 122 Fed. Rep., 395.)

A minor who, at the age of 19, with the consent of his father, enlisted in the Navy has not the right, on coming of age, to demand his discharge under the rule which applies to his ordinary civil contracts. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 327, further holding that consent of parents or guardian is not necessary to enlistment of minors who are over 18. Compare Ex parte Brown, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1972.)

For other cases, see note to section 761, Revised Statutes.

Minority enlistments in Marine Corps governed by Navy laws.—The Marine Corps is part of the United States naval service, in which minors over 18 years of age may be enlisted, under sections 1608 and 1418, Revised Statutes, without the consent of their parents or guardians. The limitations of sections 1418 and 1419 undoubtedly apply to enlistments in the Marine Corps, under section 1608; but these limitations do not aid the petitioner in this case, since the only restraint is in regard to enlistments of persons under the age of 18 years, while Corporal Doyle in the present case was between 19 and 20 at the time of his enlistment. (In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369.)

The restrictions of section 1117, Revised Statutes, apply only to enlistments in the "Army" under Title XIV. (In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369.)

The Marine Corps is not an independent organization, but is a part of the Navy rather than of the Army; and sections 1418, 1419, Revised Statutes, which, taken together, authorize the enlistment of minors over 18 years of age to serve in the Navy without the consent of their parents or guardians, apply to enlistment in the Marine Corps as well; so that a minor who has enlisted in the Marine Corps when over 18 years of age will not be discharged from the custody of the officers of the Marine Corps in habeas corpus proceedings brought by his father. (Elliott v. Harris, 24 App. D. C., 11, overruling In re Shugrue, 3 Mackey (D. C.) 325, as being "in manifest conflict with the principle upon which the subsequent case of United States v. Dunn [120 U. S., 249] was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.")

The Marine Corps of the United States is not a part of the Navy, and enlistments therein are not governed by the statutes relating to enlistments in the Navy, but by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, under whose government and control such corps is primarily placed; and such officer having prescribed in the published regulations of his department that "the regulations for the recruiting service of the Army shall be applied to the recruiting service of the Marine Corps as far as practicable," the enlistment of minors therein is governed by the statutory provisions relating to Army enlistments and no person under the age of 21 years can lawfully enlist without the consent of his parents or guardian, as required by Revised Statutes, section 1117. (McCalla v. Facer, 144 Fed. Rep., 61, citing and following In re Shugrue, 3 Mackey (D. C.), 324, but overlooking the fact that the case cited had been overruled by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in Elliott v. Harris, 24 App. D. C., 11.)

For other cases, see note to section 1621, Revised Statutes, covering status of Marine Corps; see also notes to sections 761 and 1422, Revised Statutes.

Policy of Congress to encourage enlistment of minors.—The law [March 1, 1889, 25 Stat., 781] providing clothing bounty on enlistment, did not intend that the Secretary of the Navy should have such discretionary power with respect to furnishing the bounty as would enable him to furnish it in one case and in another case decline to furnish it; but should be construed as imposing upon the Secretary of the Navy an imperative obligation and not merely discretionary power. The whole purpose of the act is to "encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the U. S. Navy," and upon the Secretary of the Navy is imposed the duty of executing the provisions of the statute. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270.)

Certificate required prior to enlistment of minor.—Where an applicant is "obviously" beyond 18 years of age, a written statement of the medical officer of the recruiting party to that effect should be accepted in lieu of the certificate required by the act of June 29, 1906. (File 1689-5, Aug. 25, 1906. The act cited prohibited enlistment of any applicant "unless a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement, satisfactory to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment." The present law is contained in the act of Mar. 3, 1915, noted above, under this section.)

Minor is "enlisted man."—A minor enlisted in the Navy during the period of his minority is an "enlisted man" in the Navy within the meaning of the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 330), providing for the discharge of any enlisted man within three months prior to expiration of enlistment. (20 Comp. Dec., 429.)

The statute in making provision for the enlistment of persons under age, makes it competent for any such person to bind himself by enlisting and in respect to that contract or enlistment he is to be regarded as an adult and competent to do all acts within the purview of the statute as fully as if he were a person of full age. It has been decided that an enlisted man has a right to make an agreement with the Government waiving his claim to travel allowance on discharge, when that contract is made at the time he is about to be discharged (citing Comp. Dec., Oct. 8, 1901, MS. Dec., vol. 19, p. 70). If the claimant is to be regarded as of full age in dealing with all matters connected with his enlistment, and an adult can waive his right to travel allowance, it follows that he can do so. The power to enlist being conferred, all the incidental powers necessarily belonging to a person in that situation with reference to his enlistment naturally follow. (9 Comp. Dec., 5.)

"Apprentice seamen may be enlisted between the ages of 17 and 25. Those below 18 are enlisted during minority, or until they become 21 years of age. Those 18 years of age or over are enlisted for four years. There are several other rates in which those as young as 18 may be enlisted. (Navy Regs., 1913, art. R-3525.) When enlisted apprentice seamen are sent to training stations where they are given a special course of instruction, at the termination of which they are transferred to and become a part of the regular complements of cruising vessels in the Navy, and may be promoted to higher ratings. No distinction on account of duties or pay is made between the apprentice seamen who enlist during minority and those who enlist for four years, nor is any such distinction made on account of their being under or over 21 years of age." (20 Comp. Dec., 409.)

"The phrase, 'enlisted men,' has generally been used and understood to mean all those who enlist in the Navy, whether under or over 21 years of age, as distinguished from the officers who are appointed or commissioned. In other words, the entire enlisted force in the Navy are generally referred to and described as enlisted men." (20 Comp. Dec., 409.)

The enlistment in the Navy of boys between 14 and 18 years of age until they shall arrive at the age of 21 years is provided for by section 1418, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 23, 1881 (21 Stat., 338). In any case when an apprentice seaman is discharged on account of expiration of his enlistment, he is 21 years of age, a man in the strict legal sense; [but see act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 330, relative to discharge of men three months before expiration of term for which enlisted]; he therefore comes within the law of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 553, 555), providing that "hereafter enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment, shall receive in lieu of transportation and subsistence travel allowance of four cents per mile from the place of discharge to the place of enlistment, for travel in the United States;" and also within the meaning of the annual appropriation for travel allowance of "enlisted men" discharged on account of expiration of enlistment, although other appropriations make provision for transportation of "enlisted men and apprentice seamen," mentioning them as if they were of separate classes. Apprentice seamen may be mentioned in the other items of the transportation appropriation because they are transported before they are 21 years of age, and may also be discharged "on medical survey" before they arrive at that age. (19 Comp. Dec., 591.)

A minor who enlists in the Navy is competent to designate a beneficiary under the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128) [since amended by act of Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329, and acts of Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 392, and Oct. 6, 1917, sec.

312, 40 Stat., 408], and amount of death gratuity in his case should be paid to beneficiary in accordance with such designation. (File 26543-38.)

Minors enlisting with consent of parents or guardians have the same right to make agreement to reenlist or waiving transportation as other enlisted men, notwithstanding a request to the contrary made by the guardian in any case. (File 4682-04, May 31, 1904.)

A minor may be tried by general court-martial without the appointment of a guardian ad litem to defend him. This is in accordance with decisions of the civil courts under which a minor is amenable for crime and pleads without intervention and must suffer the penalty when found guilty. "A minor is tried like an adult. He may defend personally or by attorney and no guardian ad litem is to be appointed or appear for him;" although in one State, by statute, his defense is by guardian. In some decisions it has been expressly held that to defend in person or by attorney is the right of the minor, and that it is error to assign him a guardian and try the case upon a plea pleaded for him by the guardian. (File 26251-6020, July 7, 1913; G. C. M. Rec. No. 25157.)

When enlistment complete.—Where man signed shipping articles one day but did not take the oath of allegiance until the next, held, that while section 25 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1009), requires an oath of allegiance to be taken, there appears to be no provision of law that postpones the taking effect of an enlistment until such oath is taken; said man should, accordingly, be taken up for pay and rations from the date he signed the shipping articles, which is regarded as the date of his enlistment; oath of allegiance should be executed as of the date on which it is taken. (File 1096, Mar. 30, 1905.)

Men who applied for enlistment in the Marine Corps were examined and accepted at Denver, Colo., but took the oath of allegiance at Salt Lake City, Utah; held, that they were enlisted at Denver within the meaning of the law allowing mileage on discharge to place of enlistment. (File 7657-94, Dec. 31, 1910, construing act Mar. 2, 1901, 31 Stat., 902.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury decided, in accordance with the rulings of the Navy Department, that an enlisted man is entitled to pay from the date he presents himself for service in the Marine Corps, signs the prescribed application, and submits to and passes a medical examination, although he does not take the oath of allegiance until a later date and in a different city. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 8, 1911, file 7657-94-2, 17 Comp. Dec. 656, 121 S. and A. Memo., 1696; see also Comp. Dec., Mar. 4, 1911, file 26254-659.)

It has been specifically decided by the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Comptroller of the Treasury that the taking of the oath of allegiance is not essential to the validity of an enlistment. (File 19037-58, Apr. 6, 1917.)

A man who signed the shipping articles, was furnished and accepted transportation from Raleigh to Norfolk, was passed by the medical officer, was furnished subsistence and clothing outfit, and was actually assigned to duty, is legally and for all purposes an enlisted man in the Navy in all respects, notwithstanding that he has refused to take the oath of allegiance. Inasmuch as the law (act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 25, 30 Stat., 1009), expressly states that the oath of allegiance "shall" be administered "to the officers and men of the Navy," should the man in question be ordered to take the oath and then refuse to do so, appropriate disciplinary action might be taken against him for refusing to obey the lawful order of his superior. (File 19037-58, Apr. 6, 1917.)

A man was honorably discharged, January 4, 1905; applied for reenlistment, January 5, 1905; was reported physically disqualified; remained on the vessel awaiting action of the Navy Department; his physical disability having been waived, was reenlisted as of January 5, 1905, but executed the oath of allegiance January 16, 1905, date the waiver was received on board: Held, that he was properly reenlisted as of January 5, 1905, and is entitled to pay and rations from that date, provided he was actually held to service from that date. (File 1096, Mar. 30, 1905.)

If the man was actually held to service while his physical condition was under consideration, he may be said to have been conditionally accepted and is entitled to pay for such service. The fact that the man in such a case was accepted for service during the period awaiting action should be made to appear by the certificate of the proper commanding officer before payment is made. (Comp. Dec., June 25, 1902, 5 S. and A. Memo., 65; see also file 1096, Mar. 30, 1905.)

It is a rule that an enlistment paper can not be dated back so as to cover a period when the person was not actually in the service; he must be actually accepted for service; in which event his enlistment paper may be dated back to cover the period of such service if it was not made out at the time the party was so accepted. (Comp. Dec., June 25, 1902, 5 S. and A. Memo., 65; see also file 1096, Mar. 30, 1905.)

Plaintiff signed an agreement "to serve for a period of three years from the date of * * * being mustered into the United States service." Plaintiff then refused to go to camp, was arrested, taken to camp of rendezvous, and, by order of the commander, confined for several days. On release, brought suit for damages: Held, the words "enlist" and "enlistment" in the law, as in common usage, may signify either the completed fact of entering into the military service or the first step taken by the recruit toward that end. The present question is not one of breach of contract but change of status. The plaintiff was not a soldier, nor subject to any military authority or discipline as such. The statutes seem to assume the mustering of a recruit into the service as the point at which the right to exercise military restraint over him begins. The court is not, however, prepared to say that actual submission as a soldier to a commissioned officer would not of itself be sufficient; still less, that a recruit of full age who had actually served or received money from the Government could be allowed to dispute legality of the enlistment. But the mere promise to serve from a future date, to be fixed only by performance of a distinct act, is not sufficient to change state of a citizen into that of a soldier. (Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen (90 Mass.) 480.)

A seaman who had been examined by a surgeon and passed through all the necessary steps at a naval rendezvous, signing shipping articles, and received orders to go on board receiving ship, but who, on reaching receiving ship was found to be intoxicated and sent away until he should become sober, and who, before returning, was enticed away by the defendant, held, not to be an "enlisted seaman" because he had done no duty, been paid no money, and was not entitled by the regulations to any pay until passed on the receiving ship. (United States v. Thompson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16491.)

Man applied for enlistment in the Marine Corps, and after signing declaration and undergoing medical examination, failed to report to complete enlistment, but enlisted in the Navy. Upon report of the facts to the Navy Department, held, that the man would be retained under his enlistment in the Navy, as it otherwise appeared that he was a desirable person, and that no action would be taken to recover from him the cost of his medical examination for the Marine Corps. (File 7657-58.)

Recruits detained at the place of recruiting, if said place is not a "naval station" within the meaning of the act of January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 291), (authorizing rations or commutation thereof for enlisted men), are entitled to be subsisted from the appropriation "Provisions, Navy," provided they actually enlisted and became in fact enlisted men of the Navy at such place. If their enlistments are not completed at the place of recruiting, or if they are only held together tentatively as enrolled persons applying to enter the naval service, they may be furnished subsistence from appropriation "Transportation, recruiting, and contingent." (7 Comp. Dec., 408.) Under this decision, applicants for enlistment who have passed the physical and other examinations and are held together at substations awaiting the arrival of the recruiting officer to administer the oath and complete their enlistment, are entitled to be subsisted from the appropriation "Recruiting, Navigation." (Comp. Dec., Aug. 30, 1904, 43 S. and A. Memo., 419.)

Certain applicants signed papers agreeing to enlist in the Marine Corps, and without being accepted were transported to other cities for the purpose of being examined to determine their fitness. Upon arrival it was discovered that the applicants had concealed former service in and dishonorable discharge from the Navy. Without being enlisted, they were confined by the commanding officer, for varying periods, approximately two months in one case, with a view to causing their arrest by the civil authorities for fraudulently obtaining Government transportation, subsistence, etc. Held, that the men in question were civilians, and their confinement by officers of the Marine Corps was without legal authority or justification, and might expose such officers to prosecution, both civilly and criminally, for false imprisonment. (File 7657-180, June 4, 1913, quoting U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537, noted under Constitution, Art 1, sec. 8, clause 14, "IV. Jurisdiction of Courts-Martial." Followed file 28909-191, Jan. 21, 1919.)

"In order to become a soldier of the United States Army—i. e., in order to become a fully enlisted man—the party must first enlist by signing the prescribed application, and he must then be accepted and sworn into the service by the proper officer." (Coe v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 419, 427; Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls. 226.)

Applicants for enlistment are in no way connected with the military organization or any movement of the same, and may never become so. Such persons have not changed their status in life from that of ordinary citizens to that of a soldier and are not amenable to military jurisdiction. They are not members of the military organization and therefore are not included within the term "troops of the United States." (Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 226; 249 U. S., 354.)

De facto enlistment.—See note to section 1426, Revised Statutes, under "Honorable discharge of de facto enlisted man." See also cases noted above, under "Detention of men after expiration of enlistment."

Errors in enlistment.—Where a minor over 18 years of age was enlisted to serve during minority, contrary to the provisions of article 931, Navy Regulations, 1905, and declined to have the error in his enlistment corrected, he should be discharged on account of illegal enlistment. (File 5731, Sept. 14, 1906; compare file 24368-7, Feb. 14, 1912, noted under sec. 1419, R. S., "Consent required for enlistment.")

A recruit at time of enlistment gave his date of birth as January 9, 1879, making his age 18 years. In three subsequent enlistments he renewed his former statement as to his date of birth, verifying same by oath on each occasion. Thereafter, while serving as a warrant officer, he reported to the Navy Department that his correct date of birth was January 9, 1881; that he had only a short time previously discovered this; and inclosed an affidavit purporting to be signed by his mother in support of his statements. Held, that while a person's statement as to his age is necessarily hearsay evidence, it is universally admitted by the courts as competent. Nevertheless, such hearsay evidence is not conclusive, and the testimony of one's mother, substantiated, as in this case, by an apparently bona fide entry in the family Bible, would certainly appear to be better evidence. The credibility of the new evidence, however, is a matter which should be carefully considered, especially as it is not incumbent upon the department to decide the question and change its official records in the absence of good reasons, which should be made to appear. Accordingly, the officer should be required to give his reasons for desiring the department's records changed, and explain why he did not, previous to his enlistments, obtain from his mother the date of his birth, or consult the family Bible. His reasons and explanations would in all probability assist in determining the credibility of his evidence, and enable the department to take such action in the premises as might appear just and desirable. (File 24368-9, Nov. 22, 1913.)

Man applied for enlistment in the Navy, but did not sign the shipping articles; no shipping articles were ever made out for him; the officer supposed to have enlisted him did not sign the service record in his case; he reported for duty, served as a machinist's mate second class, and presumably received pay and allowances as such; he now desires to be released from the service: Held, that the error in this case was the error of the Government and not the error, mistake or fraud of the man; that the most which can be held is that he enlisted in the Navy upon an implied contract of enlistment but for no definite period and if he now refuses to execute a formal contract and demands his release, and there are no charges pending against him, and he is not being held under sentence of court-martial, he should forthwith be discharged. (File 7657-882, May 2, 1919.)

A recruit over 18 years enlisted for minority, giving erroneous date of birth. He reenlisted, giving correct date of birth, substantiated by a birth certificate. Held, that the original enlistment was illegal, it being required by law and regulations that persons 18 years of age or over be enlisted for a term of four years. Held further, that while original enlistment was illegal, it was voidable only, and not void, and having been fully executed and terminated by an honorable discharge, the man is entitled to all the benefits thereof as if it had been a legal and valid contract. (File 7657-360, May 9, 1916.)

Where a minor signed a contract of enlistment reading, "I oblige and subject myself to serve during minority, until January 1, 1915," the legal effect of the contract was to bind him to serve until he arrived at the age of 21 years, which the evidence in this case shows would be January 1, 1916. The date on which he would attain his majority, given in the contract of enlistment and consent of parents as January 1, 1915, must be rejected as an error in computation. Since the man stated that he was informed by the recruiting officer that his enlistment would expire January 1, 1915, which statement is confirmed by the date given in the shipping articles, it would be proper to give him his discharge at once, but if he desires the benefits of a discharge by reason of expiration of enlistment, he would have to serve until January 1, 1916. (File 7657-273, Jan. 16, 1915; C. M. O. 6, 1915, p. 11.)

Sec. 1419. [Enlistment, minors, consent of parents and guardians.] Minors between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years shall not be enlisted for the naval service without the consent of their parents or guardians.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of May 12, 1879 (21 Stat., 3), as amended by act of February 23, 1881, section 2 (21 Stat., 338), the amendment made by the latter act consisting in substituting the word "fourteen" for "fifteen" as used in the former act.

As originally enacted this section read as follows: "Sec. 1419. Minors between the age of sixteen and eighteen years shall not be enlisted for the naval service without the consent of their parents or guardians." [See section 1624; article 19.]—(2 Mar., 1837, c. 21, s. 1, v. 5, p. 153. 3 Mar., 1865, c. 79, s. 18, v. 13, p. 490.)

The discharge of minors who swear falsely as to their age is required by act of March 3, 1915, noted under section 1418, Revised Statutes.

The punishment for fraudulent enlistment is prescribed by act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 716), amending section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 22.

The punishment of officers who knowingly enlist "any minor between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years without the consent of his parents or guardian, or any minor under the age of fourteen years," is prescribed by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 19, as amended.

"The register of wills [of the District of Columbia] shall prepare papers in connection with appointment of guardians to enable indigent boys to enlist in the United States Navy as provided by law, without making any charge therefor." (Act Mar. 3, 1891, 26 Stat., 1063.)

Consent required for enlistment.—The consent of the mother would not be a sufficient compliance with the terms of this section where the father is living, although it is claimed that the father is working in a remote part of the State where he can not be reached by mail, and that he would undoubtedly consent to the enlistment if consulted. (File 7657-293, June 19, 1915.)

"The consent of the father is necessary except where the mother or other person is the legal guardian of such minor." (File 7657-293, June 19, 1915.)

Where the father and mother of a minor, 17 years of age, are both dead, and no legal guardian has been appointed, held that neither the stepmother nor sister of said minor could legally consent to his enlistment unless first legally appointed as guardian. (File 7657-293:3, Aug. 21, 1915.)

Where the applicant's father and mother are both living, but the father has deserted his wife and is not contributing to the child's support, held, that the consent of the mother, who has not legally been appointed guardian of the applicant, can not be accepted as sufficient, but that upon the facts stated the consent must be signed by the father. (File 7657-293:3, Aug. 21, 1915.)

"If the recruiting service is embarrassed by the requirements as to consent in the cases of minors, the remedy must be sought in an amendment of the statutes by Congress, as such considerations can not justify administrative officers in departing from the plain language of the law as it exists. In other words, the settled maxim that it is the province of courts to construe laws and not to make them applies to the fullest extent to the action of executive officers." (File 7657-293:1, July 29, 1915.)

Where a minor during the lifetime of his father had a guardian appointed to sign his consent papers upon enlistment, and the father demanded the boy's release on the ground that he had not consented to the enlistment, held, that the Navy Department can not go behind the action of the court to inquire into the legality of the guardian's appointment, and that the enlistment was accordingly valid. (File 3956, Jan. 25, 1906; see also file 7657-207, Nov. 7, 1913.)

Minor enlisted in the Navy with consent of his father after his mother had instituted proceedings against the father for divorce and care and custody of the minor child. Held, that enlistment was illegal, the minor being under the jurisdiction of the court pending termination of the proceedings, and his care and custody having been awarded to his mother two weeks after his enlistment. (File 9750-04, Nov. 30, 1904.)

A minor enlisted in the Navy for four years when 15 years old, alleging that he was 18 years old. To straighten out his record he afterwards submitted the consent of his father. Question was presented whether it would be legal to accept the evidence and retain the minor under his four-year enlistment (there being no provision of law for the enlistment for four years of any one under 18 years of age), or whether it was necessary to secure the agreement of the father and boy for the latter to remain in the service during minority. Held, that enlistment was a valid one unless avoided by the United States, and it would therefore be legal to retain the boy under his four-year term of enlistment. (File 24368-7, Feb. 14, 1912. Compare note to sec. 1418, R. S., "Errors in enlistment.")

A minor under 18 years, father and mother both dead, enlisted in Navy for minority with consent of his aunt, who made oath that she was the sole legal guardian of the recruit, although in fact she was not his legally appointed guardian. Thereafter, the minor's brother-in-law was appointed his legal guardian and objected to his "retention in the service because of under-age enlistment." Held, that minor should be discharged without prejudice to his right to reenlist if desired when he attains the required age; that the fact that the guardian was appointed after the minor's enlistment is not material, the enlistment having been without the consent required by section 1419; and that, the recruit not having sworn falsely as to age, it does not appear that he was guilty of fraud. (File 7657-207, Nov. 7, 1913.) This same holding applies in a case where the minor swore falsely as to his age at the time of enlistment, except perhaps as to prejudice regarding reenlistment. (File 7657-559, Feb. 16, 1918.)

A minor enlisted with the consent of a party who made oath that she was the sole legal guardian of the recruit. Thereafter, another party made application for discharge of the minor, forwarding papers showing that said applicant was appointed as guardian for the minor some months after his enlistment. Held, that the minor should not be discharged upon application of a guardian appointed after his enlistment unless satisfactory evidence is produced to establish that the party who consented to his enlistment was not his legal guardian at the date of said enlistment. (File 7657-332, Dec. 29, 1915.)

To satisfy the requirements of law, the consent of the father, mother, or legal guardian of the minor must be furnished. The consent of parent or guardian may be executed before an officer of a court of record having custody of its seal, a notary public, justice of the peace, or other officer authorized to administer oaths for general purposes, or before an officer of the Navy or Marine Corps in accordance with the act of March 3, 1901 [see note to section 183, Revised Statutes]. If such officer (other than an officer of the Navy or Marine Corps) is not required by law to have and use a seal, his official character, signature, and term of office should be certified by the proper officer, State, county, or city, under his official seal, unless such certificate has already been filed in the Navy Department for general reference. (File 2757-5, June 15, 1906.)

The consent of both parents is not necessary to the enlistment of a minor under 18 years of age, but in such case the consent of the father is sufficient. (File 26806-142, Oct. 16, 1916.)

False and fraudulent consent papers executed before notary.—A notary public may be prosecuted for violation of section 31 of the Federal Criminal Code (act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1094) where he permitted an applicant to sign in his presence the consent papers for his enlistment in the name of his mother, and then falsely certified concerning the appearance of the mother before him. (See file 7657-299.)

For other cases, see file 8205-2, October 17, 1907; 5954, October 18, 1906; file 7657-156, July 24, 1912.

Fraudulent enlistment of minor in violation of this section is not void, but voidable.—It is well settled that under this section the enlistment of a minor without the consent of his parents or guardian, while valid as to the minor, is voidable at the instance of the parents or guardian, and, upon application of the parents or guardian, the civil courts will, by habeas corpus proceedings, direct the immediate discharge of the minor under such circumstances, unless disciplinary proceedings have been commenced against him by the naval authorities for fraudulent enlistment or other offense. (File 7657-207, Nov. 7, 1913.)

Section 1419, as amended by act of February 23, 1881, is for the protection of the parents or guardian; and an enlistment in violation thereof is valid as to the minor, and voidable only by the parent or guardian before the minor arrives at the age of 18 years. (U. S. ex rel. Hendricks v. Pendleton, 167 Fed. Rep., 690.)

A minor enlisted in the Navy, although without the consent of his parents and in violation of the statute, is punishable for breach of discipline and cannot be discharged on habeas corpus at suit of his parent while undergoing such punishment. (U. S. ex rel. Hendricks v. Pendleton, 167 Fed. Rep., 690.)

Where a minor under the age of 18 years enlisted in the Navy without the consent of his father, then living, on the minor's fraudulent representation that he was over 21 years of age, such enlistment was not void as to the minor, but was voidable only at the instance of his father. (U. S. v. Reaves, 126 Fed. Rep., 127, reversing Ex parte Reaves, 121 Fed. Rep., 848, which held that section 1419, as amended, declares a public policy, and the enlistment of a minor under the age of 18, without the consent of his father, is void from the beginning as against the father, and gives the minor no status in the naval service which can be asserted by the United States to deprive the father of the custody and control of his son after he has regained the same, or which renders the son punishable by court-martial for desertion in peaceably leaving his ship and returning to his father with the latter's approval.)

The civil courts should not interfere by habeas corpus to discharge a minor under 18 years of age who has been enlisted in the naval service without the consent of his parents or guardians, if at the time of presentation of the petition for the writ the minor is under arrest and held for trial by court-martial on a charge of desertion or fraudulent enlistment or other charge cognizable by a naval court. (Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696; compare Ex parte Bakley, 148 Fed. Rep., 56, affirmed 152 Fed. Rep., 1022; Ex parte Lisk, 145 Fed. Rep., 860; and In re Falconer, 91 Fed. Rep., 649.)

The appellee, William Booker, did enlist as an apprentice seaman, and did serve as such until he deserted. It may be admitted that he fraudulently enlisted; still he was both de facto and de jure in the Navy until discharged therefrom by operation of law, and while he was such a seaman he was subject to the rules and regulations of the Navy and liable to be tried and punished for any infraction of the laws relating thereto. To hold otherwise would make enlistment a farce, would destroy discipline, and offer a premium for desertion. It will not do to hold that he cannot be punished by court-martial for crimes committed when he was in the naval service simply because his parents did not consent to his enlistment. The lack of such consent will necessitate his discharge from the service, but it will not absolve him from punishment for the crimes he committed when in the service. (Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696.)

Section 1624, Revised Statutes, provides for the government of the United States Navy, and article 8 thereof provides that such punishment as a court-martial may adjudge may be inflicted on any person in the Navy who deserts therefrom. Where a minor between the ages of 14 and 18, without the consent of his father, then living, enlisted in the Navy, and received the usual pay from the date of his enlistment until after he deserted, was arrested and detained as a deserter, he could not be discharged from custody of the naval authorities on a writ of habeas corpus sued out by his father, though the latter was entitled to demand his son's release from the Navy as soon as he had answered and satisfied the charges for desertion and fraudulent enlistment, then pending against him. (U. S. v. Reaves, 126 Fed. Rep., 127, reversing 121 Fed. Rep., 848.)

For other cases, see note to section 761, Revised Statutes, and see note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 14, under "IV. Jurisdiction of courts-martial."

Pay and allowances under fraudulent enlistment.—A marine enlisted without consent of his parent, stating that he was 21 years of age; subsequently, his father applied for his discharge, claiming that he was only 17 years of age, and had enlisted without his parent's consent. The Navy Department refused to discharge him, deciding to accept the age given by him at the time of enlistment; his father brought habeas corpus proceedings, and he was ordered discharged by the court: Held, that this was a judicial determination that his enlistment was fraudulent, and he is not, therefore, entitled to pay, travel allowances, or other allowance under said enlistment. (13 Comp. Dec., 817.)

Pay actually received by an enlisted man for services during a fraudulent enlistment can not be recovered from him. (12 Comp. Dec., 445.)

The contracts were voidable and not void, and until rescinded by the action of the Government any proper payments made by the disbursing officer must be considered as legally made, and he should be entitled to credit for the same. (11 Comp. Dec., 712; file 4640, Apr., 1906.)

A fraudulent enlistment is still an enlistment, and a man so enlisted is de facto in the service, and therefore a sentence involving loss of pay may be approved. (File 5624, Feb. 17, 1896.)

Pay continues after conviction, unless forfeited in whole or in part by sentence. (File 26254-279.)

An apprentice discharged for fraudulent enlistment is entitled to such pay as he may have received, but all pay and allowances accrued and unpaid at the time of discovery of the fraud should be checked as forfeited. (File 2792-01, Jan. 15, 1902; see also Comp. Dec., Aug. 12, 1897, 4 Comp. Dec., 54.)

A person convicted by court-martial of fraudulent enlistment in the Navy and the receipt of pay and allowances thereunder, and sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the service, is not entitled to any arrearages of pay which accrued prior to conviction. It is not necessary that this pay should have been included in the sentence of the court, since the claimant never acquired title thereto, because of the rescission of the contract of enlistment. The Navy Department, by proceeding against the claimant through a court-martial and imposing a sentence of discharge from the service, has taken advantage of the fraud to rescind the contract of enlistment. (4 Comp. Dec., 54; file 26251-3352:1, May 19, 1910; but see file 26254-279, noted above, and 19 Comp. Dec., 470, noted under sec. 1420, R. S.)

For other cases, see note to section 1420, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1420. [Enlistment, prohibited classes.] No minor under the age of fourteen years, no insane or intoxicated person, and no person who has deserted in time of war from the naval or military service of the United States shall be enlisted in the naval service.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of August 22, 1912, section 2 (37 Stat., 356).

As originally enacted this section read as follows: "SEC. 1420. No minor under the age of sixteen years, no insane or intoxicated person, and no deserter from the naval or military service of the United States shall be enlisted in the naval service."—(3 Mar., 1865, c. 79, s. 18, v. 13, p. 490.—U. S. v. Bainbridge, 1 Mas., 71; U. S. v. Stewart, Crabbe, 265.)

It had previously been amended and reenacted by act of May 12, 1879 (21 Stat., 3), which changed the word "sixteen" in the original section to read "fifteen"; and was thereafter amended by act of February 23, 1881, section 2 (21 Stat., 338), the amendment made by the latter act consisting in substituting the word "fourteen" for "fifteen" as used in the previous amendatory act.

The punishment of officers who knowingly enlist persons in violation of this section is prescribed by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 19, as amended.

Enlistment of pardoned deserter.—The pardon of a convicted deserter from the Navy blots out his offense, and he may legally be reenlisted, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1420 and 1624 (art. 19), Revised Statutes, prohibiting the enlistment of deserters in the naval service. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 617; overruled by 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225, noted below. See also note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, under "III. Power to pardon offenses against the United States.")

Sections 1420 and 1624, article 19, Revised Statutes, as amended, relate to the general organization and efficiency of the Navy; they affect only incidentally particular classes of individuals, and obviously are not intended as punishment for offenses. They place deserters in the same category with minors, insane persons, and intoxicated persons, as not qualified for the naval service. Accordingly, held that a pardon does not remove the disqualification attached to the fact of desertion by Revised Statutes, sections 1420 and 1624, and that a person who has deserted in time of war from the naval or military service of the United States is not eligible, after pardon, for reenlistment in the naval service. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225, overruling 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 617, noted above.)

Enlistment of deserter who has not been convicted.—See note to Constitution, Article I, section 9, clause 3, under "Bill of attainder"; see also sections 1996 and 1998, Revised Statutes.

No one who has already been in the naval or military service of the United States shall be enlisted without showing his discharge therefrom. (Art. R-3524 (3), Navy Regs., 1913.)

Section 1420, Revised Statutes, prohibits the enlistment of deserters at large as well as convicted deserters. (File 7657-132, Feb. 17, 1912.)

Pay and allowances of deserter who fraudulently enlists.—The fraudulent enlistment of deserters may be waived by the Government and the deserters continued on duty in the Navy and allowed the pay of their grades. If tried by court-martial for the offense, they are entitled to so much of their pay as is reserved for forfeiture by sentence of the court, and when restored to duty are entitled to the pay of their grades. (19 Comp. Dec., 470.)

It is well settled that a fraudulent enlistment is not void, but voidable at the option of the Government, and this is based upon the general principle of law that when a contract has been procured by fraud it may be avoided by the innocent party upon the discovery of the fraud, but if the innocent party proceeds with the contract and accepts service under it after the discovery of the fraud, he is bound to pay for such services. (15 Comp. Dec., 614.)

Whether a man securing his enlistment by fraud shall be discharged for that reason or retained in the service rests in the sound discretion of the executive officers. If he is to be discharged for the fraud, no further payments should be made; if he is to be retained in the service, credit should be given him and payments made as though no fraud had occurred in his enlistment. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 29, 1903, 24 S. and A. Memo., 187; see also 15 Comp. Dec., 614; 14 Comp. Dec., 267.)

For other cases see note to section 1419, Revised Statutes.

Enlistments in violation of this section are void, and not merely voidable.—The fraudulent enlistment of a deserter at large is void ab initio under the provisions of section 1420, Revised Statutes, which section applies to deserters at large as well as convicted deserters. (File 7657-132, Feb. 17, 1912; see also Hoskins v. Pell, 239 Fed. Rep., 279.)

[Note: By section 1420, Revised Statutes, Congress has placed on the same footing, without discrimination or distinction, the various classes of persons who are embraced within the prohibition of that section, namely: 1. Minors under the age of 14 years; 2. Insane or intoxicated persons; and 3. Deserters in time of war from the naval or military service of the United States. All alike are placed under the same disqualification, and it is impossible to distinguish in this connection between a minor, an insane or intoxicated person, and a deserter in time of war. (See U. S. v. Cottingham, 1 Rob. (Va.), 633.) While the enlistment of an insane or intoxicated person might have been absolutely void, even in the absence of a direct prohibition against the enlistment of such persons, the fact that minors under the age of 14 years and deserters in time of war are classed with insane or intoxicated persons in the same provision is a strong indication that it was the purpose of Congress to place them under the same absolute disqualification as to enlistment.

[A marked distinction will be noted between the language of section 1419—enlistments in violation of which section are held to be merely voidable and not absolutely void—and the language of section 1420. The former section does not absolutely prohibit the enlistment of persons between the ages of 14 and 18 years, but by its terms expressly permits the enlistment of such persons, although making it a condition that such minors have the consent of their parents or guardians. In other words, Congress has no objection to the enlistment of minors above the age of 14, but on the contrary has expressed its willingness that such persons should be enlisted, merely providing, for the benefit of parents or guardians, that their consent must be secured in cases where the minor is over 14 but under 18 years of age. It necessarily follows that if the parents or guardians of a minor between 14 and 18 years make no objection to his serving, the enlistment may be treated by the Government as valid, even though their consent was not given at the time of enlistment; or, if they make objection to the minor's continuing in the service and apply for his discharge this does not invalidate the portion of the enlistment which has actually been served. (See In re Morrissey, 137 U. S., 157, Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696, also other cases, holding that a minor fraudulently enlisted is not only de facto but de jure in the service.)

[On the other hand, section 1420 expressly prohibits the enlistment of certain classes of persons without any exceptions or conditions whatsoever. In other words, this section differs materially from the other in that here Congress specifically designates those whom it does not desire to have in the naval service under any circumstances. And with reference to deserters in time of war the Attorney General has held, as noted above, that even the President's pardon does not remove the disqualification as to reenlistment.

[Sections 1117 and 1118, Revised Statutes, relating to enlistments in the Army, and which were generally similar to sections 1419 and 1420, except for a difference in ages, have repeatedly received a judicial interpretation similar to the above. Thus, in Re Davison (21 Fed. Rep., 618), which was an appeal from 4 Fed. Rep., 507, it was said, with reference to the Army laws: "The reasonable conclusion warranted by these sections would seem to be that the contract of enlistment of a minor under 16 years of age is void; but that if he is over that age it is valid, in the absence of fraud or duress as to him, but during his minority is invalid at the election of his parents or guardian."

[In the American and English Encyclopedia of Law (second edition), volume 20, page 624, the substance of the decisions bearing upon this question is stated as follows: "In the United States the binding effect of a minor's contract of enlistment will depend entirely upon the construction to be placed upon the several statutory provisions on the subject of such enlistments. Under the provision prohibiting absolutely the enlistment of minors under the age of 16 years, such enlistments are plainly void for all purposes."

[In support of this statement the following cases are cited: In re Hearn, 32 Fed. Rep., 141; Matter of Riley, 1 Ben. (U. S.), 408, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.), 108, Fed. Cas. No. 11834; In re Lawler, 40 Fed. Rep., 233; Seavey v. Seymour, 3 Cliff. (U. S.), 439, Fed. Cas. No. 12596; Wantlan v. White, 19 Ind., 470.

[In the Hearn case, decided by the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, referring to sections 1116, 1117, and 1118, Revised Statutes, the court said: "These sections are to be construed together. It is clear that Congress provided by these sections that a minor under 16 years of age can not be enlisted, and, if done, it would be absolutely void, and he could not be held to service; but it is also clear that if he be 16 years old he can legally enlist. Congress, having so authorized, makes such enlistment legal, and thereby confers capacity on such minor to make the contract of enlistment. If the relator was by the law made competent to enter into this contract when over 16 years of age, he can not for himself avoid it. Section 1117, requiring the written consent of parents or guardians, when under 21 years of age, was for the benefit of such parents, who might assert their right to his custody before majority, and does not affect the capacity of the minor to bind himself."

[To the same effect is the Riley case, which was decided by the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York in 1867. Referring to the laws then in force, it was held by Judge Blatchford, afterwards Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States (quoting syllabus): "Enlistments of minors over 18 years of age into the Army of the United States, without the consent of their parents, masters, or guardians, are valid, but it is not lawful to muster into the service a person under 18 years of age."

[In the Lawler case, which was an appeal from the District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, it was said by Pardee, circuit judge, in affirming the judgment of the lower court: "In this view of the case, no issue is left except the single one as to whether or not the petitioner was under the age of 16 years when he enlisted. If he was over the age of 16 years at that time, his enlistment, according to the return, was regular and valid; if he was under 16 years of age, the enlistment was void, whether the father consented in writing or not."

[The case of Seavey v. Seymour, which was an appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Maine, was decided by Mr. Justice Clifford, of the Supreme Court of the United States, while sitting in the Circuit Court for the First Circuit. In an exhaustive opinion in this case Mr. Justice Clifford affirmed the decision of the lower court holding that the enlistment of a minor under the age of 18 years was made void by the law then in force.

[In the case of Wantlan v. White the question at issue was, "whether a volunteer in the Army of the United States, as a private, who is under the age of 18 years, can be held to the service by virtue of his enlistment," and the court was "unanimously of the opinion that he can not be so held." The opinion in this case reads, in part, as follows: "Volunteers under the statutes named, before they become soldiers, have to be mustered into the service of the United States; and, on the 13th day of February, 1862, Congress enacted a law 'that hereafter no person under the age of 18 years shall be mustered into the United States service.' * * * From the 13th day of February, 1862, then, no consent could give power to enlist a minor under the age of 18, or could validate such enlistment while the minor continued under 18."

[The case of Commonwealth ex rel. Bryson v. Carter (20 Leg. Int. (Phila.), 21), also involved the construction of the act of February 13, 1862, with reference to which the court said: "The Secretary of War, by the existing law, had the power to discharge minors. This power was exercised by that officer, and it must also be remembered by the courts. The unfortunate condition of the country rendered it exceedingly difficult for the Secretary of War to exercise this quasi judicial power in a satisfactory manner. To relieve him, therefore, Congress destroys his power. In doing so, however, it was deemed advisable, also, to declare that infants under 18 should not enlist in the Army of the United States, and that no power should hereafter be given to any tribunal to declare such enlistments valid. While, therefore, the power of the Secretary of War is destroyed in the body of the law, the proviso limits the power of the courts; the Secretary of War is relieved from the discharge of a most onerous duty, and the courts are hereafter to declare contracts of enlistments made by minors under 18 years of age, either with or without the consent of parents or guardians, to be null and void."

[In no case has it been judicially determined by the Supreme Court of the United States that the fraudulent enlistment of a deserter at large in violation of express statutory prohibitions is merely voidable and not absolutely void. In the War Department the practice in such cases prior to 1890 was not uniform. In some cases it was held that the second enlistment was "void and of no effect"; in other cases it was the practice to hold that the enlistment was "illegal"; while it was sometimes held that the enlistment was voidable only. However, "a uniform practice was adopted in 1892, since which time it has been uniformly held by the [War] Department that in the cases of enlistments of deserters while a former enlistment contract was in force [the second enlistment] was voidable and not absolutely void." (See file 7657-132.)

[The present practice of the War Department was apparently based upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Re Grimley, decided November 17, 1890 (137 U. S., 147). The question presented in that case was whether an enlisted man could escape punishment for a military offense on the ground that at time of enlistment in the Army he was over 35 years of age, when the law (sec. 1116, R. S.) provided that "Recruits enlisting in the Army must be effective and able-bodied men, and between the ages of 16 and 35 years, at the time of their enlistment. * * *." The court held that "An enlisted soldier can not avoid a charge of desertion by showing that at the time when he voluntarily enlisted he had passed the age at which the law allows enlisting officers to enlist recruits."

[Even though the enlistment in the Grimley case had been void, it seems clear from the authorities that this could not have been set up by him as a valid defense upon a trial by court-martial for a military offense committed while serving as a de facto enlisted man. (See Commonwealth v. Gamble, Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, 11 Serg. & Rawle, 93; Ex parte Anderson, 16 Ia., 595; Wilbur v. Grace, Court of Errors, New York, 12 Johns., 67; In re Beswick, Supreme Court of New York, 25 How. Pr., 149; In re McVey, 23 Fed. Rep., 878; In re Cosenow, 37 Fed. Rep., 668; In re Zimmerman, 30 Fed. Rep., 176; In re Kaufman, 41 Fed. Rep., 876; Carroll v. Ball, Fulton (Ga.) Superior Court (file 7988); see also file 7657-132, and cases noted under secs. 761 and 1419, R. S., and note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, under "IV. Jurisdiction of courts-martial.")

[It will be noted that section 1116, Revised Statutes, which was construed in the Grimley case, fixes the qualifications for enlistment in the Army, but is not expressly prohibitory in terms as is section 1420. "Prohibitory statutes must not be interpreted on a principle of leniency; if anything done is substantially that which is prohibited the thing is void, not because of its tendency, but because it is, within the true construction of the statute, the thing prohibited." (Sutherland on Statutory Construction, sec. 254.) Certain statements contained in the court's opinion in the Grimley case are broad enough to apply to cases of enlistments in violation of the express statutory prohibitions, and to suggest that such enlistments are not absolutely void; but such remarks, which are not called for by the facts of the case decided, have not the force of a decision and are disregarded by the Supreme Court itself in subsequent cases where the precise question is raised. (See Cohens v. Va., 6 Wheat., 264, 399, per Chief Justice Marshall; Carroll v. Lessee of Carroll, 16 How., 287; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., 157 U. S., 574; Rush v. French, 25 Pac., 816, 1 Ariz., 99, 134.)

In Hoskins v. Pell (239 Fed. Rep., 279), it was held that the fraudulent enlistment in the Army of a minor 15 years of age was void under section 1118, Revised Statutes, which is similar to section 1420 relating to the Navy.

[The proper conclusion supported by the authorities above cited appears to be that fraudulent enlistments in violation of section 1420 are void ab initio, and not merely voidable, differing in this respect from fraudulent enlistments in violation of section 1419, the party fraudulently enlisting under the latter statute being both de facto and de jure in the service.]

Desertion "in time of war."—Desertion after December 10, 1898, from a receiving ship at Boston was not desertion in time of war. The treaty of peace signed December 10, 1898, while not ratified until April 11, 1899, was effective from the date of signature, as far as exercise of sovereign powers was concerned. (File 6642-03, Sept. 1, 1903; see also file 8693-01, Nov. 23, 1901, and 6562, Jan. 24, 1907.)

Desertion after the conclusion of the protocol with Spain of August 12, 1898, but prior to the signing of the treaty of peace or the ratification thereof, is desertion in time of war. The date of the signing of the treaty is the earliest on which the war with Spain may be considered to have terminated. (File 14535-719, May 24, 1909.)

Desertion from the Navy on September 17, 1898, was desertion in time of war. (File 26516-47, May 18, 1911.)

Payment of death gratuity in case of deserter who fraudulently enlisted.—After the death of a man, the evidence was strong that he was serving under a fraudulent enlistment. If such evidence had been presented during the man's lifetime, the Navy Department would have taken proper action and he would have been discharged or the fraud waived and he continued in the service; but he would not have been condemned unheard. What evidence the man might have presented we know not, nor do we know what proof he might have produced that the naval authorities at some time had knowledge of the former service in the Marine Corps and, by ignoring, had waived the fraud. The man is dead and can now neither be discharged from the naval service nor any fraud waived by continuing him in it. Under the circumstances, the rule as to forfeiture of arrearages of pay on account of fraudulent enlistment has no application, nor has it the effect of depriving the widow of the gratuity given by the act of May 13, 1908, to a widow or designated beneficiary of "any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps" who died from "wounds or disease contracted in line of duty." (15 Comp. Dec., 614.)

Aliens not to be enlisted.—Only citizens of United States or natives of insular possessions shall be permitted to enlist in the Navy (Art. R-3524 (1), Navy Regs., 1913; see also Navy Dept. Circular, Sept. 1, 1908); except that men holding honorable discharges or continuous-service certificates on which is endorsed an "honorable" or "ordinary" discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, shall, if otherwise qualified, be accepted for reenlistment upon making application within four months after discharge. (Art. R-3527 (1), Navy Regs., 1913.)

Enlistments in the Marine Corps are governed by the laws and regulations relating to the Navy [see notes to sections 1418 and 1422, Revised Statutes]. There is no statute prohibiting the enlistment of aliens in either the Navy or Marine Corps, and there is nothing in the regulations which would prohibit the reenlistment in the Marine Corps of an alien enemy who had an excellent character on discharge from his last previous enlistment. However, under well-established rules of international law, the enlistment of an alien enemy would be objectionable and might lead to unfortunate results. (File 7657-488, Sept. 20, 1917.)

Aliens, not enemies of the United States, who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, may be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force. (Act May 22, 1917, 40 Stat., 84.)

Sec. 1421. [Enlisted men; transfer from military to naval service.] Any person enlisted in the military service of the United States may, on application to the Navy Department, approved by the President, be transferred to the Navy or Marine Corps, to serve therein the residue of his term of enlistment, subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy. But such transfer shall not release him from any indebtedness to the Government, nor, without the consent of the President, from any penalty incurred for a breach of military law.—(1 July, 1864, c, 201, s. 1, v. 13, p. 342.)

Transfer of marines to Hospital Corps of the Navy was authorized by acts of June 17, 1898 (30 Stat., 474), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572).

Transfer of enlisted men of the naval service to the Naval Flying Corps was authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 586).

Transfer of the Marine Corps temporarily to the Army, is provided for by section 1621, Revised Statutes.

Transfer of the Coast Guard temporarily to the Navy is authorized by act of January 28, 1915 (38 Stat., 800).

Transfer of Lighthouse Service temporarily to the jurisdiction of the Navy Department is authorized by act of August 29, 1916, (39 Stat., 602).

Transfer of Coast and Geodetic Survey temporarily to the jurisdiction of the Navy Department is authorized by act of May 22, 1917, section 16 (40 Stat., 87).

Transfer of Public Health Service temporarily to the jurisdiction of the Navy Department is authorized by acts of July 1, 1902, section 4 (32 Stat., 713), July 9, 1917 (40 Stat., 242), and October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 393).

Who are subject to military law: See section 1342, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Historical note.—Provision for the transfer of persons in the military service to the naval service was made by resolution of February 24, 1864 (13 Stat., 402), repealed by act of June 3, 1864 (13 Stat., 119). Authority for such transfer was again given by act of July 1, 1864 (13 Stat., 342), from which the above section of the Revised Statutes is taken. In the Commissioners' Draft of the Revised Statutes, vol. 1, page 695, the following note was made to the paragraph, now section 1421: "This provision seems to have been intended to meet the exigencies of the late war. It may, perhaps, be deemed proper to repeal it, as unsuitable to the permanent relations of the military and naval branches of service." Nevertheless, the provision was retained, and has never since been repealed.

A marine, on being transferred to the Hospital Corps of the Navy, should not be discharged from the Marine Corps, but should sign enlistment papers for the balance of the term of his original enlistment. (File 3450-04. See also file 3796-02, 9033-02, and 5315-04. Compare cases noted under sec. 1426, R. S., "Revocation of discharge obtained by fraud.")

A marine transferred to the Hospital Corps is entitled to an honorable discharge upon expiration of original period of enlistment, with all the benefits incident thereto, including reenlistment with continuous service, or if he does not reenlist, he may be furnished transportation to his place of last enlistment in the Marine Corps. (File 5315-04, July 5, 1904; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 700, noted under sec. 1426, R. S.)

Sec. 1422. [Enlistment, detention after expiration of; transportation home.] [It shall be the duty of the commanding officer of any fleet, squadron, or vessel acting singly, when on service, to send to an Atlantic port of the United States, in some public or other vessel, all petty officers and persons of inferior ratings desiring to go there, at the expiration of their terms of service, or as soon thereafter as may be, unless, in his opinion, the detention of such persons for a longer period should be very essential to the public interests, in which case he may detain them, or any of them, until the vessel to which they belong shall return to such Atlantic port.] [That it shall be the duty of the commanding officer of any fleet, squadron, or vessel acting singly, when on service, to send to an Atlantic or to a Pacific port of the United States, as their enlistment may have occurred on either the Atlantic or Pacific coast of the United States; in some public or other vessel, all petty-officers and persons of inferior ratings desiring to go there at the expiration of their terms of enlistment, or as soon thereafter as may be, unless, in his opinion, the detention of such persons for a longer period should be essential to the public interests, in which case he may detain them, or any of them, until the vessel to which they belong shall return to such Atlantic or Pacific port. All persons enlisted without the limits of the United States may be discharged, on the expiration of their enlistment, either in a foreign port or in a port of the United States, or they may be detained as above provided beyond the term of their enlistment; and that all persons sent home, or detained by a commanding officer, according to the provisions of this act, shall be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy until their return to an Atlantic or Pacific port and their regular discharge; and all persons so detained by such officer, or re-entering to serve until the return to an Atlantic or Pacific port of the vessel to which they belong, shall in no case be held in service more than thirty days after their arrival in said port; and that all persons who shall be so detained beyond their terms of enlistment or who shall, after the termination of their enlistment, voluntarily re-enter to serve until the return to an Atlantic or Pacific port of the vessel to which they belong, and their regular discharge therefrom, shall receive for the time during which they are so detained, or shall so serve beyond their original terms of enlistment, an addition of one-fourth of their former pay: Provided, That the shipping-articles shall hereafter contain the substance of this section.](17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 17, v. 12, p. 610; 3 Mar., 1875, c. 155, v. 18, p. 484; Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 125.)

This section is printed above as it appears in the second edition of the Revised Statutes. The portion printed in italics is the original section as it appeared in the first edition of the Revised Statutes, and the latter portion, printed in the ordinary roman letter, is the section as amended by act of March 3, 1875, cited above in the revisers' notes. (See Introduction, ante, concerning the second edition of the Revised Statutes.)

The pay of men detained after term of enlistment in accordance with this section was formerly provided for by section 1572, Revised Statutes, which is superseded by the provisions of this section as amended by the act of March 3, 1875.

Mileage allowed for travel on shore, and transportation and subsistence allowed for sea travel, to place of actual bona fide home or residence, or original muster into the service, to men honorably discharged from the Navy or Marine Corps, and naval reservists honorably released from active service. (Act June 3, 1916, sec. 126, 39 Stat. 217, as amended by act Feb. 28, 1919, sec. 3, 40 Stat., 1203.)

Provisions similar to those contained in this section were first enacted by act of March 2, 1837 (5 Stat., 153).

The term of enlistment in the Navy is provided for by section 1418, Revised Statutes, and amendments thereto.

Transportation of discharged naval prisoners to their homes or places of enlistment is authorized by act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 756).

This section is a recognition of the Government's duty to discharge persons entering the military or naval service for limited periods at the place of their appointment or enlistment. This duty was also recognized by the Court of Claims in the case of volunteer officers and enlisted men in the decision of Daggett v. United States (39 Ct. Cls., 218), in which it was said: "It is well settled by statute, by regulations, by judicial decisions, that volunteer officers and enlisted men are entitled to be paid to the time of their discharge or muster out, and that they are entitled to be discharged or mustered out at the place where they were enrolled or enlisted." The same principle was recognized by the Navy Regulations of 1909 (art. 1367), which provided for the discharge of paymasters' clerks at the place in the United States which they left under their appointments. Similarly it was provided by sections 4582 and 4583 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of December 21, 1898 (30 Stat., 759, 760), that seamen on merchant vessels discharged abroad should be returned home by the master or afforded by him the means for so doing. (File 2625-4-359, Nov. 9, 1909; see also Davis v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 195, overruling Comp. Dec., July 29, 1909, 101 S. and A. Memo., 1222, upon authority of which decision of the Comptroller, and following the Attorney General's refusal to review same (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 129), art. 1367 of the Navy Regs., 1909, was annulled; and see Allerdice v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 511, 513.)

The act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 484), made no material change in section 1422 except to provide that the persons whose terms of service were about to expire might be returned to a Pacific port if they had enlisted on that coast instead of to an Atlantic port; but it carried into said section the provisions of section 1572 regarding one-fourth additional pay, and also the provisions of sections 1423, 1424, and 1425, upon the same general subject, practically consolidating all of said sections into one. These sections were originally compiled from section 17 of the act of July 17, 1862 (12 Stat., 610), which contained the substance of the law as it now stands, except the provision for the return to a Pacific port of persons enlisting on that coast. (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

The word "essential" means "necessary," and if a person's services were needed it follows that they were essential within the meaning of this section. Where commanding officer would not certify that man's services were "essential" to the public interest, but did certify that they were "needed," the man was held entitled to the additional pay provided by section 1422. (23 Comp. Dec., 249.)

Detention of marines.—Enlisted persons in the Marine Corps are entitled to an increase of one-fourth their former pay while detained beyond their terms of enlistment. (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

The act of March 2, 1837 (5 Stat., 153), entitled "An act to provide for the enlistment of boys for the naval service, and to extend the term for the enlistment of seamen," contained substantially the same provisions relating to the return to the United States of "persons enlisted for the Navy," according to the provisions of said act, as are found in section 17 of the act of July 17, 1862 (12 Stat., 610). The act of 1837 provided, as in the present law, that persons enlisted for the Navy, detained beyond the terms of their enlistment according to said act, should while so detained and serving receive an addition of one-fourth to their former pay. Attorney General Legare (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 89) held that said act did not include marines, saying that the act "is no more than what it purports to be—an act to provide for the enlistment of boys for the naval service and to extend the term for the enlistment of seamen." However, in the case of Wilkes v. Dinsman (7 How., 89), which was an action for damages by a marine against his superior officer for punishment inflicted for disobedience of orders while so detained beyond his enlistment, the Supreme Court held that marines were embraced within the spirit if not the letter of the act, by the description of persons "enlisted for the Navy." There were other circumstances in that case which evidently influenced the decision of the court, and their conclusion was not based solely upon the statute. Congress, however, placed its own construction upon the statute of 1837 by enacting, in section 9 of the act of March 3, 1845 (5 Stat., 795), that the term "persons" used in the second and third sections of said act of 1837 should be "construed to include marines." After this amendment of the act of 1837, Second Comptroller Brodhead held, very properly, that marines were entitled to the benefits of the act, citing the amendatory act of March 3, 1845. This was probably the manner in which the practice arose of allowing marines one-fourth additional to their pay for detention beyond their term of enlistment, which practice has been continued, notwithstanding the subsequent changes in the law. (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

It was provided by section 1 of the act of August 5, 1854 (10 Stat., 586), "that the non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the U. S. Marine Corps shall be entitled to and receive the same pay and bounty for reenlisting as are now or may hereafter be allowed to the noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates in the Infantry of the Army." [Section 1612, Revised Statutes.] It would seem that this provision was intended to supersede all laws then in force relating to the pay of enlisted men of the Marine Corps and to repeal, among other provisions, that portion of the act of 1837, as amended, which gave marines one-fourth additional pay for serving beyond their enlistments. But the former practice of allowing marines this increase was continued as though the law did not apply to cases of that kind. (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

The seventeenth section of the act of July 17, 1862, from which section 1422, Revised Statutes, was originally taken, was but a repetition in substance of the act of 1837. The latter act was not carried into the Revised Statutes, either in its original form or as amended to include marines by the act of March 3, 1845. Not having been incorporated into the Revised Statutes as thus amended, unless superseded by the act of 1854, making the pay of marines correspond to that of the infantry of the Army, it still remains in force, so far as concerns the pay of marines, by virtue of section 5566, Revised Statutes, which provides that where no part of a statute has been carried into the Revised Statutes it is not to be treated as repealed by the revision. (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

Were the question a new one, the inclination would be strong to hold that the act of 1854 [section 1612, Revised Statutes] governed the whole subject of pay of marines, and in effect repealed the amended act of 1837, which gave one-fourth additional pay to marines for serving beyond enlistment; but the long-continued construction, since the passage of the act, allowing them this increase is entitled to great weight and as it is not clearly contrary to express provisions of law it should not be overturned. Accordingly, held that the provision regarding marines in the act of 1837 as amended, not having been superseded by the act of 1854 nor incorporated in the Revised Statutes, still remains in force, and enlisted men of the Marine Corps detained in service beyond their periods of enlistment are entitled to an increase of one-fourth to their original pay, as provided in said act. (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

It is suggested that marines are included within the very words of the law as now embodied in section 1422, under the description "persons enlisted in the naval service," and so entitled to the increase of one-fourth to their pay when they bring themselves within the conditions which entitle seamen to such increase. However, the comptroller does not favor this construction, notwithstanding the sanction implied in the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Wilkes v. Dinsman (above noted). Congress placed the opposite construction upon similar words in the act of 1837 by amending the act to include marines. (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

Marines are not specifically mentioned in this statute, but it has been held by the Comptroller, in view of the history of the legislation condensed into section 1422, and of the long-continued practice of the accounting officers, that marines should be allowed the benefit of the statute. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 24, 1905, 48 S. and A. Memo., 492; see also Comp. Dec., Oct. 2, 1905, 55 S. and A. Memo., 1.)

For other cases concerning status of Marine Corps, see notes to sections 761, 1418, and 1621, Revised Statutes.

Detention of men enlisted outside the United States.—Enlisted men of the insular force are, in contemplation of law, enlisted men or apprentices of the U. S. Navy, and therefore are entitled to the one-fourth additional pay provided for by section 1422, Revised Statutes, when detained in the service after expiration of their term of enlistment. (12 Comp. Dec., 189; see also note to sec. 1417, R. S.)

Alien Chinese enlisted without the limits of the United States are entitled to the additional pay provided by this section when detained in service under the conditions specified therein. (23 Comp. Dec., 66.)

Detention of mates.—See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes, under "Pay and allowances of mates."

Detention of enlisted men on shore duty.—The practice has not been to allow the one-fourth additional pay to marines when detained on shore duty, but only when employed on vessels of the Navy and detained after the expiration of the term of their enlistment, upon the theory that section 1422 applies only to those persons attached to vessels of the Navy. If the question were a new one, unaffected by a settled practice of some years' continuance, it would be open to doubt whether, in order to entitle a marine to the extra compensation allowed by this law for detention in the service beyond the term of his enlistment, he should be serving upon and attached to a vessel during said period of detention. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 24, 1905, 48 S. and A. Memo., 492; see also Comp. Dec., Sept. 1, 1905, 55 S. and A. Memo., 1.)

This statute contemplates service upon and attachment to a vessel during the period of detention in service beyond the expiration of the term of enlistment. Enlisted men of the Navy detained at shore stations beyond the expiration of their terms of enlistment are not entitled to the one-fourth additional pay provided by section 1422, Revised Statutes. If the enlisted men of the Navy were attached to a vessel, it would make no difference whether the detention was in port or at sea, but in the case presented the men were detached from their vessels and stationed on shore. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 1, 1905, 55 S. and A. Memo., 1; see also Comp. Dec., May 23, 1916, file 26254-1969:1.)

Under the decisions and practice this statute is applicable alike to marines and enlisted men of the Navy. All persons coming within the purview of the statute must necessarily be on the same footing. If marines detained on shore duty beyond the expiration of their terms of enlistment are not entitled to the one-fourth additional pay, then it necessarily follows that enlisted men of the Navy, who are governed by the same law, are not entitled to such pay while detained on shore stations. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 1, 1905, 55 S. and A. Memo., 1.)

An enlisted man carried on the roll of the United States naval station, Olongapo, P. I., but attached to and performing duty on board the U. S. S. General Alava, is entitled to one-fourth additional pay for detention beyond the expiration of his term of enlistment. The ship named is not in commission in the ordinary sense of the term, but has the status of a yard craft and is used principally as a ferry between Cavite and Olongapo, making three trips a week when weather permits. This vessel, as well as the naval station at Olongapo, is under the jurisdiction and command of the commander in chief of the Asiatic fleet. (Comp. Dec., May 23, 1916, file 26254-1969:1.)

Detention of enlisted man under court-martial sentence.—By sections 1422, 1423, and 1424 of the Revised Statutes, Congress has provided that in certain cases of emergency enlisted men of the Navy may be held in service for limited periods beyond their enlistments, but the law does not authorize their detention for any longer time or for any other purpose, and the implication is that a detention other than in the manner there stated would be illegal. Where jurisdiction of a court-martial has attached, it will continue for all purposes of trial, sentence, and the execution of the sentence, although in the meantime the term of enlistment of accused should expire. But if when accused's term of enlistment expired he was in confinement, undergoing punishment in obedience to the sentence of the court-martial for the offenses of which he was accused, such imprisonment and punishment would not be such a holding of him in the service beyond the term of his enlistment as would entitle him to receive thereafter pay and allowances which are given by law as compensation for personal services, nor could it be regarded as holding him in the naval service within the meaning of any law entitling him to receive pay for such service. Accordingly, held that the payment to an enlisted man of the Navy who was sentenced by court-martial to imprisonment for a specified term, extending beyond his term of enlistment, with forfeiture of pay and allowances of an amount excepted from forfeiture, is not authorized after the expiration of the term of his enlistment, although he was not discharged until the expiration of his term of confinement. (9 Comp. Dec., 257, affirming Comp. Dec., Nov. 22, 1902, 13 S. and A. Memo., 126. But see act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 13, 35 Stat., 622.)

The Navy Department has authority to retain a general court-martial prisoner to serve out his sentence after his enlistment has expired and he has been given a discharge from the service. (File 26504-102, Mar. 1, 1910.)

A general court-martial prisoner may be tried by summary court-martial or deck court prior to the expiration of his period of enlistment, and may afterwards be held to serve out the sentence imposed by such court, irrespective of whether or not his enlistment expires in the meantime. (File 26504-100, Dec. 21, 1910; as to trial by court-martial of prisoners for offenses committed after expiration of enlistment, see file 26509-259, Mar. 12, 1918, recommending legislation.)

An enlisted man who absented himself without authority, and remained so absent until after expiration of his enlistment, may be tried by summary court-martial and sentenced to perform extra police duties, and may be retained in the service for the purpose of executing such sentence. (See 20 Comp. Dec., 751.)

An enlisted man detained in the service after expiration of enlistment to serve a sentence of imprisonment for desertion was restored to duty on probation prior to completion of sentence. Held, entitled to pay during probationary period. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 20, 1908, 93 S. and A. Memo., 896.)

See also note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under "Detention of men after expiration of enlistment."

Detention of enlisted man on account of physical disability.—On date of expiration of enlistment an enlisted man of the Navy was serving in foreign waters and temporarily disabled from disability incurred in line of duty, and continued on ship from such date, January 26, 1912, to February 15, 1912, when he reenlisted thereon for a full term. Held, that for period intervening between expiration of enlistment and reenlistment he may be paid one-fourth additional pay, if commanding officer shall certify that he detained the man as "essential for the public interests," under section 1422 Revised Statutes. (18 Comp. Dec., 724.)

An enlisted man detained in a hospital on a foreign station after expiration of enlistment and upon recovery transferred to duty on board another vessel and later transferred to the United States for discharge, is entitled to benefits of this section. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 6, 1917, file 26254-2169.)

The regulations for many years have contained a provision that the pay of an enlisted man under treatment in a hospital on a foreign station "continues until he is regularly discharged from the service, even after his term of enlistment has expired." (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911, citing art. 792, par. 7, Navy Regs., 1909; Comp. Dec., Aug. 18, 1903, 31 S. and A. Memo., 242. See also Art. R-3582 (7), Navy Regs., 1913.)

An enlisted man at a hospital in the United States should be discharged upon the expiration of his enlistment, and in such case the man should, if necessary, be retained for further treatment. If retained, he does not lose his right to transportation to his home, if he has it otherwise. (File 2274-04; 727-00; 3035-98. By article 3582(8), Navy Regs., 1913, as amended by C. N. R. No. 11, Dec. 1, 1918, it was provided that "enlisted men held for treatment at a hospital after expiration of enlistment are held for the convenience of the Government, and entitled to pay and allowances until date of actual discharge from the service.")

No legal objection exists to payment from the naval hospital fund, at the rate of 30 cents per day, to the Army and Navy General Hospital in the cases of discharged enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps retained for treatment after expiration of their enlistments. (File 22857-12:3, Jan. 17, 1912.)

Detention of enlisted man for period necessary to travel home.—An enlisted man in the Navy detained in the service for five days after the expiration of enlistment period, while on board an Army transport en route from Cavite, P. I., to San Francisco, Cal., for discharge, is not entitled to one-fourth additional pay provided by section 1422, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 484). (20 Comp. Dec., 37.)

The statute provides two alternatives: First, to return the man to the United States at the expiration of his enlistment or as soon thereafter as may be, and, second, when his services are essential to the public interests, to detain him in the service. The commanding officer in this case acted upon the first alternative and sent the man to the United States by an Army transport and before the expiration of his enlistment. The second alternative of detaining him in the service was evidently not deemed essential to the public interests. During the five days for which the one-fourth additional pay is claimed the man was not performing the duties of his rating, but was traveling home for discharge as a passenger on an Army transport. (20 Comp. Dec., 37.)

Detention of enlisted man at his own request.—When an enlisted man is detained in the service beyond the expiration of his enlistment, at his own request, although detained longer than he requested, this is not such a detention as contemplated by section 1422, Revised Statutes, but the additional detention is incidental to and the result of the detention granted at his request. (Comp. Dec., July 24, 1907, 77 S. and A. Memo., 410.)

Where the enlistment of an enlisted man of the Navy expires while the vessel on which he is serving is making a voyage, and he is permitted at his own request to remain on the vessel until it returns to the United States, he is not detained in the service within the meaning of section 1422, Revised Statutes, and is not entitled to one-fourth additional pay thereunder. (15 Comp. Dec., 883.)

The words "detention" and "detained" as used in the statute clearly imply the use of force, physical or moral. (15 Comp. Dec., 883.)

The said statute provides for the payment of one-fourth additional pay for service beyond the expiration of their terms of enlistment, of two classes of enlisted men, viz: First, those whose terms of enlistment expire while away from the United States, and who, after the termination of their enlistment, voluntarily reenter to serve until the return to an Atlantic or Pacific port of the vessel to which they belong; second, those whose terms of enlistment expire while they are away from the United States, and who desire to go to the coast of the United States on which they enlisted at the expiration of their terms of enlistment, but who are detained in the service for the public interests. (15 Comp. Dec., 883.)

Detention of enlisted man awaiting discharge papers.—An enlisted man was on recruiting duty when his enlistment expired, November 16, 1906, and his discharge papers were not received by him until November 30, 1906. In the meantime he continued on duty, and reenlisted December 1, 1906, the next day after receiving his discharge: Held, that he was in the service and properly entitled to a discharge on November 30, 1906, to take effect on that date; that there was no authority of law for antedating his discharge and reenlistment to November 16 and 17, 1906, respectively, and that it is not only legal but entirely proper that the records should be corrected so as to show that he was discharged by reason of expiration of enlistment on November 30, 1906, and reenlisted the following day, thereby bringing him within the provisions of article 1134, paragraph 7, Navy Regulations, 1909, allowing additional pay to men reenlisting after November

27, 1906. (File 7657-65, Dec. 15, 1909; compare U. S. v. Travers, Fed. Cas. No. 16537, noted under Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, "Persons not subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial;" see also file 7657-295, noted under sec. 1418, R. S., "Detention of men after expiration of enlistment.")

Detention of enlisted men indebted to United States.—Where a man through allotment of pay has overdrawn his account, held that "there is no law or regulation warranting the retention of the man in the service after the expiration of his enlistment, provided the vessel is in a United States port, but if it is in his power to return the money and he fails to do it, he might be held for court-martial." (File 3015-04; see also file 1245-01.)

It is not regarded as good economy to retain a man in the service who has been sentenced to bad-conduct discharge and who is in debt to the Government, merely in order that he may be able to earn sufficient money to cancel his indebtedness. Such men are accordingly discharged, notwithstanding the state of their accounts. (File 9770-01, Dec. 27, 1901. That discharge of man before having been fully checked amount of sentence, operates as implied remission of sentence, see Comp. Dec., Apr. 6, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3035, noted under sec. 236, R. S., "VI. Set-off." That permitting man to extend enlistment, instead of discharging him under such circumstances, does not operate as implied remission, see file 26806-131:44, Aug. 11, 1916.)

An enlisted man was overpaid on discharge. Immediately afterwards the error was discovered by the pay officer, who induced the man to return to the ship and requested the commanding officer to detain the man until he refunded amount of overpayment or had been required to work same off. Held, that commanding officer correctly ruled that he had no authority to detain the man under such circumstances. (File 26254-70, July 8, 1908; see also file 26251-3352:1.)

Detention of enlisted men in other cases.—See note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under "Detention of men after expiration of enlistment."

Place to which transportation should be furnished.—The provision of section 1422, Revised Statutes, which requires that enlisted men in the Navy who so desire shall, at the expiration of their terms of enlistment, be returned to the coast, either the Atlantic or Pacific, on which they enlisted, does not require that they shall be sent to the particular port at which they enlisted, nor authorize furnishing them transportation thereto. (4 Comp. Dec., 390.)

This section was evidently intended to prevent the discharge of persons enlisting in the Navy in a foreign port, when they desired to be returned to the United States. There is nothing to show the intention that persons whose terms of enlistment were about to expire should be transported to the particular port of their enlistment. (4 Comp. Dec., 390.)

Atlantic ports are mentioned in the law in connection with Pacific ports. Both terms are used generically, and include not only ports confronting on the ocean, but also those situated upon the gulfs and bays of either coast. Within the meaning of the law a gulf port is an Atlantic port, and a man discharged at Port Tampa is not entitled to be transported to any other Atlantic port. (4 Comp. Dec., 390.)

Prior to July 1, 1902, all transportation for enlisted men of the Navy was paid from appropriations usually made in general terms, as "for the transportation of enlisted men and boys at home and abroad, and of officers accompanying them" (31 Stat., 1109), and the payments were governed as to discharged men by section 1422, Revised Statutes, and Navy regulations. The naval appropriation act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 664), provided: "Bureau of Navigation: Transportation, * * * transportation and subsistence en route to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentices discharged on medical survey; transportation and subsistence en route to the place of enlistment, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentices discharged on account of expiration of enlistment * * *." A like appropriation was made in the same terms by subsequent annual appropriation acts. These acts specify the conditions under which transportation and subsistence shall be furnished enlisted men and apprentices on discharge, and supersede any regulations in conflict with them. (11 Comp. Dec., 336.) [The deficiency appropriation act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1030), provided that transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentices discharged on medical survey, and the transportation to place of enlistment, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentices discharged on account of expiration of enlistment, shall hereafter be chargeable to the appropriation "Transportation, recruiting, and contingent."]

An enlisted man of the Navy, whose home is in Porto Rico, is a resident of the United States within the meaning of the provision in the annual appropriation for the transportation to their homes of enlisted men of the Navy on discharge from the service. (11 Comp. Dec., 336.)

How additional pay computed.—The one-fourth additional pay provided by section 1422, Revised Statutes, for enlisted men of the Navy detained in the service beyond the term of their enlistment should be computed upon the basis of the total pay, extra as well as regular, which they would otherwise have received. (11 Comp. Dec., 575.)

In other words, the one-quarter increase follows the pay given for the duties he may be required to perform, whether they be regular duties covered by the regular pay, or special duties for which extra pay is provided. (11 Comp. Dec., 575.)

If, then, an enlisted man detained as specified in section 1422, performs under detail the duties of gun pointer, gun captain, signalman, messman, or other detail of similar character, the extra pay allowed in such cases should be included in making up the total pay upon which the one-fourth additional is to be computed. (11 Comp. Dec., 575.)

The words "former pay" as used in section 1422, Revised Statutes, do not in the case of a marine include the 20 per cent extra pay allowed for service in time of war to enlisted men of the Army by act of April 26, 1898 (30 Stat. 365). (5 Comp. Dec., 524.)

In computing the one-fourth additional pay a marine is not entitled to include one-fourth of the additional pay allowed for foreign service. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 24, 1905, 48 S. and A. Memo., 492; see also Comp. Dec., Sept. 1, 1905, 55 S. and A. Memo., 1.)

Certificate of commanding officer necessary.—In cases of detention, the commanding officer by whose order the detention is made is the proper officer to certify that such detention was essential to the public interests. (20 Comp. Dec., 37; see also 18 Comp. Dec., 724.)

Additional pay can not be waived.—An enlisted man of the Navy detained in service under section 1422, Revised Statutes, does not lose his right to the additional pay authorized in that section for the period of detention solely because he had voluntarily attempted to waive his right to such pay, since such attempted waiver is of no legal force or effect. (23 Comp. Dec., 249.)

Transportation may be waived.—The Revised Statutes, section 1422, make it the duty of the commanding officer of a fleet, squadron, or vessel, to send to an Atlantic or Pacific port enlisted men, as their terms of enlistment expire, "in some public or other vessel," "as soon thereafter as may be, unless, in his opinion, the detention of such persons for a longer period should be essential to the public interests." This is not equivalent to a statutory salary, and may be voluntarily waived by the enlisted man in consideration of his being allowed to remain on board the vessel when she is about to sail to a foreign station. (Hunt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 135, approving 5 Comp. Dec., 514.)

An enlisted man in the Navy who, in consideration of his being allowed to remain on his vessel, then about to proceed to Asiatic waters, gives a waiver of all claim to transportation home should he refuse to reenlist and be discharged in a foreign port, can not maintain an action for the value of such transportation. (Hunt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 135, approving 5 Comp. Dec., 514.)

An apprentice of the Navy, having been transferred from one vessel to another upon his request and upon his waiver of his right, on discharge in a foreign port, to transportation to the United States, is not entitled to reimbursement of the cost of such transportation procured by himself. (9 Comp. Dec., 5.)

The question here presented is not whether the Secretary of the Navy has the power to diminish or increase claimant's pay while in the service, which is the compensation fixed and established by law and given in consideration of and as compensation to claimant for his personal services. No such question is involved. The claimant having executed a proper agreement of waiver, on account of which he secured said transfer, and having received the benefit of such an agreement, the Government was under no obligation, under the circumstances, to furnish him transportation to his home or place of enlistment. (9 Comp. Dec., 5.)

Detention of man operates as extension of his existing enlistment.—Where a man is detained in the Navy under section 1422, Revised Statutes, his existing contract of enlistment continues in full force and effect, and does not expire until his "regular discharge." (File 26254-1227:1, Nov. 19, 1913; 20 Comp. Dec., 377, modifying 19 Comp. Dec., 819.)

When a man is detained under this section because his service is essential to the public interests, the detention is a prolongation of the four-year term, and the four-year term still exists and continues to exist so long as the detention is authorized by the statute. If the commanding officer certifies that the detention was essential to the public interests, the man's enlistment was properly extended, under the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), on the date that the period of his detention expired, and for one year from that date. (20 Comp. Dec., 377.)

The contract of enlistment contains the following provision: "Secondly, I oblige and subject myself to serve four years from —, 19—, unless sooner discharged by proper authority, and on the conditions provided by the act of Congress 'To amend section fourteen hundred and twenty-two of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the better government of the Navy,' approved March 3, 1875, in the following words, to wit: * * * And I also oblige myself, during such service, to comply with, and be subject to, such laws, regulations, and discipline of the Navy as are or shall be established by the Congress of the United States or other competent authority * * *." This contract is the same as that entered into by all persons enlisting in the Navy with the exception of those enlisted for minority, and it is commonly referred to as a four-year contract of enlistment to distinguish it from enlistments for minority. It will be noted, however, that the term of enlistment under the contract quoted is not for the definite term of four years; but, on the contrary, it is expressly made "on the conditions provided by the act of Congress" quoted in the enlistment contract. One of the very important "conditions" enumerated in said act, which extends and renders indeterminate the expiration of the so-called four-year term of enlistment, is, it will be noted, that the commanding officer may, in his discretion, detain any enlisted man beyond the expiration of the period stated in the enlistment contract, under the circumstances stated in the law. During such time as the man is so detained he is, under the explicit terms of the law, "subject in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy" until his "regular discharge." Hence, the period of enlistment could, at the discretion of the Government, in accordance with the terms of the contract and the law quoted therein, be either greater or less than the specified term of four years, and in the event of detention beyond the stated term of four years the enlistment contract was to continue in full force and effect until the man's "regular discharge." (File 26254-1227:1, Nov. 19, 1913; 20 Comp. Dec., 377.)

The status of an enlisted man detained by authority of section 1422, Revised Statutes, is just such as referred to by the Attorney General (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 161) as an exception to the rule that a man who enlists for a definite period is relieved of his obligation to serve at the end of the period. The Attorney General stated in part: "Consequently, unless there exists some law when the contract is entered into providing for a contingent prolongation of the term beyond the period fixed by the statute, and the contingency happen within the term * * *, with the last day of the term his engagement necessarily expires, and with the expiration of his engagement the obligation to serve thereby imposed is also at an end." (20 Comp. Dec., 371.)

Reentering to serve is a new enlistment.—When a man under this section reenters to serve until the return of the vessel, it is a reenlistment, and he can not during the period of such reenlistment extend his enlistment as provided by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), as that act requires the extension be made during the existing four-year term of enlistment. (20 Comp. Dec., 377.)

Sec. 1423. [Enlisted men subject to regulations while sent home or detained. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

It was superseded by act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 484), which amended section 1422, Revised Statutes, and embodied provisions superseding also sections 1423–1425, Revised Statutes, and likewise superseding section 1572, Revised Statutes, referred to in this section, which contained a provision for additional pay to men detained after expiration of enlistment in accordance with section 1422.

Sec. 1426. [Enlisted men, honorable discharge of.] Honorable discharges may be granted to seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, firemen, coal-heavers, and boys who have enlisted for three years.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 1, v. 10, p. 627. 7 June, 1864, c. 111, v. 13, p. 120.)

Amendment to this section was made by joint resolution of June 11, 1896 (29 Stat., 476), which extended the provisions of section 1426 to "all enlisted persons in the Navy"; and by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 560), which authorized honorable discharge of men who had served one year of a first enlistment. The latter act was repealed by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1171).

As to term of enlistment in the Navy, see section 1418, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

(Act Feb. 28, 1919, 40 Stat., 1202; see also act June 3, 1916, sec. 125, 39 Stat., 216, as amended by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 649; and act June 4, 1920, sec. 8, 41 Stat., 836.)

Historical note.—The act of March 2, 1855 (10 Stat., 627), providing in the first instance for honorable discharges, is entitled "An act to provide a more efficient discipline for the Navy," and section one of that act gives authority to the Secretary of the Navy to grant the honorable discharge as a testimonial of fidelity and obedience to those of the crew who enlisted for three years he might deem entitled thereto, while section two provides that "if any seaman, ordinary seaman, landsman, or boy shall reenlist for three years, within three months after his discharge, he shall, on presenting his honorable discharge, or on accounting in a satisfactory manner for its loss, be entitled to pay during the said three months, equal to that to which he would have been entitled if he had been employed in actual service." This shows, from the origin of this legislation, the distinction between the honorable discharge per se and the honorable discharge as carrying to certain classes of enlisted men, originally only four, the three months' extra pay. (2 Comp. Dec., 608.)

The act of June 7, 1864 (13 Stat., 120), added two other classes to whom an honorable discharge carried with it the privilege of extra pay upon reenlistment, to wit, firemen and coal heavers, the lowest grades in that branch of the service the same as the four lowest grades in the seamen branch of the service were allowed such extra pay upon reenlistment. (2 Comp. Dec., 608.)

The Navy Regulations of 1876 (p. 100, par. 13) for the first time substituted the words "any person" for the words "any seaman, ordinary seaman, landsman," etc., in providing for the payment of extra pay upon reenlistment. How this change came to be made is not apparent, and no reason can be assigned therefor, unless it be that the honorable discharge provided for in section 1429, Revised Statutes, was confounded with that of section 1426 and section 1573. (2 Comp. Dec., 608.)

The joint resolution of June 11, 1896, extended the benefits conferred by sections 1426 and 1573, Revised Statutes, to all enlisted persons now in the Navy, and authorized the passing of accounts of paymasters containing payments of extra pay to all enlisted men as though they had been included in said sections. Under this resolution payment may now be made to an enlisted man who reenlisted prior to its passage and whose claim for extra pay was pending before the paymaster but not actually paid before June 11. (2 Comp. Dec., 608.)

The purpose of this resolution of 1896 was to legalize the practice of paying all enlisted men, upon reenlistment, the extra pay, which practice had crept into the service without warrant of law. This practice doubtless arose from the fact that the honorable discharge provided for in section 1429, Revised Statutes, was confused with the honorable discharge granted under section 1426. The object of the honorable discharge provided for in section 1429 is stated in that section to be "as a testimonial of fidelity and obedience," while the honorable discharge provided for in section 1426, taken in connection with section 1573, is seen to be for the purpose of holding out the extra pay to the six lowest classes of enlisted men in the Navy as an inducement to reenlist. That this very evident intention of the law was recognized by the Navy Department appears from an examination of the older regulations of the U. S. Navy. But by the joint resolution cited, Congress has seen fit to extend the privileges arising from honorable discharges upon reenlistment far beyond what was originally provided. (2 Comp. Dec., 608.)

As to term of enlistment in the Navy, see note to section 1418, Revised Statutes.

Classes of discharges in the Navy.—Under the Navy Department there long have been and are now four kinds of discharges, namely, expressly honorable, dishonorable after court-martial [i. e., general court-martial], for "bad conduct," also after court-martial [i. e., either general court-martial or summary court-martial], and "ordinary," familiarly called "small" discharge. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 83.)

"Honorable" and "ordinary" discharges distinguished.—The "honorable discharge" in the cases referred to in section 1573, Revised Statutes, is that provided for in sections 1426 and 1429, Revised Statutes, and is dependent upon fidelity and obedience in the service. It differs from the "ordinary" discharge in that the latter carries with it no testimonial as to the special good qualities and fitness of the holder. It is the record shown by the "honorable" discharge, coupled with service and reenlistment, that entitles the seaman to increased pay under section 1573. (4 Comp. Dec., 281.)

The so-called "ordinary discharge" in the Navy has no express legislative authority, but is the creature of regulation and long-established administrative practice. Only the honorable discharge, bad-conduct discharge, and dishonorable discharge are provided for by laws relating to the Navy. If it were attempted to classify the ordinary discharge under one of these statutory headings, it would necessarily have to be grouped with the honorable discharge, because neither bad-conduct nor dishonorable discharges can be issued without sentence of court-martial. In some cases, however, ordinary discharges are issued under circumstances where it could hardly be said by military men that the holder left the service under honorable conditions; as one discharged prior to completion of enlistment for physical disability due to his own misconduct. (File 9209-114, Mar. 11, 1919.)

The technical "honorable discharge" in the Navy is issued with few exceptions only to those who have completed a full term of enlistment. An "ordinary discharge" may, however, constitute a man "honorably discharged" from the Navy within the meaning of the law providing for mileage on discharge. The "ordinary discharge" blank does not expressly characterize the discharge as honorable or otherwise. It does, however, state, either expressly or by reference to an order of the Department, the reason for the discharge, and at the end of the blank under the heading of "character of discharge" is a place in which is to be entered "good," "inaptitude," or "undesirable," as the case may be. In cases where the character of discharge is expressly stated to be "good," it certainly should be regarded as honorable within the meaning of the mileage law. "Inaptitude" does not import that the discharge is otherwise than honorable. Neither is the entry "undesirable" of itself sufficient to deprive the discharge of an honorable character, for the man's undesirability for the service might be due to causes in no manner reflecting upon him. It would seem that any discharge which is not honorable should contain on its face entries from which it can be determined with certainty that it is not an honorable one, and that where such does not appear upon the face of the discharge it should be regarded as honorable. (File 9209-114, Mar. 11, 1919, construing mileage, act of June 3, 1916, sec. 126, 39 Stat., 217, as amended by act of Feb. 28, 1919, sec. 8, 40 Stat., 1203; see also 25 Comp. Dec., 771; 25 Comp. Dec., 792.)

The Bureau of Navigation may properly determine what cases of ordinary discharges are regarded as constituting the holders thereof "honorably discharged" persons within the meaning of those words as used in the mileage law, as construed by the Judge Advocate General, or within the meaning which they have acquired by administration practices in the Army not incompatible with conditions existing in the Navy. (File 9209-114, Mar. 11, 1919.)

Honorable discharges in Army and Navy not necessarily same.—In using the phrase "honorably discharged" Congress did not necessarily intend it to have the same definition in both the Army and Navy. One department might treat one kind of conduct as inconsistent with the allowance of an honorable discharge and the other not, according to practical considerations and the traditions of the two services. In both services "dishonorable discharge" was given only after a trial by court-martial and as a punishment. In the Army, in case of discharge for cause, without court-martial, it was customary to state on the certificate that discharge was in pursuance of an order, giving the number thereof, and this order must be referred to to learn the specific cause. There seems to be no statutory provision for a certificate of express honorable discharge from the Army such as in the naval service is called for by Revised Statutes, section 1427. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 83.)

When payment of mileage was authorized to men "honorably discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps," the words "honorably discharged" were used in the same broad sense with reference to the Navy that they have with reference to the Army. As applied to the Army these words do not have a restricted meaning such as ordinarily attaches thereto in naval parlance, and as the benefits of the law are intended to be granted to both services without discrimination, held, that an enlisted man of the Navy should be regarded as "honorably discharged" if his discharge was of a kind generally regarded as an honorable one "by the War and Navy Departments and military men of the branch in question at the time the separation or discharge took effect." (File 9209-114, Mar. 11, 1919.)

Honorable discharge may be issued in cases not expressly authorized by statute.—When Congress use the phrase "honorably discharged" with reference to persons who have served in the Navy, its language is not necessarily limited to express honorable discharges granted under sections 1426 and 1427, Revised Statutes, but may be construed as intended to adopt or act upon the actual past discharge as an honorable one if of a kind generally so regarded by the Navy Department and military men of that branch of the service at the time the separation or discharge took place. The question is not to be determined by the recent or present opinions of such department or naval men, concerning discharges happening at the time of the Civil War or shortly after; but is whether the discharge when granted belonged to a class then commonly accepted among naval men and at the Navy Department as constituting a man an "honorably discharged" person. In other words, it is not a question of what should have been granted, but what was granted. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 83.)

The naval authorities may issue so-called "honorable discharges" as provided by Navy Regulations, but such discharges can not carry the right to pay and other benefits except when issued in conformity with the law that authorizes such extra pay. The fact that he has received an honorable discharge pursuant to Navy Regulations does not give him the status of one receiving an honorable discharge authorized by section 1426, Revised Statutes, or the status of one in some one of the classes specified in section 1573 as entitled to extra pay for reenlistment. (2 Comp. Dec., 563.)

The three months' extra pay for reenlistment allowed by section 1573, Revised Statutes [prior to amendment of that section], to seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, firemen, coal heavers, and boys, was limited to the six grades of enlisted men mentioned, and could not be allowed to a person enlisted as a steward. (2 Comp. Dec., 536.)

A steward to the commander in chief was not one of the classes entitled to an honorable discharge as provided in section 1426 [prior to amendment of that section], which discharge was a prerequisite to obtaining the advantages of extra pay provided for in section 1573. (2 Comp. Dec., 536.)

A man enlisted in the Navy as a writer, third class, and granted an honorable discharge under section 1429, Revised Statutes, as a yeoman, after three years' service, was not entitled to the extra pay for reenlistment allowed by section 1573 [prior to amendment of that section], to the six classes of enlisted men named therein. (2 Comp. Dec., 563.)

Character of discharge issued to enlisted man is question for determination by War or Navy Department.—The War and Navy Departments are parts of the executive branch of the Government, having to do with a man's discharge from the service as an executive matter, and having special care and executive charge of the man's service and of his military honor and standing. This charge they have while the man is in the service, and until the moment he leaves it. Whether he should go with or without honor, these departments determine when they part from him. When they do so determine, they become, at least in the absence of fraud or gross mistake, functus officio, and the executive branch of the Government thereby becomes functus officio. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 83.)

The question whether a man was "honorably discharged" from the Navy within the meaning of the law providing for payment of mileage on discharge, although a question involving disbursements, is one for determination by the Navy Department and not by the accounting officers. (File 9209-114, Mar. 11, 1919, citing 28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 83, 90; 21 Comp. Dec., 539-547.)

In determining the pensionable status of a person who served in the Civil War, under the acts of June 27, 1890 (26 Stat., 182), and of February 6, 1907 (34 Stat., 879), the Department of the Interior is concluded by the terms of a discharge granted by the Navy Department as "honorable." (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 83.)

By using the words "honorably discharged" in the acts above referred to, Congress intended to adopt or act upon the actual past discharges as honorable, if of a kind generally so regarded by the War and Navy departments and military men of the branches in question at the time the separation or discharge took place. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 83.)

In any case, in determining, long after discharge, the nature of the discharge issued, whether what was formerly done as an executive act did or did not constitute the individual a person "honorably discharged"—"of course, from a practical standpoint, and as expert evidence, it would be well to consider any present views of the two military departments upon the question whether or not the original act was the granting of an honorable discharge. Those departments, even when no longer in charge of the person, should and do take an interest in the honor of the men who have served their country, and that honor is, with military men, the most important consideration of their lives." (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 83.)

"It is peculiarly the province of the War Department to make deductions of fact from the records of military service of which that department is the natural and legal custodian, and to decide military questions which relate not only to the entrance into service but also the cause or manner of severance from service of officers and enlisted men." (21 Comp. Dec., 539, 547. But see 20 Comp. Dec., 751, note to sec. 236, R. S., under V, (A), "The question whether or not the record of an enlisted man in the Marine Corps is honest and faithful.") See, in this connection, cases noted under section 471, Revised Statutes, "Jurisdiction, Commissioner of Pensions."

Effect of discharge.—The honorable discharge of a soldier is a formal, final judgment passed by the Government on his entire military record, and an authoritative declaration that he left the service in a status of honor. (U. S. v. Kelly, 15 Wall., 34.)

The Kelly case held that an honorable discharge entitled a deserter to recover any pay or bounty earned subsequent to his restoration to duty, but it was not pretended that his honorable discharge, subsequently granted, gave him a right to pay during the period of his absence from the service, or would have dispensed with the forfeiture of pay incident to his desertion, had any pay been due at the time. (File 26251-1963:1, Aug. 17, 1910, citing U. S. v. Landers, 92 U. S., 77, 80.)

The mark of desertion entered on the record of an enlisted man is not removed by his subsequent honorable discharge. The case of U. S. v. Kelly, as explained in U. S. v. Landers, does not hold that an honorable discharge has the effect of removing an existing mark of desertion, nor that in consequence of such discharge the department's records should be altered so as to show an incorrect state of facts, and the Kelly case clearly does not authorize such action to be taken. The Landers case states that, "if the entry of desertion has been improperly made, its cancellation can be obtained by application to the War Department," thus clearly holding that the mark of desertion is not removed by the honorable discharge subsequently issued to the deserter, but that, on the contrary, its cancellation is dependent upon an express determination by the department that it was "improperly made." The fact that the deserter subsequently received an honorable discharge does not affect the question of removing the mark of desertion from his record. (File 26251-1963:1, Aug. 17, 1910.)

A discharge from the Navy operates in bar of trial for a previous desertion from the Navy, but not in bar of a previous offense committed in the Marine Corps. They are distinct branches of the service, and a discharge from the former does not operate as a discharge from the latter. (File 26251-5810:1, Feb. 20, 1912.)

The discharge of a man before having been fully checked the amount of a court-martial sentence operates as an implied remission of the unexecuted portion of the sentence. (See Comp. Dec., Apr. 6, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3035, note under sec. 236, R. S., "VI. Set-off.") [But permitting man to extend his enlistment, instead of discharging him, under such circumstances, does not operate as an implied remission. (File 26806-131:44, Aug. 11, 1916.)]

The discharge of an enlisted man, while in debt to the United States (other than indebtedness caused by sentence of court-martial not fully checked) does not remit the amount of such indebtedness, but if he is subsequently reenlisted same may be checked against pay coming due him under his current enlistment. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 7, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3037; see note to sec. 236, R. S., "VI. Set-off.")

Under the Articles of War, prescribing limitations for trials by court-martial, it would seem that a soldier may be arrested and tried after the expiration of his term of service for a military offense committed during such term of service, so that the order for the court-martial is issued within two years from the commission of such offense. The case of Lord George Sackville, as reported by Tytler in his treatise on courts-martial, goes to sustain the jurisdiction of the naval authorities to arrest and try the offender, as well after the discharge from service as before. (In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428. See below, "When discharge takes effect," and see, in this connection, note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, under "IV. Jurisdiction of Courts-Martial." See also file 28550-951:3, May 13, 1919, and sec. 1624, R. S., art. 14.)

Service as marine counted in computing three years' service for honorable discharge from Navy.—An enlisted man of the Marine Corps who was transferred, by authority of the act of June 17, 1898 (30 Stat., 474), to the Hospital Corps of the Navy, is entitled to credit for the prior service in the Marine Corps, in the same enlistment he is serving out in the Hospital Corps, in making up the time necessary to entitle him to the honorable discharge provided for in section 1426, Revised Statutes, as amended. This section applies to enlisted men of the Navy, but when, by authority of law, the Secretary of the Navy transfers an enlisted marine to the Hospital Corps of the Navy, it is only a fair and reasonable construction of section 1426 to hold that it permits the prior service in the Marine Corps, in the same enlistment that he is serving out in the Hospital Corps of the Navy, to be credited to him in making up the time necessary to entitle him to an honorable discharge, particularly in view of the fact that this is a beneficial statute and that such construction will carry out the well-settled policy of the Government to encourage continuous service and reenlistment of efficient men, who are the only ones under Navy Regulations who can receive such discharges, even after the full service of three years required. (11 Comp. Dec., 700; see also file 5315-04, July 5, 1904, noted under sec. 1421, R. S.)

Honorable discharge of de facto enlisted man.—One Kato Notsich enlisted as mess attendant, for four years; not liking the service, after one day's duty, he left; in his stead there appeared Gonhichi Yamamoto, who states that he was received on board ship as Kato Notsich; although never regularly enlisted, he served the full term of enlistment, and was honorably discharged; thereafter he reenlisted under his true name: Held, that he was entitled to the benefits of his de facto enlistment and honorable discharge therefrom, and that continuous service certificate should be issued to him in his true name. (File 5839-04, July 5, 1904.) In this connection, see Op., J. A. G., Army, Feb. 26, 1901, Circular, War Dept., March 18, 1901, holding that undoubtedly men can become soldiers in the military service of the United States without formal enlistment; and if a man who has signified his intention to enter the military service is clothed, fed, armed, put on duty—made a soldier of in fact—he becomes a soldier in the service of the United States, even though he is never "sworn," mustered, or otherwise formally accepted into that service.

Power of courts to discharge enlisted men.—In 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 258, 266, it was held that the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War in regard to the discharge of Army recruits, is not declared to be exclusive, and it may well be doubted whether such power conferred upon a merely ministerial officer can be held to oust judicial inquiry upon habeas corpus into the legality of the enlistment. (See also note to secs. 761 and 1419, R. S.; and see act of Mar. 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 931), quoted above, under sec. 1418, R. S., with reference to discharge of minors fraudulently enlisted in the Navy.)

Naturalization of honorably discharged enlisted men.—Section 1418, Revised Statutes, required enlistments in the Navy to be for not exceeding five years; and section 1608 declared that enlistments in the Marine Corps should be for not less than five years. At the same time honorable discharges were granted to those who had fulfilled the three-year enlistment in the Navy. (Sec. 1426, R. S.) The act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124), provided for the naturalization of aliens who served five consecutive years in the Navy and received an honorable discharge. At the time this act was passed, it was possible for persons who were in the naval service to produce evidence in the form of a certificate of honorable discharge covering a full five-year term of enlistment, or it was possible at that time to have proof of a shorter term of enlistment covered by an honorable discharge and proof of continued service under a further enlistment. It may have been the intention of Congress to require proof of five consecutive years of service and a certificate of honorable discharge covering such whole period. But by act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), the term of enlistment in the Navy was changed to four years, and by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1132), enlistment in the Marine Corps was reduced to four years. The change in the term of enlistment in the Navy brings with it a corresponding modification in the requirements of the naturalization statute; otherwise its objects have been practically frustrated. Hence, proof of an alien's service of a four-year term of enlistment in the Navy, his honorable discharge, and his immediate reenlistment for a further term of four years, the proof showing five continuous years of service, is sufficient under the act of July 26, 1894. (In re Brykczynski, 207 Fed. Rep., 813. By act June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 395), naturalization of aliens was authorized upon evidence of service in the Navy or Marine Corps of one enlistment "of not less than four years," followed by an honorable discharge, or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment; and by act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), naturalization of aliens was authorized after one year's honorable service in the Naval Reserve Force. New provisions for naturalization of persons having service in the Navy and Marine Corps were contained in act of May 9, 1918, 40 Stat., 542, which expressly repealed the act of June 30, 1914, 38 Stat., 395.)

Necessity of certificate of discharge.—"A soldier can not discharge himself," and until he has been discharged by competent authority his original contract continues binding upon him. It has been the practice in the Navy to enter the mark of desertion against men who leave the service without receiving a discharge, although they may have satisfactorily completed their terms of enlistment, and this practice was given legislative recognition by the act of Congress approved August 14, 1888 (25 Stat., 442), section 1 of which authorized the Secretary of the Navy to remove the mark of desertion in certain of such cases, but made it discretionary with him to do so or not. (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911; see also note to sec. 1418, R. S., under "Detention of men after expiration of enlistment.")

While there is no provision of law expressly requiring that enlisted men of the Navy be discharged in writing, as is required in the Army (sec. 1342, R. S., art. 4), Congress has repeatedly in its legislation relating to the Navy emphasized the necessity of a "discharge" for the purpose of terminating an enlisted man's obligation to the United States. (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911; Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615:8.)

In American and English Encyclopedia of Law, volume 20, page 628, title "Military Law," it is stated that "The connection of an enlisted man with the military or naval service is regularly terminated by his death or discharge." In support of this statement there is cited, among others, the case of Grant v. Gould (1792), in which it was held that "a person in pay as a soldier is fixed with the character of a soldier; and if once he becomes subject to the military character he never can be released but by a regular discharge." (2 H. Bl., 69, 104.) However, it should be remarked that when this decision was rendered enlistments in England were for life. (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911.)

The correct view appears to be that enlistment, like marriage, is not merely a contract, but a status; and although an enlisted man may have fully performed his contract he can not divest himself of his status as a person in the military or naval service until regularly discharged by competent authority. (File 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911.)

Status of enlisted men not discharged upon expiration of enlistment.—See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes, under "Status of mates when not discharged upon expiration of enlistment." See also note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under "Detention of men after expiration of enlistment."

Revocation of discharge obtained by fraud.—An honorable discharge, a certificate of which a man obtained by falsehood and perjury, must be treated as a nullity. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 349, 352; followed 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

Where an enlisted man obtained a discharge from the Marine Corps upon condition that he would enlist immediately in the Navy as a hospital apprentice and then failed so to enlist, the discharge may be canceled and the man declared a deserter; if apprehended, he may be tried by court-martial both for desertion and conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline. (File 7657-159, Aug. 10, 1912; C. M. O. 6, 1915, p. 9; see also file 26251-6599; compare cases noted under sec. 1421, R. S.)

The Secretary of the Navy has authority to revoke the discharge of an apprentice seaman procured by fraud, and may resume jurisdiction over the man. In this case the man made a bogus confession, claiming that he had committed a murder for which he was wanted by the civil authorities, and after his discharge and delivery to the civil authorities repudiated his confession. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

Revocation of discharge issued under illegal sentence of court-martial.—Where, by the sentence of a court-martial, a soldier is discharged from the service before the expiration of his term of enlistment, and such sentence is afterwards set aside as null and void, the status of such soldier is not affected in any way by such sentence, and he is deemed to have been in the service all the time between the sentence and the order setting it aside. (In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428; see also note to sec. 1624, R. S., art. 32.)

Correction of errors in discharge.—The War Department has power to correct mistakes made in granting discharges to soldiers. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 201; but see 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

When discharge takes effect.—Until a soldier's discharge is issued and delivered to him, or until such action is taken as to make him legally chargeable with notice of his discharge, he remains in the service. (2 Comp. Dec., 95.)

A soldier having been absent on furlough at the time of the discharge of his company, and the certificate of his discharge having been mailed to him, his discharge did not take effect until he received the certificate or other notice thereof. (6 Comp. Dec., 11.)

An enlisted man of the Marine Corps remains in the service until receipt of his discharge or until such action is taken as will render him legally chargeable with notice thereof, notwithstanding the expiration of his term of enlistment during his absence on furlough granted at his own request. (2 Comp. Dec., 94; Dig. Comp. Dec., 433.)

An enlistment does not expire until midnight of the last day of the term, and a discharge by reason of expiration of enlistment is not effective prior to midnight although delivered at an earlier hour of the day. Accordingly, held that a man who died upon the last day of his enlistment after the delivery of his discharge by reason of the expiration of his enlistment was in the status of an enlisted man in the service at the time of his death. (File 27381-31 Feb. 5, 1917.)

A discharge as undesirable is effective when delivered, and a man who was overpaid when so discharged could not later on the same day, upon discovery of the error, be legally brought back to the ship and detained for disciplinary action by the naval authorities upon refusal to refund the amount of overpayment. (File 26254-70, July 8, 1908.)

Where an offense is committed by a man on the day but subsequent to the delivery of his discharge, if the discharge was for any cause other than expiration of enlistment, he was not in the naval service when the offense was committed, and therefore could not be tried by court-martial for such offense notwithstanding his reenlistment on the next day. If the discharge was by reason of expiration of enlistment, he was in the naval service when his offense was committed, his discharge not having become effective until midnight of that day. Although the question is not free from doubt, it is considered that, if a case of sufficient importance, the man who reenlisted the next day should, if his discharge was by reason of expiration of enlistment, be brought to trial by court-martial to the end that he might present the jurisdictional question to the civil courts by habeas corpus proceedings. If the offense is discovered, and the accused placed under arrest to await action, before his discharge takes effect, the general rule is that jurisdiction has thus attached and is not divested by any subsequent change in the status of the accused. (File 26504-298, Feb. 26, 1917. See also file 28550-9513, May 13, 1919, In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428, and sec. 1624, R. S., art. 14.)

Theft of honorable-discharge blanks.—An enlisted man who steals honorable-discharge blanks and is then discharged from the naval service with a bad-conduct discharge, prior to detection of the theft, may, when apprehended, be proceeded against in the civil courts of the United States for violation of section 47 of the Federal Criminal Code (act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1097), or may be tried by a naval court-martial for violation of section 1624, article 14, Revised Statutes, the same as though he had not been discharged, as is specifically provided therein. (See file 26283-977, Feb. 14, 1916. In this case, it was decided to try the accused in the civil court; see file 26283-977:10, June 2, 1916.)

From the Navy Department's point of view the theft of honorable-discharge blanks is of a quite serious nature, and the quantum of punishment to be imposed upon conviction should be governed in a measure by considerations looking to a prevention of similar thefts by others. Honorable discharges are by law and regulations awarded only to men who have earned same by years of efficient and honorable service in the Navy; and such discharges entitle the holders to numerous and substantial benefits from the Government. Furthermore, in civil life the exhibiting of an honorable discharge from the Navy opens the door for the holder to employment by private business institutions of the highest standing as well as by Federal, State, and municipal governments. Accordingly, where a man has been apprehended who is confessedly guilty of stealing such blanks, he should not be allowed to escape too lightly. (File 26283-977:10, June 2, 1916; see 8 Comp. Dec., 756.)

Where a person buys and sells honorable-discharge blanks belonging to the Navy, it would seem that he is guilty of violating sections 37 and 48 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat., 1096, 1098). (File 26509-163:2, July 29, 1916.)

Counterfeiting honorable-discharge blanks.—Where honorable discharge blanks are counterfeited and sold, it is possible that prosecution may be had under sections 148 or 151 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat., 1115, 1116), which relate to counterfeiting and selling "any obligation or other security of the United States." These words do not in their ordinary signification include honorable-discharge blanks, but by section 147 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat., 1115) they are given a broad definition, embracing any "representatives of value" issued under any act of Congress. That honorable-discharge certificates are "representatives of value" would seem clearly to follow from an examination of various statutes relating to such discharges. [See laws noted above, under this section.] In the opinion of the Navy Department prosecution may be had under the above sections of the Criminal Code, but this is a question to be decided by the Department of Justice. (File 26509-163:2, July 29, 1916. Congress has since provided specifically for the offense of forging, etc., certificates of discharge. See act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1182.)

Sec. 1427. [Enlisted men, form of honorable discharge.] Honorable discharges shall be granted according to a form prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 1, v. 10, p. 627. 7 June, 1864, c. 111, v. 13, p. 120.)

Continuous service certificates.—On April 26, 1869, the Secretary of the Navy issued a circular providing that all enlisted men, except officers' cooks and stewards, "will receive, upon the expiration of their enlistments, if they shall so elect, continuous-service certificates in lieu of the ordinary or honorable discharges heretofore issued"; and providing additional pay for persons holding continuous-service certificates. The provisions of this circular were incorporated in Navy Regulations, 1870, as articles 1070 and 1071, and with some verbal changes appear as paragraphs 18 and 19, Navy Regulations, 1876. These regulations were amended by General Order No. 327, dated November 21, 1884, which provided in part as follows: "From and after January 1, 1885, the form of honorable discharge from the naval service, authorized by section 1427, Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be the 'honorable discharge and continuous-service certificate.'" After this order there was no provision for issuing continuous-service certificates, except in connection with an honorable discharge, and that was clearly the purpose of the general order of November 21, 1884. (16 Comp. Dec., 354.)

"Any man who, having been honorably discharged, or discharged with a recommendation for reenlistment, shall within four months thereafter, reenlist for four years, shall receive in exchange for his discharge a continuous-service certificate; and any man who shall have agreed to extend his term of enlistment for an aggregate of four full years shall receive, after completing the original four years for which enlisted, a continuous-service certificate covering that period." (Art. R-3529, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Form of honorable discharge.—"Whenever any enlisted man, not holding a continuous-service certificate, is discharged from the naval service, either the form of honorable or that of ordinary discharge shall be used." (R-3611 (1), Navy Regs., 1913.)

"If the person discharged holds a continuous-service certificate, neither form of discharge will be necessary, but the appropriate column of the certificate shall be filled out, and the character of the discharge, such as 'honorable,' 'ordinary,' 'bad conduct,' or 'dishonorable' shall be designated therein; if either of the last two, a brief statement of the cause shall be made in an indorsement." (R-3611 (3), Navy Regs., 1913.)

"Should there be no honorable discharge forms at hand upon the expiration of the term of enlistment of any person who is entitled to receive one, an ordinary discharge form may be used; the words 'entitled to honorable discharge,' however, must be written across the face and signed by the commanding officer. The holder thereof may, by communicating with the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, exchange such a paper for an honorable discharge." (R-3613, Navy Regs., 1913.)

The form of honorable discharge which has been prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of this section (N. Nav. 56, July, 1921) is headed "Honorable Discharge from the United States Navy," has a serial number, an engraving representing a battleship at sea, is signed by the commanding officer, bears notation as to the rating the man is best qualified to fill, and reads as follows:

"THIS IS TO CERTIFY that is honorably discharged from the and from the Naval Service of the United States, this day of"

On the reverse of the discharge form is given the enlistment record and descriptive list of the man to whom issued, together with certificate of final payment.

Naturalization of aliens who have served in Navy or Marine Corps (act May 9, 1918, 40 Stat., 542); or in Naval Reserve Force (act May 22, 1917, 40 Stat., 84.)

Regulations concerning citizenship.—The Navy Regulations, 1913 (art. R-3301), provide that "no person shall be appointed to any office in the Navy unless he is a citizen of the United States."

Alien may legally be appointed to Naval Academy as midshipman, but can not be commissioned unless naturalized.—"There is no statute explicitly making citizenship a condition precedent to eligibility to appointment to the Naval Academy as a midshipman, but inasmuch as officers of the Navy must be citizens, a midshipman can not be commissioned an ensign if he be an alien." (Asst. Sec. of the Navy to Hon. J. Van Vechten Olcott, M. C., Nov. 1, 1907; followed, Nov. 26, 1912, file 26252-71; Mar. 22, 1913, file 26252-71:1; Aug. 29, 1913, file 26252-71:2; May 15, 1915, file 5252-68.)

Where an alien appointed to the Naval Academy as a midshipman delays taking the necessary steps to be naturalized until it is too late for him to complete his naturalization by date of graduation, held, that he can not be commissioned as an ensign upon graduation, unless naturalized by a special act or joint resolution of Congress, as was done in the case of Eugene Prince, July 19, 1912 (37 Stat., 1346; file 26252-71, Nov. 26, 1912). Held, further, that the midshipman in this case could not be lawfully allowed to graduate as an alien, and subsequently be commissioned as an ensign, upon being naturalized, with rank from date of graduation, as this would be accomplishing indirectly what the law does not allow to be done directly. (File 26252-71:1, Mar. 22, 1913; file 26252-71:2, Aug. 29, 1913.)

It having been decided by the Navy Department, during a previous administration, that a certain midshipman could not be commissioned as ensign if he be an alien, the case has thereby become res judicata, and can not be reopened, nor should it be referred to the Attorney General for an opinion as to the correctness of the previous decision. (File 26252-71:2, Aug. 29, 1913.)

[In the case noted above, Congress passed a special act, May 9, 1914 (38 Stat., 1268), which was amended by another special act, May 21, 1914 (38 Stat., 1268), authorizing the issuance of a commission to the alien midshipman upon graduation, with a proviso that he should cease to be an officer of the Navy if not naturalized by a specified date. See hearings before Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, House of Representatives, September 11, 1913, file 26252-713.]

According to the doctrine of stare decisis, whose application in this country is as old as the Government itself, the department's ruling of November 1, 1907 [above noted], concerning the citizenship of midshipmen and the ineligibility of aliens for appointment as officers of the Navy, should not now be disturbed. "It is almost as important that the law should be settled permanently as that it should be settled correctly. Its rules should be fixed deliberately and adhered to firmly, unless clearly erroneous. Vacillation is a serious evil." (Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall., 724.) Accordingly, held that the question of citizenship should be regarded as settled in accordance with the previous rulings of the department. (File 5252-68, May 15, 1915.)

Since the department's ruling of November 1, 1907 [above noted], the entire tendency of the Government, both in laws which have since been enacted and in regulations which have since been promulgated, has been to insist upon citizenship precedent to appointment in the naval service in any capacity, either as an officer or as an enlisted man. Accordingly, while the department has decided that the statutes do not specifically prohibit the appointment of an alien to the Naval Academy as a midshipman, such a prohibition may be embodied in the regulations, and this would avoid recurrence of the difficulties which arose out of the case above noted, in which an alien passed through the Naval Academy as a midshipman, but much voluminous correspondence and two separate acts of Congress were required before he could be commissioned as an ensign upon graduation prior to naturalization. (File 5252-68, May 15, 1915.)

Paragraph 14 of the "Regulations governing the admission of candidates into the U. S. Naval Academy as midshipmen," 1916, provides that "all candidates are required to be citizens of the United States."

Officers of the Naval Auxiliary Service.— "Hereafter, in shipping officers and men for service on board United States auxiliary vessels, preference shall be given to members of the Naval Reserve Force, and after two years from the date of approval of this act no person shall be shipped for such service who is not a member of the Naval Reserve Force herein provided." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 589.)

National Naval Volunteers.—Offices held by officers of the National Naval Volunteers (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 593) being offices in the Navy within the meaning of Article R-3301, Navy Regulations, 1913 [above quoted], before anyone may be appointed to an office in the National Naval Volunteers he must not only have declared his intention to become a citizen but he must in fact be a citizen. (C.

M. O. 22-1917, p. 9; file 3973-184, Mar. 17, 1917. As to Naval Militia, see file 3973-129, Dec. 18, 1915. The laws relating to the National Naval Volunteers and Naval Militia were repealed by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708; the laws relating to the Naval Militia were partially and temporarily revived by act of June 4, 1920, 40 Stat., 817.)

Status of officer who resumed foreign citizenship after retirement.—Section 1428, Revised Statutes, has for many years been regarded as requiring that officers of the Navy shall be citizens of the United States. Congress has fully and completely recognized this requirement and has thereby given legislative approval to the Navy Department's practice, decisions, and regulations on the subject. Accordingly held, that a retired machinist forfeited and abandoned his office in the Navy by expatriating himself and resuming his foreign citizenship. Citizenship is not merely a condition precedent to appointment in the Navy, but is a qualification necessary in order to continue holding office therein. The act of an officer in voluntarily removing an essential qualification would seem to render him incompetent longer to hold office, and this is peculiarly applicable in the case of a naval officer who renounces allegiance to his own Government and assumes allegiance to a foreign state. Retired officers under the law are in time of war, under section 1462, Revised Statutes, available for any duty which may be required of them. In view of section 1428, Revised Statutes, it would be unlawful to employ this officer on board any vessel in his capacity as a machinist, whose paramount duty in time of war would be on board fighting ships. (File 26252-105.3, Oct. 19, 1916; see Gay v. U. S., No. 33756, Ct. Cls.)

Residence of officers in foreign countries.—It is the opinion of the Judge Advocate General that officers of the Navy, who are required to be citizens of the United States, are also required, in accordance with the customs of the service, considerations of policy, and the desirability of maintaining amicable relations with other nations, to have their legal residence in the United States or one of its possessions. The Navy Regulations (art. 234, par. 2, 1909), providing that "no officer, active or retired, shall change his usual residence without permission of the Bureau of Navigation," did not contemplate that permission would be granted for an officer to reside outside of the United States. This is made plain by other provisions of the Regulations (art. 1526, 1909) that "permission to leave the United States will be granted only by the Secretary of the Navy." Serious complications might grow out of the situation which would exist were an officer of the Navy permitted to have his legal residence in a foreign country. This is indicated by decisions of the State Department with reference to the citizenship, allegiance, right to protection in person or property, status in event of war, etc., of persons who, while citizens of the United States, voluntarily withdraw their persons and property from the country and become and remain domiciled in foreign countries. (File 17606-49, Dec. 17, 1912.)

Appointment as officer after forfeiting citizenship by desertion.—An appointment as a commissioned officer in the Navy, to wit, chief pay clerk, was issued by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to a convicted deserter from the Army, who had forfeited his right of citizenship and been rendered forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States. (Secs. 1996 and 1998, R. S.) When said commission was issued, it was of record in the Navy Department that the officer was a convicted deserter from the Army. Held, that, while not free from doubt, by a liberal interpretation, the President's action in commissioning this officer under the circumstances stated may be regarded as a constructive pardon so as to remove the disabilities imposed by law and which would otherwise have prevented his appointment; and that the case in this respect is to be distinguished from one in which an officer had deliberately concealed disabilities rendering him ineligible for appointment. Further held, that the qualifications of the officer are presumed to have been ascertained and found satisfactory previous to his appointment to the office of chief pay clerk, and that, in the absence of fraud, his qualifications can not, under certain conditions, thereafter be inquired into, although it should be claimed that he did not possess the statutory qualifications for appointment. (File 5460-82, June 3, 1916, citing 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 180, as to conclusiveness of appointment as establishing qualifications for the office. But see 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 419, noted under Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, subheading "Constructive pardon.")

Sec. 1429. [Report to be made of men entitled to honorable discharge.]

It shall be the duty of every commanding officer of a vessel, on returning from a cruise, and immediately on his arrival in port, to forward to the Secretary of the Navy a list of the names of such of the crew who enlisted for three years as, in his opinion, on being discharged, are entitled to an "honorable discharge" as a testimonial of fidelity and obedience; and he shall grant the same to the persons so designated.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 1, v. 10, p. 627.)

See section 1426, Revised Statutes, and note thereto, concerning honorable discharges in general.

Sec. 1430. [Sale of wages to be discouraged.] Every commanding officer of a vessel is required to discourage his crew from selling any part of their prize-money, bounty-money, or wages, and never to attest any power of attorney for the transfer thereof until he is satisfied that the same is not granted in consideration of money given for the purchase of prize-money, bounty-money, or wages. [See § 4643.]—(30 June, 1864, c. 174, s. 12, v. 13, p. 310.)

Allotments of pay by officers of the Navy are authorized by act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 361).

Allotments of pay by enlisted men in the military or naval forces of the United States are authorized by act of October 6, 1917, Art. II (40 Stat., 402, as amended).

Allotments of pay by enlisted men of the Army are permitted by act of March 2, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 981), and act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 896).

Assignments of prize or bounty money were regulated by section 4643, Revised Statutes.

Assignments of wages by enlisted men of the Navy are void unless authorized by commanding and pay officers. (Sec. 1576, R. S.; but see Act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 403, sec. 202, as to allotments.)

Assignments of claims against United States are prohibited, with certain exceptions, by section 3477, Revised Statutes.

Assignments of wages by merchant seamen are prohibited, with certain exceptions, by section 4536, Revised Statutes.

Assignments of pay by employees of the Department of Agriculture are permitted by act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1057).

Assignments of pay by employees of the Coast and Geodetic Survey are permitted by act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1322).

Assignments of pay by employees of the Geological Survey are permitted by act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat., 727).

Assignments of pay by employees of the Reclamation Service are permitted by act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 350).

Assignments of pay by commissioned officers of the Army are permitted by act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1159), and act of March 2, 1913 (37 Stat., 710).

Assignments of pay by noncommissioned officers and privates of the Army are prohibited by section 1291, Revised Statutes.

Assignments of pensions are prohibited by section 4745, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 28, 1883, section 2 (22 Stat., 432).

Bounty money and prize money were abolished by Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1006).

Deposit of savings by enlisted men of the Navy is authorized by act of February 9, 1889 (25, Stat., 657); and by enlisted men of Marine Corps by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 579).

Attachment of wages by creditors.—The important question is, whether the money in the hands of the purser, though due to the seamen for wages, was attachable. A purser, it would seem, can not in this respect, be distinguished from any other disbursing agent of the Government. If the creditors of these seamen may, by process of attachment, divert the public money from its legitimate and appropriate object, the same thing may be done as regards the pay of our officers and enlisted men of the Army and of the Navy; and also in every other case where the public funds may be placed in the hands of an agent for disbursement. To state such a principle is to refute it. No government can sanction it. At all times it would be found embarrassing and under some circumstances it might be fatal to the public service. The funds of the Government are specifically appropriated to certain national objects, and if such appropriations might be diverted and defeated by State process or otherwise, the functions of the Government might be suspended. So long as money remains in the hands of a disbursing officer, it is as much money of the United States as if it had not been drawn from the Treasury. Until paid over by the agent of the Government to the person entitled to it, the fund can not in any legal sense be considered a part of his effects. The purser is not the debtor of the seaman." (Buchanan v. Alexander, 4 How., 19.)

Sec. 1431. [Leave and liberty to be granted by commanding officer.] It shall be the duty of commanding officers of vessels, in granting temporary leave of absence and liberty on shore, to exercise carefully a discrimination in favor of the faithful and obedient.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 3, v. 10, p. 627.)

Deprivation of liberty on shore may be inflicted by commanding officer upon enlisted men as a punishment, by authority of section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 24.

Deprivation of liberty on shore on foreign station may be inflicted upon enlisted men by sentence of summary court-martial, under section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 30, or by sentence of deck court, under act of February 16, 1909, section 2 (35 Stat., 621).

Furlough of officers by Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1442, R. S.)

Furlough without pay to enlisted men, subject to recall in time of war or national emergency. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580.)

No pay allowed officers and enlisted men, Navy or Marine Corps, absent on account of injury, sickness or disease resulting from their own misconduct. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

Liberty granted according to conduct.—

"The granting of liberty on shore and other privileges will depend upon the conduct class, and the commander in chief shall establish rules defining the privileges or restrictions for each class, which shall be uniform throughout his command." (Art. R-3668 (8), Navy Regs., 1913.)

"First-class conduct men shall be allowed every indulgence compatible with the demands of duty and with the exigencies of the service; and in respect to privileges a clear distinction should be made between them and men in the second-conduct class. Special privileges shall be allowed to the special first class when it is possible to extend them to a small number only." (Art. R-3668 (9), Navy Regs., 1913.)

Only commanding officer to grant leave or liberty.—"When the sanitary or other conditions of the port do not render it inadvisable, and when authorized by the senior officer present, the commanding officer shall grant liberty or leave of absence to the enlisted men, but such liberty or leave of absence shall not be granted by other than the commanding officer." (Art. R-3710 (1), Navy Regs., 1913.)

Leave of absence is a favor.—Neither the Secretary of War nor any officer of the Government can force a leave of absence upon an officer or soldier. A leave of absence is a favor extended. (Hunt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 709, 710; 11 Comp. Dec., 570; 16 Comp. Dec., 613; U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall., 415; see sec. 1442, R. S., and note to sec. 416, R. S., under "Suspension of employees.")

Special duty pay not allowed men on leave.—Enlisted men of the Navy, while on leave or liberty on shore, are not "serving" on board of submarines within the meaning of Navy Department General Order No. 20, of January 1, 1901, allowing additional pay to enlisted men "while serving on board of submarine vessels of the Navy." While upon authorized leave they are not in the performance of such service or duty of any kind. (19 Comp. Dec., 754, citing Colhoun v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 198, 202.) During the present war enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps detailed as gun pointers or gun captains shall be entitled to the additional pay provided for such detail "while temporarily absent by proper authority from the place where ordinarily required to perform duty under such detail." (Act Mar. 29, 1918, 40 Stat., 500.)

Persons on leave or liberty; status; "line of duty."—See note to section 1451, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1432. [Commanding officers not required to act as pay officers.] No commanding officer of any vessel of the Navy shall be required to perform the duties of a paymaster, passed assistant paymaster, or assistant paymaster.—(17 July, 1861, c. 4, s. 4, v. 12, p. 258.)

As to acting appointment of pay officers, see section 1381, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

As to appointment of special disbursing agents, see section 3614, Revised Statutes.

The words "paymaster, passed assistant paymaster, or assistant paymaster," are interpreted in practice as meaning "supply officer." (See art. 848, Navy Regs., 1920. As to grades in Supply Corps, see note to sec. 1376, R. S.)

Sec. 1433. [Commanding officers may exercise consular powers.] The commanding officer of any fleet, squadron, or vessel acting singly, when upon the high seas or in any foreign port where there is no resident consul of the United States, shall be authorized to exercise all the powers of a consul in relation to mariners of the United States.—(20 Feb., 1845, c. 17, s. 2, v. 5, p. 725.)

Any naval officer accepting appointment in diplomatic or consular service, considered as having resigned his office. (See sec. 1440, R. S.)

Controversies between merchant seamen and officers of any vessel of the United States, arising at sea or in foreign ports, shall be under exclusive jurisdiction of consular officers of the United States, whenever so stipulated by treaty or convention. (Sec. 4079, R. S.)

Destitute seamen of the United States to be returned by consuls to some port in the United States. (Sec. 4577, R. S.)

Marriages may be performed by any consular officer of the United States in a foreign country, between persons who would be authorized to marry if residing in the District of Columbia. (Sec. 4082, R. S.)

Merchant seamen of the United States on foreign voyages may complain to any commanding officer of the Navy concerning unfit water or provisions furnished them, and such commanding officer shall make an investigation, and if complaint is well founded, shall make a report to the master of the ship, and to the United States judge for the district embracing the port to which such ship is bound. (Sec. 4565, R. S.) Similar action to be taken in cases of merchant seamen bound from Atlantic to Pacific port of United States or vice versa. (Sec. 4565, R. S.) Laws relating to seamen on foreign voyages shall apply to seamen on vessels going from the United States and its possessions to Philippine Islands. (Act July 1, 1902, sec. 84, 32 Stat. 711.)

Notarial acts, which any notary public is required or authorized by law to do within the United States, shall be performed by any consular officer when application is made to him therefor. (Act Apr. 5, 1906, sec. 7, 34 Stat., 101; sec. 1750, R. S.) No such act shall be valid within the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, unless necessary stamps are affixed and canceled. (Act Apr. 5, 1906, sec. 10, 34 Stat., 102.)

Paymasters of the Navy on foreign stations shall render, when practicable, with their accounts, official certificate from resident consul, vouching that all purchases and expenditures were made at the ruling market prices. (Sec. 3723, R. S.)

Proceedings in regard to effects of deceased seamen are prescribed by sections 4539–

4541, Revised Statutes, and act of March 3, 1897, section 4 (29 Stat., 689). With reference to deceased persons in the naval service, provisions for disposition of their effects are made by act of March 29, 1918 (40 Stat., 499).

Provisions relating to consular officers are contained in Revised Statutes, sections 1689–1752.

Provisions relating to merchant seamen are contained in Revised Statutes, sections 4501 to 4612.

Testamentary disposition by citizens of United States dying abroad shall be strictly observed by consular officers, or the latter shall officially aid any person appointed by the deceased to manage his property. (Sec. 1711, R. S.) Consuls shall take possession of personal estate of citizens dying abroad and leaving no legal representative, shall inventory same, collect debts due, sell perishable articles, etc., at auction, and transmit balance of estate to the Treasury of the United States. (Sec. 1709, R. S.)

Marriages on board naval vessels.—"The commanding officer of a ship shall not perform a marriage ceremony on board; nor shall he permit one to be performed when the ship is outside of the territory of the United States, except in accordance with the local laws and laws of the State, Territory, or district in which the parties are domiciled, and in presence of a diplomatic or consular official of the United States, who has consented to issue the certificates and make the returns required by the consular regulations." (Art. 847 Navy Regs., 1920.)

Destitute American seamen.—The commanding officer of a naval vessel, by authority of the senior officer present, may, when on a foreign station, receive on board distressed seamen of the United States for passage to the United States, provided they bind themselves to be amenable in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy. (Art. 905, Navy Regs., 1920.)

Merchant vessels needing supplies may be furnished with such as can be spared, for which charge shall be made at the average price of the supplies; or, in case of extreme distress, gratuitous assistance may be furnished. (Art. I–4554, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

The senior officer present may require the medical officers of his command to render professional aid to persons not in the naval service when necessary and demanded by the laws of humanity. (Art. 685, Navy Regs., 1920.)

"In the absence of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States at a foreign port the commander in chief, as senior officer present, has authority (a) To exercise the powers of a consul in relation to mariners of the United States (sec. 1433, R. S.); (b) To communicate or remonstrate with foreign civil authorities as may be necessary; (c) To urge upon citizens of the United States the necessity of abstaining from participation in political controversies or violations of the laws of neutrality." (Art. 720, Navy Regs., 1920.)

Jurisdiction of consular and military officers.—A member of the crew of an Army transport was held on board as a prisoner upon the charge of having committed an offense against a Japanese subject. The Japanese authorities came on board to arrest him, but the Army officer in command refused to surrender the accused. The United States consul requested the commanding officer to deliver the man to the Japanese authorities, but this was refused. The United States consul then asked the commanding officer if he would obey the consul's order to turn over the man to the Japanese authorities and was answered in the negative. Next day the Japanese procurator with a party came to take the prisoner, but was told he would only be given up by exercise of superior force. The United States consul then told the commanding officer that he would not be allowed to sail until the matter was settled between the United States and the Japanese Government, but on receiving sailing orders, the Thomas sailed, after the commanding officer had assured the Japanese authorities that the man would be prosecuted. The man, who was a deserter from the Navy, was later turned over to the naval authorities for trial. (File 5542-01, Aug. 20, 1900. As to jurisdiction of diplomatic and naval authorities, see file 7760-2, Aug. 13, 1907; 4 Moore's Dig. 616, 617.)

Duty to advance commercial interests.—

"So far as lies within their power, commanders in chief, division commanders, and commanding officers of ships shall protect all merchant vessels of the United States in lawful occupations, and advance the commercial interests of this country, always acting in accordance with international law and treaty obligations." (Art. 726, Navy Regs., 1920.)

"If the Navy Department, in order to assist in the extension of United States trade and commerce and to carry out the general purposes indicated in the application by the Department of State, thinks fit to send an officer of the Navy, skilled in matters of ordnance, to a South American capital, it is entirely competent for the Secretary of the Navy to direct him to be sent, not as the representative of a private person or company, nor in its employment, but at the expense of the Government as a representative of the Navy Department and for the purpose of assisting all Americans whose interests are such as, in the opinion of the Secretary, to justify that proceeding." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 45.)

Merchant seamen as prisoners on naval vessels.—"The commanding officer of a ship shall not, while on a foreign station, receive on board as prisoners seamen from merchant vessels, unless the witnesses necessary to substantiate the charges against them are also received, or adequate means adopted to insure the presence of such witnesses on the arrival of the prisoners at the place where they are to be handed over to the civil authorities." (Art. 903, Navy Regs., 1920.)

Sec. 1434. [Commanding officers of squadrons to have rank of "flag officers."] The President may select any officer not below the grade of commander on the active list of the Navy, and assign him to the command of a squadron, with the rank and title of "flag-officer;" and any officer so assigned shall have the same authority and receive the same obedience from the commanders of ships in his squadron, holding commissions of an older date than his, that he would be entitled to receive if his commission were the oldest.—(21 Dec., 1861, c. 1, s. 4, v. 12, p. 329.)

Assignment of retired officers to command squadrons. (See sec. 1464, R. S.)

Pay of officers of the Navy shall be based on their rank and length of service. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 581.)

Rank of officers not to be changed, except in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Sec. 1506, R. S., as amended by act June 17, 1878, 20 Stat., 144.)

The President may formulate appropriate rules governing assignments to command of vessels and squadrons. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1133.)

The President may designate six officers of the Navy for command of fleets or subdivisions thereof, not more than three to have the rank of admiral and the others the rank of vice admiral; such selections in time of war to be made from the grades of rear admiral or captain on the active list, and in time of peace from among rear admirals on the active list; but nothing in this act shall be construed to amend or repeal sections 1434, 1463, and 1464, Revised Statutes. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 18, 40 Stat., 89.)

Flag officers.—See note to section 1407, Revised Statutes, as to who are flag officers.

By act of January 16, 1857, section 5 (11 Stat., 154), it was provided "that captains in command of squadrons shall be denominated flag officers." This provision is in the right direction, toward the delivery of the mind of the United States from the superstitious influences which have so long resisted the ascription of proper names of command to superior officers in the Navy, while admitting such in the Army. In the latter it never seems to have been supposed that paramount considerations of public policy require us to stop at the rank of "captain" and to apply that appellation indiscriminately to all field and general officers. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 337.)

Precedence of officers appointed to act in any grade.—See Article R-1048, Navy Regulations, 1913, noted under section 1410, Revised Statutes.

Appointments by President without confirmation of Senate.—Where the statute provides for the appointment of an officer by the President, without requiring the consent of the Senate, such consent is unnecessary, and the President may make such appointment without submitting the same to the Senate for confirmation. In the latter case the commission may be signed by the Secretary of the Navy as the act of the President. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82; see also note to sec. 1369, R. S. As to letter signed by Secretary of War, by direction of the President, constituting a commission, see O'Shea v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 392, noted under Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 3.)

Form of assignment to duty as flag officer under this section.—On September 30, 1889, a letter was addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to "Acting Rear Admiral" John G. Walker, U. S. N., as follows:

"You are hereby appointed an acting rear admiral in the Navy of the United States, such appointment to hold good while in command of the Squadron of Evolution.

"You are authorized to hoist the flag and wear the uniform of a rear admiral, and to affix the title of rear admiral to your official signature."

The following letter was addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to "Rear Admiral" William T. Sampson April 21, 1898 (File 98039, Bu. Nav.):

"Under the authority of section 1434 of the Revised Statutes of the United States you are assigned to command the United States Naval Force on the North Atlantic Station, with the rank of rear admiral.

"You will hoist the flag of a rear admiral, will wear the uniform, and will affix that title to your official signature."

On May 28, 1903, Capt. Seaton Schroeder was given an assignment by the Secretary of the Navy, as follows: "By direction of the President, you are, under authority of section 1434 of the Revised Statutes, hereby assigned to the command of the Fourth Division of the Second Squadron of the United States Atlantic Fleet with the rank and title of rear admiral. You will hoist the flag of a rear admiral, wear the uniforms of that grade, and affix that title to your official signature." (See 17 Comp. Dec., 54.)

Officer does not become a rear admiral by operation of this section.—The assignment of a captain of the Navy to duty as rear admiral by authority of section 1434, Revised Statutes, does not make such officer a rear admiral within the meaning of the law (act May 13, 1903, 35 Stat., 128) providing pay for an aid to a rear admiral. (17 Comp. Dec., 54.)

The chief purpose of the law, shown by its terms, was to give to the officer so assigned command over, and to require obedience from, officers of a higher rank or rate who might be serving in the squadron. It is noticed that Captain Schroeder was, by the letter above-quoted, assigned to the command of a division of a squadron, and not of a squadron, as provided in section 1434, with the rank and title of "rear-admiral," while section 1434 provides for the assignment of certain officers to command squadrons with the rank and title of "flag-officer." This assignment did not make Captain Schroeder a rear admiral within the meaning of the law allowing additional pay to officers serving as aids to rear admirals. (17 Comp. Dec., 54.)

There is no law which authorizes the payment to an officer of the pay of rear admiral while he was accorded that rank and exercised the duties of that grade by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, his commission being only that of captain or of commodore. (Comp. Dec., Dec. 16, 1899, Appeal No. 3215, case of Rear Admiral William T. Sampson. But see act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 581, providing that the pay of officers of the Navy shall be based on their rank and length of service.)

Sec. 1435. [First lieutenants, navigation, and watch officers.] Lieutenant commanders may be assigned to duty as first lieutenants of naval stations, as navigation and watch officers on board of vessels of war, and as first lieutenants of vessels not commanded by lieutenant-commanders.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 3, v. 12, p. 584. 25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 5, v. 14, p. 223.)

Aid or executive of commanding officer of a vessel of war or naval station, may be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1469, R. S.)

Ensigns may be assigned to duty as watch officers. (See sec. 1490, R. S.)

Lieutenant commanders eligible for appointment as Chief of Bureau of Engineering (sec. 424, R. S., as amended by acts June 7, 1900, 31 Stat., 702, and June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 828); and to assist the Chief of Naval Operations (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558).

President shall formulate appropriate rules governing assignments to command of vessels and squadrons. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1133, superseding sec. 1529, R. S., which provided, inter alia, that vessels of the fourth rate shall, as nearly as practicable, be commanded by lieutenant commanders.)

Shore duty, officers not to be employed on, except in cases especially provided by law, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that employment on such duty is required by the public interests and shall so state in the order of employment. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, sec. 2, 22 Stat., 481, amended by act July 19, 1892, 27 Stat., 245.)

Vessels in actual service shall be officered and manned as the President may direct. (Sec. 1535, R. S.)

First lieutenants.—"On board battleships and armored cruisers, an officer of the rank of lieutenant commander or lieutenant shall be assigned to duty as first lieutenant. If practicable, the first lieutenant shall be the line officer on board next in rank to the executive officer, but when this is impracticable he may be either senior or junior to the navigating officer, gunnery officer, and engineer officer, one or all, as the exigencies of the service may demand; but he shall be senior to all the watch and division officers. Commanding officers of battleships and armored cruisers may detail an officer to act as first lieutenant when no regular first lieutenant has been ordered to the ship." (Art. R-2301, Navy Regs., 1913.)

"The navigating officer is the officer detailed by the department to perform the navigation duties and is the head of the navigation department of the ship. The navigating officer shall be senior to all watch and division officers." (Art. R-2401, Navy Regs., 1913.)

It is the President's right, as commander in chief, to decide according to his own judgment what officer shall perform any particular duty. Congress could not, if it would, take away from the President or in anywise diminish the authority conferred upon him by the Constitution. (9 Op. Att'y. Gen., 462, noted under Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1.)

Sec. 1436. [Sea service; staff officers who have been chiefs of bureaus.] Any staff officer of the Navy who has performed the duty of a chief of a bureau of the Navy Department for a full term shall thereafter be exempt from sea duty, except in time of war.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 10, v. 16, p. 537.)

As to appointment, etc., of chiefs of bureaus, see sections 421-426, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Shore duty, officers not to be employed on, except in cases especially provided by law, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that employment in such duty is required by the public interests, and shall so state in the order of employment. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, sec. 2, 22 Stat., 481, amended by act July 19, 1892, 27 Stat., 245.)

Sec. 1437. [Detail of officers for service of War Department.] The President may detail, temporarily, three competent naval officers for the service of the War Department in the inspection of transport vessels, and for such other services as may be designated by the Secretary of War.—(12 Feb., 1862, c. 21, v. 12, p. 338.)

Detail of officers for service with the Coast and Geodetic Survey, under the Department of Commerce, is authorized by sections 4684 and 4687, Revised Statutes, and amendments thereto.

Detail of officers to educational institutions is authorized by section 1225, Revised Statutes, as amended, and other laws noted thereunder.

Detail of officers and enlisted men, Navy and Marine Corps, to assist Republic of Haiti. (Act June 12, 1916, 39 Stat., 223.)

Detail of two officers, Navy, to assist Republic of Brazil. (Res. Oct. 13, 1914, 38 Stat., 780.)

Detail of officers to assist South American Republics. (Act June 5, 1920, 41 Stat., 1056.)

Detail of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, to assist the Dominican Republic. (Act Feb. 11, 1918, 40 Stat., 437.)

Detail of medical officers, Navy, for duty with American National Red Cross (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 581); and for duty in connection with Bureau of War Risk Insurance (act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 398).

Detail of officers to act in lieu of civilian lighthouse inspectors, under the Bureau of Lighthouses, Department of Commerce, was authorized for a period not exceeding three years by act of June 17, 1910, section 11 (36 Stat., 539), which act also repealed sections 4653 and 4671, Revised Statutes, providing for the detail of officers as members of the Lighthouse Board and as lighthouse inspectors.

Detail of officers to ocean mail vessels is authorized by act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 832).

Detail of officers for such duties as the United States Shipping Board may deem necessary in connection with its business is authorized by act of September 7, 1916, section 4 (39 Stat., 729).

Heads of departments are required to render all practicable aid to the Bureau of Fisheries, under the Department of Commerce. (Sec. 4397, R. S.)

President is authorized to utilize the service of any department and any officer or agent of the United States in the execution of the selective-draft law. (Act May 18, 1917, sec. 6, 40 Stat., 80.)

When the Navy Department performs any service for the War Department, the funds of the War Department may be placed subject to requisition of the Navy Department for direct expenditure by the latter. (Act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1084.)

Department of Justice.—The detail of officers for special duty under the Department of Justice, is authorized in practice. (See, for example, Navy Register, Jan. 1, 1917, p. 335.)

Duty of Navy to cooperate with Army.—It is the duty of the Navy to cooperate with the Army, both being branches of the military service of the United States, and this duty of cooperation authorizes the detail of a naval constructor for duty under the War Department, without additional compensation. (See Stocker v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 300, noted under sec. 1404, R. S.; see also 7 Comp. Dec., 289.)

Appropriation chargeable with expenses of officer detailed.—It is the general rule that where an officer or employee of one executive department performs services for another department under proper orders, only such expenses as are extra and incurred solely by reason of such duty are to be borne by the department for which the duty is performed. However, where the officer or employee performing such duty is employed under a lump-sum appropriation and his place in his own department is filled by an additional person during the period of such duty, all expenses incident to the detached duty, including the salary of such officer or employee and his subsistence where regularly furnished under his contract of employment, are to be borne by the department for which the duty is performed. (22 Comp. Dec., 145.)

Where a lighthouse tender, with officers and crew, is used in mine-planting practice by the War Department, only extra expenses incident to such use, such as the cost of additional fuel and oil, are to be charged to the War Department, the pay of the officers and crew and their subsistence, or commutation therefor, being chargeable to the Department of Commerce, under which they are regularly employed. (22 Comp. Dec., 145.)

While the decisions have referred to transactions of the above character as details of employees, they should be viewed as the performance of service by one department, through its existing permanent organization, for another department. The custom is that such service, when small, shall be given as a matter of courtesy, and when of some substantial value, reimbursement of full cost shall be made, in order that the department securing the service shall not secure more work than its appropriation authorizes. (22 Comp. Dec., 145.)

Where a vessel of the Naval Auxiliary Service, with officers and crew, is withdrawn from its regular duty under the Navy Department and is used for a certain period in transporting supplies for the Department of Commerce, the appropriation for that department available generally for the transportation of such supplies is chargeable with the total expenses incurred by the Navy Department in the maintenance and operation of the vessel during such period, including the pay and subsistence of the officers and crew. (23 Comp. Dec., 119, distinguishing 22 Comp. Dec., 145.)

There was no detail whatever in the case noted in the preceding paragraph. It was more in the nature of an agreement to perform a service. The officers and crew in the Naval Auxiliary Service are in the status of civilian crews. If the officers are not required for service on vessels, they are furloughed, and the crew being shipped in the same manner as for service on merchant vessels, are not shipped unless needed to man a vessel. They have no permanent tenure of office, and if a vessel of the Naval Auxiliary Service was withdrawn from active service for a period of 37 days, there would be no expense for pay and subsistence of officers and crew. This vessel was withdrawn from her regular duties to perform a service for and at the request of another department of the Government, and if the Department of Commerce had not secured the service of this vessel, it would have been necessary to secure a merchant vessel. This was a service of substantial value, for which reimbursement of full cost should be made in order that the Department of Commerce shall not secure more work than its appropriation authorizes. (23 Comp. Dec., 119.)

As to right of medical officer of the Navy to compensation from appropriations under control of the Department of Justice for professional services rendered by him to United States prisoners in a United States jail, see note to section 1368, Revised Statutes, under "Medical attendance to persons not in the Navy."

Sec. 1438. [Officers to act as storekeepers on foreign stations.] The Secretary of the Navy shall order a suitable commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy, except in the case provided in section fourteen hundred and fourteen to take charge of the naval stores for foreign squadrons at each of the foreign stations where such stores may be deposited, and where a store-keeper may be necessary.—(17 June, 1844, c. 107, s. 1, v. 5, p. 700; 3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 3, v. 9, p. 172.)

See note to section 1414, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1439. [Bonds of officers acting as storekeepers.] Every officer so acting as store-keeper on a foreign station shall be required to give a bond, in such amount as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy, for the faithful performance of his duty.—(17 June, 1844, c. 107, s. 1, v. 5, pp. 700, 701.)

On general subject of bonds, see note to section 1383, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1440. [Appointments in diplomatic or consular service.] If any officer of the Navy accepts or holds an appointment in the diplomatic or consular service of the Government, he shall be considered as having resigned his place in the Navy, and it shall be filled as a vacancy.—(30 Mar., 1868, c. 38, s. 2, v. 15, p. 58.)

Army officers are prohibited from holding offices in diplomatic or consular service by section 1223, Revised Statutes.

By act of March 3, 1875, section 2 (18 Stat., 512), it was provided that certain retired officers of the Army should be continued on the retired list, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of act of March 30, 1868, upon which sections 1223 and 1440, Revised Statutes, are based; and by act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 872), the accounting officers of the Treasury were directed to allow pay to certain retired officers of the Army included in act of March 3, 1875, "notwithstanding such officer accepted and held a diplomatic or consular office."

Consular powers may be exercised by Navy officers in certain cases. (See sec. 1433, R. S.)

Legality of accepting office in diplomatic or consular service must be determined by officer upon his own responsibility.—"It may be, and doubtless is, a subject of reasonable interest, and perhaps of great anxiety, to officers of the United States Army on the retired list to ascertain [in view of the act of July 31, 1894, section 2, 28 Stat., 205] 'if an officer on the retired list of the Army can accept a diplomatic or consular appointment and still hold his position on the retired list with rank and pay.' But, manifestly, the solution of that question by any retired officer of the Army, and the course of conduct which he may adopt in pursuance of such solution, is a matter of his private concern only and not a subject with which the United States can be concerned until some action has been taken by such officer. * * * If Lieut. Clay, or any other retired officer, should be called upon to determine such question in his own case, the obvious course for him to pursue is that which is open to every person inclined to pursue a course as to the legal consequences of which he is in ignorance or doubt. He should seek the advice of private counsel, learned in the law, and obtain their opinion, for which, if given without due care, such counsel can be held to personal accountability. The whole matter, as it seems to me, is one strictly of private concern and in no sense of public interest." (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 510; file 9736-15, Mar. 28, 1910; file 9736-18, June 25, 1910. See also 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 506; compare 18 Op. Atty. Gen.; 11; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 503. For other cases, see note to sec. 356, R. S., under "III. Must Arise in Administration of Department.")

Retired officers included in prohibition of this section.—Section 1223, Revised Statutes [which is similar to section 1440] applies to all officers of the Army, whether upon the active or retired list, and must be deemed to enact that any officer upon either list, accepting an appointment in the diplomatic or consular service, is to be treated as having resigned his place in the Army. To section 1223 there is an exception made by the act of March 3, 1875, which provides that a certain class of officers therein described, who are "borne upon the retired list, shall be continued thereon notwithstanding the provisions of section two, chapter thirty-eight, act of March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight," which is embodied in section 1223, Revised Statutes. Of course, the officers therein described, even if accepting an appointment in the consular or diplomatic service, would not vacate their commissions. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 306.)

The act of March 30, 1878, applied to officers on the retired as well as on the active list, and it made the acceptance of the diplomatic vacate the military office, eo instanti, the vacancy thus created necessarily continuing until filled in the usual way. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 610.)

A retired officer is not precluded from holding a civil office under the United States Government except as prohibited by statute. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 306.)

Captain Badeau's Case.—In 1870, Captain Adam Badeau, U. S. Army, retired, was appointed to and accepted the office of consul general at London. After his appointment, his name continued to be borne on the Army Register as a retired officer, but he was not paid as such. He was not of the class of retired officers described in the first proviso of section 2 of the act of March 3, 1875, chapter 178: Held, upon consideration of the provisions of sections 1094 and 1223, Revised Statutes [the former providing that the Army shall consist, inter alia, of "the officers of the Army on the retired list"], the latter embodying so much of section 2, act of March 30, 1868, chapter 38, as related to officers of the Army, advised, that Badeau has ceased to be a retired officer of the Army by effect of the statutory provision embodied in section 1223, and that his name can not legally be continued on the retired list. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 407; see also 2 Comp. Dec., 7, citing decision of Second Comptroller Upton, June 18, 1883, and decision of Second Comptroller Gilkeson, Apr. 15, 1890; and see 17 Comp. Dec., 441.)

The cases of General Sickles and Captain Badeau are alike in all material respects. It appears that each of these officers, after being placed on the retired list, accepted in 1869 an appointment in the diplomatic service. General Sickles remained in that service until April, 1874. Captain Badeau remained therein only a few months, but subsequently, in 1870, entered the consular service, wherein he held an appointment for several years. In the meantime, they were each actually borne on the retired list and have since been continued thereon. Their right now [December 31, 1888] to be borne on the retired list depends upon the operation and effect of the provisions of the acts of 1863 and 1875 upon their respective cases, and necessarily involves a construction of those provisions. There being a suit pending in the Supreme Court (Badeau v. U. S.) which presents the same question precisely that arises in those cases, involving a construction of the same statutory provisions, and which will doubtless be determined during the present term of the court, the Attorney General thinks it inadvisable to express any opinion upon the two cases referred to, and suggests that it would be proper to await the decision of the court in that suit, which will finally settle the question arising in them. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 202.)

Captain Badeau's name was borne on the retired list until May 7, 1878, when he was "dropped" in conformity with an opinion of the Attorney General under section 1223, Revised Statutes, to date from May 19, 1869, date he accepted office in the diplomatic service. His name was restored to the retired list, July 3, 1878, by the Secretary of War, on the assumption that his case was within the first proviso to section 2, act of March 3, 1875, relating to retired officers then borne on the list. The Second Comptroller thereafter held that Captain Badeau's connection with the Army entirely ceased May 19, 1869. From this view the Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army dissents: Held, (1) That when Captain Badeau accepted the appointment and assumed the duties of an office in the diplomatic service he thereby, by force and effect of section 2 of the act of March 30, 1868, chapter 38, ceased to be an officer of the Army, and his place as such became vacant. The fact that his name remained on the rolls has no significance; it is simply evidence of a mistake of law in making those rolls. (2) That neither the act of March 3, 1875, nor the action of the Secretary of War above referred to operated to reinstate him as such an officer; the act of 1875, when speaking of names on the retired list, meant names there legally, not by mistake either of law or fact. That act should be construed to have a prospective effect only. And (3) That his name is not lawfully borne on the retired list of the Army. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 610.)

The act of 1868, section 2 (secs. 1223 and 1440, R. S.), says the acceptance of the diplomatic or consular office shall operate as a resignation and the military office thereby be made vacant. Vacant when? Manifestly, immediately upon the acceptance of the other office. By the statutes, the holding of the two places in the same person is made inconsistent and impossible. The election to take one is ipso facto the relinquishment of the other. It is a complete resignation. The military officer goes into civil life; the military office is vacant, and may be filled by another appointment at once. It is a statutory resignation, yet it has all the essentials of an ordinary resignation. The officer by accepting the civil office tenders his resignation; the President, by appointing him to a civil office, consents to and accepts his resignation of the military office. This being so, the officer is as completely out of the Army as if he had resigned in the ordinary way, been dismissed from the service, or died. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 610.)

The act of 1875 could not put a man who had resigned and been six years a civilian back into the Army. It will not do to say that by consenting to the act of 1875, the President and

Senate have consented to the appointment of Lieutenant Badeau as one of a class. First, it is a non sequitur, and the President has consented to a statute. Acts of Congress may and often do become operative as laws without his consent and over his veto. Again, the President and Senate can not make appointments by classes and general legislation. The Constitution contemplates that an appointment shall be made upon the separate consideration, first by the President and afterwards by the Senate, of each individual case by name and upon its own merits; and this constitutional requirement is in no way met by a law which would induct men into office by classes. To hold otherwise would enable a two-thirds majority of each House of Congress, acting together, to legislate any number of men, by name or by a class, into office without the consent of the President at all. Of course such legislation would be absolutely void. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 610.)

If the act of 1875 were such as to restore to office in the Army any officer who had vacated such office, it would be clearly unconstitutional and invalid; but such is not its necessary reading. When giving legislation a retroactive effect, it is invalid, but giving it a prospective effect, it is valid, all rules of construction require that it shall be given a prospective effect only; and such is the rule which is and should be applied to the act of 1875. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 610.)

The question seems to have been mooted for many years, and an attempt has been made to have it adjudicated in the courts, but no such adjudication has been reached. In Badeau v. U. S. (130 U. S., 439), the court expressly declines to decide the question, as not being necessarily involved in the case, using the following language: "Whether by order of the Secretary of War, July 3, 1878, the claimant's name was properly restored to the retired list, we are not called upon to determine in this case, because even were that so, we do not think that his petition can be sustained." The court did, however, in that case decide that the act of 1868, now embodied in section 1223 [and 1440] applies to officers upon the retired as well as upon the active list, saying, "no officer, whether on the active or retired list, could accept appointment in the latter" (diplomatic or consular service) "and remain an officer." This is practically a declaration by the highest court in the land that prior to 1875 an officer upon the retired list of the Army who accepted an appointment in the diplomatic or consular service thereby vacated his military office; and, consistently with the language of the statute, it does not appear how any other position is tenable. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 610.)

The act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 872), directing the accounting officers of the Treasury not to suspend or withhold the pay of certain retired officers therein described, whose names were borne upon the retired list prior to the passage of and retained thereon in obedience to the act of March 3, 1875, applies only to officers of the Army whose names were lawfully on the retired list, and not to those who prior to the passage of the last-mentioned act had severed themselves from the Army by force of section 2, chapter 38, of the act of March 30, 1868, in accepting or holding a diplomatic or consular position. Held, that since May 18, 1869, Adam Badeau has not been an officer of the United States Army, upon either the active or the retired list; that the fact that his name was carried on the rolls as an officer on the retired list is of no consequence, inasmuch as the same was placed there illegally, and without warrant of law, and that, therefore, he is entitled to none of the benefits claimed by him under the act of March 3, 1891 [noted above]. (2 Comp. Dec., 7.)

Sec. 1441. [Officers dismissed, or resigning to escape dismissal.] No officer of the Navy who has been dismissed by the sentence of a court-martial, or suffered to resign in order to escape such dismissal, shall ever again become an officer of the Navy.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 11, v. 12, p. 585.)

Acceptance of resignation must be communicated to officer before he may quit his post or proper duties without leave. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 10.)

Midshipmen dismissed by sentence of court-martial for hazing shall be forever ineligible for reappointment to Naval Academy. (Act June 23, 1874, 18 Stat., 203.)

Midshipmen summarily expelled from Naval Academy for hazing shall not be reappointed to the Corps of Cadets or be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, until two years after graduation of the class to which they belonged. (Act Mar. 3, 1903, 32 Stat., 1198.)

Officers dropped from the rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps on account of absence without leave or imprisonment under sentence of civil courts, shall not be eligible for reappointment. (Act Apr. 2, 1918, 40 Stat., 501; see note to sec. 1229, R. S.)

Officers and midshipmen who shall have left the Navy under honorable conditions and who shall have enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force, may be appointed to the grade and rank last held by them without examination other than physical. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

Officers, including midshipmen, who have left the naval service under honorable conditions, and who shall have enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force, shall be eligible for membership in the Fleet Naval Reserve. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 589.)

Reappointment of any commissioned or warrant officer who shall have been honorably discharged from the service, was authorized by act of February 16, 1914, section 21 (38 Stat., 290.)

See section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 37, and act of June 22, 1874, section 2 (18 Stat., 192), as to officers dismissed and afterwards demanding trial by court-martial.

The spirit of the laws is against the reappointment of any person who has been dismissed from the Navy, as will be seen from section 1441, Revised Statutes. (File 5252-43, Oct. 5, 1911.)

Midshipmen dismissed from the Navy.—There is no provision of law expressly prohibiting the reappointment of a midshipman who has been dismissed from the Navy, except in the single case of hazing. However, where a midshipman was dismissed for "intoxication and inaptitude," and thereafter nominated for appointment to the Naval Academy, held, that if the candidate's moral qualifications are not satisfactory and such as are required for the admission of candidates generally, he may be legally rejected; and whether or not he is so qualified is a question of fact. (File 5252-43, Oct. 5, 1911.)

Effect of pardoning.—"Whether an officer dismissed by sentence of a court-martial who has been pardoned by the President, may again become an officer of the Navy, notwithstanding this provision is a question not without difficulty. It is not the point specifically referred to in Mr. Myer's letter, and, therefore, I refrain from discussing it. But I do not hesitate to say that I think it can be shown that Congress did not intend by this clause to preclude the President from reappointing officers of the Navy dismissed by sentence of a court-martial to whom he has extended a pardon." (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 19, 23. Compare, cases noted under Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, under "III. Power to Pardon Offenses against United States"; and see Laws v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 69.)

If Congress thinks proper to accept the fact of dismissal or enforced resignation of a naval officer as evidence of unfitness, or lack of qualification, it may do so without having its action in that regard overridden by the pardoning power of the President. An unconditional pardon abates whatever punishment flows from the commission of the pardoned offense, but can not eradicate the factum which is made a criterion of fitness. The whole context of the original act from which section 1441 is taken discloses its nonpenal character. Accordingly, held, "that section 1441 of the Revised Statutes is properly to be regarded as a rule relating to qualification for office in the Navy, that it does not impose a penalty as such on individual offenders, and that the incidental disabilities which they may suffer by reason of the statute are not removed by a pardon." Further, held, that the acts of February 16, 1914, and August 29, 1916 [above cited] do not show any purpose on the part of Congress to change the requirement of section 1441; on the contrary, they confirm it, since each of these later acts by its terms applies only to officers who have been "honorably discharged from the service," or who have "left that service under honorable conditions;" and that an officer who has been dismissed from the Navy by sentence of court martial and subsequently pardoned is not eligible for reappointment to the Navy or to membership in the Fleet Naval Reserve. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225, citing Op. J. A. G., Navy, Nov. 24, 1917, file 26282-326, Carlesi v. N. Y., 233 U. S., 51, etc.)

Resignation under charges.—An Army officer having been charged with drunkenness, submitted an undated resignation to his commanding officer to be held and not forwarded to the War Department if he should entirely abstain from the use of intoxicants, but to be forwarded to the department if he should become intoxicated again. On again becoming intoxicated his commanding officer dated and forwarded the resignation, which are duly accepted by the President and the officer notified. Held, that the office became vacant upon the officer's receipt of such notification, and that the subsequent action of the President in revoking his acceptance did not restore the officer to the service. (Mimmack v. U. S., 97 U. S., 426.)

Sec. 1442. [Furlough of Officers.] The Secretary of the Navy shall have authority to place on furlough any officer on the active list of the Navy.—(3 Mar., 1835, c. 27, s. 1, v. 4, pp. 756, 757. 3 Mar., 1845, c. 77, s. 6, v. 5, p. 794. 28 Feb., 1855, c. 127, s. 3, v. 10, p. 617. 1 June, 1860, c. 67, s. 4, v. 12, p. 27.)

Furlough of civil employees, see note to section 416, Revised Statutes, under "Suspension of employees."

Furlough without pay of enlisted men, subject to recall in time of war or national emergency. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580.)

No pay to be allowed officers or enlisted men, Navy or Marine Corps, absent from duty on account of injury, sickness or disease resulting from their own misconduct. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

Pay of officers on furlough, see section 1557, Revised Statutes.

Retirement of officers on furlough pay, see sections 1454, 1593, and 1594, Revised Statutes.

Secretary of the Navy may assign officers to duty on ocean mail vessels with furlough pay, see act of March 3, 1891, section 7 (26 Stat., 832).

Section 1442 not repealed.—Section 1442, Revised Statutes, gives the right to furlough an officer of the Navy, and section 1557 fixes the proportion of the pay that he shall have while on furlough. These sections have not been repealed. (15 Comp. Dec., 73.)

Status of officers on furlough.—"When officers are furloughed by the Department in the administration of its general power, they may be restored by the same power. Their places have not been, and can not be, occupied by others. With them, to be furloughed or not to be, is only a question of duty and of pay, not of rank or place on the roll of the Navy." (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223, 236.)

Under the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 910), authorizing the President to place "on waiting orders out of the line of promotion, with one-half active-duty pay," officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service [now Coast Guard] who are permanently incapacitated, and to fill the resulting vacancies by promotion in the order of seniority, held, that an officer placed on "permanent waiting orders" is withdrawn from the line of promotion but may be restored to the service in his former rank when his disability ceases, without congressional action. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

Officer can not be furloughed without statutory authority.—The pay of commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service [now Coast Guard], having been assimilated by law to that of the Army, and there being no power in the Secretary of War, by order, to reduce the pay of commissioned officers of the Army, held, that the order of the Secretary of the Treasury placing a commissioned officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service on leave of absence with half pay, as a punishment for an offense, was not authorized by law; and, accordingly, that the portion of the order directing the reduction of his pay to half pay, was inoperative. "Neither the Secretary of War nor any officer of the Government can force a leave of absence upon an officer or soldier * * *. A leave of absence is a favor extended." (Citing Hunt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 709, 710.) Compulsory absence by the order of a superior officer, which is not for the convenience or in the interest of the officer who is relieved from duty, and where there is no legal authority to direct such compulsory absence, is not leave of absence within the meaning of section 1265, Revised Statutes, fixing the pay of Army officers while absent. The power to dismiss officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service is not in the Secretary of the Treasury. Neither can he place them on leave of absence on half pay. They are entitled to their entire salaries because of the commission they hold, except in cases wherein the law, or regulations having the force of law, makes other provision. (11 Comp. Dec., 570.)

Difference between "furlough" and "retirement."—Officers on furlough without being retired are not included in the expression "retired naval officers." (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 222.)

Secretary may furlough officer convicted by court-martial.—Where a medical officer is found guilty of vulgar and indecent acts and associations such as unfit him to treat persons in the Navy and members of their families, should the court not sentence him to dismissal the Navy Department feels it would have no alternative but to place him on furlough as authorized by section 1442, Revised Statutes, although this would mean that, in accordance with section 1557, Revised Statutes, he must receive half pay, thus imposing expenditures upon the Government from its appropriations for the naval service without receiving any return therefor. (File 26251-11181, Dec. 17, 1915; G. C. M. Rec. No. 31436; C. M. O. 49-1915, p. 27.)

Suspension from duty by court-martial sentence.—As extended periods of severance from active duty are calculated to impair the efficiency of an officer, and are detrimental to the interests of the naval service, that part of a court-martial sentence of an officer which involved suspension from duty on leave pay was remitted. A sentence consisting of "three months' leave of absence" with the full pay corresponding to that status, is not favorably regarded, particularly as such action would necessitate the detail of another officer to perform the duty of the one under sentence, while the latter remained idle. The granting of such leave is a privilege which would not, except under extraordinary circumstances, be accorded by the Navy Department to any officer during a tour of sea service. As to suspension from duty with reduction in pay, this has also been held an undesirable form of punishment prejudicial to the best interests of the service and contrary to the policy of the Navy Department; the officer is probably left without employment and the Government loses his services. A sentence "to be suspended from rank and duty * * * to receive during said period one-half of shore pay." is inappropriate, since it relegates to idleness for two years an officer whose services are needed, and throws his work on others. (Naval Dig., 1916, p. 623.)

Temporary officers appointed for war with Germany not entitled to retirement except for physical disability incurred in line of duty. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 9, 40 Stat., 86; act June 4, 1920, sec. 2, 41 Stat., 834.)

Warrant officers, retirement of. (See Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 571, noted under sec. 1448, R. S.; and see note to sec. 1405, R. S.)

"The Secretary of the Navy represents the President, and exercises his power on the subjects confided to his department." (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How. 92; see further, note to sec. 417, R. S.)

The retirement of officers of the Navy, whether occurring under section 1443 or according to the terms of the appropriation act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), is made only by the President, not by the Secretary of the Navy. From both section 1443 and the act of 1906, it appears that, with the determination of the question of retirement, the Secretary of the Navy has nothing directly to do; it is for the President. Where, therefore, an officer of the Navy was retired, pursuant to the express direction and approval of the President, as a captain of the Navy, and at no time since such retirement has the President conferred a higher rank upon him, the Secretary of the Navy has neither duty, authority, or power to place the name of such officer upon the retired list with the rank of rear-admiral. (Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13.)

President has discretion to deny application for retirement.—The act of May 13, 1908 [noted above as an amendment to this section], does not declare that the officer may voluntarily retire after 30 years' service. Such an idea is in fact negated by placing his retirement entirely within the discretion of the President. The officer is vested with the right to make application for retirement, but there his right ends and the discretion of the President begins. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 417.)

When retirement becomes legally effective.—See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, under "When retirement or advancement on retired list takes effect." See also notes to sections 1444 and 1458, Revised Statutes.

Civilian employees not entitled to benefits of Navy retirement laws.—A clerk appointed for duty in a navy pay office is not an officer of the Navy entitled to retirement for age or length of service; he was no more an officer of the Navy than any one of the many employees of the Navy Department at Washington. (Foreman v. Meyer, 227 U. S., 452; 38 App. D. C., 472.)

The Navy Department can not countenance any proposed legislation seeking to engraft on the military retired list of the Navy the cost of a civil retired list made up in whole or in part of the great number of civil service employees of this department. (File 26255-295:12, Oct. 27, 1914.)

The privileges of retirement under the laws relating to the Army are confined to officers of the Army, and an applicant for retirement must bring himself within that class before he can claim the advantage of those privileges. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 249.)

The test to distinguish between a civil officer whose duties lie in the War Department, and an officer of the Army, is that laid down in 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 13 (and see U. S. v. Tyler, 105 U. S., 244, 245), viz, that officers of the Army are those officers who are a part of "the military establishment," created by general acts of Congress organizing the "Army of the United States," and defining what it shall "consist of," and as such are subject to the rules and Articles of War. These acts, in so far as officers are concerned, provide for a graded, formal organization, the persons in which have rank, are in line of promotion to a higher rank, wear uniforms as the badge of that rank, are subject to military discipline and to orders issued to enforce that discipline, and have acquired, to speak generally, the status of soldiers in addition to their status as citizens or their status of officers of the United States. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 249.)

In view of the prohibition in the act of February 24, 1899 (30 Stat., 846, 890), that "the establishment of a civil pension roll, or an honorable service roll, or the exemption of any of the officers, clerks, and persons in the public service from the existing laws respecting employment in such service is hereby prohibited," care should be taken not to extend the Army retirement acts so as in effect to create not only a "civil pension roll," but a limited and special one. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 249.)

An expert accountant in the inspector general's department of the Army is not entitled to be placed on the retired list of the Army on the ground that he has reached the age of 64 years. Although an officer of the United States, it does not follow that he is also an officer "of the Army." It is clear that an officer of the United States may have functions and duties relating solely to the Army and may be paid entirely from appropriations for the Army, and yet not be "of the Army." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 249, citing Brown's Case, 32 Ct. Cls. 379, 386, 387, 388; Huse's Case, 43 Ct. Cls., 24; U. S. v. Burns, 12 Wall., 252; U. S. v. La Tourrette, 151 U. S., 572, 576; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 468, 471, 472, 475.)

The appropriation acts for the Army provide specifically "for pay of the officers in the inspector general's department," while the provision for the expert accountant is always under the heading, "Miscellaneous." He has no "actual rank," within section 1254, Revised Statutes; he has no "command," and is not in "the line of promotion," within section 1255; he has no "uniform of the rank," he has never been "borne on the Army Register," and is not, in the time of peace and never has been, "subject to the rules and Articles of War," nor to "trial by general court-martial," within section 1256. There is no way of fixing his pay on retirement, as he has no "rank," to be used as a basis of computation within section 1274; finally, he has never been treated by the War Department in orders or regulations or in any other way as an officer "of the Army." As said in Brown's Case (32 Ct. Cls., 379), "the status of such an officer, the department or place to which he properly belongs, is something which can be much better determined by the legislative and executive branches of the Government, than by the judicial." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 249.)

Persons held to be officers within meaning of Navy retirement laws.—Paymasters' clerks are "officers of the Navy," within the meaning of the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), which provides for the retirement of officers of the Navy who have been in the service 30 years. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 157, Jan. 22 1909; compare Ashton v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 65, overruling Katzer v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 294.)

A paymaster's clerk in the Navy, who at the time of retirement was serving under an appointment issued to him since the adoption of paragraph 1751, Navy Regulations, 1900, requiring the appointment of paymasters' clerks to be made by the Secretary of the Navy, is an "officer of the Navy," for the purpose of retirement within the meaning of the act of May 13, 1908. (15 Comp. Dec., 628.)

Paymasters' clerks in the Army are officers in the regular service within the meaning of the acts of Congress respecting retirement for length of service and physical incapacity. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 493; see also 9 Comp. Dec., 90.)

The opinion holding that Army paymasters' clerks were entitled to retirement (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 493), went upon the assumption that a paymaster's clerk has a status in the Army in all essential respects similar to the status of a paymaster's clerk of the Navy, and as the latter officer had been considered by the courts and by the Navy Department to be an officer of the Navy and subject to the rules and regulations of the Navy, it was assumed that the same conditions prevailed as to the analogous office of paymaster's clerk in the Army. Whether that assumption was correct or not is immaterial in view of the subsequent action of Congress in specifically authorizing the retirement of such clerks. But it will be noticed that such authorization was upon the express condition that "Army paymasters' clerks shall be subject to the rules and Articles of War" (36 Stat., 1044). (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 253.)

As to retirement of pay clerks in the Navy, see act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942,) noted above; and see note to section 1386, Revised Statutes.

Civil engineers are officers in the Navy, and may be retired under this section, which applies to staff officers as well as to the line. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 126.)

As to retirement of warrant officers, mates, etc., see references given above under this section.

Status of officer illegally retired.—Where the Secretary of the Navy by order retired or attempted to retire an officer of the Navy who had not had 40 years' service, and no appointment had been made to the place vacated, the officer must be regarded as still on the active list of the Navy. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 103; see also 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 21; compare 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 615, 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 66.)

WHAT TIME COUNTS AS "SERVICE" IN THE NAVY.

Commences upon date of actual entry into service of United States.—Every department of the Government which has had occasion to construe the word "service" in connection with our military system, has, by long-continued and uniform decisions and practice held that, in case of volunteer officers commissioned by the governors of States, their entry into the military service of the United States dates from their muster in and not from date of their enrollment; and in case of volunteer officers appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, their service dates from the acceptance of their commissions and oath of office. There are substantial reasons for this construction of the word "service." Accordingly, held, that the prior service of an officer of the Army which is entitled to be counted in determining his relative rank with other officers does not include any period prior to his actual entry into the Army, notwithstanding that Congress authorized payment of compensation from an earlier date. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 406, modifying 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 232.)

A warrant as midshipman was issued to an officer December 11, 1812; he did not report for duty, receive orders, nor become entitled to pay as a midshipman until July 1, 1816. Held, that his period of service for retirement should be computed from the latter date. If the question were new, it would be open to serious doubt, but having been decided, and that decision tacitly assented to by Congress, it should stand. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 33.)

Where an officer upon original appointment to the Army was commissioned July 27, 1866, to rank from May 11, 1866, and accepted said commission and entered upon duty September 15, 1866, held, that the period elapsing from the date he took rank as stated in said commission to the date that he accepted same and entered upon duty, was constructive and not actual service, and can not be counted in fixing his relative rank with other officers in cases where the statute requires that prior actual service shall be counted. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 52.)

Service commences for purposes of longevity pay from the day the officer's commission was signed by the President, and not from an antecedent date mentioned in the body of the commission. (Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145.)

The three years' service necessary for promotion of ensigns to lieutenants (junior grade) under section 7 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005), should be computed from the date of their rank as ensigns, this being in accordance with the existing construction of the law by the accounting officers and the Navy Department. (22 Comp. Dec., 625, citing 22 Comp. Dec., 565, 566; 18 Comp. Dec., 466; 17 Comp. Dec., 605.)

Service commences for purposes of longevity pay from date of accepting the office and not from date of taking oath of office where latter is subsequent to acceptance. (12 Comp. Dec., 245.)

Where an officer's commission is antedated on original appointment for purposes of rank, his length of service for purposes of promotion may be computed from the date so stated in his commission. (Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 333; see also 22 Comp. Dec., 623; 17 Comp. Dec., 605; 22 Comp. Dec., 565, 566; 24 Comp. Dec., 177; 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393, 394.)

The service of volunteer officers does not commence until they are mustered into the United States, notwithstanding that by statute they are allowed pay from date of enrollment. (7 Comp. Dec., 617.)

Period from date of dismissal to reappointment, not counted.—Where an officer was dismissed from the Navy and subsequently reappointed pursuant to a joint resolution of Congress, the intervening period during which he was not in fact in the naval service can not on any theory be counted as part of said 40 years for retirement under section 1443, Revised Statutes. The act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which closes the gap in intermittent service so as to make it operate as continuous, shows conclusively that actual service and none other is contemplated by the law. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 103.)

Period of unauthorized absence not a period of service.—A private in the Marine Corps is not entitled in computing his increase of pay for length of service to count the time he was absent from duty without leave. The period of such unauthorized absence can not be regarded as a period of service. (10 Comp. Dec., 333; file 5460-82, June 3, 1916.)

Period of service under an illegal appointment.—An officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service [now Coast Guard] is not entitled to credit for prior service as acting assistant engineer, where his appointment as such was not authorized by law. (10 Comp. Dec., 854, with reference to longevity pay.)

Prior service in Coast Guard not counted.—Service in the Revenue Cutter Service [now Coast Guard] is in no sense service in the Army or Navy. Accordingly, held that officers of the Marine Corps are not entitled to credit in computing longevity pay for prior service in the Revenue-Cutter Service. (15 Comp. Dec., 807. But see act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 835, and note to sec. 1417, R. S.)

Prior service in militia not counted.—Officers of the Army are not entitled to credit for prior militia service in computing their longevity pay. (12 Comp. Dec., 522; compare 24 Comp. Dec., 120. See act of July 1, 1918 40 Stat., 710, crediting Naval Reserve Force members with service in the Naval Militia, etc., for purpose of retirement.)

Prior service as captain's clerk.—Service as captain's clerk in the Navy should be allowed in computing the longevity pay of an officer of the Army. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 93.)

Prior service as commandant's clerk.—The proposal to count service of clerks of commandants in computing military service is an attempt to engraft on the retired list of the Navy and Marine Corps a civil retired list. Such legislation is regarded by the Navy Department as pernicious, needlessly expensive, and a dangerous precedent; the department is unqualifiedly opposed to its enactment. (File 26255-295:9, May 14 and 21, 1914; file 26255-295:8, April 29, 1914; file 26255-295:5, Mar. 30, 1914.)

Service as commandant's clerk, being strictly civilian service, should not be counted as naval service any more than any other clerical service at navy yards or in the department proper. Accordingly, the Navy Department disapproves of proposed legislation intended to credit officers with service as commandant's clerks for purposes of retirement, etc. (File 26255-274:2, Jan. 21, 1913.) The position of clerk to the governor of the Naval Home is comprehended in the class of clerks to commandants of naval stations who under the provisions of the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 332, sec. 3), are officers of the Navy and accordingly under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), credit for service therein is authorized in computing the longevity increase of pay of an officer of the Navy. (25 Comp. Dec., 745.)

Service as civilian employee.—Service as a civilian employee in a Navy pay office can not be credited as actual naval service within the meaning of the retirement clause in the act of Congress approved May 13, 1908. (File 5460-35 and 36.)

Service as a messenger and clerk in the commissary and quartermaster's departments of the Army is not service in the Army within the meaning of the provision for longevity pay. (10 Comp. Dec., 83.)

See note to section 1417, Revised Statutes, "Apprentices at navy yards not enlisted men."

Time under arrest, in confinement, on bail, etc.—It has long been well settled that the time passed in arrest under military control, but not under sentence of court-martial, must be counted in making up five-year service periods for increased pay under section 1262, Revised Statutes. (3 Comp. Dec., 682; compare 3 Comp. Dec., 697; 3 Comp. Dec., 433.)

A soldier in arrest under military control may be required to perform many duties; he is entitled to a speedy trial, and if held in arrest for a long period, it is for the convenience of the Government. (3 Comp. Dec., 683.)

In view of the presumption of law that a person charged with crime is innocent until found guilty by a competent tribunal, although this rule has some limitations in military law as in cases of time lost by absence without leave or by desertion, held, that a soldier who is restored to duty from arrest without trial is entitled to count the time he was held in arrest under military control as service for bounty purposes (3 Comp. Dec., 676). But, if subsequently found guilty, time so in arrest can not be counted in making up the term of service necessary to obtain bounty, as during such period he is not serving within the meaning of the bounty laws. (3 Comp. Dec., 684; see also 3 Comp. Dec., 692.)

A statute providing that deserters from the Army shall be liable to "serve" for such period as necessary to make good time lost while in desertion, refers to actual military service and does not include time spent in prison under sentence of court-martial. The period during which a soldier is in arrest and confinement in pursuance of a court-martial sentence after his term of enlistment has expired should not be counted in the computation of his continuous-service pay. (12 Comp. Dec., 592.)

Pay of an enlisted man of the Navy held by the civil authorities for trial on a criminal charge should not be paid until he is acquitted, and if found guilty his pay is then forfeited to the United States from the date of his arrest. (2 Comp. Dec., 584.)

Where a carpenter's mate of the Navy was arrested by the civil authorities on a criminal charge, and admitted to bail on his own recognizance and his trial indefinitely postponed, and it was apparently not the intention of the authorities to further prosecute his case, his pay was not thereby forfeited. (10 Comp. Dec., 490.)

It is well settled that an enlisted man in the military service is not entitled to pay for time while held for trial by the civil authorities, unless subsequently tried and acquitted, or discharged without trial. (10 Comp. Dec., 490.)

A soldier arrested by the civil authorities and released without trial, is entitled to pay and allowances during the period he was in arrest, and to count said period for bounty. (3 Comp. Dec., 676; see also 9 Comp. Dec., 249.) Where convicted by the civil authorities, he is not entitled to pay and allowances from the date he was turned over to the civil authorities. (3 Comp. Dec., 334.)

An officer of the Army who was convicted by the civil courts of the Philippine Islands and released under bond, pending an appeal to a higher court, is not entitled to pay pending the final determination of the appeal. (11 Comp. Dec., 659.) The status of such officer is that of "absent without leave," within the meaning of section 1265, Revised Statutes, pending the determination of said appeal, and under the provisions of said section he is not entitled to pay during such absence. (11 Comp. Dec., 755. Overruled, Carrington v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 279, citing Walsh v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 225.)

An officer of the Navy who had previously served as an enlisted man in the Army is entitled to be credited with service for the time he was in confinement under sentence of Army court-martial for desertion. (File 5460-82, June 3, 1916.)

Sec. 1444. [Retirement after sixty-two years of age, or forty-five years service.] When any officer below the rank of Vice-Admiral is sixty-two years old, he shall, except in the case provided in the next section, be retired by the President from active service.—(21 Dec., 1861, c. 1, s. 1, v. 12, p. 329. 16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 8, v. 12, p. 584. 25 June, 1864, c. 152, s. 1, v. 13, p. 183. 21 Dec., 1864, c. 6, s. 3, v. 13, p. 420. 3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, v. 17, p. 556.)

Amendment to this section was made by act August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 579), fixing the age of retirement at 64 years, except in the cases of captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who, after June 30, 1920, become ineligible for promotion on account of age (56, 50, or 45 years, respectively), who shall be retired at rates of pay graded according to their length of service. (See also sec. 1445, below.)

Dental Corps officers who were over 40 years of age on original appointment shall not be eligible for retirement before reaching the age of 70 years, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 574, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 709.)

Dental surgeon at the Naval Academy not to be retired before reaching the age of 70 years, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 891, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 709.)

Naval Reserve Force members shall upon reaching the age of 64 years be disenrolled except that in time of war or other national emergency such members of the Naval Reserve Force, if in active service, may be continued therein during such period as the Secretary of the Navy may determine, but not longer than six months after said war or other national emergency shall cease to exist. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 711.)

Pay of officers retired "after forty-five years' service after reaching the age of sixteen years, * * * or on attaining the age of sixty-two years." (See sec. 1588, R. S.)

Rank on retirement of staff officers retired for age or after 45 years' service. (See sec. 1481, R. S.)

Rank on retirement of certain bureau chiefs retired for age. (See sec. 1473, R. S.; see generally, as to retirement of chiefs of bureaus, note to sec. 421, R. S.; and see note to sec. 1457, R. S., as to rank of officers on retirement under special conditions.)

Retiring board not necessary for retirements on account of age. (See sec. 1455, R. S.)

Retirement of staff officers after 45 years' service. (Sec. 1481, R. S.)

Warrant officers, mates etc. (See note to sec. 1443, R. S.)

Historical note.—This section, as drafted by the Commissioners for the Revision of the United States Statutes (1 Comrs. Draft, 700), was entitled, "After sixty-two years of age, or forty-five years' service," and read: "When any officer below the rank of vice admiral is sixty-two years old, or when his name has been borne on the Naval Register for a period of forty-five years since he arrived at the age of sixteen years, he shall, except in the case provided in the next section, be retired by the President from active service." The words in italics were omitted from this section as adopted by Congress, but the caption, "After sixty-two years of age, or forty-five years' service," was retained.

The laws upon which this section as drafted by the Commissioners was based, and which are cited in the marginal notes thereunder, provided as follows:

Act of December 21, 1861, section 1 (12 Stat., 329): "That whenever the name of any naval officer now in the service, or who may hereafter be in the service of the United States, shall have been borne on the Naval Register forty-five years, or shall be of the age of sixty-two years, he shall be retired from active service, and his name entered on the retired list of officers of the grade to which he belonged at the time of such retirement."

Act July 16, 1862, section 8 (12 Stat., 584): "That whenever, upon the recommendation of the President of the United States, any officer of the Navy, now upon the active list, not below the grade of commander, has received, or shall receive, by name, during the present war, a vote of thanks of Congress for distinguished service, such officer shall not be retired, except for cause, until he has been fifty-five years in the naval service of the United States."

Act June 25, 1864, section 1 (13 Stat., 183), provided that the above section of the act of December 21, 1861, "shall not be so construed as to retire any officer under the age of sixty-two years, and whose name shall not have been borne upon the Navy Register for a period of forty-five years after he had arrived at the age of sixteen years."

Act December 21, 1864, section 3 (13 Stat., 420): "That the first section of an act approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, entitled 'An act further to promote the efficiency of the Navy,' shall not be so construed as to apply to any one holding a commission as a vice admiral in the Navy."

Act March 3, 1873 (17 Stat., 556): "That the act of Congress approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, entitled 'An act to further promote the efficiency of the Navy,' and the act approved June twenty-fifth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, entitled 'An act to amend the act of the twenty-first December, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, entitled "An act to further promote the efficiency of the Navy,"' shall not be hereafter construed to retire any officer before sixty-two years of age."

The first section of the act of December 21, 1861 (12 Stat., 329), retired from service two classes of naval officers, firstly, those whose names may have been borne on the Naval Register 45 years, and secondly, those who had arrived at the age of 62 years. The act of June 25, 1864, provided that the act of 1861 "shall not be so construed as to retire any officer under the age of sixty-two years, and whose name shall not have been borne upon the Navy Register for a period of forty-five years after he had arrived at the age of sixteen years." The latter act had the effect of removing from the retired list officers of the Navy who were retired in pursuance of the act of December 21, 1861, but who were not liable to be retired by the provision of the act of 1864. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 144.)

The act of December 21, 1861, prescribed that officers should be retired from active service for two separate reasons, viz, (1), whose names shall have been borne on the Navy Register for 45 years; or (2), who shall be of the age of 62 years. That act did not speak in the conjunctive but in the disjunctive; that is, if either the one cause or the other existed, an officer might be retired. This act was mandatory, and if an officer had served 45 years his retirement followed as a matter of course, without regard to his age. As a result, no doubt, officers were placed on the retired list who had not attained the age of 62 years, and this fact led to the enactment of the act of June 25, 1864, whereby the retirement of an officer was forbidden until he had reached the age of 62 years and his name had been borne on the Navy Register for 45 years. Here the act was in the conjunctive, and thereafter both conditions for retirement apparently must have concurred, i. e., both as to age and as to length of service. Later came the act of 1873, which provided that the acts above mentioned should not be construed "to retire any officer before sixty-two years of age"; but while no express mention was made therein as to any modification of the retirement as to the completion of 45 years' service, it is a fact that the Navy Department for nearly 40 years has construed the law now embodied in section 1444 of the Revised Statutes as only requiring the fulfillment of either requirement. (File 5460-32:17, Feb. 7, 1912.)

The opinion of the District of Columbia Supreme Court in the case of Foreman v. Meyer (mandamus against the Secretary of the Navy, file 5460-32) states the provisions of law upon which section 1441, Revised Statutes, is based, and then continues: "This legislation, antedating the enactment of said section 1444 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, indicates that it was not contemplated by Congress that officers were to be retired on reaching the age of 62 years, unless they had been continuously in the service for 45 years; and for that reason the relator, even if he is an officer within the meaning of that section, which is questionable, fails to show a clear case entitling him to the right of retirement or a plain administrative duty on the part of the Secretary of the Navy to place his name on the list of retired officers." The court then reviewed the periods of service of petitioner and said that "taken all together, they do not seem sufficient to warrant the court in holding that he has been for 45 years in the service of the United States as a naval officer, and it is not certain but that a proper construction of the law requires such service to be shown before the President is in duty bound to act in the premises." (File 5460-32:17, Feb. 7, 1912; see also Foreman v. Meyer, 227 U. S., 452, 38 App. D. C., 472.)

It must be conceded that the several separate provisions of law upon which section 1444 is based are not entirely clear, but the construction given to those laws by the Navy Department during a period of 39 years under such circumstances should be controlling (citing U. S. v. Healey, 160 U. S., 136, 141, 145). But even if this fact were not regarded as controlling, there is other evidence of a legislative character as to what were intended to be the requirements for the kind of retirement now being considered (citing secs. 1481 and 1455, R. S.). The former section plainly provides for retirement after 45 years' service, but it also provides separately for the retirement of officers at the age of 62 years, "before having served for forty-five years," and confers a higher rank upon those of this latter class "who shall have served faithfully until retired" after 40 years' service. This is a definite legislative recognition of the department's construction of the law, and clearly shows that the provisions of the law then and now in force do not require that an officer must have served 45 years before he can be retired for age, but, on the contrary, indicate that there may be retirement for the single reason that an officer has attained the age of 62 years. Section 1473, Revised Statutes, also indicates the same construction, and section 1588 confirms it. The latter section specifically provides for retirement on attaining the age of 62 years, separate and distinct from retirement after 45 years' service. Section 1589 also confirms the views above expressed. It appears to be evident from the above that the construction placed by the Navy Department upon the law relating to retirement for age is entirely correct. (File 5460-32:17, Feb. 7, 1912.)

The act of March 3, 1873 (above quoted), in effect repealed the 45-year retirement clause in the act of December 21, 1861 (above quoted), and the latter clause has not been carried into the Revised Statutes. (File 27231-10, Feb. 9, 1910; see also sec. 5596, R. S., repealing all acts of Congress passed prior to Dec. 1, 1873, any portion of which is embraced in any section of the Revised Statutes.)

Age retirement not automatic; action of President required.—The Army law, providing that when an officer "is sixty-four years of age he shall be retired from active service and placed on the retired list," does not operate, ipso facto, to place him on the retired list when he reaches the age specified, but it requires action by the President to carry it into effect. Accordingly, held that where an order was issued on the date that an officer became 64 years of age, retiring him from active service, which order was not received by him until more than a month later, and he was not relieved of duty until another month later, he was entitled to full pay to the date that he was relieved from duty. (9 Comp. Dec., 20; compare 9 Comp. Dec., 299, noted below.)

The delay in the above case was not unreasonable, and was not caused by any act or default of the officer. It is within the power of the War Department to issue an order in advance of the date on which an officer arrives at the age of 64 years, to take effect on that date, and also to issue an order to him in advance relieving him from duty on the active list on that date. (9 Comp. Dec., 20; compare 9 Comp. Dec., 299, noted below.)

Retirement for age automatically detaches officer from duty.—The retirement of an officer for age thereby detaches him from active duty, and the commanding officer of his vessel is not authorized to retain him in active service unless it is done in accordance with a decision of the Secretary of the Navy pursuant to law. Accordingly, held that an officer so retained in active service without authority of the Secretary of the Navy, is entitled to retired pay only, from date of his retirement. (9 Comp. Dec., 299; see also note to sec. 1462, R. S.; compare 9 Comp. Dec., 20, noted above.)

An order of the President placing an officer of the Navy upon the retired list pursuant to section 1444, Revised Statutes, changes the status of such officer wherever he may be and whatever duty he may be performing, and thereafter he is entitled to retired pay only unless such status is changed by some subsequent order of the Secretary of the Navy to perform active duty. It may be that the Secretary of the Navy might issue a preliminary order in terms assigning an officer to duty after retirement, but such order should be certain in its terms and not given that effect by strained construction. (Terry v. U. S., Ct. Cls., No. 28148, 86 S. and A. Memo., 644; see also 17 Comp. Dec., 533.)

When retirement for age becomes effective.—An officer of the Navy becomes 62 years of age and is required to be retired within the meaning of section 1444, Revised Statutes, the moment of the beginning of the date of the sixty-second anniversary of his birth, and is not entitled to pay on the active list on that day. (3 Comp. Dec., 581. In this case the order for the officer's retirement was issued beforehand, to take effect on the date of his sixty-second birthday. Compare 16 Comp. Dec., 682, noted under sec. 1458, R. S.)

The officer ceased to be an officer on the active list of the Navy upon the very moment after midnight that the 5th day of April began, and was in accordance with the very terms of the order of April 1, transferred to the retired list "on April 5, 1897." The law does not consider fractions of a day, "and it is the same whether a thing is done upon one moment of the day or another." He became in the eye of the law 62 years of age the moment after midnight between the fourth and fifth days of April. (3 Comp. Dec., 581.)

For other cases, see note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, "When retirement or advancement on retired list takes effect." See also note to section 1458, Revised Statutes.

Officer who reaches retirement age while his promotion is pending.—Where upon the retirement of a rear-admiral for age, a commodore next in line was nominated to be a rear-admiral to fill the vacancy, and before action thereon by the Senate the said commodore attained the age of 62 years and was retired under section 1444, Revised Statutes, as a commodore: Advised that, according to the law and usage of the service, the officer in this case was entitled by relation to be a rear-admiral from the date when the vacancy occurred, and to receive the pay of a rear-admiral from that date; and if the Senate should confirm his nomination he might be commissioned as a rear-admiral and placed on the retired list as of that grade. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393; compare 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 591, and 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 257, noted under sec. 1458, R. S., to effect that office does not vest until date of commission, notwithstanding that it is made to relate back for purposes of rank.)

Where an officer accepts a recess promotion and thereafter becomes eligible for retirement by reason of age before the adjournment of Congress and before the appointment is acted upon by the Senate, he is entitled to be retired with the rank of his new appointment. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 598; see also note to sec. 1457, R. S.)

Retirement by special act made to relate back.—The words, "and to place him on the retired list of the Navy as of date June first, eighteen hundred and ninety-five," in the special enactment of Congress for the relief of a former officer, must be construed to show the legislative intent to be that he was to be retired as "on attaining the age of sixty-two years," he having attained that age on May 30, 1895. (3 Comp. Dec., 706.)

For other cases, see note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, "When retirement or advancement on retired list takes effect."

Appointment of officer already past retiring age.—Where Congress, by special enactment, authorizes the appointment as an officer of a designated person who is already past the retiring age, but says nothing in such enactment about placing him on the retired list, it must be held that the law relating to retirement for age has no application to his case. Should he be physically incapacitated for active service he may be ordered before a retiring board in accordance with law. There are many precedents which show that when Congress has intended to authorize the appointment of a civilian as an officer of the naval service, and immediately upon such appointment to transfer him to the retired list, it has not failed to express such intention in explicit language. In the present case Congress did not provide for the appointment of the civilian as a first lieutenant on the retired list of the Marine Corps, nor did it provide that he should be appointed on the active list and then retired, as has been the practice in similar cases when such was the intention, but, on the contrary, notwithstanding his age, Congress authorized his appointment as an officer on the active list of the Marine Corps "as an extra number, not in the line of promotion," which language would have been unnecessary had his immediate retirement been in contemplation. (File 27231-52, May 16, 1913.)

If the laws prescribing the age for retirement of Army officers were held applicable to the volunteer service, the President would not have the right to appoint to an office in the volunteer service any one of the age of 64 or over. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

Where the law creates new offices in the naval service, and does not prescribe any age limit for appointment thereto, held, that a person otherwise qualified, but who had already passed the retiring age, is not eligible for appointment. The retirement laws fix the maximum age beyond which no person may lawfully be appointed to any office in the naval service without the specific authority of Congress. (File 11112-658, Nov. 15, 1916. Compare file 26255-54-7, July 15, 1912.)

Age retirement held inapplicable to volunteer officers.—The law fixing the age of retirement in the Army at 64 years was not intended to operate to restrict future eligibility to serve in an emergency, nor to limit the right of the President to appoint to a new volunteer service. The Army retired lists apply to the Regular Army alone, with due credit given for the time of volunteer service of officers of the Regular Army, and do not apply to a volunteer Army. A contrary view would lead to an unreasonable consequence, such as the courts in construing legislation will reject, viz, that the President would not have the right to appoint to an office in the volunteer service anyone of the age of 64 years or over, and that an officer in the volunteer service, reaching the age of 64 years, without the continuous service contemplated by the retirement acts, and no matter how brief his period of duty, would be entitled to be retired. It is only necessary to state this position to refute it. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

Where the law fixes no age limit for officers in the Volunteer Army, it is competent for the President to appoint as a major general or brigadier general in the Volunteer Army a person above the age of 64 years. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 176; affirmed 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

Where the law fixes no age limit for officers in the Volunteer Army, an officer of the Regular Army, holding at the same time a commission as a general in the Volunteer Army, may continue to hold and exercise his commission in the Volunteer Army after having been placed upon the retired list of the Regular Army by reason of the age limit. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 176; affirmed 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

Officer retired for incapacity and subsequently reaching retiring age.—Where the law provided for placing certain officers [Revenue Cutter Service] upon a "retired waiting orders list," when found by a retiring board to be incapacitated for active service, and that "officers thus retired may be assigned to such duty as they may be able to perform," and further provided that when any officer "has reached the age of sixty-four years he shall be retired by the President from active service," held, that an officer placed on the retired waiting orders list should, upon becoming 64 years of age, be retired from active service under the latter provision. (11 Comp. Dec., 612.)

Sec. 1445. [Officers of certain ranks to be retired only for disability.]

The two preceding sections shall not apply to any lieutenant-commander, lieutenant, master, ensign, midshipman, passed assistant surgeon, passed assistant paymaster, first assistant engineer, assistant surgeon, assistant paymaster, or second assistant engineer; and such officers shall not be placed upon the retired list, except on account of physical or mental disability.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 6, v. 16, p. 333.)

Dental Corps retirements were not to be affected by provisions of this section, under a clause in the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 345), which act, in so far as it pertained to the Dental Corps, was superseded by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573), the provisions of which latter act were in turn superseded by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat. 709), which also provided that section 1445, Revised Statutes, "shall not be applicable to dental officers."

"First assistant engineer," and "second assistant engineer," titles changed to passed assistant engineer and assistant engineer, and Engineer Corps afterwards abolished. (See note to sec. 1390, R. S.)

Lieutenants and lieutenant commanders, provision for compulsory retirement of, to create vacancies, was made by act of March 3, 1899, section 9 (30 Stat., 1006), repealed by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 938).

Lieutenant commanders, provision for retirement of, upon their own application, to create vacancies, was made by act of March 3, 1899, section 8 (30 Stat., 1006).

Lieutenant commanders, provision for retirement of, upon becoming ineligible for promotion on account of age (45 years), was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), effective June 30, 1920.

"Master" and "midshipman," titles changed to lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign. (See note to sec. 1362, R. S.)

Retirements on account of disability. (See sec. 1448, R. S.)

Temporary officers, appointed for service during war with Germany, not entitled to retirement except for physical disability incurred in line of duty. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 9, 40 Stat., 84.)

"Physical incapacity" is defined as a condition, bodily or mental, which unfits at present, or is likely to unfit in the near future, the officer for the performance of his duties. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 387, quoting Circular, War Department, Dec. 18, 1890, relating to examination for promotion. See further, note to sec. 1448, R. S.)

Midshipmen are retired for physical disability pursuant to special acts of Congress, and are given the rank of ensign on the retired list, these cases not being provided for by general statutes. See for example, act March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1792), in case of Frank B. Case; act March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1417), in case of Harold D. Childs; act January 5, 1909 (35 Stat., 585), in case of William Parker Sedgwick; act February 13, 1911 (36 Stat., 899), in case of John M. Blankenship; and act March 3, 1911 (36 Stat., 1079), in case of William H. Walsh.

The Navy Department is of the opinion that midshipmen who become disabled in line of duty while serving as officers at sea should have the benefit of the retirement laws in the same manner as other officers of the Navy, has recommended general legislation to that effect, and looks with favor upon the passage of a measure for the retirement of a former midshipman under such circumstances. (File 6288-1, Jan. 14, 1907; file 26255-80.2, May 9, 1910; file 9066-1, Jan. 20, 1908.) Midshipmen are now commissioned as officers on graduation from the Naval Academy, instead of serving two years as midshipmen at sea after such graduation, as was formerly the case. See act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73).

Sec. 1446. [Officers who have received a vote of thanks; retirement after fifty-five years' service. Obsolete.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1446. Officers on the active list, not below the grade of commander, who have, upon the recommendation of the President, received by name, during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, a vote of thanks of Congress for distinguished service, shall not be retired, except for cause, until they have been fifty-five years in the service of the United States."—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 8, v. 12, p. 584.)

It is rendered obsolete by having been fully executed, as there are no officers now on the active list of the Navy who are affected by its provisions.

Civil War service.—Increased rank and pay on retirement of officers of the Navy, with creditable records, who served during the Civil War, was authorized by act of March 3, 1899, section 11 (30 Stat., 1007), act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), and act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 753).

Lieut. William B. Cushing, December 20, 1864 (13 Stat., 565).

Rear Admiral David D. Porter, January 24, 1865 (13 Stat., 566).

What time counted as "service" in the Navy.—See 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 33, noted under section 1443, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1447. [Retirement of officers not recommended for promotion.] When the case of any officer has been acted upon by a board of naval surgeons and an examining board for promotion, as provided in Chapter Four of this Title, and he shall not have been recommended for promotion by both of the said boards, he shall be placed upon the retired list.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 4, v. 13, p. 53.)

Captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who fail professionally shall thereafter be ineligible for promotion; if they fail physically they shall not be considered, in the event of retirement, entitled to the rank of the next higher grade. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat. 579.)

"Chapter Four of this Title," refers to sections 1466–1510, Revised Statutes.

Officers not to be retired for misconduct. (Sec. 1456, R. S.)

Officers examined for promotion and found unfit to perform duties at sea, by reason of drunkenness or other misconduct, shall not be retired but shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay. (Act Aug. 5, 1882, 22 Stat., 286; see note to sec. 1456, R. S.)

Officers failing physically upon examination for promotion, to have increased rank on retirement, in certain cases. (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1267; amended by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579.)

Officers below grade of commander failing professionally upon examination for promotion, to be suspended from promotion for six months, then reexamined and if found not qualified upon reexamination, to be dropped from the service. (Sec. 1505, R. S., as amended by act Mar. 11, 1912, 37 Stat., 73; but see act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579, noted above, as to professional failure of lieutenant commanders.)

Officers may be retired, on account of failing to be recommended for promotion, without appearing before a retiring board. (See sec. 1455, R. S.)

Physical or mental disability only ground for retirement of certain officers. (See sec. 1445, R. S., and note thereto.)

Staff officers: "Hereafter all laws relating to the examination of officers of the Navy for promotion shall be construed to apply to the regular advancement of staff officers to higher ranks on the active list the same as though such advancements in rank were promotions to higher grades: Provided, That examinations of such staff officers shall not be required except for such regular advancements in rank." (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 20, 40 Stat., 89.)

This section applicable only to officers above the grade of lieutenant commander.—The act of April 21, 1864, was the first act requiring examinations generally prior to promotion. The failure on such examination resulted in retirement, and this applied to all grades below that of commodore. The department's construction of the statute was that failure upon either examination was a proper cause for retirement. This procedure continued until 1870, when by the act of July 15 of that year (now sec. 1505, R. S.), there was substituted for retirement in certain cases a provision for suspension from promotion of officers below the grade of commander who failed professionally upon examination. Retirement upon professional failure for promotion, which theretofore had applied to all grades, thereafter applied only to the cases of officers of the grades of commander and captain. (File 26260–874, June 3, 1910; compare act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579, as to line officers of and above the grade of lieutenant commander who are not recommended for promotion.)

An officer of the rank of commander was examined for promotion and found physically, mentally, and morally, but not professionally, qualified; recommended for promotion by the medical board, but not so recommended by the naval examining board. Section 1496, Revised Statutes, prohibits promotion of officers below the rank of commodore (now rear admiral) until found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified by a board of examiners. The penalty for professional failure is fixed by section 1505, Revised Statutes, which applies only to officers below the grade of commander; that section does not apply to present case, as the officer is in the grade of commander, and not below it. Question presented, What disposition should be made of this case? Section 1447, Revised Statutes, provides for retirement of officer not recommended for promotion. In general, under section 1456, Revised Statutes, and the act of August 5, 1882, misconduct is not a ground for retirement. This officer's record does not show that he is accused of anything of that nature; he would not, therefore, be subject to discharge on that ground, which could only follow as the result of a finding of moral disqualification, nor would he be subject to dismissal by a court-martial. It would appear, then, that he can not be dismissed, discharged, suspended, or promoted, nor can he be retired, unless under the provisions of section 1447. He can not, moreover, be retained at the top of the list of commanders until such time as he may be able to qualify, because of the requirements of section 1458, Revised Statutes, and yet, although the senior officer, he can not be advanced as he has not qualified therefor. The only alternative is to apply the provisions of sections 1496 and 1447, Revised Statutes. Advised, accordingly, that this officer should be retired under the provisions of section 1447, Revised Statutes. (File 26260-874, June 3, 1910. This case was disposed of by the voluntary retirement of the officer concerned in accordance with sec. 8 of the Navy personnel act approved Mar. 3, 1899, 30 Stat., 1006.)

Action of both boards essential before retirement under this section.—The act of April 21, 1864, section 4, chapter 63 [now embodied in section 1447, Revised Statutes], provides that "all officers whose cases shall have been acted upon by the aforesaid boards and who shall not have been recommended for promotion by both of them, shall be placed upon the retired list." This section plainly contemplates and requires that there shall have been an examination by two boards, and that both shall have failed to recommend an officer for promotion before, in the language of the act, he "shall be placed upon the retired list." One of these boards is a board of naval surgeons, the other is "a board of examining officers, to be appointed by the President of the United States." Before, therefore, a medical officer of the Navy is placed on the retired list under the provisions of this act, it should appear that his case has been acted upon by two boards, one of them a board of naval surgeons who passed upon his physical qualifications to perform all his duties at sea, the other a board of examining officers senior in rank to him, and appointed by the President, who considered his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform his duties at sea, and further it should appear that he was not recommended for promotion by both of such boards. If the fact be that but one board, a board of naval surgeons, has acted upon the cases of certain medical officers, it is not the duty of the department to place them on the retired list. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 105; see also 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 347.)

Unfavorable report by one board sufficient for retirement.—If the finding of either board is unfavorable, the statute is peremptory that the officer shall be placed on the retired list. The statute leaves the President no discretion. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 611.)

An officer passed the examination by the board of surgeons and failed to pass the professional examination. The President approved the finding and placed the officer on the retired list. Having approved the finding, he could not do otherwise than place him there. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 611; see also Davis v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 442, noted below, under "Officer not mentally, morally, and professionally qualified.")

The Attorney General, in 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 105, construed the law embodied in this section as requiring, before the retirement of an officer thereunder, that both the examining board and the medical board shall have reported adversely upon the candidate's qualifications. However, an examination of the records of officers retired both before and after the date of the Attorney General's opinion discloses that if an officer was found physically, but not professionally, mentally, or morally, qualified and consequently not recommended for promotion by the board of examiners, he was placed on the retired list (citing cases of Commodores Ellison, Lockwood, Totten, Glasson; Commanders Arnold, E. W. Henry, Wm. Gibson, Beaumont; Ensign F. H. Parker; Asst. Paymaster C. E. Boggs; also Capt. T. G. Corbin, Commander E. E. Stone, and Capt. Egbert Thompson). Further, in the cases of officers who were found not physically qualified for promotion, they have been retired under the provisions of section 4 of the act of April 21, 1864 (now sec. 1447, R. S.), (citing cases of Capt. Baldwin and Brasher, and Lieut. Commander F. H. Sheppard). Thus the department's practice both before and after the Attorney General's opinion was to retire officers under the act of 1864 when they had been found not qualified by either, and not necessarily by both, boards. (File 26260-874, June 3, 1910.)

The language of the Court of Claims in the case of Capt. Thompson (18 Ct. Cls., 604, 611) is at variance with that used by the Attorney General, as the court says that "if the finding of either board is unfavorable, the provision in section 4 is peremptory that the officer shall be placed on the retired list." (File 26260-874, June 3, 1910.)

A commander in the Navy who qualified physically, as well as mentally and morally, but failed professionally, and was not, therefore, recommended for promotion by the examining board, although so recommended by the medical board, should be retired under the provisions of section 1447, Revised Statutes. (File 26260-874, June 3, 1910. Compare file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, page 5, in which it was remarked that, "if the candidate were found by both the medical and examining boards to be not qualified for promotion, under section 1447 of the Revised Statutes he was to be placed on the retired list.") [See in this connection section 1455, Revised Statutes, which refers to the retirement of an officer "on account of his failure to be recommended by an examining board for promotion."]

Irregularity in proceedings cannot be remedied by courts.—If all the steps taken in the proceedings resulting in the retirement of an officer under this section were not in order and warranted by the statute, the Court of Claims would have no power to review them. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 611.)

President may revoke approval and set aside proceedings for irregularity.—A naval officer having appeared before an examining board, organized and conducted under sections 1493-1505, Revised Statutes, and the examination being temporarily suspended, was granted permission to go home and to be absent until notified by the board to appear. He failed to receive this notice until after the examination, which was resumed during his absence, had been concluded. The proceedings and findings of the board were approved by the President and his order in the case duly executed by the retirement of the officer under this section, but the vacancy created by such retirement was not filled, and no rights of any other person intervened: Held, that the act of the President could be revoked and the officer allowed a rehearing. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 20.)

An officer having been examined by a board of naval surgeons, and placed on the retired list by the Secretary of the Navy, upon the failure of that board to recommend him for promotion, but not having been examined by an "examining board for promotion," as required by the law prior to promotion, held, that the President possesses supervisory action over the report of the board of naval surgeons, and may approve or disapprove same, notwithstanding the action of the Secretary of the Navy. (12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 347.)

Where the President possesses the power of review, he has the power as a necessary incident to the right of review, if he finds that an officer has not had such an examination as the law declares he shall have, or, in other words, if the proceedings are fatally defective, to treat the proceedings of the board as a nullity and direct an examination in accordance with law. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 193, 201; see also 27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 251.)

Where an officer was found by a board of examination to be physically qualified for promotion, but deficient in professional qualifications, and it afterwards developed that he was, at the time of his examination, suffering from a disability incurred in the line of duty which disqualified him for promotion, it is within the power of the Secretary of War, representing the President, to order a new physical examination. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 193.)

Difference between examining board for promotion and retiring board.—See 21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 385, noted under section 1448, "Physical examination for promotion not sufficient for retirement."

Retirement completed by appointment of successor.—The act of placing an officer on the retired list under this section created a vacancy, which the statute [section 1458, Revised Statutes] required the President to fill. In obedience to the mandate of the statute, the President nominated to the Senate the ranking commander for promotion to the captaincy on the active list thus made vacant; the Senate gave its constitutional assent thereto, and upon his appointment the new appointee from that moment became one of the limited number of captains authorized by law to be on the active list of the Navy, and his predecessor became one of the captains authorized by law to be on the retired list of the Navy. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 612, citing Blake's Case, 103 U. S., 227, noted under the Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, under "VIII. Power of Removal * * * Power of President and Senate.")

Officer can not be restored to active list by President.—See note to section 1465, Revised Statutes.

Officer not mentally, morally, and professionally qualified.—An officer was found by a retiring board "incapacitated from active service," and such incapacity was "not the result of an incident of the service." He was ordered before another retiring board, which found him not incapacitated for active service. Thereupon he was ordered before an examining board for promotion. This board reported that he had "not the mental, moral, and professional qualifications to perform efficiently all the duties of a naval officer in a higher grade, and we do not recommend him for promotion." The President approved the proceedings and findings of the examining board, and he was thereupon retired from active service. Held, that the officer was not entitled to a reexamination under section 1505, Revised Statutes, after a period of suspension, but was legally retired as not recommended for promotion. (Davis v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 442. But see note to sec. 1456, R. S.)

Examining board is quasi judicial.—The examining board whose failure to recommend for promotion causes retirement is "quasi judicial." (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 615.)

Approval of President required.—The conclusions of any military court, board, or commission must, before being carried into execution, have the approval of the commander in chief or some one representing him. Accordingly, although the law in a particular case may not expressly provide for approval of examining boards in the Army, such boards must receive the approval of the Secretary of War, whose action is conclusively presumed to be that of the President, in order to be valid and effective. It is not, however, essential that this approval should be express or indicated in any formal language. It may be indicated by merely giving effect through appropriate orders to the findings of the board. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 193; see also sec. 1502, R. S., and Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 266.)

Although the law embodied in this section did not expressly provide for approval by the President of the report made by the board of naval surgeons, he has a supervisory power over the action of such board and may approve or disapprove same notwithstanding the action taken in the case by the Secretary of the Navy. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 347.)

Pay of officer retired because not recommended for promotion.—An officer retired because not recommended for promotion, as provided by this section, is entitled to half pay, as provided by section 1588, Revised Statutes. (McClure v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 347; file 26260-874, June 3, 1910; but see case of Lieut. Frank W. Nichols, noted under sec. 1448, R. S., "Physical examination for promotion not sufficient for retirement.")

Retirement of officer found not morally qualified for promotion.—In the case of Pay Inspector John H. Stevenson, the examining board for promotion reported as follows: "We are satisfied as to the professional abilities of the candidate. His methods of business are shown by the evidence to have been loose, reckless, regardless of law, and defiant of orders, but we believe his conduct is not shown to have been influenced by a desire for personal profit, but that, from mental peculiarities or temperament, his moral sense of the obligations of law, orders, and regulations is so obtunded as to render him unfit to conduct the important duties which pertain to the grade in the Navy to which he is a candidate for promotion. In this sense we consider him, as stated below, morally unfit for promotion. We therefore decide that the professional fitness of the candidate to perform the duties of a naval officer at sea and on shore in the next higher grade has been established, but not the mental and moral fitness, and we therefore do not recommend him for promotion."

In this case, the Judge Advocate General, in his report to the Secretary of the Navy, September 11, 1893, stated in part: "The vital question, therefore, is as to whether or not the disqualifying cause in the case of Mr. Stevenson is a cause 'arising from his own misconduct.' I am of opinion that such cannot properly be said to be the case, and that, inasmuch as Mr. Stevenson has been found to be both mentally and morally incapacitated, his moral disqualification being the result of his mental incapacity, the state of his mind may properly be considered to be diseased, and, therefore, that the case does not come under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882 [noted under section 1456, Revised Statutes]. * * * I am of opinion that the provisions of this section [1457, Revised Statutes] properly cover the case of Pay Inspector Stevenson. If retired in accordance therewith, he will receive one-half of the sea pay at the time of his retirement ($2,200) as prescribed by section 1588 of the Revised Statutes."

The Secretary of the Navy, in his report to the President, September 12, 1893, stated in part: "It will be observed that this finding is peculiar. The decision is substantially and formally sufficient. It is that the candidate does not possess the mental and moral fitness required for promotion; the reasons given, however, are that 'from mental peculiarities or temperament his moral sense of the obligations of law, orders, and regulations, is so obtunded as to render him unfit to conduct the important duties which pertain to the grade in the Navy to which he is a candidate for promotion.' Carrying out what seems to be the obvious purpose of this finding, the president of the board, Commodore J. G. Walker, on behalf of the board, called upon me and requested that I should convey to you the wish of the board that Mr. Stevenson should be retired under section 1447 of the Revised Statutes, and not dismissed under the law of 1882. This request appears to be entirely proper, but the board having found the candidate morally unfit, the question as to whether he should be retired or dismissed seems to be one entirely for the decision of the President. The finding of the board is, however, undoubtedly the basis upon which your decision is to be founded. You would not have, as I conceive, the right either to retire or dismiss, unless the board had previously found the unfitness of the candidate. It will be seen from the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy that he recommends the retiring of the candidate upon half pay, and he cites a precedent. I am not inclined to agree with that opinion, when the board finds that from mental peculiarities or temperament the candidate's moral sense of the obligations of law is so obtunded as to render him unfit for promotion. This seems to be setting up the doctrine of moral insanity, which, as I understand it, the courts have refused to accept as a defense to a criminal charge. * * * Now if it be true that in cases of this character the burden of proof is upon a candidate to establish his mental and moral fitness, and if, in this particular case, moral unfitness has been established, then it seems to me that the burden is also upon the candidate to establish that his moral unfitness is not the result of his own misconduct. Can one be morally unfit to perform the duties of an officer and yet not be responsible for such moral unfitness? If a court of law in a criminal case would be bound to hold that he is responsible for any conduct arising from such moral obliquity, could it be contended that he is not responsible for the state of moral obliquity into which he has fallen? I fail to see how such a conclusion could be reached and therefore have to recommend that as the candidate has been shown to be morally unfit for promotion he ought to be dismissed under the law of 1882. The precedent cited by the Judge Advocate General seems to be nearly in point. Without undertaking, however, to distinguish between this case and that, it seems to me sufficient to say that such a precedent, if it has been established, ought not to be followed. It is certainly contrary to the spirit of the law of 1882, as well as to what seems to be sound policy, to lay down as a rule that an officer who is morally unfit for promotion is nevertheless entitled to be paid by the Government as an officer of the Navy during the remainder of his natural life. From my reading of the two statutes on this subject of retirement, above cited, I am of opinion that the theory upon which Congress legislated was that officers who, without fault of their own, were found unfit to continue in active service ought to be provided for by the Government which they faithfully served up to the time of their retirement. I cannot believe that Congress ever intended to continue in the pay of the Government those who are shown to be morally unfit to serve that Government. There is no principle of public policy that could justify such legislation, and I submit the wording of the statute does not warrant the conclusion that Congress ever intended any such result."

The President's action in the above case, September 25, 1893, was as follows: "The record, proceedings, and findings of the examining board in the case of Pay Inspector John H. Stevenson, a candidate for promotion, are hereby approved and the said John H. Stevenson is ordered to be placed upon the retired list pursuant to the provisions of section 1447 of the Revised Statutes. The retirement of this applicant for promotion is based upon the peculiar findings of the examining board and the exceptional circumstances surrounding the case. The determination reached must not be regarded as a precedent for any similar case that may hereafter arise."

Sec. 1448. [Retiring board.] Whenever any officer, on being ordered to perform the duties appropriate to his commission, reports himself unable to comply with such order, or whenever, in the judgment of the President, an officer is incapacitated to perform the duties of his office, the President, at his discretion, may direct the Secretary of the Navy to refer the case of such officer to a board of not more than nine nor less than five commissioned officers, two-fifths of whom shall be members of the Medical Corps of the Navy. Said board, except the officers taken from the Medical Corps, shall be composed, as far as may be, of seniors in rank to the officer whose disability is inquired of.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291.)

Secretary of the Navy may empower commanding officers on foreign stations to convene retiring boards. (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1171.)

"Physical incapacity" is defined as a condition, bodily or mental, which unfits at present, or is likely to unfit in the near future, the officer for the performance of his duties. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 387, quoting Circular, War Department, Dec. 18, 1890, relating to examinations for promotion; see also sec. 1445, R. S., relating to retirement for "physical or mental" disability.)

An officer is "permanently incapacitated" when his disability appears to be chronic or of indefinite future duration; his disability is designated as "permanent," just as an innkeeper distinguishes between "permanent" from the transients among his guests. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

Officer must be altogether incapable of performing his duties, and not merely incapable of performing them well.—The incapacity to discharge his duties contemplated by the statute [Army retirement law] is not an incapacity to discharge them as well as they ought, theoretically, to be discharged or as well as they are discharged by officers generally of the same rank and intrusted with similar duties. The law does not say that he must be incapable of performing his duties well but that he must be incapable of performing them at all, or in other words, he must be unable to so perform them as to reasonably fulfill the purpose of his employment. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

Peculiar mental temperament sufficient basis for retirement.—An officer of the Navy was retired by the President upon the following finding of a retiring board:

"1st. That in their judgment the physical condition of Paymaster Robert Burton Rodney is good, but that his peculiar mental temperament incapacitates him from active service in the Navy of the United States.

"2d. That said temperament of Paymaster Rodney, according to the evidence laid before the board, develops itself in an entire disregard of the laws, regulations, customs, and proprieties of the service, and has been manifested persistently while said Rodney was attached to the North Atlantic Fleet, in language and conduct to the subversion of good order and discipline, and proceeds, in the opinion of the board, in part from fanaticism and in part from the groundless belief that he is a victim of persecution.

"In the judgment of the board, the incapacity of Paymaster Robert Burton Rodney results neither from long and faithful service, from wounds or injury received in the line of duty, from sickness or exposure, or from any other incident of service.

"The board are impressed with the belief that the tendency to misconduct under which Mr. Rodney labors will be revived whenever his association with the Navy shall be renewed.

"The board are unable to trace the mental incompetency of Paymaster Rodney to any special cause, but believe it to be inherent, and therefore can only recommend that he be removed from the active list of officers of the Navy."

The sole objection urged by Paymaster Rodney against the validity of his retirement upon the above finding is that it was in violation of the sixth section of the act of July 15, 1870, chapter 295 [section 1456, Revised Statutes], which forbids the retirement of an officer "because of misconduct."

The above finding of the board does not ground the incapacity for active service upon misconduct, but upon the peculiarity of his mental temperament. His language and conduct, etc., appear to be assigned only as facts and circumstances indicative of mental condition. The circumstances alluded to are apparently set forth by the board only as outward manifestations of such temperament. This peculiarity of temperament is described in the last paragraph of the finding as "mental incompetency."

The President having concurred in the finding of the board and thereupon directed the retirement of Paymaster Rodney from active service, the latter must be deemed to have been placed on the retired list, not because of misconduct, but because of incapacity for active service arising from the peculiarity of his mental temperament or inherent mental incompetency, as found by the board.

The act of August 3, 1861, section 23, chapter 42 [now embodied in section 1448, Revised Statutes], provides that whenever in the judgment of the President an officer of the Navy shall be "in any way," incapacitated from performing the duties of his office, etc. The officer's retirement was, upon the facts stated, validly made under this section. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 446.)

An officer of the Navy having been retired for a peculiar mental temperament which incapacitated him for properly performing duties on the active list, the findings of the retiring board are not subject to review by the accounting officers, and his retirement was authorized by law. (Dig. Comp. Dec., 493.)

Compare note to section 1447, Revised Statutes, "Retirement of officer found not morally qualified for promotion."

Temperamental unfitness must amount to actual incapacity or retirement not authorized.—The retirement laws, while making no attempt to fix a standard of official usefulness, sound judgment, discretion, or good sense, good habits, agreeableness, good manners, self-control, or courtesy, make one criterion, and one only, for the compulsory retirement of an officer, namely, that he has become incapable of performing the duties of his office. All other subjects of criticism in an officer must be either dealt with in a disciplinary way, or borne with as unfortunate incidents of the service due to imperfect human nature. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 162, affirming 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

Retiring boards have nothing to do with such considerations as that the officer would, by seniority, soon become due for promotion, which would place him in a position where his infirmities of temper, disposition, and otherwise, would be of great detriment to the service. Objections to the promotion of an officer constitute no ground for retiring him from the office he now holds, unless resulting in the incapacity contemplated by the law. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 162, affirming 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14; compare sec. 1447, R. S.)

Question presented whether an officer of the Army may be retired when found by retiring board to be "permanently incapable of performing the duties of his office, such incapacity being temperamental in character, and the result of the operation of * * * mental bias or oversensitiveness of such degree and character as to render an officer incompetent to exercise sound judgment or discretion, and as to create a marked tendency toward unjustifiably questioning the justice or motives of the acts of his superior officers touching himself personally, sometimes carried to an extent bordering on chronic insubordination; marked lack of capacity to entertain sound views as to his relations and obligations to other persons in the military service, resulting in a quarrelsome, hypercritical, and querulous disposition." Held, that an important distinction must be observed between actual incapacity and the cause or causes which produced it. No officer can be compulsorily retired under these sections [1245-1252, R. S., relating to the Army] because of any or all of the infirmities, peculiarities, or characteristics mentioned. He may have all of these and yet be capable of performing his official duties if he desires to do so; and the law has not said that he may be retired for any of these. But if from these or from any other causes, he has become incapable of performing the duties of his office, he may be retired for that, but not for the causes which produced the incapacity. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 162.)

An officer of the Army was found by a retiring board to be "incapable of performing the duties of his office," such incapacity being the result of "infirmity of temper, of a gradual but serious loss of self-control, of impatience or irritability while exercising the functions of his office and in dealing with the officers and enlisted men in his command, of physical or mental deterioration due to indolence, excesses in eating and drinking, to impairment of vigor, or to indecision and want of alertness in the performance of the duties with which he is habitually charged by law and regulations." Held, that a person having the infirmities of temper and the mental and bodily characteristics described, might readily be a very undesirable superior, colleague, or subordinate, and might severely tax the patience of other members of the service necessarily brought into contact with him in the discharge of their military duties, but it would not follow from these facts that he was incapable of discharging his duties. A more reasonable inference would be, perhaps, that he was unwilling to discharge them properly, and therefore that he was a suitable subject for the appropriate military discipline. Of course, if a process of mental deterioration, due to the causes above-mentioned, had culminated in a mild form of insanity or if excessive self-indulgence and disregard of the laws of health have produced such maladies as make it impossible for the officer properly to discharge his duties, the incapacity justifying his retirement would exist and the causes leading to such incapacity would be immaterial [compare, section 1456, Revised Statutes]; but except in so extreme a case, the officer might have all the infirmities and undesirable habits mentioned, and yet not be incapable of discharging his duties in the sense contemplated by the law as justifying his retirement. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 17.)

An officer of the Marine Corps was found "incapacitated for active service by reason of excessive nervous irritability, and that his incapacity is the result of an incident of the service." The finding of the board was disapproved by the President, upon recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, who stated: "The report of the board does not show a finding of insanity or even of neurasthenia, but refers to this officer as incapacitated by reason of 'excessive nervous irritability.' There is no evidence in the record of any specific injury. The department considers that the retirement of so young an officer in the line of duty for the reason given by the board in this case would be an abuse of the liberal retirement privileges which Congress intended primarily for those either injured in the line of duty or who, by reason of long and faithful service, are entitled to especial consideration." (File 26253-256, Jan. 9, 1913. As to retirement of Marine officers, see sec. 1622, R. S.)

Actual incapacity only test; cause not important except incidentally.—The grounds for compulsory retirement should be confined to cases of actual inability to perform the duties of the office, no matter what the cause of the inability. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 162.)

It is with the actual incapacity of the officer that these sections [1245-1252, Revised Statutes, relating to Army] deal, and not with its cause or causes, except in determining what shall be done in case the officer is found incapacitated. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 162.)

An officer, found by a retiring board duly organized and convened to be "incapable of performing the duties of his office," may be and ought to be retired in accordance with the provisions of sections 1245-1252, Revised Statutes, without regard to the causes which may have led to such incapacity on his part; but to be "incapable" in the language of the law he must be either no longer responsible for his own actions or subject to infirmities or disabilities which make the reasonable fulfillment of his military duties impossible for him, notwithstanding an earnest desire and firm purpose on his part to fully discharge them. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

An officer of the Army could not be legally retired under the provisions of law because he frequently or even habitually became intoxicated, although such intoxication might, while it lasted, incapacitate him to discharge his duties; instead, he would be properly subject to the punishment prescribed by military law as administered by courts-martial. If, however, as a result of such excess, his bodily and mental faculties had become seriously and permanently impaired, then, even if the habits of intemperance had ceased, he would be properly subject to retirement under the provisions of section 1252, Revised Statutes. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

It has been held by the War Department that an officer may legally be retired by reason of an incapacity resulting from habitual drunkenness; that the law contemplated an existing and not a purely prospective and contingent incapacity; and that an inquiry into an officer's general efficiency could be pertinent only in so far as it could be regarded as going to show that his inefficiency, if found, was the result of an impairment of health; that the cause of incapacity intended in section 1249, Revised Statutes, was a physical cause, that moral obliquity was not had in view, and that the matter of financial integrity of the officer was beyond the jurisdiction of the board; accordingly, that the board was not authorized to recommend the retirement of an officer because he did not pay his debts; and that the inability of a disbursing officer to furnish a bond when duly required to do so was not sufficient ground for his retirement. These opinions of the War Department are consistent with the principles which must determine when an officer is incapable of performing the duties of his office within the meaning of the retiring law. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

Composition of board.—The intent of the act is to cause disabled officers to be retired by a board composed of commissioned officers of their own branch of the service. The clause which requires that the board, except those taken from the medical staff, shall be composed as far as may be, of officers "senior in rank" to the officer whose disability is to be tried, implies that the board is to consist of commissioned officers in his own line of service; for an officer of one branch of service can not with accuracy be called senior in rank to an officer of another branch. A major in the Army is no more senior to a captain of Marines than he is to a captain in the Navy. The term in its military sense is applicable only to relatively higher grades of the same service, and its use otherwise would create confusion. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116, holding that the act of Aug. 3, 1861, sec. 17, chap. 42, does not authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to assemble a mixed board of Army and Marine officers for inquiry into the cases of disabled officers of the Army and of the Marine Corps; that the Marine Corps is at all times subject to the laws and regulations established for the better government of the Navy, except when detached for service with the Army; and, accordingly, that the medical officers of any board assembled by the Secretary of the Navy to inquire into the cases of disabled Marine officers must be taken from the surgeons of the Navy. See sec. 1623, R. S., as to composition of retiring boards for Marine officers; and see in this connection Brown v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 275, affirmed 206 U. S., 240.)

Officer to be ordered before retiring board immediately upon development of incapacity.—"When any officer on the active list becomes physically incapacitated to perform the duties of his office, and the probable future duration of such incapacity is permanent or indefinite, he will immediately be ordered before a retiring board, and, pending final action upon the question of his retirement, will not be examined for promotion. The foregoing shall not apply to the case of an officer whose physical incapacity develops after he has become due for promotion, and who may, under such circumstances, be examined physically by a board of medical examiners before being ordered before a retiring board." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 679, superseding Art. R-331 (5), Navy Regs., 1913, C. N. R. 7, Sept. 15, 1916.)

Physical examination for promotion not sufficient for retirement.—An officer of the Army was examined for promotion and found incapacitated for active service on account of certain physical disabilities; this finding was approved by the Surgeon General and by the Major General Commanding the Army, and by the Acting Secretary of War. The officer was thereupon notified that he would be retired at the proper time, and was granted sick leave of absence until further orders. Thereafter he applied for reexamination, and the action of the Acting Secretary of War approving the finding of the examining board was canceled by the Secretary of War. It was contended that the examination when approved by the Acting Secretary of War became final and conclusive, and that no power or authority existed in the Secretary of War to direct or permit a reexamination, as the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), provides with reference to the examination of Army officers for promotion "that should an officer fail in his physical examination and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted." Held, this act was not intended to provide for the retirement of officers from the Army, but merely to fix the rank of officers and regulate promotions. The phrase italicized plainly is not a mandatory provision for the retirement of the disabled officer, but for the purpose of fixing the rank with which he should be retired. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385.)

Under the laws [sections 1250, 1251] regulating retirements in the Army, no officer can be retired from the Army upon the report of any board, even if such report be approved by the Secretary of War, except it "is approved by the President." (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385.)

It is true that the physical examination of an officer who is under examination for promotion may be the same in its character and extent as the physical examination of an officer who is under examination for retirement. Nevertheless, a board constituted as a board of examination for promotion can not be invested with the power of a retiring board, which the law requires to be differently constituted. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385.)

case was not such an examination as required by law for the retirement of an officer from active service; and he may be allowed a re-examination by the Secretary of War. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385.)

The officer was notified that he would be retired at the proper time; but he could not be retired without the approval of the President; and even if the action of the examining board were to be regarded and treated as that of a retiring board, still it would be inoperative to effect his retirement until approved by the President. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385.)

The Attorney General's opinion (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385) applies with equal force to the provisions in the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267,) with reference to rank on retirement of officers of the Navy who fail physically for promotion. Accordingly, in such case, the officer should be ordered before a naval retiring board and to transfer him to the retired list without such further examination would be without authority of law. (File 26260-1732:1, Apr. 25, 1912.) The clause in the Navy law of March 4, 1911, is substantially the same as the provision in the Army act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), and should be construed in connection with the precedents established in the Army during the twenty years that its statute was in force prior to the enactment of similar legislation for the Navy. (File 26253-200:1, Feb. 17, 1912.)

Under the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562, sec. 3), providing that an Army officer who fails in his physical examination for promotion by reason of disability contracted in line of duty "shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted," held that an Army officer who was not examined for promotion but was found by a retiring board incapacitated in line of duty, which finding was approved by the President, was entitled to the retired pay of the next higher rank, although the War Department refused to recognize him as holding that rank. "It seems to the court that the finding of the retiring board is the necessary equivalent of the only finding that could have been made by the board for promotion." (Cloud v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 69.)

An officer was found mentally but not physically, morally, or professionally qualified for promotion. The President's action, June 21, 1894, was as follows: "The findings of the boards in this case are disapproved, except the report and findings of the board of medical examiners dated April 2, 1894, which are hereby approved, and it appearing that the disability of Lieutenant Frank W. Nichols is due to sickness incurred in the line of duty, he is retired with seventy-five per cent of the sea pay of the rank now held by him." (But see note to sec. 1447, R. S., "Pay of officer retired because not recommended for promotion.")

Compare cases noted under section 1447, Revised Statutes.

Irregularity in proceedings.—After a retired naval officer has, during the remainder of his life, acquiesced in the proceedings of the retiring board, it does not lie with his administratrix to object to them for a mere irregularity. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568.)

The action of a board organized under the act of 1861 can only be valid as it accords with the law of its creation. From that law alone it must draw the breath of life. If, therefore, it is constituted without the direct authority of that law or in violation of its provisions the validity of its action would be open to very serious future question. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

See also Thompson v. U. S. (18 Ct. Cls., 604, 611), noted under section 1447, Revised Statutes.

Retirement for disability a "benefit" to officers.—The act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 606), provided that "all paymasters' clerks shall, while holding appointment in accordance with law, receive the same pay and allowances and have the same rights of retirement as warrant officers of like length of service in the Navy." If a paymaster's clerk is subject to retirement for physical disability it must be because this provision has so extended section 1453, Revised Statutes, as to make it applicable to paymasters' clerks. Held that retirement for physical disability is one of the "rights" of retirement extended to paymasters' clerks by this statute and accordingly that a paymaster's clerk is entitled to be retired under the provisions of section 1453, Revised Statutes (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 417.)

It can not correctly be said that section 1453 provides for a compulsory retirement and therefore is not extended to paymasters' clerks under the provisions giving them the "rights" of retirement possessed by warrant officers. It is both the right and the peremptory duty of the Government to retire an officer under the conditions mentioned in section 1453. On the other hand, it is the right of the officer to be retired under the same conditions. Whether retirement may be beneficial to him or not has nothing to do with his right of retirement and can only influence his determination as to whether or not he will enforce his right should the Government refuse or fail to carry out the mandate of the law. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 417.)

It is conceded that section 1453, Revised Statutes, would be very beneficial to paymasters' clerks, much more so, in fact, than to warrant officers, because, if incapacitated for service, their appointments may be revoked and they be dismissed from the service, which can not be done with a warrant officer. That such course would be pursued goes without saying, as the Navy Department can not rely upon the labor of those who are wholly incapacitated for service. Therefore the protection and benefit of section 1453 ought to be extended to these diseased and helpless officials if any reasonable interpretation of the act of June 24, 1910, will permit this to be done. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 417.)

That retirement for disability under this section is "compulsory," see 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 162, 164, 166.

As to retirement of pay clerks in the Navy, see act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942); and see note to section 1386, Revised Statutes.

Retirement of warrant officers.—A warrant officer was retired on furlough pay, for disability not incident to the service (see sec. 1454, R. S.); he acquiesced in such retirement, and drew retired pay thereunder until his death. Thereafter his widow brought suit against the United States to recover the difference between retired pay and active-duty pay on the ground that his retirement was illegal, there being no law providing for the retirement of warrant officers on account of physical disability, and the act of August 3, 1861, section 23 (12 Stat., 291) [now embodied in section 1448, Revised Statutes], being claimed to apply only to commissioned officers. "It must be conceded that were the question a new one, the true construction of the section would be open to doubt. But the findings of the Court of Claims show that soon after the enactment of the act the President and the Navy Department construed the section to include warrant as well as commissioned officers and they have since that time uniformly adhered to that construction, and that under its provisions large numbers of warrant officers have been retired. This contemporaneous and uniform interpretation is entitled to weight in the construction of the law and in a case of doubt ought to turn the scale" (citing Edwards v. Darby, 12 Wheat., 206; Atkins v. Disintegrating Co., 18 Wall., 272, 301; Smythe v. Fiske, 23 Wall., 374, 382; U. S. v. Pugh, 99 U. S., 265; U. S. v. Moore, 95 U. S., 760, 763; U. S. v. State Bank of North Carolina, 6 Pet., 29; U. S. v. Alexander, 12 Wall., 177; Peabody v. Stark, 16 Wall., 240; and Hahn v. U. S., 107 U. S., 402). "These authorities justify us in adhering to the construction of the law under consideration adopted by the executive department of the Government, and are conclusive against the contention of appellant, that section 23 of the act of August 3, 1861, did not apply to warrant officers." (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568, affirming 18 Ct. Cls., 537.)

Paymasters' clerks, in reference to retirement are placed in precisely the same condition by the act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 606), as warrant officers, and are entitled to be retired under the provisions of section 1453, Revised Statutes. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 417. See above, "Retirement for disability a 'benefit' to officers." Pay clerks are now warrant officers in the Navy by the terms of act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942.)

Dental surgeons, probationary.—The provisions of this section have been administratively applied to a dental surgeon appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573), while serving his probationary period of two years as required by said act, which further provided that such appointments "may be revoked at any time during the probationary period by the President." (See file 26253-550, Feb. 18, 1918; see also note to sec. 1454, R. S.)

Acting chaplains who fail physically upon examination for appointment as chaplains are not eligible for retirement. (File 15721-22:1, Mar. 8, 1922.)

Sec. 1449. [Powers and duties of retiring board.] Said retiring-board shall be authorized to inquire into and determine the facts touching the nature and occasion of the disability of any such officer, and shall have such powers of a court-martial and of a court of inquiry as may be necessary.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 17, v. 12, p. 290.)

Courts-martial have power to administer oaths to witnesses (sec. 1624, R. S., art. 41), to imprison witnesses for contempts (sec. 1624, R. S., art. 42), to compel attendance of civilian witnesses (act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 11, 35 Stat., 621), to institute proceedings in civil courts against witnesses who refuse to appear or testify (act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 12, 35 Stat., 622), and to receive depositions in evidence (act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 16, 35 Stat., 622).

"Courts of inquiry shall have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and punish contempts, in the same manner as courts-martial." (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 57.)

In trials by court-martial and proceedings before courts of inquiry, the accused or person charged "shall, at his own request but not otherwise, be a competent witness." (Act Mar. 16, 1878, 20 Stat., 30; Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 512.)

It is provided by statute with reference to naval general courts-martial and courts of inquiry, "that no witness shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any question which may tend to incriminate or degrade him." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 12, 35 Stat., 622. See note to Constitution, fifth amendment, under "III. Compelling person to be witness against himself.")

Sec. 1450. [Oath of members, retiring board.] The members of said board shall be sworn in each case to discharge their duties honestly and impartially.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291.)

On general subject of persons in the Navy authorized to administer oaths, see section 183, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Sec. 1451. [Findings of retiring board, cause of incapacity.] When said retiring-board finds an officer incapacitated for active service, it shall also find and report the cause which, in its judgment, produced his incapacity, and whether such cause is an incident of the service.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291.)

Incident of service.—Section 1249, Revised Statutes, relating to the Army, is similar to the above section, requiring Army retiring boards to report whether the cause of disability is "an incident of service." Similar provisions are also contained in the act of April 12, 1902, section 5 (32 Stat., 100), relating to retirement of officers in the Revenue Cutter Service (now Coast Guard.)

Line of duty.—Section 1494, Revised Statutes, provides for the promotion of an officer failing physically upon examination for promotion, where such physical disqualification was occasioned by wounds received "in the line of his duty," and does not incapacitate him for other than sea duty. The act March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), provides for the rank on retirement of an officer who fails upon examination for promotion by reason of physical disability contracted "in the line of duty." The act of May 22, 1917, section 9 (40 Stat., 86), provides for retirement of officers of Navy and Marine Corps, temporarily appointed or promoted, for physical disability incurred "in line of duty." The act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 834), provides for retirement of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and temporary officers of the Navy for disability incurred "in line of duty." Section 1588, Revised Statutes, provides for the pay of officers retired on account of incapacity resulting from wounds or injuries received "in the line of duty," or from sickness or exposure "therein." The pension laws provide for payment of pension in cases of disability, by reason of any wound or injury received, or disease contracted, while in the service of the United States and "in the line of duty" (sec. 4693, R. S.; see also secs. 4697, 4698, R. S.; act July 14, 1892, 27 Stat., 149; act Apr. 8, 1904, 33 Stat., 163, etc.) The War Risk Insurance Act of October 6, 1917, section 300 (40 Stat., 405), as amended by act of June 25, 1918 (40 Stat., 609), provides compensation for death or disability "Resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted 'in the line of duty * * * but no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by his own willful misconduct." Section 1754, Revised Statutes, prefers for civil appointment persons disabled in the military or naval service "in the line of duty."

Not misconduct.—Act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), provided for payment of gratuity to dependents, upon death of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps, from wounds or disease contracted "in line of duty." This was amended by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329), providing for payment of gratuity where the death was from wounds or disease "not the result of his own misconduct." (The act last cited was repealed by act Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 312, 40 Stat., 408, and reenacted with amendments by act of June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 824). The act of August 29, 1916, as amended by act of July 1, 1918, provided for withholding pay in cases of officers or enlisted men absent from duty, because of injury, sickness or disease resulting from "misconduct." (39 Stat., 580; 40 Stat., 717.) Section 1456, Revised Statutes, prohibits the retirement of officers "because of misconduct." The act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), prohibits retirement of officers unfit for sea duty by reason of drunkenness, or from any cause arising from "his own misconduct." Sections 4756 and 4757, Revised Statutes, provide for payment from Navy pension fund to persons discharged from the Navy other than for "misconduct."

Failure of board to report cause of incapacity.—The report of the board that there was no evidence that the officer's incapacity was the result of any incident of the service, "is to all intents and purposes a report that the incapacity was not the result of an incident of the service, and justifies an order retiring the officer on furlough pay." (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568, 573.)

Effect of officer's acquiescence in irregularity of board's proceedings.—"If there had been any irregularity or defect in the report of the board, it was the duty of Brown to object to it without unreasonable delay. After his acquiescence in the proceedings during the remainder of his life, it does not lie with his administratrix to object to them, even for a substantial defect, much less for such an irregularity, if it be an irregularity, as is set up in this case. Our opinion is, therefore, that the order of the President retiring Brown was authorized by law, and was regular and valid." (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568, 573.)

Surplusage in board's finding is of no legal effect.—Section 3 of the act of February 21, 1861, provided for the retirement of medical officers "permanently incapable, from physical or mental infirmity, of further service at sea," to receive "leave of absence pay." A medical officer was retired in 1861 under said law for disability which "did not occur in the line of his duty." Under the provisions of this law, it was immaterial whether the infirmity of the officer originated in line of duty or not. Hence, in so far as the cause for retirement thereunder is concerned, the statement of the board of 1861 that it did not occur in the line of duty, must be deemed to be mere surplusage. An allegation of error in such statement, therefore, furnished no ground for reexamination of his case, if indeed a reexamination could have been had on any ground after his retirement. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 178.)

The act of March 3, 1873 (sec. 1588, R. S.), provided 75 per cent of sea pay for officers retired for disability incurred in the line of duty. In 1873 the officer mentioned in the preceding paragraph made application for a further examination of his case, based on new evidence tending to show, as he alleged, that the opinion of the board as to the cause of his disability was erroneous. Thereupon the Secretary of the Navy ordered a new board, which found that his disability "had its origin in the line of duty." This finding was, on January 1, 1879, approved by the Secretary of the Navy. Held, that the Secretary of the Navy was not authorized by law to submit the case of this officer to a medical board for reexamination as to the origin of the disability for which he was retired, and that the Secretary's decision based on the report of that board is without any legal effect as regards the cause for retirement in the case of said officer or his right to pay. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 178.)

By act of August 3, 1861, Congress made new and enlarged provisions for the retirement of naval officers, both of the line and staff. These provisions superseded all others previously in force, but had no application to officers already retired under former laws. This statute divided the causes for retirement into two classes. The provisions of the act of August 3, 1861, are reproduced in sections 1448-1455, Revised Statutes. The retiring board under this latter law was authorized to inquire into the disability only of officers of the active list. There is no provision authorizing the case of an officer retired under the act of February 21, 1861, to be investigated by a board with a view to determining the cause of his retirement. A reinvestigation of such case without authority of Congress could not be made the basis of any change in regard to the cause of the officer's retirement, nor confer upon him any rights to which he would not otherwise be entitled. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 178.)

The acts of July 15, 1870, and March 3, 1873 (sec. 1588, R. S.), provided 75 per cent of sea pay for certain classes of retired officers, and provided that "the pay of all other officers on the retired list" shall be one-half sea pay. This latter phrase is broad enough to include officers retired under the act of February 21, 1861. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 178.)

Finding made under a misconstruction of the law.—An opinion and recommendation of an examining board made under a misconstruction of the law can not control distinct statutory provisions, and accordingly the retirement of an officer in accordance with such erroneous finding may be corrected by the President. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 7.)

Reconsideration of finding by board of its own initiative.—Where a naval retiring board convened to inquire into the nature and cause of the disability of an officer has once finished its work, rendered a complete judgment in the case, and adjourned, a subsequent reconsideration of its judgment by the board, unless authorized or directed by proper authority, can have no legal effect. Accordingly, upon examination of the record of the proceedings before a naval retiring board in the case of Paymaster Rodney, held, that the paper attached to the record, called a reconsideration of the finding of the board, was without legal effect, and that the officer was properly retired under the original finding of the board on furlough pay. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 104.)

Findings not subject to review by accounting officers.—An officer of the Navy having been retired for a peculiar mental temperament which incapacitated him for properly performing duties on the active list, the findings of the retiring board are not subject to review by the accounting officers, and his retirement was authorized by law. (Dig. Comp. Dec., 493.)

"INCIDENT OF THE SERVICE" AND "LINE OF DUTY" COMPARED.

"Incident of the service" synonymous with "line of duty."—[It will be noted from the laws cited above that while section 1451, Revised Statutes, requires retiring boards to report whether an officer's incapacity resulted from "an incident of the service," section 1588, Revised Statutes, in prescribing the rate of retired pay speaks of officers retired for disabilities incurred "in the line of duty," the act of March 4, 1911, provides increased rank for officers retired in certain cases by reason of disability contracted "in the line of duty," and the act of May 22, 1917, speaks of retirement of officers for physical disability incurred "in line of duty." These statutes obviously use the words "incident of the service," and "line of duty," as synonymous terms. That they have been so regarded in the past is shown by records of naval retiring boards which have frequently reported the disability of officers as having been incurred in the "line of duty" instead of using the statutory phrase, "incident of the service." In the decisions of the courts and law officers of the Government such reports of retiring boards have been accepted without questioning their compliance with the statute. For example, in the case of Burchard v. United States (19 Ct. Cls., 137; 125 U. S., 176) the retiring board reported the officer "incapacitated for duty by disability which did not originate in the line of duty," which report was approved by the President and held by the courts not subject to be changed either by the Secretary of the Navy, by the President, or by Congress, although the question of terminology was not considered. Similarly, in the case of Potts v. United States (125 U. S., 176), the board reported that the incapacity of the officer did not "originate in the line of duty," and it was held by the courts that this report, having been duly approved, could not afterwards be changed to make the cause of the officer's retirement "the result of an incident of the service." To the same effect, see 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221. So also, in the case of Morse v. United States (229 U. S., 208), the report of the board was that the incapacity did not originate "in the line of duty"; see also, 15 Comp. Dec., 584. These and many other cases show that in practice the terms "incident of the service" and "line of duty," have been used interchangeably by naval retiring boards, as well as by Congress, although at the present time these boards in their reports are required to conform to the statutory language in cases under this section, and report whether or not the disability is caused by "an incident of the service." (See Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, p. 461.) However, the same publication (p. 316) states that the phrase "line of duty" should be construed as having the same meaning with "incident of the service." In the Army the decision upon this point is as follows: "The phrases 'in line of duty' and 'incident of the service,' while not synonymous, are not widely separate in meaning. Held, that the efficient execution of a statute involving the one would give reasonable operation to the other. In other words, the several 'incidents' which go to make up the daily or yearly routine of military service constitute, when added together, the 'line of duty' which is contemplated in the pension laws, and no public interest will suffer if either understanding be applied by a retiring board in the determination of a particular case." (Army Dig., 1912, p. 986 c.) Definitions and illustrations of "line of duty" would in view of the above seem equally applicable to "incident of the service" under this section.]

"LINE OF DUTY" DEFINED.

Intention of Congress.—The question of what constitutes "line of duty" within the meaning of the pension laws was exhaustively considered and authoritatively construed by Attorney General Cushing in 1855 (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, noted below). The fact that after this construction Congress has retained this expression for more than forty years, although it has repeatedly revised and amended the pension laws, amounts to a demonstration that Mr. Cushing properly interpreted its meaning. (Rhodes v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep., 740.)

The phrase, "in the line of duty," has been uniformly used in the statutes from 1799 to the present time in defining the right to pensions. It received elaborate discussion from Mr. Attorney General Cushing in 1855 (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149), and as Congress, since the publication of that opinion, has not seen proper to substitute any other expression, we are justified in concluding that it stands in the statutes invested with the meaning expressed by Mr. Cushing. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172.)

[The opinion of Attorney General Cushing was adopted by the Navy Department, and his definition of "line of duty" was published, July 10, 1914, in a circular of changes and corrections in "Forms of Procedure for Courts and Boards in the Navy and Marine Corps, 1910," pages 224 and 225. (See also, Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, and see file 26250-1372, Mar. 3, 1919 and file 26250-1491:1 Oct. 29, 1918.) It was approved by the Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Rhodes v. United States and 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172, both above noted. However, it was departed from by the Court of Claims in Moore v. United States, 48 Ct. Cls., 110 (noted below), in which case, however, the Court of Claims did not discuss or cite the Attorney General's opinions, nor the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the Rhodes case, above noted. The opinion of Attorney General Cushing is also modified by opinions of Attorney General Palmer, August 21, 1919, and June 2, 1920 (32 Op. Atty. Gen. 12, 193), both noted below. "Both the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Court of Claims have jurisdiction, in proper cases, to decide the question. I can not say that the decision of either is binding on the other. In so far as they are in accord, I would, in the absence of a ruling by the Supreme Court, feel bound to accept their decision. In so far as either has made a decision on a point not considered by the other, and not in necessary conflict with its rulings, I think you should follow such decision. In so far as the two courts are in conflict, it can not be said that there has been a binding determination, and you should adopt the rule which is deemed most consistent with reason and general authority whether in entire accord with the ruling of either court or not." (Att'y. Gen. Palmer to Sec'y. Treas., 32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 12, 22.)]

The question of what constitutes "line of duty" must have existed almost from the foundation of the Government, in the naval service and also in the military, and in such varieties of form as to afford ample means of ascertaining the true legal intentment of the several acts of Congress. Thus, in regard to the Navy, we have the old provision of the act of March 2, 1799, which is the original act for the government of the Navy, to the effect that "every officer, seaman, or marine disabled in the line of his duty, shall be entitled to receive for his own life, and the life of his wife, if a married man at the time of receiving the wound, one-half his monthly pay" (1 Stat. 716). Coming down to a later period, we have a series of acts in which the same idea appears. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 149, 151.)

Congress, if it had so pleased, might have prescribed an arbitrary general rule, as, for example, pension to all cases of disability or death in service, except in the contingency of misconduct; or pension in all cases, except where the cause of disability or death should occur while the party is in arrest or under sentence, on furlough or leave of absence. Such a rule, like all other rules of an assumed arbitrary standard, might have been easier to administer than a natural rule, for the latter demands, in use, discriminating examination and just appreciation of the nature of the included subject-matter; but the natural rule is the only just and equitable one, whether as regards the rights of persons in the service, and their families, or the policy of the Government. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 149, 163.)

Where precedents exist in the files of a department which are apparently not in accord with the meaning of the words "line of duty," as intended by Congress, such precedents avail nothing; decisions in the public offices of the Government are facts, not rules of law. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 149, 153.)

Definition of "line of duty."—The phrase "line of duty," is an apt one, to denote that an act of duty performed must have relation of causation, mediate or immediate, to the wound, the casualty, the injury, or the disease, producing disability or death. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 149, 161; 17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 172; Rhodes v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep., 740.)

Was the cause of disability or death a cause within the line of duty or outside of it? Was the cause appertaining to, dependent upon, or otherwise necessarily and essentially connected with, duty within the line, or was it unappurtenant, independent, and not of necessary and essential connection? That is the true test-criterion. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 149, 162; 17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 172.)

The phrase, "line of duty," is definite, though comprehensive. He who contracts disease or dies in consequence of the ordinary performance of his military duty, or in the performance of any special act of military duty, whether at the moment of performance he were on duty or off duty, in active service or on furlough, of habits virtuous or habits vicious, gallantly fighting his country's enemy or expiating an offense in the guardhouse or prison bay, he who in these or any other circumstances contracts disease in the performance of an act of duty, contracts it "in the line of his duty." On the other hand, neither the bad man who dies of his incorrigible vices, nor the good man who, at the full maturity of blameless life, dies in the course of nature of any of the maladies incident to old age, can be said to die of disease contracted while in the line of duty. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 149, 161.)

Speaking generally, a soldier who, between the date of his entry into the service and the date of his discharge, suffers injury or contracts disease resulting in disability, is entitled to compensation under the War Risk Insurance Act of June 25, 1918 (40 Stat., 611, sec. 300), unless such injury is caused by (1) his own willful misconduct, or (2) some act or course of conduct of his disconnected with his military duties. (32 Op. Att'y. Gen. 12, 21.)

The service must have been the cause of the disability, and not merely coincident with it in time.—Nor was there any error in the definition which the court gave to the jury of a "disease contracted in the line of duty," when he declared that "the service must have been the cause of the disease, and not merely coincident with it in time." This is the patent and natural meaning of the language of the statute. It places the service and the discharge of duty in the relation of causes to the injuries and diseases that warrant the grant of pensions. (Rhodes v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep., 740.)

Regarding what was said in the Rhodes case in the light of the opinions upon which it is based, the following general rule may be deduced: "The mere fact that an injury or disease is coincident in time with service is not sufficient to class it as suffered or contracted 'in the line of duty.' It must have been caused by the presence of its victim in the line of duty when it was received or contracted. But the relation of causation is sufficiently shown when it appears that the victim was at a place and doing what was required or permitted by his duty as a soldier, and that between his presence and conduct and the injury or disease, no adequate and sufficient cause, for which he is responsible, intervened." (32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 12, 19, 194.)

The soldier will be responsible for the intervening cause if (1) it consists of his own willful misconduct or (2) it is something which he is doing in pursuance of some private avocation or business. (32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 12, 23, 195.) The two intervening causes mentioned are not intended to exclude all others. (32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 195.)

The cause of disability (or of death), must be a cause connected by some line of co-ligation with the performance of duty of an official or professional nature. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 159.)

To pension disabilities or deaths occurring in the mere course of nature, and having no relation of casualty in duty, or disabilities or deaths produced by diseases or casualties happening to an officer or soldier in the prosecution and pursuit of his private affairs and amusements, or whilst employed on furlough in lucrative occupation not official, is not required by any consideration of public service. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 163.)

The true theory of reason, of right, and of public policy in these matters is to bestow disability or death pensions only in those cases, but in all those cases, where the cause of disability or death is the logical incident or provable effect of duty in the service. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 163.)

No one would seriously contend that every wound, injury, or disease received or contracted during the term of service is pensionable under the law. A wound or injury inflicted upon himself by a soldier, or received by him while hunting wild animals, or squabbling with his comrades for his own amusement, or while doing any other act not in the line of his duty, would form no basis for a pension. The reason is that it would not be caused by his presence in the line of duty. (Rhodes v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep., 740.)

The letter of the law prescribes that the quality of the act or condition, as whether in line of duty or not in it, shall determine the question of pension; that alone is just and wise; and that is the thought which has from the beginning of this course of legislation to the end, held its place with unchangeable constancy in all the acts of Congress. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 164.)

The law does not say "disease contracted while in the service," and therefore is not coextensive with the mere status of an officer in commission, or an enlisted soldier, sailor or marine. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 160.)

It would not have answered to say merely "in the service," for that would have made the right of pension more extensive than the right of pay, so as, in all circumstances, to comprehend not only deaths of private misadventure, but even the case of criminality, arrest, or suspension under sentence. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 160, 161.)

The connection between the cause and the effect need not always be so direct or instantaneous as in cases where the party is in the immediate and obvious discharge of his duty. It suffices if the disability be plainly, though remotely, the incident and result of the military profession. The performance of duty may be received as the original cause of disability in some cases where it is not the proximate cause. It is not necessary that the casualty or disease should be in its nature peculiar to the employments of military men; it may be loss of eyesight, occasioned by exposure, or consumption, the result of a cold aggravated by the labors and hazards of the profession, or palsy, attributable to the change of habits in the transition from civil to military life. These are cases of disability in the line of duty, though they might have happened to the party in any other occupation. There is not one of these cases which has not relation of consequence or effect, either remote or proximate, to the performance of military duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 158.)

Not restricted to battle or some hazardous enterprise.—"The expression 'wounds received in the line of his duty' found in section 1494, Revised Statutes, which provides for the promotion of officers of the Navy whose physical disqualifications do not incapacitate them for other duties, means precisely what it says—namely, wounds received in the line of duty—and is not restricted to any particular part of that duty, as to wounds received in battle or in some hazardous enterprise." (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

Private affairs not embraced by "line of duty."—"When the acts speak of 'line of duty,' they mean, of course, public duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 150, 155.)

It is impossible to say that the phrase casualties or injuries received "in the line of duty," comprehends all the possible misadventures of mere private life, which may happen to an officer in his personal affairs, and wholly disconnected from his public duty, though he be not on furlough. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 156.)

Every person who enters the military service of the country—officer, soldier, sailor, or marine—takes upon himself certain moral and legal engagements, which constitute his official or professional obligations. Whilst in the performance of those things, which the law requires of him as military duty, he is in the line of his duty. But, at the same time, though a soldier or sailor, he is not the less a man and a citizen, with private rights to exercise and duty to perform; and while attending to these things, he is not in the line of his public duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 162.)

Suppose that an officer is a proprietor of a stock farm, as he has a perfect right to be, to which private property, without neglect of any of his public duties, he gives occasional attention, and suppose that in the care of his property he is killed by the kick of a vicious horse of his stock, most assuredly it can not be pretended that such a casualty or injury occurs "in the line of duty." (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 156.)

A soldier in attempting to pass the guard with a written permit was injured by the sentinel. If the pass was given to him solely for the purpose of enabling him to attend to his private affairs, and if, at the time he was injured he was going about his private business, he can in no sense be considered as in the public service. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 155; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 590.)

Around all these acts of the soldier or sailor which are official in their nature, the pension law draws a legislative line, and then it says to the soldier or the sailor—If, while performing acts which are within that line, you thereby incur disability or death, you, or your widow, or children, as the case may be, shall receive a pension or other allowance; but not if the disability or death arise from acts performed outside of that line, that is, absolutely disconnected from, and wholly independent of, the performance of duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 162.)

To illustrate, a soldier in camp may, during a rest hour, be employing his time by working on an invention wholly disconnected with the military service. He is, in general, in the line of duty, but at the moment is exercising a private right for private purposes. An explosion is produced by chemicals which he is using. There has intervened a cause for which he is responsible and the injury is not suffered in the line of duty. But while so employed he is struck by lightning, or is suddenly stricken with appendicitis; clearly there has been no intervening cause for which he is responsible and the injury is suffered in the line of duty. In either case, what he was doing was in no way inconsistent with the performance of his military duty. While he was doing it, the duties of a soldier still rested on him. He was not free from their obligations, nor was he necessarily deprived of the rights which grow out of their performance. This would result only in the event the thing he was doing, outside of his duty, caused the injury he received. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 12, 20.)

May be in "line of duty" although not "on duty."—The law does not say, "disease contracted while on duty," and is therefore independent of the condition of watch on deck, or turn of detail in camp or garrison. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 160.)

Nor would the wise intentions of the law have been fulfilled by merely saying, "while on duty," for on one hand a party, though on duty, might contract disease or come to his death by vice or crime; and on the other hand, although not on duty, although on furlough, on leave of absence, in arrest, under sentence of punishment for breach of duty, civil or military, in all these conditions his general military obligations continue in full force and he has the faculty and may have the occasion in any of these conditions to perform acts of pure military duty and in the performance thereof to incur disease or death, in circumstances devolving on his widow or children the highest moral and the amplest legal right of pension allowance. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 161.)

When it is remembered that no commissioned officer, or enlisted soldier, seaman, or marine, has power to cast off his obligation at will; that whether he be on duty or off, in glory as in disgrace, still the banner of his country is over him and its oath upon his conscience; when this great fact shall be remembered, it must be inevitable to concede that any rule based on the assumption of its being impossible for an officer or soldier on furlough, on leave of absence, in arrest, under sentence, to perform acts, suffer casualties, receive wounds, or incur causes of disease, in the line of his duty, is not a truth and like all things not true, cannot be conformable to justice or wisdom. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 163.)

As while on duty he may do or suffer things not in the line of his duty, so whilst off duty or on furlough or under censure, he may do, and suffer things which are in the line of duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 164.)

The law does not say "disease contracted while in active service," and therefore is not designed to raise the question of whether on furlough, or leave of absence, or not. Nor would it have been satisfactory to say, "in active service," for that is descriptive only of the orders under which a party may happen to be, and affords no sufficient indication of what is the nature or the quality of his acts. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 160, 161.)

The idea that furlough or leave of absence must of necessity exclude an officer from all benefit of the pension laws may have arisen from the fact that officers are furloughed or put on leave of absence from time to time for the purpose of enabling them to enter into lucrative private pursuits or for some other cause which implies negation of public duty. In such cases the officer will, of course, be excluded from the purview of the pension laws, not because of the furlough or leave of absence per se, but because of the special occasion or consequences thereof. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 164.)

A soldier is not in line of duty if absent on a furlough which by its terms authorized him to enter into some form of civil employment. He is not, therefore, entitled to compensation for injury suffered or disease contracted while so furloughed, regardless of what may have caused it. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 24, 26, 197.)

A soldier or sailor while "under arrest" or "in confinement" is not discharged from the obligation of duty, and is occasionally called upon to perform duty in which he may distinguish himself and die honorably, as, for example, in the contingency of a post or a camp attacked by the enemy, or a ship in peril at sea. So, still more, of an officer on furlough. So it may be in the case of a soldier temporarily "absent on leave," nay, even of one compromised in some grave military offense. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 154.)

In regard to arrest, again: Suppose that on march, in camp, or garrison, or on a voyage, an officer is put in arrest on charges. In the first place, those charges may not be substantiated, and then it would be manifestly unjust that the mere fact of his being charged should operate to deprive himself or his family of pension. Or, while he is in arrest, he dies of camp fever or ship fever, and then it is unjust to presume a criminality not proved in the course of the law. Or, whether guilty or not, if he die of wounds, casualty, or disease contracted while in arrest, still the death is not the consequence of the arrest, but of the public service. If not dying in arrest, and on trial being convicted and sentenced, and that sentence be of death or dismissal for some grave military crime, that of course terminates the question of pension; but, if his offense be a light one, with a sentence of reprimand, for instance, and he should have happened to contract disability or mortal disease while in arrest, as by the hazards of a long march or voyage, it seems not just to add to his legal sentence the serious, indirect aggravation of incapacity of pension. All these difficulties are avoided or conciliated by directing inquiry to the question—Was the cause of disability or death, or was it not, an act of his official military duty? (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 164, 165.)

A leave of absence, an ordinary furlough, or an arrest does not remove a soldier from the active service. But, on duty, on furlough, or under arrest, he may do things both within or without the line of duty which, though entirely free from the imputation of misconduct, may cause injury or disease. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 12, 22, 23, 197.)

May be not "line of duty," although "on duty."—A party, though on duty, might contract disease or come to his death by vice or crime. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 161.)

While on duty, he may do or suffer things not in the line of his duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 164.)

An officer or soldier who is neither under arrest nor in confinement nor on furlough, nor absent without leave, may yet die in a thousand ways which will be neither of disease contracted nor of casualties by drowning or otherwise, nor of wounds received while in the line of duty; as, for example, in a chance quarrel, or in dangerous amusements. The conditions of inclusion, as well as of exclusion, must have relation to the line of duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 155.)

A soldier or sailor, like any other man, has the physical faculty of doing many things which are in violation of duties, either general or special; and in doing these things he is not acting in the line of his duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 162.)

Misconduct or violation of duty can not be line of duty.—It is conceded that if the cause of death intervene as the incident, or be the result, of any misconduct or violation of duty, as by drunkenness or other vicious course of life, or in the act of mutiny, desertion, or other breach of military obligations, then the party does not die by disease contracted, casualty occurring, or injury received while in the line of duty. No man, it is clear, is acting in the line of duty while the act he performs is a violation of his duty. All such cases we exclude at once, and by common consent, from the purview of the pension laws. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 153.)

A soldier in attempting to pass the guard with a written permit was injured by the sentinel. If the assault was brought on by his own misconduct, he can not be said to have been disabled while in the line of his duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 155; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 590.)

Misconduct or violation of duty must have relation to the cause of disability, to exclude line of duty.—When violation of duty is taken as a rule of exclusion, it operates only where the violation of duty has probable relation to the cause of death; and not where these are independent facts. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 154.)

A sailor who is laboring under all the worst effects of vicious indulgence, and subject to die at any moment of disease occasioned by that cause, may yet happen to die of other disease contracted, or of casualty occurring, or of injury received while indubitably in the line of his duty. In a word, these assumed causes of exclusion should operate, not per se, but only where they affirmatively exclude the line of duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 154.)

Contributory negligence.—An injury suffered by a person otherwise in the line of duty shall not be held to have been suffered "not in the line of duty" for the reason that the negligence of such person contributed to the injury. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 14, 24.)

The question of remote and proximate cause, although frequently treated as a question of law, is in reality one of fact, and which in an individual case can receive but little light from the numerous adjudications. In every chain of circumstances each step is, to a greater or less degree, the consequence of its predecessor. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172.)

Thus, an officer of volunteers, while in the service of the United States, went to a depot in Ohio, and while expediting the checking of his baggage, was struck by the baggage-master on the head with a hatchet, from the results of which he was seriously disabled. The officer's assumption of the duties of his office caused him to be subject to orders; the order caused him to come in contact with the baggage-master. If there did not intervene between this contact and the injury an adequate and sufficient cause for which the officer was responsible, he is entitled to his pension. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172.)

But it seems that, while expediting the checking of his baggage, he used abusive language; as he was responsible for this, the question arises whether it was an adequate and efficient cause of the injury. If he attempted or threatened violence, or if, after an altercation, he used such gestures or placed his hands in such a position as to lead his opponent to apprehend immediate personal danger, his conduct would be the immediate, adequate cause of the injury and performance of duty could not be treated as the cause, either mediate or immediate. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172.)

It is impossible to lay down a general rule applicable to all cases of this kind, or to the different aspects which the present claim might present as the facts shall be developed by the evidence. It can not be said, on the one hand, that a soldier is entitled to a pension unless the provocation he gave was such as to acquit the assailant in a court of law; nor, on the other hand, that the slightest departure from the rules of proper conduct, followed by an injury, shall preclude allowance of his claim. Between the two are an infinite variety of supposable cases involving different degrees of provocation which can not be measured, so, as to determine as a matter of law their adequacy to produce the result. It is in determining, not the legal justification of the baggage-master but the adequacy of the provocation, that, in view of the benevolent purposes of the law, a wise and liberal discretion is to be exercised. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172.)

The real question is, whether the officer's conduct in the baggage room was reasonably calculated to lead to violence, dangerous to himself. If it was so calculated, his misconduct brought its own punishment, and if the punishment was greater than he deserved, legal proceedings against the baggage-master would furnish him his remedy. If his misconduct caused the injury, he is not entitled to a pension. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172.)

If, while in the performance of his duty, he had been injured by the fall of a carelessly piled lot of baggage, the performance of his duty would have been the mediate cause, for no responsibility would rest on him for the intervening cause. Otherwise, if in an interference with the baggage-master's province and duties he had seized a trunk and brought it down on his head. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172.)

"Line of duty" and "not misconduct," are not synonymous terms.—Is it the intent of the law to give a pension generally, as the normal fact, and with exception only of the few extraordinary cases of death proved to be the consequence of a palpable violation of duty? Or is the right of pension to be restricted to the cases of death having some proved or probable relation to duty, whether as causation or as a concomitant circumstance? (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 153.)

The law does not say, any disease "not the consequence of misconduct;" and if that had been the category contemplated by the legislator, he would have propounded it in simple and apt phraseology. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 160.)

The Attorney-General can not yield assent to the proposition that every person in the service, who is not on furlough nor under arrest, and who dies of ordinary death in the course of nature not traceable to mere vice or other specific misconduct, in other words, that all cases of natural death, with some rare exceptions of disease of provable misbehavior, are deaths by disease contracted in the line of duty. This doctrine is not a thing adjudicated, nor as a question of novel impression, is it good law. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 156.)

It is not a satisfactory definition to say that "every officer in full commission, and not on furlough, must be considered in the line of his duty, although, at the moment, no particular or active duty is devolved upon him," and "the same of a soldier (or sailor) who is kept in pay," even though such definition be qualified by introducing the exceptions of "voluntary absence," from duty, and of "vicious or unjustifiable conduct," while on duty. This definition is faulty by reason of its regarding the "line of duty" as an absolute status of the party in service, when it is, in truth, a status relative to certain specific legal conditions. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 159.)

The words "line of duty" can not properly be held to embrace every cause of death not due to the misconduct of the deceased, but are used by Congress in a more limited sense in its various enactments relating to the disability or death of persons in the Army or Navy. This conclusion is supported by the fact that the law providing for the allowance of six months' pay to the widow or designated beneficiary of deceased officers or enlisted men of the Navy [act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128] originally applied by its terms to cases where the death was due to "wounds or disease contracted in line of duty," but by act of August 22, 1912 [37 Stat., 329], Congress substituted the words "not the result of his own misconduct" for the words "contracted in the line of duty," this amendment being made for the express purpose of giving the law a broader application. (See Navy Department's circular of July 10, 1914, publishing changes and corrections in "Forms of Procedure for Courts and Boards in the Navy and Marine Corps, 1910," pp. 224, 225; see also Naval Courts and Boards, 1917. An identical change had previously been made in the similar legislation relating to the Army. See 43 Cong. Rec., 2688.)

Rule applicable to diseases, same as in cases of injuries.—In all the statutes the condition of "line of duty" stands in exactly the same relation to wounds, to drowning, or other casualty and to personal injuries as it does to diseases; and if it were held that all possible deaths by disease happening to a person in the service are of disease in the line of duty in public service, it must in like manner be held that all possible wounds and casualties happening to a person in the service are in the line of duty in the public service. That the latter is not so, is proved by what is the well-established and well-understood rule of law in regard to contingencies of personal encounter producing wounds or death. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 157.)

The true meaning of the phrase "line of duty" is the same whether the cause of disability or of death to be considered is a wound, a casualty, an injury, or a disease. Whatever is of the essence of "line of duty" in any one of these cases is so in the others. It being established or admitted that a "wound" or death by personal violence, in order to become the foundation of pension, must have logical correlation with military duty, it must be so in the case of "casualty" and of "disease." (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 160.)

The same rule applies to wounds, injuries, and disease; for in the law they stand together in a single class. The result is that neither injury nor disease can authorize the granting of a pension under the acts of Congress unless it is caused by the presence of its victim in the line of duty when it was received or contracted. (Rhodes v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep., 740.)

"LINE OF DUTY" AS DEFINED BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

"Line of duty" is synonymous with "not misconduct."—As a general proposition, a soldier is in line of duty until separated from the service by death or discharge, if during such time he is submitting to all of its laws and regulations. While on leave of absence he may be ordered to active duty at any time, and to this end the department is to be kept constantly informed as to his address and all changes in same. The provisions for furloughs or leaves of absence are a part of the disciplinary regulations of the military service and no more separate a man from the service than an order to report to a different command. The statute confers its benefits whenever the soldier dies while in the service generally, and submitting to its rules and regulations, from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct. The amendment of the Army death gratuity law so as to read "not the result of his own misconduct," instead of "contracted in the line of duty," did not broaden the application of the original statute in the least. It only made absolutely certain, in unmistakable terms, the intent which the Court of Claims' construction afterwards gave the original law, and thereby reinforced that construction. It is not necessary to decide in any case when and where the soldier contracted the disease. The court is not called upon to take evidence and decide when the germs of typhoid fever, tuberculosis, or other disease first began to incubate. Otherwise, the evidence might show that a soldier engaged in active war duties for years, and in the midst of which he died of tuberculosis, contracted the disease before he entered the service. In this case the soldier died while on leave of absence from disease. Held, that it must be regarded as "disease contracted in line of duty," although it does not specifically appear when or where he contracted the disease. (Moore v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 110. But see above, under "Line of Duty Defined," sub-heading "Intention of Congress".)

The Attorney General is unable to agree that the correct rule is as broad as the language of the Court of Claims makes it. That construction makes "line of duty" practically synonymous with "in active service" and robs it of all meaning, since the act uses both expressions with the evident intention that the one shall limit the other. The soldier must be in active service, and the disease must be contracted in line of duty. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 12, 22, construing War Risk Ins. Act of June 25, 1918, sec. 300, 40 Stat., 611.)

The Attorney General agrees with the Court of Claims that "the provisions for furloughs or leaves of absence are a part of the disciplinary regulations of the military service, and no more separate a man from the service than an order to report to a different command." (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 12, 25, 197.)

For discussion of the foregoing decision of the Court of Claims, see file 26250-1491:1, Oct. 29, 1918, and file 26250-1372, Mar. 3, 1919.

EVIDENCE IN LINE OF DUTY CASES.

Testimony of medical experts.—Casualty is a question of fact, to be proved according to the ordinary rules of evidence and to the reasonable satisfaction of the inquiring and deciding mind. That mind is entitled to have the full facts before it, and is not bound to accept as final the opinions even of an expert. Such opinions are evidence, but neither conclusive nor exclusive proof. Every person of judicial training well knows that the opinions of medical or other scientific or practical experts often differ, and that they sometimes err in a body as if by some epidemic contagion. There is a judicial case involving scientific inquiry, in the printed record of which are the answers of 23 experts to the same question; 22 of them give decision one way, and a single one of them gives a reverse decision; and in the conclusion it was proved beyond all controversy, that he alone was right and that all others erred. In general, the opinions of an expert are of more or less weight and value, according to the person's constitution of mind, and the degree of completeness of the collection of pertinent facts on which his mind acts. But it may happen that the great body of the wisest and learnedest men of science shall be possessed by an erroneous opinion, while the true secret of nature is revealed to some discoverer who as yet is unknown to the world and is painfully struggling up into the sunlight of greatness and of fame. In a word, no witness, whether expert or not, can rightfully claim to have his opinion take the place of the facts, and so to substitute his judgment for that of the officer who is vested by law with the authority to decide. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 150, 165.)

The question was presented to a court of inquiry in the case of a naval officer who committed suicide, "whether he was insane at the time of committing suicide, and if so, whether such insanity was incident to the service." Celebrated medical experts testified in behalf of petitioner that in their opinion the deceased was insane, his insanity being due partly to the nature of the work (indexing) on which he had been engaged for some time prior to his death. One of these experts testified to having himself performed work of the same character, and was asked by the court: "Did you ever have suicidal impulses or fear that you would have them?" To which he replied: "I have had the fear very strongly indeed at the top of high buildings, and standing alongside the rushing water of the Yosemite Falls at the top of the cliff, so strongly that I laid down on the ground and so retreated." Another expert witness for the petitioner having also testified to his opinion that the deceased was insane, was examined by the court in part as follows: "Q. If a man admitted having suicidal impulses, such as jumping from high buildings, jumping into waterfalls, etc., to such an extent that he avoided places of this sort, and lay flat on the ground when in such positions, would you consider him as having a mental disorder, and if so, what? A. Yes, I should say that he had a mental disorder to the degree of his phobia or obsessions, which would be the technical description of it. Q. Could you classify this as insanity in court? A. Technically and correctly speaking, yes. Practically you would explain what you meant by it." In recording its finding that the deceased "was not insane at the time of committing suicide," the court remarked with reference to the testimony of these witnesses for the petitioner: "As regards the conclusions to be drawn from the existence of these minor psychical manifestations, we are confronted by the picture of an acknowledged authority in psycho-pathology diagnosing a mental disorder in a man as positively sane as Doctor * * *. It is true that this diagnosis was qualified, yet it shows the difficulty of distinguishing in a medico-legal way those conditions which, while not strictly normal, are nevertheless of insufficient severity to permit their classification under the head of insanity." (Ct. Inq. Rec. No. 5777.)

Where the proofs are balanced, presumption should be in favor of line of duty.—The question of the quality or degree of proof requisite, is a question clearly for the conscience of the deciding officer. If called upon to suggest any rule for the guidance of his discretion in the matter, it would be obvious to say that the pension laws are beneficial in their nature, and therefore to be construed beneficially in matters of inevitable doubt. In this view, the mere fact of an officer having died in the service, and with utter absence of proof as to the origin or cause of his death, is not sufficient to raise a pension; but where the proofs are balanced, and it is impossible to determine by them as to the fact of "disease contracted," and the fact of "line of duty" found in juxtaposition, whether this collocation be of contiguity only, or of actor and subject—of contemporaneity or sequence only, or of cause and consequence—it would be reasonable to presume in favor of pension; and also to presume in favor of pension in cases where the line of duty appears to enter potentially into the cause of the death, although it should happen not to be certainly provable that it was the exclusive or predominant cause; so that a possible error of absolute and mere uncertainty shall not be suffered to defeat the liberal intentions and beneficial policy of the Government. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 150, 166.)

Evidence in cases of suicide.—Suicide is not of itself a pensionable cause of death and if the suicide is alleged to have been produced by insanity, and thus insanity be put forward as the causa causans, then it must be shown that the insanity was the result of or incidental to acts of duty. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 150, 155.)

Suicide is so unlikely a result of an act of duty that the presumption in such cases must be against line of duty in the absence of evidence affirmatively showing that it was caused by the service. (File 26250-230.3.)

See also above, "Testimony of medical experts;" and see below, "Specific cases involving 'line of duty' or 'incident of the service.'"

Burden of proof.—When an officer is examined for retirement, it is incumbent upon him to show, in order to secure a report which will entitle him to be placed on the retired list, rather than on the retired list on furlough pay, that his incapacity was the result of some incident of the service. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568, 573.)

SPECIFIC CASES INVOLVING "LINE OF DUTY" OR "INCIDENT OF THE SERVICE."

Injury from accidental causes while on leave of absence.—Decedents, while on leave of absence, went to a hotel together, engaged a room, and were later found asphyxiated as the result of a gas jet in the room having been left turned on and unlighted when they retired. Held, not line of duty. (File 26250-238, 239, and 240.)

Deceased, while on leave of absence and not performing any act connected with the service, was run over by a train. Held, not line of duty. (File 26250-228.)

An enlisted man on authorized leave of absence from his ship at Brest, France, was injured while en route to Paris by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of a soldier riding beside him on the train. Held, line of duty. This man was in Europe solely because he was in active service under the Navy Department.

As part of the disciplinary regulations of the service he was given a temporary leave of absence and permitted to visit Paris. On the way to Paris the accident occurred and he was injured just as any other passenger on the train might have been injured. There was no intervening cause for which he was responsible. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 193, 198.)

Attempting to save life while on liberty.—An officer of the Naval Reserve Force while on leave of absence was injured by a pistol shot in attempting to assist a woman in distress. Held, not in line of duty, because due to an intervening cause having no connection with the service. It resulted from the performance of a duty which he owed not as a soldier but as a member of society. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 193, 198. But see, contra, C. M. O. 71, 1918, p. 19.)

Injury due to performance of specific act of duty while on liberty.—An enlisted man, while on liberty, was stabbed by a drunken cabman while endeavoring to get an injured shipmate back to his vessel, an act in the line of his duty performed while on liberty. Held, line of duty. (File 9331, Apr. 10, 1908.)

Status during intervals between hours of duty.—A yeoman in the Navy on duty at the U. S. Naval Headquarters, London, England, was killed by a motor bus in the immediate vicinity of said headquarters but about three hours after he had completed his duty for the day. Held, line of duty. A soldier in camp is not always occupied in the actual performance of some military duty. During periods of rest he is more or less free to walk around within the limits of the camp. When assigned to duty not in a camp, but in a city, he has like freedom, and was just as much in line of duty as if walking around in camp, and such an accident as is liable to happen to any one pursuing such a course is the logical incident of his service. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 193, 196.)

Status while traveling from and returning to post of duty.—"All the consequences of the absence of an officer or a soldier from his post of duty on his own motion for his own purposes of business or of pleasure must be regarded as outside the line of duty. While traveling from and returning to the post of duty on an ordinary furlough, given for such purposes, he is at his own risk as to causes of disability to which he may be subjected." (4 P. D., 54; 7 P. D., 102; 16 P. D., 21; House Doc. No. 5, 54th Cong., 2d sess., p. 74.)

A soldier, in attempting to pass the guard with a written permit, was injured by the sentinel. If the pass was given to him solely for the purpose of enabling him to attend to his private affairs, and if, at the time he was injured, he was going about his private business, he can in no sense be considered as in the public service. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 155; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 590.)

When a person returning from leave or liberty, and prior to expiration thereof, enters a boat provided by the Government for his transportation back to his vessel he is once more within the control of the naval authorities, and if killed or injured without the intervention of any cause for which he was responsible, a finding of line of duty would be proper. But if he is returning to his vessel in a private conveyance of his own selection he would not be in a line of duty status unless actually engaged in the performance of an act of duty. (See Navy Department's circular of July 10, 1914, publishing changes and corrections in "Forms of Procedure for Courts and Boards in the Navy and Marine Corps, 1910," pp. 224, 225; see also Naval Courts and Boards, 1917.)

A man returning to his post of duty after an ordinary furlough, and killed in consequence of the automobile in which he was traveling being struck by a railroad train, was in the line of duty at the time of death. It was the duty of the man to return to his post before expiration of his furlough. He was doing this when the accident happened, and there was no intervening cause for which he was responsible. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 193, 197.)

Homicide.—A yeoman (female) in the Naval Reserve Force was killed by her husband while she was returning to her home upon the completion of her duty for the day. Her death was not the result of her own misconduct. But it was not in line of duty, as it resulted from jealousy on the part of her husband; in other words, it grew out of the domestic relations of the yeoman, entirely separate and distinct from her relations to the Government. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 193, 196.)

Deceased, while on liberty, was murdered by a shipmate in consequence of some difficulty between the two men of a wholly personal nature. Held, not line of duty. (File 26250-214.)

Liberty granted for specific purpose encouraged by Navy Regulations.—If a man is given permission to go on shore for the express purpose of engaging in athletic sports or exercises encouraged by the Navy Regulations, or permission to go swimming or boating, and is injured or killed without negligence or other cause for which he was responsible, the finding should be line of duty. Where, however, a man is granted liberty for his own purposes, and while on liberty goes in swimming and is drowned, the mere fact that swimming is encouraged by the regulations is not sufficient ground for holding that his death occurred in line of duty. In such a case the general rule applies and it must be held that his death resulted from the exercise of his private rights and was not caused by "an act of duty performed." (File 26250-277:1; 14 P. D., 114. See Navy Department's circular of July 10, 1914, publishing changes and corrections in "Forms of Procedure for Courts and Boards in the Navy and Marine Corps, 1910," pp. 224, 225; see also Naval Courts and Boards, 1917. But see 32 Op. Atty. Gen., 12, 193, noted above.)

Death as result of medical treatment.—An enlisted man, suffering from a disease which resulted from his own misconduct, died in consequence of salvarsan poisoning resulting from medical treatment administered by proper medical authority. Held, line of duty; death was not the result of the disease but of the medical treatment for the disease. (File 26543-213, Apr. 29, 1918, C. M. O. 37, 1918, p. 23. Compare 32 Op. Atty. Gen., 24, 199.)

Exercising.—Surgeon Thomas Miland was found by a retiring board, March 1, 1883, to be incapacitated for active service by reason of the amputation of his right leg, as the result of an injury caused by taking horseback exercise in Chile, which was shown to be necessary for his health, he having been ill. The injury was held to have "originated in the line of duty." (See Ret. Bd. Rec., vol. 21, 1881-82, case No. 284.)

"As swimming is an exercise prescribed by the regulations in the routine of exercises and drills," where an ordinary seaman was drowned while in swimming, and was not guilty of contributory negligence or gross negligence, "his death occurred in line of duty." (File 2195-63, June 7, 1907.)

Harrison Henry Foster, mess attendant third class, died as the result of injuries received during a boxing match on board the U. S. S. Vermont, June 31, 1909. The board of inquest reported that Foster "died in line of duty * * * and that no blame is attached to any person or persons connected with this occurrence." The report of the board was "not approved" by the commander in chief of the U. S. Atlantic Fleet. The disapproval, however, evidently related to the responsibility for Foster's death, and not to the finding that it was in line of duty. The death gratuity provided by the act of May 13, 1908 (line of duty), was paid to Foster's beneficiary by check No. 72274, of September 21, 1909.

In the case of A. J. Horgan, oiler, U. S. Navy, the question arose whether an injury to his teeth during a football game on November 23, 1907, was "in line of duty." The Bureau of Navigation made the following report in the case: "The policy of the Navy Department is to foster athletics in the Navy, and the bureau considers that football and other athletic contests of enlisted men on shore are conducive to their physical development and well-being and better fit them for the performance of their duties on board ship, and that injuries received in these contests may be but justly considered in the line of duty." The papers were forwarded to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery January 3, 1908 (file 458-5), with the following indorsement: "The department considers that the within-mentioned injury occurred in the line of duty."

A board of inquest, August 18, 1909 (file 26250-89), in the case of Joseph Martin Seithel, coal passer, U. S. Navy, found that the deceased "died from injuries received while exercising in the gymnasium; that the deceased met his death in line of duty, and that no one is in any way responsible for same."

An injury suffered by a person otherwise in the line of duty shall not be held to have been suffered "not in the line of duty" for the reason that the negligence of such person contributed to the injury, or that it was the result of participation in some form of lawful sport or recreation not contrary to regulations or orders. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 14, 24.)

Prisoner.—While a prisoner may be injured or killed in line of duty, as shown by the examples given by the Attorney General in his opinion [quoted above, under "May be in line of duty although not on duty"], such cases must be exceptional ones rather than the rule. Thus, where an enlisted man is performing hard labor under sentence of general court-martial, and an injury received by him is wholly due to the execution of such sentence, it can not be held line of duty. (15 P. D., 54; 5 P. D., 151.) If an enlisted man is arrested or imprisoned but on trial is adjudged not guilty, a disease incurred during his arrest and imprisonment is within the line of duty (4 P. D., 103). If the man died while awaiting trial, a disease so contracted is held to have been incurred in line of duty. (14 P. D., 213). But in a case where a private in the Marine Corps was burned to death while in confinement by the civil authorities awaiting trial, and the evidence showed that his imprisonment was the result of misconduct (drunkenness) while on liberty, his death was held not to have occurred in line of duty. (File 26250-218. Compare file 26285-30, Apr. 7, 1909; file 26543-20, Jan. 28, 1909. Navy Department's circular of July 10, 1914, publishing changes and corrections in "Forms of Procedure for Courts and Boards in the Navy and Marine Corps, 1910," pp. 224, 225; see also Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, p. 290; and C. M. O. 71, 1918, p. 20, stating that the decision of Apr. 7, 1909, is no longer in force.)

A soldier who died while in confinement in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial, did not die "while on duty," within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1224, 1225), which provides for the payment of transportation and burial expenses of soldiers who die "while on duty away from home." (6 Comp. Dec., 453.)

"Suppose that on march in camp or garrison, or on a voyage, an officer is put in arrest on charges. In the first place those charges may not be substantiated, and then it would be manifestly unjust that the mere fact of his being charged should operate to deprive himself or his family of pension. Or, while he is in arrest, he dies of camp fever or ship fever, and then it is unjust to presume a criminality not proved in the course of law. Or, whether guilty or not, if he die of wounds, casualty, or disease contracted while in arrest, still the death is not the consequence of the arrest, but of the public service. If not dying in arrest, and on trial being convicted and sentenced, that sentence be of death or dismissal for some grave military crime, that of course terminates the question of pension; but if his offence be a light one, with a sentence of reprimand, for instance, and he shall have happened to contract disability or mortal disease while in arrest, as by the hazards of a long march or voyage, it seems not just to add to his legal sentence the serious indirect aggravation of incapacity of pension." (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 164.)

When confined under sentence one becomes a prisoner and, for the time being, ceases to be a soldier employed in active service. Not so as to one under strict confinement or arrest involving suspension from duty while awaiting trial and disposition of his case, even if the trial results in conviction, provided he is not resisting lawful arrest. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 14, 24.)

Violation of duty.—Death resulted from injuries received by the deceased while on board ship in a duty status, "entering a bunker and striking a match there," which acts "were both against orders." Held, that death was the result of "misconduct or violation of duty," and was not, therefore, the result of an injury received in the line of duty. (File 26543-55.)

Horseplay.—An enlisted man is not in line of duty while engaged in scuffling or squabbling with his companions, or voluntarily engaged in what is commonly known as "horseplay," although at the time on board the ship to which he is attached. (5 P. D., 47; 6 P. D., 22; 14 P. D., 81; 14 P. D., 506; Rhodes v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep., 740; file 25250-66. But see 32 Op. Atty. Gen., 12, noted above.)

Overdose of poison.—"It has repeatedly been held that where the death of the soldier * * * was caused by an overdose of a narcotic or other poison, which had been either prescribed originally by a physician in the United States service, or taken upon the soldier's own responsibility through mistake, and with no suicidal intent, such death cause can not be accepted as a competent basis for claim." (1 P. D., 111, case of Travers, hospital steward; file 26250-288:2, case of Pasteur, hospital apprentice.)

Disability existing prior to enlistment.—Death or injury while on duty, resulting from disability existing prior to enlistment, does not come within the "line of duty" category. (16 P. D., 172.)

However, when a disability which originated prior to and at the date of enlistment, is revived and aggravated as the immediate result of an accident or of an incident in the line of duty, the injurious consequences of such aggravation may amount to line of duty. (3 P. D., 41.)

In the latter case, it is necessary to establish some cause or injury resulting from or incurred in service in line of duty sufficient to produce a recurrence of said disability—some cause without which the recurrence would not have happened—and not merely natural aggravation of an already existing disability. (3 P. D., 187.)

For the purpose of compensation under the War Risk Insurance Act for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the line of duty, the "officer, enlisted man, or other member shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service." (Act June 25, 1918, sec. 300, 40 Stat., 611, amending act Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 300, 40 Stat., 405.)

Predisposition to disease is no bar to pension if the disease did not develop until after claimant's admission to the service. (3 P. D., 228; 16 P. D., 413.)

Suicide.—In a proper case, death by suicide may be held to have occurred in the line of duty, but the facts supporting such a conclusion must be definitely ascertained and established. (File 26250-86; 1 P. D., 111; 1 P. D., 108; 5 P. D., 32; 17 P. D., 50.)

In the case of F. C. McKeehan, chief yeoman, U. S. Navy, the board of inquest reported, July 13, 1909, that the deceased "committed suicide by shooting himself through the head while temporarily insane." The medical member of the board stated that "There is good evidence that the injury was in line of duty, as the patient was insane at the time of committing the act. He shot himself through the head while temporarily insane from close, constant, and continuous application to the books and records of this ship. He evidenced symptoms of marked depression verging on melancholia before the arrival of the ship in San Francisco." The record was returned for an expression of the board's opinion as to how far the death of McKeehan was due to any act of duty. On August 14, 1909, the board reassembled and made the following report: "The board concurs in the opinion expressed by Dr. Bacon, assistant surgeon, U. S. Navy, and believes that the death of McKeehan, chief yeoman, U. S. Navy, was directly due to the worries and exactions of his official duties for which duties the board feels that he was never mentally qualified." After consideration by the Department, the record was again returned to the board with the following indorsement by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, September 3, 1909: "It would appear that there is a decided lack of definite and authoritative evidence in the record to warrant the statement of opinion that McKeehan's death was 'directly due to the worries and exactions of his official duties for which duties the board feels that he was never mentally qualified.' The main point in question, in view of the board's finding that McKeehan 'committed suicide by shooting himself through the head,' is whether the cause of the suicide was directly traceable to the service. Therefore, it is directed that the board be ordered to reconvene and, after a further and more complete investigation upon the above-mentioned point of information required, render their opinion after spreading upon the record, full and completely, the reasons leading to the formulation of such opinion." The board thereupon reconvened and reported that: "After examining witnesses 'who were most closely in touch, either personally or officially, with Mr. McKeehan, the board adheres to its former opinion that McKeehan's death was directly due to the worries and exactions of his official duties, for which duties the board feels that he was never mentally qualified. Although the board is of the opinion that McKeehan might have taken his life at some time later, it is of the opinion that the direct cause was the worry about his work not being properly performed, his fear of being disrated, and also his worry about his physical condition, all of which are fully brought out in the testimony.'" The finding of the board was approved by the Department, October 25, 1909. (File 26250-86.)

In the case of John L. Cunningham, master at arms, first class, (file 26250-132), the board of inquest reported, January 15, 1910, that the deceased "died a natural death, caused in part, however, by a pulmonary and cerebral oedema, subsequent to attempt at suicide. The death of J. L. Cunningham, master at arms, first class, United States Navy, was in the line of duty, following attempt at suicide during an attack of melancholia, which was incident to over 13 years in the United States Navy."

Refusal of officer to submit to operation.—The finding of a retiring board that the present incapacity of an officer "is due to the fact that he will not submit to an operation recommended by responsible medical officers of the Navy, and is therefore not the result of an incident of the service," should be disapproved. The officer was injured by a fall in leaving a recruiting station where he was on duty, resulting in hernia; he was operated on the next day at a local hospital; thereafter he was incapacitated for duty, the medical members of the board finding that his incapacity consisted of a chronic intestinal obstruction, probably due to adhesions, and possible chronic appendicitis, the chronic intestinal obstruction having followed an operation for strangulated inguinal hernia, right side, the said hernia having been contracted in line of duty. In the earlier or preliminary part of the finding, the board says, after stating the cause of this officer's present condition, "that this condition could probably be relieved by an operation * * *." Here, as well as throughout the testimony and findings of previous boards in the case, there is no assurance as to relief. Various expressions are used, indicating a caution of expression on this point which in such cases as this is probably reasonable; but which are, nevertheless, significant. The evidence given before the board does not show that the operation would be a harmless or minor one. On the contrary, from the expressions relative to the matter as given in the testimony of the medical officers, it appears to be one of considerable gravity. A capital operation is said to be "one involving some danger to life;" a major operation is defined as "an important and serious operation;" and a minor operation as "a comparatively trivial" one. Any surgical procedure that involves an opening into one of the large cavities of the body is presumably serious, especially as in this case when there is much doubt as to the exact nature of the ailment. In this case the procedure advised is one attended with sufficient risk to take it out of the class of minor operations and put it into the class, at least, of major if not of capital operations. No law or regulation of the Navy is known which applies directly to the conditions involved in the case here under consideration; nor is any custom or usage known which would require that an officer submit to a major or capital operation. Under such circumstances it is not perceived upon what exact ground the officer should be compelled to submit to the operation advised. Held, that the finding should be disapproved, the operation being one to which the officer should not be required to submit. The result arrived at does not necessitate an inquiry into the question whether, if the disability of this officer was one which required for his relief an operation to which he might be compelled to submit, he should under such circumstances be regarded as suffering from a disability not the result of an incident of the service. A review of the opinions of Attorneys General (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 181, 7 Op. Atty. Gen., 149, 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 172) relating to the subject of "line of duty," does not appear to show that such might be the case. If the officer in this case should die at the present time, without having submitted to the advised operation, it could hardly be held, if his demise was due to his injury in question, that his death was not the result of an incident of the service. (File 26253-98, May 17, 1910. See, also, note to sec. 1368 R. S., under "Compulsory medical treatment of persons in Navy.")

Sec. 1452. [Record of proceedings; revision by President.] A record of the proceedings and decision of the board in each case shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Navy, and shall be laid by him before the President for his approval or disapproval, or orders in the case.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291.)

Judge Advocate General shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, receive, revise, and have recorded, the records of all retiring boards in the Navy and Marine Corps. (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164, amended by act June 5, 1896, 29 Stat., 251.)

President may direct the Secretary of the Navy to take such action on the records of proceedings of naval examining boards and boards of naval surgeons for the promotion of officers of the Navy, as is now required by law to be taken by the President. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 20, 40 Stat., 90.)

Cannot be retired without President's approval.—The conclusions of any military court, board, or commission, must, before being carried into execution, have the approval of the commander in chief or of some one representing him. Accordingly, even where the law does not expressly provide for approval of boards in the Army, such boards must receive the approval of the Secretary of War, whose action is conclusively presumed to be that of the President, in order to be valid and effective. It is not, however, essential that this approval should be express or indicated in any formal language; it might be indicated by merely giving effect, through appropriate orders, to the findings of the board. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 193; see also 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 347.)

Action of the President is necessary before retirement can be made; and an officer accordingly can not be deprived of active-duty pay as of a prior date. (12 Comp. Dec., 628; see note to sec. 1457, R. S.)

Under the laws regulating retirements in the Army (secs. 1250, 1251, R. S.), no officer can be retired from the Army upon the report of any board, even if such report be approved by the Secretary of War, except it "is approved by the President." (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385.)

An officer of the Army was examined for promotion and found incapacitated for active service on account of certain physical disabilities; this finding was approved by the Surgeon General and by the Major General Commanding the Army, and by the Acting Secretary of War; the officer was notified that he would be retired at the proper time, and was granted sick leave of absence until further orders. Held, even if the action of the examining board were to be regarded and treated as that of a

Ordered to hospital while on furlough.—As the furlough of a soldier is terminated by being ordered by competent authority to a hospital for treatment, he is while in the hospital in obedience to said orders "on duty" within the meaning of the laws allowing payment of expense of his medical care and treatment. (12 Comp. Dec., 562; compare 6 Comp. Dec., 444.)

retiring board, still it would be inoperative to effect his retirement until approved by the President. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385.)

No power of review exists after President's approval.—Whether the finding of the board was warranted by the evidence adduced is an inquiry that can not now be gone into, as no power of review over the proceedings of the retiring board exists by law where its finding has been once approved by the President and his "orders in the case" executed. The result is that the objection urged by Paymaster Rodney can not be considered in connection with any part of the record of proceedings of the board except the finding, and this affords no foundation for such objection. Accordingly, held that there is no legal ground for setting aside the proceedings of the retiring board and revoking the order of retirement in this case. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 446; see also Dig. Comp. Dec., 493, noted under sec. 1451, R. S., "Findings not subject to review by accounting officers;" and see notes to secs. 1454 and 1457, R. S.)

Newly discovered evidence.—Where an officer was found by a board of examination to be physically qualified for promotion, but deficient in professional qualifications, and it afterwards developed that he was at the time of his examination suffering from a disability incurred in the line of duty, which disqualified him for promotion, it is within the power of the Secretary of War, representing the President, to order a new physical examination. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 193.)

Proceedings contrary to law.—Where the President possesses the power of review, he has the power, as a necessary incident to the power of review, if he finds that an officer has not had such an examination as the law declares he shall have, or, in other words, if the proceedings are fatally defective, to treat the proceedings of the board as a nullity and direct an examination in accordance with law. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 193, 201.)

An opinion and recommendation of an examining board made under a misconstruction of the law cannot control distinct statutory provisions which limit retirements. Accordingly, where an officer has been erroneously retired in accordance with the board's finding which was contrary to law, it is the duty of the President to correct such action. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 7.)

Delay in President's action.—An officer of the Army was found incapacitated for active service by a retiring board in April, 1879. This finding was not approved by the President until February 26, 1891, whereupon he was placed on the retired list pursuant to section 1251, Revised Statutes [which is similar to section 1453, Revised Statutes, relating to the Navy]. In the meantime he was granted extended sick leave until July 20, 1889, when he was ordered to duty: Held, that his retirement was strictly in accordance with section 1251 of the Revised Statutes. (Steinmetz v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 404. See also note to sec. 1502, R. S.)

Sec. 1453. [Disability due to an incident of the service.] When a retiring-board finds that an officer is incapacitated for active service, and that his incapacity is the result of an incident of the service, such officer shall, if said decision is approved by the President, be retired from active service with retired pay, as allowed by Chapter Eight of this Title.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291.)

"Chapter Eight of this Title" refers to sections 1556–1595, Revised Statutes.

Incident of the service defined. See note to section 1451, Revised Statutes.

Pay of officers retired for disability incident to the service. See section 1588, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Pay of retired officers on active duty. See note to section 1462, Revised Statutes.

Rank of officers on retirement for disability incurred in line of duty. See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes.

Retirement for disability a "benefit" to officers.—See note to section 1448, Revised Statutes.

The pay to which officers on the retired list are entitled is usually a certain per cent of the pay to which they would be entitled if on the active list with the rank and length of service they had at the date of retirement. (15 Comp. Dec., 72.)

See note to sections 1448 and 1451, Revised Statutes, for citations bearing upon this section.

Sec. 1454. [Officers wholly retired, or retired on furlough pay.] When said board finds that an officer is incapacitated for active service and that his incapacity is not the result of any incident of the service, such officer shall, if said decision is approved by the President, be retired from active service on furlough-pay, or wholly retired from service with one year's pay, as the President may determine.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291.)

Furlough pay of retired officers. See section 1593, Revised Statutes.

Misconduct, officers can not be retired for. See section 1456, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Names of officers wholly retired shall be omitted from the Navy Register (sec. 1457, R. S.).

Transfer from furlough to retired pay list was authorized by section 1594, Revised Statutes. (But see act Aug. 5, 1882, 22 Stat., 286, and see cases noted below.)

Constitutionality of statute.—The jurisdiction of the President over the relations of an officer to the Army and his right to determine whether an officer incapacitated for service be placed on the retired list or wholly retired, are created by statute, and the President's authority therefore is wholly dependent upon the letter of positive enactment. (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 528.)

The regulation of the retired list by Congress can in no wise interfere with the constitutional power of the President as Commander-in-Chief. As to such enactments he becomes an executive officer, and is limited in the discharge of his duty by statute. (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 528.)

The purpose of the law embodied in sections 1229 and 1624, article 36, Revised Statutes, restricting the dismissal of officers of the Army and Navy, was not to attach a life tenure or element of vested right to the office, but to save officers in time of peace from the ignominy of a hasty and dishonorable dismissal. It was an exercise of the legislative power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces" [Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 14]; related to the punishment or protection of individual officers; and was intended to secure to each officer a trial by court-martial in all cases "in time of peace." On the other hand, the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 314), providing for the reduction of the Army and the mustering out by the President, with one year's pay, of officers found by a board to be unfit for the proper discharge of their duties "for any cause except injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of their duty," was an exercise of the legislative power "to raise and support armies" [Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 12]; related to the Army at large; and was intended to reduce the Army of the United States from 45 to 25 regiments. The two laws are neither in conflict nor in pari materia; they spring from different provisions of the Constitution, and have entirely different purposes. (Street v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 230.)

See notes to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 14, and Article II, section 2, clause 1, "Powers of Congress and of the President."

Not repealed by later general laws.—Section 1442, Revised Statutes, gives the right to furlough an officer of the Navy, and section 1557 fixes the proportion of the pay that he shall have while on furlough. Section 1454 provides for retiring officers of the Navy on furlough pay, and section 1593 provides specifically that such officers shall receive only one-half of the pay to which they would have been entitled if on leave of absence on the active list. These sections have not been repealed. (15 Comp. Dec., 73; see also Hannum v. U. S., 226 U. S., 436.)

Congress having for the past 30 years preserved a distinction between naval officers "on the retired list," and such officers "on the retired list with furlough pay," a statute providing for the pay of naval officers on the "retired list" will not be held to abolish the furlough-pay list. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568).

An officer was retired in conformity with the provisions of section 1454, Revised Statutes, on furlough pay, upon finding of retiring board that he was incapacitated for active service, not as a result of an incident of the service. Held, that laws regulating the pay of commissioned officers of the Navy do not apply to officers "who were retired because of their own misconduct, as provided by section 1454," but only to commissioned officers on the active list. (Hannum v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 320; affirmed, 226 U. S., 436.) [That court was in error in treating section 1454 as providing for the retirement of officers "because of their own misconduct," see section 1456, Revised Statutes, and note thereto. That incapacity due to misconduct is not the only class of physical disability which is not the result of any incident of the service, see note to section 1451, Revised Statutes.]

The act of July 16, 1862, provided that the annual pay of retired naval officers shall be as follows, viz: Admirals, $2,000; commodores, $1,800; captains, $1,600; etc., etc., embracing the several grades down to and including ensigns. It was held that under that act all officers on the retired list were classified for pay purposes according to rank only, and that when the rank of an officer in any case was determined, the law itself declared in dollars what should be his annual pay, notwithstanding that he may have been placed on the retired list expressly on the footing of a rate called furlough pay; that by said act of 1862 a new and uniform rule for the pay of retired officers was adopted, which superseded furlough pay; that opinions in regard to repeals by implication not being favored, have no application to this question; and that where the law made no exception none could be made by construction; it covers the whole subject of pay of the officers enumerated, and makes no exception as to furlough pay. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 222.) [It would seem that this opinion held the law of August 3, 1861, to be repealed by the act of July 16, 1862, but that nevertheless said law of 1861 was incorporated into the Revised Statutes as section 1454; see Brown v. U. S., noted above.]

Meaning of "wholly retired."—"What is it to be wholly retired from the service? It is nothing less than to be put out of the Army and out of office." (Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 338, 353.)

Any form of removal of an officer from his office without his consent is a dismissal. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 600; but see note to sec. 1456, R. S., and see file 26260-1392, noted below.)

The various methods by which persons in the military or naval service of the United States may be involuntarily separated therefrom are embraced in the terms "discharged," "dismissed," and "wholly retired" [and "dropped from the service": see section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended; or dropped "from the rolls": see section 1229, Revised Statutes, and note thereto. The word "discharged" is properly limited in its application to those who have enlisted for definite periods (citing Emory v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 254, 262), and unless qualified by other words, as, for example, "dishonorable" discharge, "bad conduct" discharge, discharge "without honor," it does not carry with it any stigma of disgrace or punishment. "Dismissed" is a term peculiarly applicable to officers and is the equivalent of dishonorable discharge. "Wholly retired" is a phrase coined for the purpose of conveying, with reference to officers, the same idea as attaches to the word "discharged" when applied to enlisted men. The meaning of these terms and the importance of distinguishing between them was discussed by the Court of Claims in the case of Emory v. U. S. (19 Ct. Cls., 254, 263), in which it was said: "Other instances can be found in the statute-books where the legislative draftsman has been embarrassed by the technical meanings which the Army attaches to these words. Thus the act 3d August, 1861 (12 Stat. L., p. 289, sec. 17), provided a method for clearing the Army of officers incapacitated for service. As to those who were incapacitated from long and faithful service, by wounds, &c., it provided that they should be placed on the retired list. As to those whose incapacity was not the direct result of their service the statute intended that they should be removed from office with one year's pay. But the draftsman manifestly could not find a term or phrase to express that idea. If the statute should say 'discharged' it would use a term applicable to enlisted men; if it should say 'dismissed' it would use a term savoring of punishment and disgrace. He therefore avoided these and used the curious euphemism 'wholly retired.'" (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 25.)

Status of officer "wholly retired."—Officers wholly retired from the service are "ex" or "ci-devant" officers; their case is very different from that of officers merely retired from active service. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 401.)

An officer on being wholly retired becomes a civilian. (Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 338, 353.)

Where the law provided for honorably discharging from the Army certain officers with "one year's pay and allowances," held that "all officers discharged in pursuance of this provision were remitted to civil life, free from all obligation to the Government other than such as concerns every citizen. No condition except that of honorable discharge is prescribed by it, and there is nothing in it indicating that such officers should not thereafter be eligible to any office, civil or military, no matter how great might be its emoluments, unless what had been thus received should be refunded." (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 230; see also 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 177.)

Status of officer retired on furlough pay.—An officer, though retired on furlough pay, is an officer on the retired list, being specifically so recognized by section 1593 of the Revised Statutes. (15 Comp. Dec., 73.)

President's action can not be revoked.—The President having once "determined" whether the officer shall be retired from active service or wholly retired, can not review his decision nor correct an error of judgment. (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 528.)

The President has the right upon the report of a retiring board to retain an officer in active service or retire him from active service or wholly retire him. But this is not a continuing power and is performed to the extent of its existence by the one act of the President. (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 528.)

The right of the President to review his own action, if it exist, must be subject to reasonable limitations. A change of an order after two distinct recognitions of approval would be an unreasonable exercise of the right of review. (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 528.)

An officer of the Army was found incapacitated by sickness "not incident to the service." By direction of the President he was wholly retired and his successor appointed and confirmed. The officer asks a rehearing which is granted by the President, in consequence of which the President revokes his former order and places the officer upon the retired list. Held, that upon the order of the President approving a report and "wholly retiring" an officer, there is in law and in fact a vacancy, the legal status of the officer becoming that of a private citizen; and that he can not again be restored to office except by a new appointment in pursuance of a nomination to and confirmation by the Senate; and that the President has no power to reinstate by mere revocation, without the advice and consent of the Senate, after the complete severance of the individual and the office. Held, further, that the nomination and confirmation of an officer as the successor of one "wholly retired" operates in law to supersede the retired officer, who thereby ceases to have any connection with the Army. (Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 338.)

A retiring board found an officer "incapacitated for duty by disability which did not originate in the line of duty." The finding was approved by the President, and the claimant was thereupon retired upon furlough pay, as required by section 1454, Revised Statutes. About two years later the Secretary of the Navy decided that "the department is of the opinion that the causes which incapacitated him for active duty were incident to the service." Unfortunately for the claimant, the retiring board, by the President's approval, and not "the department," was authorized by law to settle that fact (secs. 1451 and 1454, R. S.). At the time the opinion of the department was promulgated, the Secretary had no more power to revise the finding of the board and to reverse the approval and action of the President thereon than he had to overrule a decision of the Supreme Court. (Burchard v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 137.)

Neither the department nor the President could then change the findings, as they had already been approved and were no longer open to review. The action of the President was equivalent to the judgment of an appropriate tribunal upon the facts as found. That judgment, as a judgment, could not be disturbed. (U. S. v. Burchard, 125 U. S., 176; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 225.)

An officer of the Army was found by a retiring board "incapacitated for active service from insanity, which insanity is not incident to the service." By direction of the President he was retired from active service. Thereafter, by direction of the President, this order was so amended as to wholly retire him from the service with one year's pay, this amendment being made at the officer's request. Thereafter, by direction of the President the order wholly retiring the officer was declared void on the ground that he was insane when he made the request, and he was restored to the retired list in accordance with the original order. The President, under the law, had power (1) to place the officer on the retired list, or (2) to wholly retire him from the service with one year's pay and allowances. Having once acted under that power upon the report of the board by retiring the officer, his power as to this particular case was thereby exhausted. In general, where power is given by statute to enable an officer to do a particular act which would otherwise be beyond the scope of his authority, after such power has once been exercised it is deemed exhausted and can not be exercised again. Accordingly, the order wholly retiring this officer from the service was void, for want of authority in the President thus to retire him. The circumstance that such order was issued in compliance with a request made by the officer when insane may afford additional ground for holding it void. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 202, 207.)

In People v. Waynesville (88 Ill., 470, 475) it is observed: "As a general rule, where the general assembly confers a power, and the persons upon whom it is conferred act under it, the power is exhausted, unless power is given to act again under the same authority." And in Ex parte Randolph (2 Brock., 473, 474) the court says: "I take it to be a sound principle, that when a special tribunal is created, with limited power and a particular jurisdiction, whenever the power is once executed the jurisdiction is exhausted and at an end—that the person thus invested with power is, in the language of the law, functus officio." These cases are cited by the Court of Claims in McBlair v. U. S. (19 Ct. Cls., 528), in holding that the President's power is performed to the extent of its existence by the one act of approval of the proceedings of a retiring board. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 202, 207.)

None but officers in active service being eligible for retirement, the action of the President revoking a previous order dropping an officer from the rolls, and putting him on the retired list of the Army, was ineffectual for that purpose. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 202, 205.)

Whether the finding of the board was warranted by the evidence adduced is an inquiry that can not now be gone into as no power of review over the proceedings of the retiring board exists by law where its finding has been once approved by the President and his "orders in the case" executed. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 446.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1452, 1456, and 1457, Revised Statutes.

Transfer of officer from furlough to retired pay list does not change cause of retirement.—A retiring board reported that an officer was incapacitated for active service and that in its judgment the incapacity did not originate "in the line of duty." In this report the President concurred, and directed a retirement on furlough pay. Held, that the finding of the retiring board, approved by the President, is the judgment of the tribunal, created under the law for the government of the Navy to determine such questions, that the officer be retired from active service for incapacity which "did not originate in the line of duty." This made him a retired officer on furlough pay, and gave him one-half the leave of absence pay of an officer on the active list. When he was afterwards transferred by the action of the President and Senate, under section 1594, Revised Statutes, "from the furlough to the retired pay list," his status as a retired officer was not changed. He still remained an officer retired for incapacity which did not originate in the line of duty, but his pay was raised from that of an officer retired "on furlough pay" to that of an officer retired on half sea pay. The object of the statute was not to enable the President and Senate to vacate the finding of the retiring board that the incapacity of the officer did not "originate in the line of duty" and to decide that it was "the result of an incident of the service," but to afford a means for his relief from the consequences of such a finding to the extent of adding to his pay the difference between the half of leave of absence pay and the half of sea pay. "It may have been intended as a provision for a remedy for wrongs done by retiring boards, but it limited the power of the President and Senate in that behalf to a transfer of the name of the officer from 'the furlough to the retired pay list.' The cause of his retirement still remains the same and determines his position on the 'retired-pay list.'" (Potts v. U. S., 125 U. S., 173; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221.)

The transfer of the claimant "from the furlough to the retired pay list" did not have the effect to abrogate the finding of the retiring board and insert in its place that the cause of his incapacity did originate from the service. (Burchard v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 137; 125 U. S., 176.)

Cause of retirement cannot be changed by Congress.—In 14 Comp. Dec., 161, it was held that a private act of Congress which authorized the Secretary of the Navy to transfer an officer on the retired list "from the half-pay list to the seventy-five per centum list under section fifteen hundred and eighty-eight Revised Statutes," operated to change the status of the officer from that of one retired for incapacity not incident to his service to that of one retired for an incapacity of service origin. In 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221, the Attorney General stated that he could not concur in this decision; that it may be questioned whether or not Congress has the authority to change the findings of the retiring board approved by the President, even if it so intended; and that the private act did not make the beneficiary an officer of the Navy who had theretofore been retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service. Thereafter, in 15 Comp. Dec., 584 (97 S. & A. Memo. 1004), the Comptroller of the Treasury reversed his previous decision (14 Comp. Dec., 161) and followed the opinion of the Attorney General. The opinion of the Attorney General, thus followed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, was sustained by the Court of Claims in Morse v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 361, affirmed by the Supreme Court in 229 U. S., 208.

Where an officer of the Navy was retired under section 1454, Revised Statutes, for incapacity not originating in the line of duty, and upon a full review of the facts the Secretary of the Navy found that the causes of his incapacity were incident to the service, and he was accordingly transferred by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the furlough to the 50 per cent retired pay list, under sections 1594 and 1588, Revised Statutes, and later, pursuant to a private act of Congress, was transferred to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers under section 1588, Revised Statutes, he can not thereafter be placed on the retired list with the retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of his retirement, under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), which authorizes such advancement to certain officers of the Navy who have been retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service. The status of this officer was fixed by the findings of the retiring board, approved by the President, and it may be questioned whether or not Congress has the authority to change the finding of the retiring board, even if it so intended, although it is undoubtedly within the power of Congress to give him all the benefits which he would have received had he been correctly retired. The private act gave him all the benefits of persons who were entitled to the emoluments prescribed therein, but it did not make him an officer of the Navy who had theretofore been retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service, the fact being, as the record shows, that, although unadvisedly or erroneously, he was definitely retired for a physical disability which was not due to an incident of the service. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221.)

A special act of Congress which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to transfer an officer on the retired list "from the half-pay list to the 75 per centum list under section fifteen hundred and eighty-eight Revised Statutes," will not operate to change his status from that of an officer retired for incapacity not incident to the service to that of an officer retired for incapacity incident to the service. (Morse v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 361, 229 U. S., 208.)

Courts without power to review finding of board.—Where an officer of the Army has been examined for promotion, and upon failure to qualify is honorably discharged from the service, the courts are without jurisdiction to order him placed on the retired list upon his petition setting forth that he had been found by a board physically incapacitated for service and that he was thereby entitled to be retired and entitled to retired pay during life, instead of being dismissed with one year's pay. The report of the board is not final, but must be approved or disapproved by the President. This is the only relief from the errors or injustice that may be done by the board which is provided. The courts have no power to review. The courts are not the only instrumentalities of the Government. They cannot command or regulate the Army. To be promoted or retired may be the right of an officer, the value to him of his commission, but greater even than that is the welfare of the country and it may be, even its safety, through the efficiency of the Army. Decisions of State courts relating to the militia cannot sustain the right to review examining boards in the Army. There is a wide difference between the Regular Army of the Nation and the militia of a State when not in the service of the Nation; and more rigid rules and a higher state of discipline are required in the one case than in the other. (Reaves v. Ainsworth, 219 U. S., 296.)

Transfer from furlough to retired pay list no longer authorized.—An officer retired on furlough pay under section 1454, Revised Statutes, can not be transferred to the retired pay list under section 1594, Revised Statutes, with increase of pay; such increase is forbidden by the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), providing that "hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy, but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired." (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 96.)

Nor can an officer be simultaneously retired on furlough pay and transferred to the retired pay list, so as to give him the pay of the latter. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 96.)

The provision of the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), prevents either rank or pay of officers on the retired list from being increased in any way after such officers shall have been placed thereupon. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 96.)

The power of the President to make such transfer depends by the section upon the fact that the officer is already upon the retired list, whether he has been so for a minute or longer. Whatever time, therefore, may have elapsed since the officer has been put upon that list has elapsed, of course, after that point of time which fixes the pay of all retired officers. There can be no contemporaneous occurrence of the act by which an officer is retired upon the furlough-pay list and of that by which he is transferred therefrom. The former precedes the latter necessarily; and so its effect in fixing pay precedes the existence of any question as to the effect of transfer thereupon. In other words, the transfer finds the pay already fixed by the act of August 5, 1882. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 96.)

[There is now no increase of pay involved by the transfer of an officer from the furlough to the retired pay list, as furlough pay is now the same as the 50 per cent retired list. See note to section 1593, Revised Statutes.]

One year's pay allowed officer wholly retired is not a gratuity.—The one year's pay provided for by section 1275, Revised Statutes, for an officer of the Army wholly retired from the service is not in the nature of a gratuity, but is compensation for services rendered, and upon the death of the officer before payment thereof it is payable to his legal representative. (7 Comp. Dec., 404; see also Hotchkin v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 18; but see note to sec. 1456, R. S., under "Act of Aug. 5, 1882, not a penal statute.")

Officer wholly retired not required to refund year's pay upon reappointment.—Where an officer who had been honorably discharged from the Army with one year's pay and allowances was reappointed to the Army, upon nomination and confirmation by the Senate, he was not required to refund the amount of his pay on discharge, though the War Department attempted to require same as a condition precedent to his second appointment. As a condition it is void and of no effect. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 230; see also 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 177; Katzer v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 32.)

Reconsideration by board of its finding.—Where a naval retiring board convened to inquire into the nature and cause of the disability of an officer has once finished its work, rendered a complete judgment in the case, and adjourned, a subsequent reconsideration of its judgment by the board, unless authorized or directed by proper authority, can have no legal effect. Accordingly, upon examination of the record of proceedings before a naval retiring board in the case of Paymaster Rodney, held, that the paper attached to the record called a reconsideration of the finding of the board was without legal effect and that the officer was properly retired under the original finding of the board on furlough pay. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 104; see also 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 316.)

A probationary dental surgeon serving under appointment issued by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in accordance with the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573), may be wholly retired under this section, notwithstanding the provision in said act that such appointments "may be revoked at any time during the probationary period by the President." (See file 26253-550, Feb. 18, 1918.)

Order retiring marine officer on furlough pay is without authority of law.—An officer of the Marine Corps was examined by a retiring board convened by the Secretary of the Navy and found incapacitated for active service for causes "not an incident of the service." The President made the following indorsement on the record of the proceedings and finding of the board: "I concur in opinion with the retiring board in the case of First Lieut. George M. Welles. Let him be retired on furlough pay." The officer was advised of this action by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, and notified that he would be considered as retired on furlough pay from that date. The retirement of officers of the Marine Corps was governed by sections 1622 and 1623, Revised Statutes. The board was lawfully convened in accordance with those sections. For officers of the Marine Corps who are retired from active service, as for officers of the Army who are so retired, there is but one rate of pay established by law, and it is not competent for the President to place these retired officers on a different rate of pay than that which the law has fixed. The first sentence of the indorsement of the President upon the record admits of no other construction than that it was meant to express his approval of the finding of the board. Having thus approved the finding of the board, it rested entirely in his discretion whether Lieut. Welles should be retired from active service or wholly retired from the service. But it was necessary that one or the other be done, as the law is imperative that when the decision of the board is approved by the President the officer "shall be retired," etc. The direction given in the last sentence of the indorsement clearly indicates that it was the determination of the President that Lieut. Welles be retired from active service simply. The compensation of an officer thus retired being fixed by statute and not left to be determined by the President, in so far as that direction applies to the pay of Lieut. Welles on the retired list it must be treated as of no effect. It may well be that the indorsement was prepared inadvertently, it being supposed that the law which applies to officers of the Navy (who may be retired upon furlough pay if the reason for their retirement was not an incident of the service) applies to officers of the Marine Corps. Such, however, is not the case; for the Marine Corps different legislation is provided. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 442.)

Sec. 1455. [Officers not to be retired without a hearing.] No officer of the Navy shall be retired from active service, or wholly retired from the service, without a full and fair hearing before such Navy retiring-board, if he shall demand it, except in cases where he may be retired by the President at his own request, or on account of age or length of service, or on account of his failure to be recommended by an examining board for promotion.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291.)

Retirement of officers upon their own request is provided for by section 1443, Revised Statutes; act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128); and act of March 3, 1899, section 8 (30 Stat., 1006).

Retirement of officers for age is provided for by section 1444, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579); see also section 1481, Revised Statutes.

Retirement of officers not recommended for promotion is provided for by section 1447, Revised Statutes.

Retirement of officers upon selection by a board of rear admirals, for the purpose of creating vacancies, was provided for by act of March 3, 1899, section 9 (30 Stat., 1006), since repealed.

"Wholly retired from the service:" Authority for such retirements is contained in section 1455, Revised Statutes.

Full and fair hearing.—The statute providing that no officer of the Army shall be retired, either partially or wholly, without having had a full and fair hearing, does not authorize the President to send a case back to a retiring board if he has once approved and acted upon its report. When the President approves and acts upon the report of a retiring board, he thereby determines that the officer has had "a full and fair hearing." (Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 338. Compare note to sec. 1503, R. S.)

Failure of officer to demand hearing as constituting waiver.—See note to section 1503, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1456. [Officers not to be retired for misconduct.] No officer of the Navy shall be placed on the retired list because of misconduct; but he shall be brought to trial by court-martial for such misconduct.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 6, v. 16, p. 333.)

Similar provisions with reference to officers failing upon examination for promotion by reason of drunkenness or other misconduct, and a requirement that such officers shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay, are contained in act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286).

Statute of limitations for trials by court-martial: See section 1624, Revised Statutes, articles 61 and 62, which articles were added to that section by act of February 25, 1895 (28 Stat., 680).

Trials of officers by general courts-martial are provided for by section 1624, Revised Statutes.

"Offenses shall not be allowed to accumulate, in order that sufficient matter may thus be obtained for a trial, without giving due notice to the offender." (Art. R-1411, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Misconduct not ground for retirement.—Section 1456, Revised Statutes, specifically prohibits retirement of officers of the Navy on account of misconduct and requires they be brought to trial therefor by court-martial; and there is no doubt that the same principle must be recognized in the construction of the laws relating to the retirement of officers of the Army. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

An officer of the Army can not be retired under the provisions of sections 1245-1252, Revised Statutes, if he could have been properly brought to trial by court-martial for the same acts or omissions which are alleged as evidence of the incapacity justifying his retirement. If he displays impatience or irritability, imperfect control of his temper, indolence, indecision, and want of alertness to such an extent as to destroy or gravely impair his usefulness, it would seem almost, indeed quite, incredible that he should not have been guilty of some breach of the Articles of War. If his excesses in eating and drinking have been sufficient to incapacitate him for the discharge of his duties, this may constitute a clearly appropriate ground for disciplinary action, but inasmuch as these indiscretions are evidently voluntary on his part, they can not of themselves constitute an incapacity justifying retirement. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

If any of the matters referred to as objectionable in an officer are in violation of the law or regulations of the service, he is subject to its discipline; but they do not subject him to compulsory retirement unless they render him incapable of performing the duties of his office when he is willing and desires to do so. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 162.)

The provisions of the retirement laws are in no sense disciplinary or punitive in their purpose. The punishment of officers for willful failure to discharge their duty can not be legally effected through the agency of a retiring board; and in dealing with questions of this character, the law assumes the freedom of the human will in a person compos mentis and legally responsible for his actions. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 14.)

Retired list intended only for the worthy.—All officers who in the judgment of the board and of the President were unworthy of official confidence and public favor have from time to time been excluded entirely from the Navy; the reserved list being presumably composed of persons whose professional education and standing are deserving of respect and available for the benefit of the Government, though in different degrees, depending partly on the personal merit of the officers, partly on opportunity and exigency, partly on their relative numbers, partly on public economy. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 222.)

In regard to the contention that officers mentally, morally, and professionally disqualified are often found upon the retired list, I would suggest that it was never contemplated by the legislature that the retired list would to any extent be occupied except by those who had performed honorable service and were retired by reason of disability incurred in that service. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36.)

Temperamental unfitness not misconduct.—See note to section 1448, Revised Statutes.

OFFICERS TO BE DISCHARGED, AND NOT RETIRED, WHEN FOUND BY PROMOTION BOARD UNFIT FROM CAUSES DUE TO MISCONDUCT.

Historical: Act August 5, 1882, applies to moral unfitness.—At the time the act of 1882 (22 Stat., 286) was pending in Congress, officers of the Navy, prior to promotion, were required by sections 1493, 1496, 1497, and 1504, Revised Statutes, to establish by examination their physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all the duties at sea of the grade to which they were to be promoted. Should the candidate on examination fail physically, his case was provided for by other statutes establishing retiring boards and defining their powers; if, on the other hand, he failed professionally, his case came within section 1505, providing that officers so failing should be suspended from promotion and then reexamined, and in case of failure upon reexamination, "shall be dropped from the service;" if the candidate was found by both the medical and examining boards to be not qualified for promotion, under section 1447 of the Revised Statutes he was to be placed on the retired list [but see note to section 1447, Revised Statutes, as to whether both boards must have reported unfavorably]. Where, however, he was found not morally qualified for promotion, although physically, mentally, and professionally competent, his case was not specifically provided for by law. He could not be promoted, because of the provisions of section 1 of the act of April 21, 1864 (13 Stat., 53), now incorporated in section 1496 of the Revised Statutes. Neither could he be discharged from the service, because of the act of July 13, 1866 (14 Stat., 92), now section 1229, and article 36 of section 1624, Revised Statutes. On the other hand, under the laws, customs, and usages of the naval service, no officer who is unable to establish his fitness for promotion can be retained indefinitely in a fixed position on the Navy list delaying promotions all along the line, but an officer who is due for promotion must either be promoted or make way for those below him, as the law requires all promotions in the Navy to be made according to seniority. [But see notes to sections 1458 and 1480, Revised Statutes, to effect that promotions are no longer required to be made by seniority in all cases.] Under these circumstances the practice developed in the cases of officers who failed morally upon examination for promotion, although otherwise qualified, of placing them on the retired list "under the first section of the act of April 21, 1864, as not recommended for promotion" (e. g., case of Master Fred'k E. Upton, vol. 28, Ex. Bd. Recs., No. 34, morally disqualified because "insubordinate in disposition;" p. 174 Navy Register, 1910; Davis Admr. v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 442). Under this state of law the bill now incorporated in the act of 1882 was introduced in Congress "to promote the efficiency of the Navy," and was attached as an amendment to the naval appropriation bill in the House by unanimous consent. That the purpose of this legislation was to abolish the practice of placing upon the retired list of the Navy officers who had failed to qualify for promotion by reason of moral deficiency can hardly be seriously questioned. However, if a doubt could exist it would be set at rest once for all by reference to the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House in recommending favorable action upon this measure [citing Holy Trinity Church v. U. S., 143 U. S., 465, noted in "Introduction," under "Statutory Construction," VI, D, 3]. The committee report stated: "Under the law, as it now exists, many officers who have been educated at the expense of the Government and who have during their service contracted habits of intemperance and other immoral practices which disqualify them for the honorable position of an officer in the United States Navy, are placed on the retired list, and their services are lost to the Government, when, but for their conduct, they would remain on the active list. Therefore, your committee recommend the passage of this bill with an amendment, so that the Government may rid itself of a lot of useless official material." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, pp. 5, et seq.)

The report of the committee shows that this legislation was not intended to be limited in its scope to officers who are physically or mentally unfit for sea service by reason of their own misconduct, but was intended to apply to those officers who, while physically, mentally, and professionally qualified in every respect to perform the duties of their grade, might still be unfit to maintain discipline and exercise command over hundreds of men whose respect they had forfeited by habits resulting in a reputation discreditable to the "honorable position of an officer of the Navy." Such officers were not entitled to be placed on the retired list of the Navy, which was intended as a reward for long and faithful service, and not as a refuge for "a lot of useless official material," whose worthlessness was due to their own misconduct, and the practice of retiring such officers was the evil which Congress intended to remedy. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 8.)

This very provision of the act of 1882 has been before the courts and held to authorize the discharge of an officer who was found by the promotion boards to be physically, mentally, and professionally, but not morally qualified for promotion. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 18, citing Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 257.)

In general, under section 1456, Revised Statutes, and the act of August 5, 1882, misconduct is not a ground for retirement. However, an officer who fails to qualify for promotion is subject to discharge under the latter act only as the result of a finding of moral disqualification. (File 26260-874, June 3, 1910.)

Retirement of officer found not morally qualified for promotion.—See note to section 1447, Revised Statutes.

What constitutes moral unfitness.—Any discussion of the question whether an officer can be morally unfit for promotion without his mental, professional, or physical qualifications being affected, becomes purely idle and academic in view of the fact that Congress has itself, by express language in the act of April 21, 1864 (sec. 1496, R. S.), provided that no officer shall be promoted to a higher grade until his moral, as well as his mental, professional, and physical fitness shall have been established to the satisfaction of the board of examining officers. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 10.)

"An officer may be 'incapable,' either mentally, physically, or morally; for although he may possess a strong mind and robust frame, yet if his moral perception of right and wrong be so blunted and debased as to render him unreliable, he could hardly be regarded as the capable officer to be intrusted with the lives of his countrymen and the property and honor of his country." (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223, 233.)

No specific definition of what constitutes moral unfitness is desirable or should be attempted. A similar question was considered by the Court of Claims in the case of Swaim v. U. S. (28 Ct. Cls., 173), with reference to what constitutes conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman or conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline, the court stating that this is "beyond the bounds of exact formula, and must depend more or less upon the circumstances and peculiarities in each case." The question should, accordingly, be left to be determined by "a board of experienced, intelligent, impartial, military experts * * * in the exercise of a sound discretion." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 10.)

That the legislation was not intended to apply only to officers whose misconduct resulted in actual want of capacity to serve at sea is shown by the fact that, as it passed the Senate, it read "from any cause arising from his misconduct or want of capacity not caused by or in consequence of the performance of his duty," but the House Committee on Naval Affairs, in accordance with its views on the subject as stated in its report above quoted, recommended that the words italicized be stricken from the bill, which recommendation was followed and the bill as thus amended was passed with certain immaterial changes as a clause of the naval appropriation act. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 9.)

In any event, a case of repeated failure to discharge indebtedness is obviously an instance of moral unfitness for promotion. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 11.)

It is not a private matter of concern to the officer only, but in the Navy an officer's neglect to pay just indebtedness is a matter of concern to the entire service, of which he is a part, and renders him unfit for the duties of his position. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 11.)

Evidence that included a list of cases in which an officer had failed to liquidate indebtedness admitted to be just; that he had been convicted by general court-martial upon the charges of scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals and conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in that he had been expelled from an Army and Navy club for nonpayment of his indebtedness to the club and for breaking his promise to arrange for such payment, clearly justified the finding of the board that he was not morally qualified for promotion. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 12. But see President Taft's ruling in this case, noted below.)

In the case noted in the preceding paragraph, it was reported by the examining board, June 21, 1911: "After duly deliberating on all the matters herein referred to, the board believes that the candidate did not use his utmost exertions toward liquidating his debts as quickly as possible, but that from the contraction of the first debts to the payment of the last one, on June 14, 1911, he has shown a degree of moral turpitude which unfits him for promotion." The Secretary of the Navy recommended approval of the board's finding. President Taft's decision in the case was as follows: "I am not satisfied from the showing made that Lieut. Burt's character has been shown to be such as to unfit him morally for promotion. Of course, the failure to pay debts and the circumstances under which the debts were contracted, when their payment is postponed or neglected, may constitute conduct unbecoming an officer. But here the debts have been paid; and they were not so great in amount or so many as to indicate utter recklessness when it is considered that Lieut. Burt is a married man and, necessarily, had the expense of a family upon him in addition to that attendant upon his sea service; I am bound to say that the specifications which were handed to me as to the immorality involved in his relation to debts seem to be, many of them, strained, and I can not think that it is just to eliminate him from the naval service for such delinquency." (File 26260-1392:15, Jan. 2, 1912.)

Passed Asst. Paymaster Louis A. Yorke was examined for promotion December 14, 1886; on December 17, 1886, the board reported him mentally but not professionally or morally qualified. The evidence upon which the board based its findings that he was not morally qualified for promotion consisted principally of "several complaints which had been made against him to the department, consisting of alleged indebtedness to individuals, and of neglect, refusal, or evasion to pay the same." He was found by the medical board to be "physically qualified to perform all his duties at sea." In accordance with the Navy Department's recommendation, the President approved the findings of the boards, February 19, 1887, and the officer was discharged with one year's pay. Subsequently bills were repeatedly introduced in Congress "for the relief of Louis A. Yorke," one of which, providing for his restoration to the Navy and immediate retirement, passed both Houses during the Fifty-third Congress, second session, but was vetoed by the President. The message of the President, returning the bill to Congress without his approval, August 11, 1894 (26 Cong. Rec., 8411), was in part as follows: "Considerable evidence was before the board showing quite a large amount of personal indebtedness owing by the candidate, and it appeared that in a few instances his accounts with the Navy Department had not been promptly settled. It was also shown that he did not at all times deposit the Government money intrusted to his care in the places required by law and the regulations of the Navy. In connection with his personal indebtedness, incidents and circumstances were brought to light which certainly indicated that he entertained very lax ideas of honest dealing and fairness, and which developed a disregard of the obligations and requirements of his position as an officer in the Navy. He was given abundant opportunity to meet and explain every damaging allegation and every adverse inference arising from the evidence, and his claim, not without foundation it appeared, that the charges against him were instigated by malice, was doubtless given full weight. * * *

On the facts as presented he would seem to be out of place among those who, though still compensated by the Government, have been, on account of age, long and honorable service, or disabilities incurred in the discharge of duty, relieved from further activity. * * * I have no doubt malicious feeling, growing out of domestic difficulties, entered into the affair and gave impetus to the search after inculcating evidence; but facts were nevertheless established beyond any reasonable doubt which abundantly uphold these findings." Bills to the same effect were subsequently introduced in Congress from time to time, but the measure was never again passed by both Houses. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

Boatswain Louis W. Sopp was examined for promotion March 1, 1906; the examining board found that he had "the mental and professional, but not the moral qualifications, by reason of his failure to pay his debts, which is a result of his own misconduct, to perform efficiently all his duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted," and the board therefore did not recommend him for promotion. The Secretary of the Navy recommended President's approval, April 9, 1906, stating: "Approval of this finding would result in his discharge from the service pursuant to the act of August 5, 1882, * * *. Persistent failure, without adequate cause, to meet just pecuniary obligations is regarded as a proper basis for a finding of moral disqualification under this provision. The Bureau of Navigation and the Judge Advocate General recommend approval of the finding. In this recommendation I concur. Mr. Sopp has afforded no satisfactory explanation of his many delinquencies in paying his debts. In all the cases above mentioned payment was unduly delayed * * *; and in some instances promises of prompt payment appear to have been lightly broken. Such conduct as that of Mr. Sopp in these matters can not but bring discredit upon the service, both at home and abroad, and it shows, in the judgment of the department, that the offender is out of place as an officer in the Navy. I advise that the finding of the naval examining board be approved, and that Mr. Sopp be discharged with one year's pay pursuant to the act of 1882." On April 10, 1906, the finding and recommendation of the naval examining board were approved by the President, and Boatswain Sopp directed to be discharged with one year's pay. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

Gunner George L. Mallery was examined October 12, 1904. Board found "that Gunner George L. Mallery, U. S. Navy, has the mental and professional, but not the moral qualifications, by reason of failure to pay his just debts, which is the result of his own misconduct, to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted, and do not recommend him for promotion." The Secretary of the Navy, February 28, 1905, recommended President's approval, stating: "The act of August 5, 1882, provides that * * *. The department regards this provision of law as applicable to the case under consideration. I advise that the findings of the naval examining board be approved, and that Mr. Mallery be discharged with one year's pay, pursuant to the act cited." This recommendation was approved and the officer discharged accordingly. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

Lieut. Robert H. Osborne, U. S. Navy, was examined for promotion, June 9, 1908, and found mentally but not morally or professionally qualified, his moral failure being due to indifference in contracting financial obligations which he was unable to discharge. Upon reconsideration the board reported: "The board respectfully adheres to its original decision, and in doing so respectfully invites attention to the fact that the deficiency found in moral qualifications was not the failure of Lieut. Osborne to pay the debt owed Mr. W. E. Rouse as such, but his failure to keep his written promise to pay in a certain time and method, his failure to show any practical reason for such neglect of his promise, and his failure to meet his obligations in the sense of making any arrangement with his creditor after the matter had been brought to his attention by the department. In the opinion of the board such absolute neglect and indifference to his obligations and to his promise show a standard of morals below that which should be required of naval officers." It was contended that, "while liability to intoxication would undoubtedly render an officer unfit, it is inconceivable that the existence of indebtedness would impair his ability to perform sea duty" within the meaning of the act of August 5, 1882. The Judge Advocate General and the Secretary of the Navy recommended that the finding of the board be approved by the President, and that Lieut. Osborne be discharged with one year's pay. Counsel submitted an additional brief to the President, who advised the Secretary of the Navy that he was inclined to be as lenient as possible for the reason that this officer had contracted a physical disability in the line of duty and in the face of the enemy; but in view of the finding of the board, he did not think it to the interest of the Navy that the officer be retained on the active list; and added: "Would it not be possible to make an arrangement whereby he would be retired, of course provided that his debts should be paid before he is retired." In response, the Secretary of the Navy, June 29, 1908 (file 26260-38), informed the President that the case of this officer was within the provision of the act of August 5, 1882, "and it is therefore mandatory, if you approve the proceedings and findings of the majority of the board, that he be not retired." The Secretary further stated: "The only alternative would be that you disapprove the proceedings and findings, or the findings, of the board of which Rear Admiral Richardson Clover, U. S. Navy, is president, in which case the status of Mr. Osborne would revert to that which he occupied before he was examined, and a new examining board would be ordered before which he would be required to appear as in the first instance." The President thereupon approved the findings and recommendation of the board, July 3, 1908, and the officer was accordingly discharged with one year's pay. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

Boatswain Alfred H. Hewson was examined by a naval examining board, May 3, 1909. Board found: "That Boatswain Alfred H. Hewson, U. S. Navy, has the mental, but not the moral nor the professional qualifications, to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted, and do not recommend him for promotion." The Acting Secretary of the Navy, May 17, 1909, recommended approval of the board's finding, stating as follows: "Upon reviewing the case it appears that Mr. Hewson has been habitually intemperate and that he has shown a lack of proper and officer-like appreciation in his methods of dealing with his financial affairs. * * * I have, therefore, to advise that the findings of the naval examining board be approved, and that Boatswain Alfred H. Hewson, U. S. Navy, be discharged with one year's pay in conformity with the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882." This recommendation was approved by the President and the officer discharged accordingly. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

Gunner Edmund DuB. Gould was examined for promotion April 4, 1908; the examining board found that he had the mental, but not the professional fitness, and from the unfavorable evidence before it the board was not satisfied as to his moral fitness and did not recommend him for promotion. Upon a second appearance before an examining board it was found that he had the mental, but not the moral and professional qualifications, by reason of his failure to pay his debts, and not making the percentage necessary to qualify, and he was not recommended for promotion. The Judge Advocate General, in his comment on the above case, said in part: "There are eight cases in which the Bureau of Navigation referred communications to this officer concerning instances of indebtedness which had been brought to the bureau's attention, to none of which did he make reply. With regard to these debts, it appears that the one due * * * was contracted prior to April, 1907, and probably some time before that, but it was only discharged on October 18, 1908, shortly before being ordered to appear for examination. Concerning the bill owed to * * * it appears that it had been running for at least a year, and that Mr. Gould only paid it so recently, if at all, that he was awaiting a receipt. The candidate was given an opportunity to show by documentary evidence or otherwise that he had liquidated all claims against him, but instead of doing so he made no further communications to the board until he was again ordered to appear by the department. Even then he could present no receipts, or at least did not do so, which did not create a favorable inference. In view of this persistent neglect to pay his debts, and his further neglect to reply to the letters addressed to him upon these matters, * * * and his failure to adduce anything while before the examining board to substantiate the statements that he had paid certain of his debts, it is recommended that the finding of the naval examining board in this case be approved." The Secretary of the Navy recommended approval of the board's finding, stating in part: "From a review of the record of proceedings of the naval examining board, it would appear that this officer has persistently neglected to pay his debts, that he has failed to reply to communications addressed to him officially upon these matters, and that he has failed to make any satisfactory explanation or excuse for his remissness in the above particulars." The board's finding was approved by the President, and the officer discharged accordingly. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

In the case of Passed Asst. Surg. Frederick W. Olcott, December 4, 1900, the board stated: "We hereby certify that Passed Asst. Surg. Frederick W. Olcott, United States Navy, has the mental but not the moral or professional qualifications to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted, and we do not recommend him for promotion. This conclusion is based upon adverse reports furnished by the Navy Department, embraced in reports on fitness, special reports, and record of a general court-martial, charging drunkenness, improper use of drugs, unreliability, neglect of duty, and failure to pay bills. These reports and Passed Asst. Surg. Olcott's replies thereto, have been carefully considered. Taken separately they indicate a feeble sense of official responsibility, and collectively a degree of moral dullness that does not warrant recommendation for promotion." Board's finding approved by the President and officer discharged. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911. Note: This officer was restored to the Navy and placed upon the retired list, pursuant to a special act of Congress, approved Feb. 13, 1911.)

In the case of Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin B. Webster, January 6, 1898, the report was as follows: "The board decided that Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin B. Webster, U. S. Navy, has the mental and professional, but not the moral qualifications, by reason of the facts mentioned in the charges formulated by the board from the record, which are a result of his own misconduct, to perform efficiently all his duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted, and do not recommend him for promotion." The charges formulated by the board were as follows: "1st. Habits of gambling, as indicated by the letter of F. L. Crompton, of Shanghai, China, dated July 26, 1897. 2d. Carelessness in the settlement of debts, as indicated by the correspondence between the candidate and his creditors and the Navy Department. 3d. Transactions of the candidate characterized as 'disgraceful' and 'scandalous,' by the Secretary of the Navy, and published in General Court-Martial Order No. 76, dated July 28, 1896." The members of the board recommended, in a letter to the Navy Department, that "he be put on probation for the period of one year," etc. March 4, 1898, the finding of the naval examining board was approved by the President, and the officer ordered discharged with one year's pay. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

Commander George W. Wood, June 29, 1893, board reported: "By reason of the facts adduced by the evidence as to his habits of drunkenness, and the contracting of debts beyond his means, and neglect of creditors since his last promotion, we find that Commander Wood is morally unfit for promotion to the next higher grade * * *. We hereby certify that Commander George W. Wood, U. S. Navy, has the mental, but not the moral and professional qualifications, to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the next higher grade, and do not recommend him for promotion." Board's finding approved, and officer discharged. In this case there was a minority report to the effect that the officer was mentally, morally, and professionally qualified. (See file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

Evidence of moral unfitness.—From a legal point of view, evidence of reputation is to be accepted in preference to evidence of specific acts of immorality. (File 26260-1392:29, Feb. 12, 1912, p. 42.)

The law provides that no officer of the Navy shall be promoted to a higher grade "until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all his duties at sea have been established to the satisfaction of a board of examining officers appointed by the President (secs. 1496, 1497, R. S.). The same rule therefore applies to the officer's moral qualifications as to his mental and professional qualifications. All alike must be "established" to the satisfaction of the board. The result of failing morally is discharge under the act of 1882; the result of failing professionally is suspension from promotion or discharge under section 1505 Revised Statutes. There is no reason for a distinction with reference to the burden of proof as to the method of determining the candidate's moral and his professional qualifications, even if such a distinction were possible under the law. If an officer's unfitness for promotion had to be proved by the Government beyond a reasonable doubt, the law would so obviously not "promote the efficiency of the Navy" that it is unnecessary to comment upon the deplorable results which would follow such a construction. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 32.)

It is axiomatic that an officer upon examination for promotion in the American Navy is not being tried for his misdeeds or crimes, which must be proved against him beyond a reasonable doubt, but is availing himself of an opportunity to establish his qualifications for a reward which is to be conferred only upon those who can affirmatively demonstrate their absolute fitness therefor. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 26½.)

The question of an officer's amenability to trial by court-martial for acts affecting his moral fitness can not have any bearing upon the question, for should the officer be so tried and convicted, or even acquitted, by court-martial the examining board would still have the duty cast upon it, by express provisions of law, of examining into the facts and outcome of such trial in order to determine for itself the effect, if any, that should be given thereto with reference to the officer's qualifications for promotion in the Navy. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 16; C. M. O. 13-1916, p. 6.)

The Government will not, and should not, appoint an officer to a higher grade unless satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of his fitness. It is fundamental error to contend that candidates for promotion have a property in the offices they hold and are entitled to promotion to still higher offices unless the Government shall be able to defend itself against such claim by an amount of evidence that would suffice to convict the candidates of crime; and even that, if the Government has been negligent in the matter of defending itself against the claim of candidates to serve it, and has not proven its case against them within two years, then it is helpless and must keep in employment and promote to still higher grades officers about whose fitness the gravest doubts exist. No one has a vested right to an office, especially if such office be a creature of statute. Such offices Congress creates, abolishes, and limits at will. The act of August 5, 1882, is therefore entirely constitutional. Congress having complete power might, if it wishes, stop all promotions. It did actually impede promotions by the act of 1882. It might declare that no one should hereafter be promoted who was not over six feet high, or it might even direct that all officers not of the required height should be discharged. A fortiori, it can pass an act like that of 1882, directing the discharge of officers whose unfitness arises from their own misconduct. The burden of establishing his fitness should be upon an officer who asks to be promoted to a higher grade, just as it is on one who seeks original appointment, and when the time comes for these stated examinations, the same rule should apply to one who seeks to hold on to an office. He must be discharged unless he shows his fitness to serve the Government. (Letter of Secretary of the Navy to the President, June 29, 1893, in case of Pay Inspector John H. Stevenson's examination for pay director.)

"The testimony in this case seems to the department to sustain the finding of the board. It is true there is much conflict in the evidence, and it is perhaps also true that a majority of the witnesses testified in favor of the applicant; but the proper method of arriving at the truth is to weigh evidence, and not to count witnesses. It is within the experience of every lawyer that habitual drunkenness is a most difficult fact to establish. The evidence of the witnesses who did testify to the applicant's habits of intemperance is so full and complete as to largely outweigh in the opinion of the department, the negative testimony offered by the applicant." (File 1223-94, Apr. 18, 1894, examination of Frank W. Nichols.)

The evidence requisite to establish before a naval examining board the unfitness of a candidate for promotion by reason of habits of intemperance need not be of such a positive and conclusive character as would be necessary to convict an officer on trial for similar offenses before a court-martial. In the latter case the burden rests upon the Government to establish the offense while in the former case it rests upon the candidate, who must demonstrate affirmatively his fitness for promotion. (Memo. of J. A. G., May 27, 1898, p. 34, examination of Asst. Paymaster Francis J. Semmes.)

Improvement of officer's moral qualifications.—The fact that an officer had improved the condition of his financial affairs prior to his examination could not have much bearing on his case. "Such improvement * * * is not unusual in cases where an officer whose record has heretofore been bad is soon to be due for promotion, but, unfortunately, the reformation is usually of short duration." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 13, quoting Memo. of J. A. G., Mar. 3, 1898, examination of Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin B. Webster, U. S. N.)

Lieut. Charles P. Burt, U. S. Navy, was examined January 26, 1912, and found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he was to be promoted, the board stating: "Comparing the evidence as to the candidate's conduct and habits during the early part of the period under investigation for the purpose of determining his fitness for promotion, and his financial methods and habits now, the board is of the opinion that so great a change for the better has taken place, a process of rehabilitation which has extended over a period of five years, that the candidate has shown strength of character and a strong determination to correct and avoid the error of his former ways." (The board's finding was approved by the President, Feb. 13, 1912.)

Act of August 5, 1882, not a penal statute.—The power to formulate articles for the government of the Navy and to provide punishment for individual officers for violation thereof is conferred upon Congress by the clause of the Constitution authorizing it "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;" the power to provide what persons may be appointed or enlisted in the naval service, the qualifications they must possess, and the total number of the entire force, is conferred by the clause authorizing the Congress "to provide and maintain a Navy." Statutes passed under the first clause mentioned are penal and are to be enforced by courts-martial; those passed under the second clause are enacted in the interest of the Navy at large and are to be administered by the President, either alone or with the aid of examining boards or such other instrumentalities as may be determined upon by Congress. Persons excluded from appointment for lack of any required qualification—health, age, nationality, height, temperament, or any other condition that Congress might see fit to impose—are not being punished under penal laws for their failure to measure up to the necessary requirements but are merely incidentally affected by the Government's policy as defined by Congress in the exercise of its undoubted right to say who shall and who shall not be appointed to the military or naval service. Such statutes are not penal in their nature any more than those providing that no man shall be allowed to vote unless he possesses a given amount of property or is of certain age or has resided in the State or district for a specified period, etc. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 24, citing Street v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 230, noted under sec. 1454, R. S. Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 15, 1918, file 26282-326:2.)

Even if the act of 1882 be regarded as a penal statute, nevertheless the words should be given the sense which "promotes in the fullest manner the policy and objects of the legislature." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 18, citing U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall., 385, 395, and U. S.

v. Lacher, 134 U. S., 624; see also, "Introduction," under "Statutory Construction," VI, E, 3, "Penal laws.")

The purpose of Congress was to promote the efficiency of the Navy by ridding it of officers who, for any cause arising from their own misconduct, did not measure up to that high standard which should be demanded of a candidate for appointment or promotion in the American Navy. So far from intending to impose any punishment upon the officer who was weighed and found wanting, Congress in this same act exhibited a remarkably liberal policy toward such officers by providing that they should be given on discharge "one year's pay." No stronger evidence could be desired to establish that the act of 1882 was not intended as a penal statute. If the finding of the examining board had been intended by Congress to be the equivalent of a conviction by court-martial, it would not have provided that the officer so found deficient should be presented, as an absolute gratuity, with "one year's pay," amounting in the present case to $3,120. Officers resigning from the service with the most honorable records are not given any gratuity whatever; and it was not until the act of May 13, 1908, that the widows or other beneficiaries of officers killed or otherwise dying in the line of duty were given a gratuity, and in their cases it was provided that the amount should be equal only to six months' pay. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 22; compare 7 Comp. Dec., 404, noted under sec. 1454, R. S., "One year's pay allowed officer wholly retired is not a gratuity.")

Examination of moral fitness not a "trial."—An officer upon examination for promotion is not on trial for crime and therefore the application of constitutional limitations upon the procedure of such trials is in no sense pertinent. With reference to the Army board convened under the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 314), providing for the mustering out by the President, with one year's pay, of officers found by a board to be unfit for the proper discharge of their duties "for any cause, except injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of their duty," it was stated by the Court of Claims in the case of Duryea v. U. S. (17 Ct. Cls., 24): "It may be that the board did not proceed with that strict regard to the rules of evidence which are required in courts-martial and civil courts of justice, but it is not necessary for us to consider how far its irregularities extended. In our opinion the board was not a court of any kind." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 30; see also, note to Constitution, fifth amendment, "Due process of law.")

It was stated by the Court of Claims that the act of 1870, providing for mustering out officers of the Army, did not contemplate discharges for offenses; that the cause prescribed therein and for which the claimant in the case under consideration was discharged, was "unfitness;" that if the claimant had been guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer or prejudicial to the service, there were abundant provisions of law for bringing him to trial before a court-martial and dismissing him from the service without the bounty of additional pay; that the act of 1870 was intended to reach an entirely different class of officers; it was in no sense penal, the officers against whom it operated were not criminals, the advisory board had no jurisdiction of offenses, and was without authority to put officers upon their trial for any fault. The foregoing is directly applicable to the act of 1882 relating to the Navy. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 22, citing Sherburne v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 491.)

The only question before an examining board when considering an officer's moral qualifications is his fitness for promotion. The board is in no sense a court before which the candidate is on trial for his misdeeds. The punishment for such misdeeds is provided for by other statutes and is not a question to be considered by examining boards; but the bearing, if any, which such misconduct may have upon the officer's fitness for promotion is a question before the board and must be determined by it wholly independent of any disciplinary proceedings to which the officer has rendered himself liable. In considering this question and submitting its report the examining board is not administering a penal statute. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 23.)

The purpose of the act of August 5, 1882, as shown by the title of the bill as it first passed the Senate, was "to promote the efficiency of the Navy" and not to provide for the administration of justice, nor to provide for the punishment of drunkenness. This was to be done by discharging, instead of promoting or retiring, officers who were found on examination not qualified "for the honorable position of an officer in the United States Navy." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 21.)

The contention that cases of moral unfitness should be disposed of by court-martial proceedings is based upon an utter misconception of the causes involving such moral unfitness, as well as the duties and powers of examining boards. As the history of the service shows, moral disqualification in a vast majority of cases is due to a series of matters, each perhaps trivial in itself, but which, taken as a whole, amount to a habit sufficiently serious to disqualify an officer for promotion in the U. S. Navy. But an officer of the Navy can not be court-martialed for a "habit." The Navy Regulations provide that "offenses shall not be allowed to accumulate in order that sufficient matter may thus be collectively obtained for a trial." And article 61, Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.), provides that "no person shall be tried by court-martial or otherwise punished for any offense, except as provided in the following article [desertion], which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial or punishment." Furthermore, a naval examining board has authority and exercises functions as extensive in their nature as those exercised by courts-martial, and in its consideration of an officer's qualifications for promotion it determines for itself all questions arising, independently of any disciplinary action that may or could have been taken in the premises. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 14, citing Op. J. A. G., Dec. 4, 1897, case of Passed Asst.

Paymaster Harry R. Sullivan, file 5878-97, 9 Op. J. A. G., 296, 316, 319; Davis v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls. 442.)

It is further contended that, if the act of 1882 is held to apply to an officer's moral qualifications for promotion, this would be equivalent to investing examining boards with the powers of a court-martial, thereby authorizing the dismissal of an officer by indirection, without the sentence of a court-martial, which is forbidden by the Articles for the Government of the Navy. If Congress sees fit to provide that officers not possessing certain qualifications which it has made a prerequisite to promotion shall be discharged from the service upon the finding of an examining board, its power to do so can not successfully be questioned. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 17, citing Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99.)

Character of discharge issued under act of 1882.—As has been held by the Attorney General (13 Op. Att'y. Gen., 16, 18), "an officer or soldier, upon his discharge from the service, may be regarded as entitled to an honorable discharge, unless he is under sentence of dishonorable dismissal, or unless he has been convicted of an infamous offense, and is sentenced to punishment therefor during the remainder of his term of service, such as cowardice, etc., with either of which conditions an honorable discharge would be incompatible." Officers discharged under the act of 1882 can not, therefore, be regarded as having been dishonorably discharged, which conclusively shows, even aside from the gratuity accompanying it, that the act of 1882 is not in any aspect a penal statute imposing "punishment" in a legal sense upon the officer found not morally qualified for promotion. (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 26.)

It is evident that the word "discharged" as used in the act of 1882 was intended to be synonymous with the words "wholly retired," and it has been given that construction by the Navy Department and by Congress. Thus, a bill (S. 1438), which passed both Houses during the Fifty-third Congress, second session, provided that Passed Assistant Paymaster Louis A. Yorke, who had been discharged from the service under the act of 1882, should be restored to the Navy as of the date that he was "wholly retired." The Secretary of the Navy in reporting upon the bill in question (Senate Rept. No. 265, 53rd Cong., 2d sess.), stated "that his retirement (wholly) from the service was justified by the finding of the board." The Senate and House naval committees, in reporting upon the same bill (Senate Rept. No. 489; House Rept. No. 1990; 53d Cong., 1st sess.), stated with respect to the history of Mr. Yorke's case, that "by this board he was wholly retired from the naval service." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 25½; as to meaning of "wholly retired," see note to sec. 1454, R. S.)

One year's pay not a gratuity.—See note to section 1454, Revised Statutes, under "One year's pay allowed officer wholly retired is not a gratuity"; compare note to this section, above, under "Act of August 5, 1882, not a penal statute" and "Character of discharge issued under act of 1882."

Amount of pay on discharge.—Section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act March 11, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), provides for dropping an officer from the service "with not more than one year's pay" upon failing to qualify professionally for promotion. Held, that said provision is indefinite and authority is not given to the accounting officers to determine how much pay, if any, shall be received by an officer so dropped, but the discretion in determining the amount is left to the executive, through the administrative department. Where the President directed that the officer be dropped under said statute, without directing any pay be given him, none can be allowed by the accounting officers, and he is, therefore, entitled to pay to the date he received notice of discharge, and no more. (18 Comp. Dec., 922.)

Revocation of President's action.—A naval examining board finds an officer morally disqualified for promotion. The finding is approved by the President, and under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882, it is directed that he be discharged with one year's pay. The President thereafter revokes his approval, stating that he inadvertently signed the order confirming the report of the board, because it was supposed to be a case in which the formal approval would follow as of course, instead of one in which there was a dispute and to which his attention had previously been particularly invited. Held, that because of the multiplicity and variety of cases requiring the action of the President, it is manifestly impossible for him to give careful consideration to each one, and when he inadvertently, by mistake of fact, takes action, as shown in this case, that he did not intend to take, it would seem to be a case to which the legal principle authorizing correction of a mistake of fact, is peculiarly applicable. Accordingly, held, that the President had power to cancel the approval of the board's recommendation, and to remit the case for the consideration of another board, and having so exercised his power, such action had the effect of placing the officer in the same situation he would have been in if the President had not approved said recommendation and issued said order directing that he be discharged; the officer was never out of the service by reason of the President's action, and is therefore entitled to pay accordingly. (18 Comp. Dec., 676.)

In the above case the officer was, November 2, 1911, discharged by the Navy Department in accordance with the President's order; January 2, 1912, the President directed that his signature be canceled; January 4, 1912, the Secretary of the Navy notified the officer that, by direction of the President, his discharge had been canceled; January 6, 1912, the Secretary of the Navy wrote requesting the officer to return for cancellation the Navy Department's letter notifying him of his dismissal from the service of the United States. The letter was received by the officer January 8, 1912, and the request complied with. In the meantime, no successor was appointed. (18 Comp. Dec., 676.)

It has been repeatedly decided by the courts that when, by any of the legal methods, an officer of the Army or Navy goes out of the service by the act of the President, his connection with the service is severed, and no revocation by the President of his legal acts of dismissal can have the effect to restore the person to his former office (citing Mimmack v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cls., 584, 97 U. S., 426, 437; Corson v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 344, 114 U. S., 619; McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 528). These cases are inapplicable to the facts stated in the case noted above. (18 Comp. Dec., 676.)

Lieut. Charles P. Burt was examined for promotion November 22, 1909, and found physically and mentally, but not morally or professionally, qualified; the finding as to moral disqualification was disapproved, the finding as to professional disqualification approved, and he was suspended from promotion in accordance with section 1505, Revised Statutes. Upon expiration of the period of suspension he was again examined and found mentally and professionally, but not morally, qualified; the record was returned to the board for further consideration as to his moral qualifications; the board again reported that he was not morally qualified for promotion. A minority report stated that he was mentally, morally, and professionally qualified. The majority finding of the board was approved by the President, October 28, 1911, and the officer accordingly discharged from the Navy. On January 4, 1912, the Secretary of the Navy, by direction of the President, canceled the President's approval, for reasons stated above. The President's letter of January 2, 1912, directing that his signature be canceled, stated: "I am aware, in directing the cancellation of my signature as inadvertent, I am exercising a power the legality of which may be questioned, but as the action is in the interest of equity and justice I have taken it, leaving it to the courts, should the question ever be brought to them, to pass upon its legality." (File 26260-1392:15. The Comptroller of the Treasury, in his decision above noted, sustained the legality of the President's action, and the officer's consequent right to pay thereunder, and the question was thus not raised in the courts.)

Sec. 1457. [Grade and status of retired officers.] Officers retired from active service shall be placed on the retired list of officers of the grades to which they belonged respectively at the time of their retirement, and continue to be borne on the Navy Register. They shall be entitled to wear the uniform of their respective grades, and shall be subject to the rules and articles for the government of the Navy and to trial by general court-martial. The names of officers wholly retired from the service shall be omitted from the Navy Register.—(16 Jan., 1857, c. 12, s. 4, v. 11, p. 154. 3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, ss. 22, 23, 24, v. 12, pp. 290, 291. 30 Jan., 1875, c. 30, v. 18, p. 304.)

Commissions with advanced rank to be issued to officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps on the retired list advanced in rank by operation of or in accordance with law. (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1354.)

Marine officers retired generally with the "rank" held on the active list.—See sections 1254 and 1622, Revised Statutes.

Officers retired as captain, promoted to rear admiral, and subsequently having war service, were to be regarded as having been retired as rear admirals, under the provisions of section 1589, Revised Statutes, now obsolete.

Officers temporarily advanced in rank or grade during war with Germany, and retired while holding such temporary rank, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty, shall be retired with grade or rank to which permanently entitled. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 9, 40 Stat., 86; see also act June 4, 1920, sec. 2, 41 Stat., 834.)

Officers may be wholly retired when incapacity is not an incident of the service.—See section 1454, Revised Statutes.

Promotion or increase of pay on the retired list, prohibited by act August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286); see note to sections 1460, 1461, and 1591, Revised Statutes. Promotion on retired list under certain specified conditions was authorized by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717).

Promotion on retired list, without increase in pay, was authorized by sections 1460, 1461, and 1591, Revised Statutes.

Rank and pay of officers on retired list shall be the same as when they are retired. (Act Aug. 5, 1882, 22 Stat., 286.)

Rank of officers retired under section 8, Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), to create vacancies, shall be same as when retired. (Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 328.)

Rank on retirement, increased on account of civil-war service. (Act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 11, 30 Stat., 1007; act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 554; and act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 753.)

Rank on retirement, increased in cases of officers failing in physical examination for promotion. (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1267.) But this does not apply to officers of the rank of lieutenant commander and above. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718.)

Rank on retirement of staff officers, increased in certain cases. (Sec. 1481, R. S.)

Staff officers are retired generally with rank held on active list. (Sec. 1482 R. S. See also, as to retirement of staff officers, secs. 1473 and 1481, R. S.)

Trial of retired officers by general court-martial. See note to Constitution, article I, section 8, clause 14, under "IV. Jurisdiction of courts-martial."

Unauthorized wearing of the uniform was prohibited by act June 3, 1916, section 125 (39 Stat., 216), as amended by act August 29, 1916, section 1 (39 Stat., 649), and June 4, 1920, sec. 8 (41 Stat., 836.) See also act February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1202).

Historical note.—The reserved, or as it is sometimes with more accuracy called, the retired list of the Navy, was created under the provisions of the act of February 28, 1855 (10 Stat., 616), to promote the efficiency of the Navy. The second section of that act declared that those officers so placed on the reserved list should receive the leave of absence pay, or the furlough pay to which they might be entitled when so placed, according to the report of the board and approval of the President, and should be ineligible to further promotion, but subject to the orders of the Navy Department at all times for duty, and it limited the reserved list to the grades of captain, commander, lieutenant, masters, and passed midshipmen. The 22d section of the act of August 3, 1861 (12 Stat., 290), providing for the better organization of the military establishment, enacted that if any officer of the Navy shall have become or shall hereafter become, incapable of performing the duties of his office, he shall be placed upon the retired list, and withdrawn from active service and command, and from the line of promotion, with certain pay and emoluments therein specified, graduated according to the rank of the different classes of officers. The officers named are captains, commanders, lieutenants, surgeons, paymasters, engineers, masters, and passed midshipmen. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 107.)

Application to Navy of decisions relative to Army retired list.—The status of the retired list appears to be fundamentally the same in the Army and Navy, and the nature and bearings of a case as to the authority conferred upon the President with reference to the one may be taken as indicative of the character of legislation with reference to the other. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 316.)

Civilian can not be placed on retired list under general laws.—A person can not legally be placed on the retired list, unless he is an officer of the description to which the retired provisions extend. Accordingly, a former officer no longer in the service can not claim the benefits of retirement. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 506; affirmed 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 9.)

An officer on being wholly retired becomes a civilian and can be readmitted to the service only by a new appointment; but he can not be appointed at once to the retired list. A civilian can not be appointed as a retired officer. He must first be appointed an officer on the active list, of a certain rank. None but a commissioned officer on the active list of the Army can be placed on the retired list. (Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 338, 353.)

None but officers in active service being eligible for retirement, the action of the President revoking a previous order dropping an officer from the rolls and putting him on the retired list of the Army was inefficient for this purpose. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 202, 205.)

By section 1094 of the Revised Statutes the officers of the Army on the retired list are a part of the Army of the United States, therefore no one can be upon that list who is not an officer appointed in the manner required by the Constitution. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151; affirmed 107 U. S., 414.)

Congress has frequently exercised the power of changing the mere rank of officers without invoking the Constitutional power of the Executive to appoint the incumbents to new offices. But when it has been the purpose to place on the retired list one who has been discharged from the service, who no longer holds an office in the Army, Congress has provided for his restoration or reappointment in the manner pointed out by the Constitution, generally by the President alone, and then has authorized his retirement. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, citing Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 22.)

For other cases see note to section 1443, Revised Statutes.

Status of retired officers; part of the Navy.—Officers on the retired list of the Navy are still in the Navy, and remain subject to the Rules and Articles for the Government of the Navy, as well as to trial by court-martial. (13 Comp. Dec., 590.)

A retired naval officer is a "salaried officer" within the meaning of the act of July 9, 1888 (25 Stat., 243), providing for actual necessary expenses to be allowed salaried officers of the United States under certain conditions. (Franklin v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cls., 6.)

Pay is a fixed and direct amount given by law to officers in the Navy in consideration of and as compensation for their personal service. Retired pay is given partly for past service, partly for present liability to military discipline, and partly because the officer may be assigned to active duty. Although he has been placed on the retired list he is still an officer of the Navy, is liable to discipline, and may be assigned to active duty. (17 Comp. Dec., 919.)

A retired naval officer who has not been wholly retired from the service is an officer of the United States. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 298.)

A retired officer of the Army or Navy holds an office with a salary or annual compensation attached. His pay is not a mere pension. (19 Comp. Dec., 160, citing 11 Comp. Dec., 422, 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397, 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 503; but see contra, Geddes v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 428, and Comp. Dec., Sept. 26, 1910, file 26254-539, noted in Annual Report of the U. S. Civil Service Commission, 1911, p. 126.)

An officer of the U. S. Army or Marine Corps, retired from active service only and not wholly retired from service, is an officer in the employ of the Government and so within the prohibition of section 1782, Revised Statutes [superseded and repealed by Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1109, 1153]. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397.)

Officers of the Navy are not entitled to increased retired pay for length of service after retirement; time on the retired list is not to be counted as service in computing longevity pay. (15 Comp. Dec., 767.)

An officer on the retired list is "serving" in the Army within the meaning of section 1262, Revised Statutes, providing that "there shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, ten per centum of their current yearly pay for each term of five years' service." The years so passed in the service after retirement as well as before are included in the provision for increased pay for each five years' service. (U. S. v. Tyler, 105 U. S., 244; Tyler v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 223; the rule prescribed in this decision was modified by act Mar. 2, 1903, 32 Stat., 932.)

The retired pay of officers of the Army is "salary," within the meaning of the act of May 10, 1916, section 6, restricting payment of more than one salary. (22 Comp. Dec., 643.)

Pay of a retired officer of the Coast Guard is salary within the meaning of the act of May 10, 1916, prohibiting under certain conditions the payment of more than one salary to an officer or employee. (22 Comp. Dec., 673.)

The law under which these officers are retired does not require their consent, nor does it require that the order for their retirement shall be based upon any absolute incapacity for further service. It may be based upon age, which, being fixed at a minimum of 62 years, by no means implies such incapacity. It may be based upon wounds received in battle, but the person retired for this cause may for many purposes be a very useful officer. The provisions of the statutes and the uniform treatment of these officers conform to this view, and necessarily imply that, while not required to perform full service, they are a part of the Army, and may be assigned to such duty as the laws and regulations permit. (U. S. v. Tyler, 105 U. S., 244; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 403.)

An officer of the Army is still an officer of the United States when placed on the retired list. (In re Winthrop, 31 Ct. Cls., 35.)

Officers on the retired list are a part of the Army. They may be assigned to duty and wear uniforms, and continue to be borne on the Army Register, and are subject to trial by court-martial. (Murphy v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 178.)

A retired officer of the Army, not being a civilian, is not entitled to payment from the appropriation for "civilian lecturers" at the Naval War College. (14 Comp. Dec., 663.)

A retired officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service [now Coast Guard] holds an "office." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 460.)

Officers of the Army on the retired list hold public office; but an advancement of such an officer as authorized by act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 264), on account of civil-war service, does not create an office and is not accomplished by an exercise of the appointing power. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312.)

An officer when transferred to the retired list is not divested of one office and appointed to another. He continues as a retired officer under the appointment which he held on the active list and even where he acquires a higher rank on retirement this does not call for an exercise of the appointing power. The situation, accurately stated, is that when an officer is transferred from the active to the retired list there is no change in the office which he holds but merely a change in his status and functions under his existing appointment. The fact of his retirement creates a new office in the military service, the number of officers of his grade thereby being increased by one and a new office coming into existence on the moment that his retirement becomes legally effective. The number of officers in any given grade in the Navy is not limited by law but only the number of such officers who may be on the active list is so limited, the remainder being on the retired list. (File 28687-22-3, Jan. 9, 1919.)

"The general rule undoubtedly is that the status of retired officers who are withdrawn from command and the line of promotion rests fundamentally on the office and rank held at the date of retirement * * *. The President may be authorized to appoint on the retired list one not in the service, and in such case there would seem to be an office and an exercise of the appointing power, because it would not constitute a transfer to the retired list from the active list." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312, 315.)

For other cases see below. "Retired officers may be included in general legislation."

Signatures of retired officers should have word "retired" appended.—The word "retired" may appropriately and should be appended to the signatures of officers on the retired list. (File 3575-03.)

Persons appointed to retired list from civil life must take oath of office.—A former Army officer appointed from civil life to the position of major of engineers, and thereupon placed on the retired list of the Army as of that grade, must take the oath of office required by section 1756, Revised Statutes. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 283.)

General legislation not applicable to retired officers.—While retired officers are in the Navy, yet they are not serving as such.

They are a distinct class, and when Congress legislates in reference to them they are usually referred to as retired officers or officers on the retired list. Held, therefore, that section 1588, Revised Statutes, fixing the pay of Navy chaplains on the retired list, and the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), which prohibits any increase of pay for retired officers, are not affected by the act of June 29, 1906 [fixing new rates of pay for Navy chaplains], in so far as concerns the pay of Navy chaplains who were on the retired list when the act of 1906 went into effect. (13 Comp. Dec., 116.)

The act of March 3, 1899, section 1 (30 Stat., 1001), providing that "the officers constituting the Engineer Corps of the Navy be, and are hereby, transferred to the line of the Navy, and shall be commissioned accordingly," did not transfer to the line of the Navy officers of the Engineer Corps who were on the retired list at the time of the passage of said act. Accordingly, where such officers subsequently became entitled to advancement to the rank of the next higher grade for civil-war service, such advancement was properly made to the grades of the old Engineer Corps. (13 Comp. Dec., 630; compare 4 Comp. Dec., 628, noted below.)

An officer who has the rank of commander conferred upon him for the purpose of retirement does not "attain" that rank within the meaning of section 5 of the Navy personnel act, March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), which provides "that engineer officers transferred to the line to perform engineer duty only who rank as, or above, commander, or who subsequently attain such rank, shall perform shore duty only." This section had in contemplation officers who subsequently attained the rank of commander on the active list; in order to attain the rank of commander in the line of the Navy on the active list it is necessary for the officer to be appointed to the office of commander. The rank goes with the office. (12 Comp. Dec., 185.)

Section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), providing that commissioned officers of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances as provided by law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army, did not affect the provision in the act of June 7, 1900, concerning pay of retired officers of the Navy ordered to active duty. (13 Comp. Dec., 83.)

The act of June 22, 1874 (noted under sec. 1561, R. S.), which provided that "any officer of the Navy who may be promoted in course to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which promoted from the date he takes rank therein, if it be subsequent to the vacancy he is appointed to fill," was manifestly designed to fix the commencement of the increased pay of promoted officers in active service only, and did not apply to the promotion of officers on the retired list under section 1160, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of August 16, 1876 (19 Stat., 204). (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 497.)

The provision in the Army act of June 12, 1906, "that hereafter fuel may be furnished to commissioned officers on the active list," did not repeal the provision in the act of April 23, 1901, to the effect that retired officers while assigned to active duty should receive "the full pay and allowances of their respective grades," nor exclude a retired officer of the Marine Corps from the receipt of a fuel allowance while employed on active duty. (13 Comp. Dec., 168.)

The provisions of section 8 of the act of June 18, 1878, chapter 263, giving to Army officers the privilege of purchasing fuel at the rate of $3 per cord for standard oak wood, do not extend to retired officers of the Army. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 92.)

An officer of the Navy was retired as a midshipman; by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), the title of the grade of midshipman was changed to that of ensign, constituting a junior grade; by act of June 26, 1884 (23 Stat., 60, sec. 2), the grade of junior ensign was abolished and it was provided that the junior ensigns then on the list should be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy. The latter act operated to promote officers who had been retired in the grade of midshipman or of ensign (junior grade) to ensign, but did not have the effect of giving them a corresponding increase of pay, that being still governed by section 1591, Revised Statutes, and the act of August 5, 1882 (sec. 4, 22 Stat., 284), forbidding such increase of pay. (4 Comp. Dec., 628.)

Retired officers may be included in general legislation.—The act of May 22, 1917, sec. 7 (40 Stat., 86) provided "That upon the termination of temporary appointments in a higher grade or rank as authorized by this act the officers so advanced, * * * shall revert to the grade, rank, or rating from which temporarily advanced * * *." The language of this act is general, making no specific reference to retired officers, and there are authorities both ways upon the question whether such general legislation includes the retired list. However, it sufficiently appears that general legislation relating to officers of the Navy may, upon the highest authority, be held to include officers on the retired list. As there is nothing in the act of May 22, 1917, which requires that retired officers be excluded from its provision with reference to "officers" reverting to the grades or ranks from which temporarily advanced, it is concluded that they may so revert to their former places on the retired list if temporarily appointed to higher grades or ranks during the present war, as authorized in said act. (File 27231-103, July 17, 1917.)

In Badeau v. U. S. (130 U. S., 439, 449), it was held that retired officers were included in the terms of the act of March 30, 1868 (15 Stat., 56, 58, sec. 2) now embodied in sections 1223 and 1440, Revised Statutes, which provided: "That any officer of the Army or Navy of the United States who shall, after the passage of this act, accept or hold any appointment in the diplomatic or consular service of the Government, shall be considered as having resigned his said office, and the place held by him in the military or naval service shall be deemed and taken to be vacant, and shall be filled in the same manner as if the said officer had resigned the same. (File 27231-103, July 17, 1917.)

Inasmuch as the Government is to be reimbursed for stores dispensed under the act of May 13, 1903 ("Provisions, Navy") no reason exists for giving this law other than a liberal construction, and it should therefore be held to apply to retired officers, who are "officers * * * of the Navy and Marine Corps." The Attorney General's opinion to the Secretary of War (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 92) holding that a statute authorizing the sale of fuel to officers below cost did not apply to retired officers, was based upon the wording of the law and certain conditions indicating that such was the intention of Congress. (File 26815, Oct. 2, 1908.)

For other cases, see above, "Status of retired officers; part of the Navy."

Power of Congress to remove officers from retired list.—The first section of the act of December 21, 1861 (12 Stat., 329), retired from service two classes of naval officers, firstly, those whose names may have been borne on the naval register 45 years, and secondly, those who had arrived at the age of 62 years. The act of June 25, 1864, provided that the act of 1861 "shall not be so construed as to retire any officer under the age of sixty-two years, and whose name shall not have been borne upon the Navy Register for a period of forty-five years after he had arrived at the age of sixteen years" (13 Stat., 183). The latter act had the effect of removing from the retired list officers of the Navy who were retired in pursuance of the act of December 21, 1861, but who were not liable to be retired by the provision of the act of 1864. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 144.)

It may be questioned whether the Congress could, without abolishing the office, constitutionally remove an officer from an office into which he had been legally inducted. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 612.)

Retired pay not "pension."—The retired list of the Army is regulated by positive law, being a form of compensation adopted by the Government. (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 528.)

The retired pay of an inmate of a naval hospital is not a "pension." The difference in the meaning of the terms "retired pay" and "pension" is so clearly recognized in the laws that one can hardly be confused with the other. (12 Comp. Dec., 407.)

Upon question whether retired pay is compensation or pension, see file 5362-35, June 29, 1911; see also cases noted above, under "Status of retired officers; part of the Navy."

Distinction between "rank" and "grade." See note to sections 421 and 1362, Revised Statutes.

The word "grade" as used in this section means "rank," and entitles an officer retired while serving as chief of bureau or Judge Advocate General in the Navy Department to the rank held by him while so serving. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, 509, 516, 518.)

This section shows that the names of officers find their place upon the retired list only according to grade at the time of retirement. The terms "rank" and "grade" are not synonyms. (Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13, 19.)

The distinction between rank and grade in both the Army and Navy is so long and so well understood that we cannot suppose Congress ignorant or unmindful of it. On the contrary, in the absence of anything to indicate a different meaning, we must take it that Congress used those words in their well known and appropriate sense. It is significant that section 1457 provides that officers shall be placed on the retired list of officers of the grade to which they belonged, etc., and section 1487 that officers shall "have the rank of commodore." In the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 9 (30 Stat., 1004), officers shall be retired with the rank of the next higher grade, and in section 11, the language is the same. In the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), the language is, with the rank of one grade above that actually held at the time of retirement. It is quite safe to say that in these carefully prepared enactments, when Congress said "grade" it meant "grade," and that when it said "rank" it did not mean grade. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57.)

Section 1457 retired officers generally in their then grade and rank, while by section 1481 the staff officers there referred to were retired with the rank of the next higher grade, thus making a distinction in favor of the latter class. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57.)

Staff officers retired with the rank of a higher grade are not entitled to bear the title of that rank. They retain the grade and title actually held by them on retirement. A retired staff officer retired with the rank of commodore is not above the grade of captain. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57.)

Staff officers having the rank of captain on the active list, but retired with the rank of commodore under section 1481, Revised Statutes, are not thereby advanced to the grade of commodore. Accordingly, the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), providing for advancement in rank of officers on the retired list of the Navy who served during the civil war, and excluding from its benefits officers who received an advance in grade at or since retirement, did not debar a staff officer who was retired with the rank of commodore under section 1481. An officer so retired received an advance in rank, but not an advance in grade. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57.)

A staff officer retired with the rank of rear admiral under section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), would not enter the grade of rear admiral. If recalled to active duty under section 1462, Revised Statutes, he would reenter the service with the rank and pay of the next higher grade; that is to say, a medical director who has been retired with the rank of rear admiral if recalled to the service would enter with the rank and pay of a rear admiral, but he would enter only from the medical corps and as a medical director. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 436.)

The grade which a professor of mathematics had at the time of his retirement was that of professor of mathematics and not that of captain, which was his rank. (13 Comp. Dec., 241.)

In the Navy there are grades for duty, for honor, and for pay. Some of them are made grades by name, others by description. (McClure v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 348.)

The next higher grade to captain, under section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), is rear admiral of the lower half. Congress has created for purposes of pay a difference in the rank or grade of rear admiral. Taking one step upward for the purpose of pay, he passes into and not over the next pay grade, which is that of the nine lower numbers. (Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182; Lowe v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 170; see also Terry v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 353, and note to sec. 1362, R. S.).

The grade of an officer in the Navy is his official station, by which are regulated his powers, duties, and pay. His pay may be further governed by his time of service within a grade, either in fact rendered within the grade or constructively performed therein through the force of statutes. The office of professor of mathematics is a grade. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167. Pay is now regulated by "rank" instead of grade. See act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), providing that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service," and (35 Stat., 128) that "the pay of all commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers and enlisted men of the Navy now on the retired list shall be based on the pay, as herein provided for, of commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers and enlisted men of corresponding rank and service on the active list.")

A captain in the line is merely a captain, and has but one title to designate both his office and his rank. An officer of the staff has an official title to identify his position in his corps, and also a relative rank in addition, the latter being arbitrarily fixed by Congress to designate his relative rank in the service in accordance with the line standard. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433; "relative" rank has now been abolished and actual rank substituted in the staff corps. See act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 7, 30 Stat., 1005.)

In the engineer corps of the Navy there were the grades of chief engineer, passed assistant engineer, and assistant engineer. In the first of these there were four ranks—captain, commander, lieutenant commander, and lieutenant; and in the second there were two ranks—lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade). Certain passed assistant engineers with the rank of lieutenant were, on account of civil-war service, entitled to be retired with the rank of the next higher grade, viz, chief engineer. There being four ranks in the higher grade, held, that the rank to which the officers concerned were entitled, on account of civil-war service, was the rank next above that which they held in the lower grade, and that the provisions of sections 1485 and 1486, Revised Statutes, relating to precedence of staff officers, did not operate to entitle them to a higher rank. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 496. See also note to sec. 1390, R. S.)

The retirement of an officer with a higher rank than that held by him on the active list, pursuant to an act of Congress authorizing it, does not confer upon him a new office. He retains his former office, to which he had been duly appointed, and acquires only new and higher rank by the act of Congress authorizing his retirement. The rank which is conferred upon him by act of Congress upon his retirement is in no sense a constitutional appointment to a new office. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151; affirmed 107 U. S., 414.)

Congress may transfer an officer from the active to the retired list, and may change his rank and pay on the active or retired list at any time, without coming in conflict with the Constitution. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151; affirmed 107 U. S., 414.)

An officer on the active list may be retired with a different rank from that which belongs to his office, when Congress so provides, without a new appointment, as he continues to hold the same office, but is transferred to the retired list with a different rank. (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151; affirmed 107 U. S., 414.)

The effect of advancement of an officer on the retired list on account of civil-war service, in accordance with the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), is not to place him in a different grade, but to give him the rank and retired pay belonging to that grade. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 615.)

A lieutenant in the Navy retired with the rank of lieutenant commander under section 9 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1006), continued to hold the office of lieutenant subsequent to his retirement. (14 Comp. Dec., 471.)

An officer properly appointed to any grade on the active list may be retired with a rank higher or lower than that which belongs to his office, if Congress see fit so to enact; but Congress can not appoint to a new and different office without coming in conflict with the Constitution. (Moser v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 86.)

Officers of the Navy advanced in rank on the retired list, even where such advancement is by law made subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, are not entitled to commissions in such advanced rank, as no exercise of the appointing power is involved, the effect thereof being merely a change of rank and not promotion to a new and higher office. (File 26509-33, Mar. 24, 1910, citing Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 107 U. S., 414; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312, 317; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 487; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 615; file 26254-89, Aug. 11, 1908; see also Cloud v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 69; War Dept., Gen. Order No. 191, Dec. 21, 1904. But see act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1354, providing that "commissioned officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps on the retired list whose rank has been or shall hereafter be advanced by operation of or in accordance with law shall be entitled to and shall receive commissions in accordance with such advanced rank.")

Rank as well as pay of retired officers is entirely within the control of Congress; and a new commission is not necessary where an officer is entitled to be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted. (Cloud v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 69; but see act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1354, quoted in preceding paragraph.)

The President may send to the Senate for approval of his action the names of officers on the retired list of the Army nominated by him for advancement under the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 264), after the adjournment of the last session of Congress, but who died before the convening of the present session; and upon approval by the Senate, the personal representatives of the deceased officers will be entitled to receive the advanced pay due such officers, without further action by Congress. Where, however, a person is appointed to office, either during a session or in a recess of the Senate, and dies before confirmation, his personal representatives must be remitted to Congress for the payment of salary earned by such officer. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312. See also 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, concerning nunc pro tunc advancement of officers no longer in the naval service.)

A retired officer of the Army who was placed on the retired list by the President, under the provisions of the act of April 23, 1904, with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, became entitled to the pay of the higher grade from the date he was appointed and confirmed to take the higher rank; and where the officer died after his advancement by the President but prior to the concurrence of the Senate, his heirs are entitled to the increased pay due him at the time of his death. (11 Comp. Dec., 693, following, 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312, and citing 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185 and 299.)

Where, under the provisions of the act of April 23, 1904, a retired officer of the Army is placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, such increased pay attaches to said office from the date he was actually placed on the retired list, and neither requires an acceptance by the officer nor permits of a declination by him. This was not an appointment to a different office. The rank and pay of officers of the Army are subject to the control of Congress and such action does not require a new appointment by the President. This is merely a change of rank and pay. When an officer is so placed on the retired list, the act of the President is complete and irrevocable. (11 Comp. Dec., 448.)

An officer of the Navy was retired as a midshipman; by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), the title of the grade of midshipman was changed to that of ensign, constituting a junior grade, but without changing the rate of pay; by act of June 26, 1884 (23 Stat., 60, sec. 2), the grade of junior ensign was abolished, and it was provided that the junior ensigns then on the list should be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy. Held, that the act last cited operated to promote officers who had been retired in the grade of midshipman or of ensign (junior grade), to ensigns. (4 Comp. Dec., 628.)

The advancement in rank of an officer on the retired list as a reward for civil-war service does not create or constitute an office and is not accomplished by an exercise of the appointing power. In this case there is rank and pay without the corresponding office. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185.)

Under a special act of Congress providing for the advancement on the retired list from a prior date "to the next higher grade" of a chief engineer with the rank of captain, held, that since he already occupied the highest grade and rank as a chief engineer officer, it was not possible to give him a higher grade in that corps, and in order to give any effect to the act it must be construed as authorizing an advancement of one grade in rank above that which he already occupied; accordingly, that this officer became entitled to the rank of rear-admiral from the date stated in the act, and to the pay of a rear-admiral of the lower half from that date. (9 Comp. Dec., 515; see also 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

Under the acts of March 3, 1899, section 11 (30 Stat., 1007), and June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), authorizing the advancement under certain conditions of any retired officer who served during the civil war to "the rank * * * of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement," the officers affected should receive an increase in rank; accordingly, where there exists more than one rank in the next higher grade, although the language is susceptible of the meaning that the officer shall be given some one of the ranks in said grade and might be literally complied with by giving him any rank of the higher grade although it might be no higher than that already held, the provision manifestly intended an advancement in rank and must be construed to require that the officer be retired with a rank higher than that already held. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 487.)

Under the provisions of the act of June 29, 1906, providing for the advancement of officers of the Navy not above the grade of captain, for civil-war service, an officer of a staff corps in the highest grade of his corps is entitled to the pay of the next higher grade in the line of the Navy. (13 Comp. Dec., 617.)

[Congress frequently does not observe the distinction between "rank" and "grade" in legislating for the Navy. Thus, in the case of chaplains, Congress by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), as amended by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 404), provided for their promotion to the "grades" of lieutenant, lieutenant-commander, commander, and captain. In the case of H. H. Rousseau, who occupied the grade of civil engineer in the Navy with the rank of commander, Congress, by act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat., 1191), provided for his advancement from "commander" to the "grade" of rear-admiral of the lower nine. In the case of Guy K. Calhoun, Congress, by act of May 6, 1910 (36 Stat., 352), provided for his appointment as a professor of mathematics, and his subsequent promotion to the "grade" of lieutenant in the corps of professors of mathematics. By section 423, Revised Statutes, Congress provided that the chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair should be an officer not below the "grade" of commander and a "skillful naval constructor." Numerous other instances exist in the statutes in which "grade" is used in the sense of "rank." "The interchangeability of the words rank and grade throughout the statutes leads me to the conclusion that they are used synonymously,—especially when we find them, as in section 1588, connected by a disjunctive, and with no indication that either shall control." (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154.) See also 20 Comp. Dec., 199, holding that the words "grade" and "rank" as used in the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), relating to pay on promotion, are interchangeable and the equivalent of "office," and that the advancement contemplated by that act is an advancement in office; and 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 171, where use of word "grade" in section 1480, Revised Statutes was held to be obvious error of the revisers; and see notes to sections 421, 422, 423, and 1362, Revised Statutes. On the other hand Congress has repeatedly legislated with specific reference to the recognized distinction between "rank" and "grade", as, for example, in the act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), providing that "hereafter all laws relating to the examination of officers of the Navy for promotion shall be construed to apply to the regular advancement of staff officers to higher ranks on the active list the same as though such advancements in rank were promotions to higher grades."]

When retirement or advancement on retired list takes effect.—See note to section 1444, Revised Statutes; see also note to section 1458, Revised Statutes, "Antedating rank on promotion."

The retirement of an officer of the Navy, on his own application under section 1443, Revised Statutes, becomes legally effective so as to create a vacancy on the active list to which a promotion may be made, upon the President's approval of the officer's application for retirement. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 176; this is contrary to the decision previously made by the Navy Department in the same case. See file 28687-22:3, Jan. 9, 1919.)

The law does not recognize fractional parts of a day in the matter of retirements, promotions, and appointments in the Army. Vacancies caused by the retirement of officers from active service do not begin to run until the day following the date their retirement becomes legally effective. (16 Comp. Dec., 682.)

An officer of the Army who is retired is entitled to the full pay of the active list until he receives notice of his retirement, unless receipt of such notice is prevented by his own act or default. (Dig. Comp. Dec., 170; 12 Comp. Dec., 628; file 26260-3237:1, Aug. 25, 1915; Comp. Dec., Aug. 21, 1918. Appeal No. 28230, file 28687-22:3.)

An officer of the Marine Corps was found incapacitated for active service, resulting from an incident of the service. The finding was approved by the President May 4, 1908. On May 11, 1908, the following order was issued to him: "The President of the United States having placed you on the retired list of officers of the United States Marine Corps from and including May 4, 1908, you are hereby detached from Headquarters, United States Marine Corps, will proceed to your home, and report your arrival and address to this office." Held, that claimant having been placed on the retired list by order of the President on May 4, 1908, is not thereafter entitled to active-duty pay and allowances. Having been paid active-duty pay to and including May 11, 1908, the overpayment of difference between active-duty and retired pay from May 5, 1908, to May 11, 1908, should be disallowed. (17 Comp. Dec., 533. But see contra Dig. Comp. Dec., 170, 12 Comp. Dec., 628, and Comp. Dec., Aug. 21, 1918, noted above.)

While in the case of an officer who resigns his commission it is necessary to communicate to him the acceptance of such resignation, yet the same conditions do not exist where a change of status is involved, such as the transfer of an officer from the active to the retired list, and the fact is communicated to the officer concerned only to inform him that he has been retired on or from a certain date. (File 26543-62:1 Aug. 28, 1911.)

Under section 9 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), a lieutenant commander (Alfred A. Pratt) was designated for retirement by the Board for Selection for Retirement, convened on June 1, 1911. Said act provided that the findings of said board should be transmitted to the President, "who shall thereupon, by order, make the transfers of such officers to the retired list as are selected by the board." On July 3, 1911, the President approved the proceedings, findings, and recommendation of the board and directed that the officers selected, including Lieutenant Commander Pratt, "will be retired from active service in accordance with section 9 of the act approved March 3, 1899, above referred to." Held that this action of the President had the effect of removing Lieutenant Commander Pratt from the active list, although not communicated to him, and accordingly that on the date of his death, July 4, 1911, he was no longer on the active list but was an officer on the retired list, and therefore the provision of law (act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128) for the payment of a death gratuity to beneficiaries of officers who die while on the active list would not be applicable to his case. It would seem, upon authority of 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 657, that Lieutenant Commander Pratt's retirement was effective from June 30, 1911, as section 9 of the Navy personnel act provided that "the promotions to fill the vacancies thus created shall date from the thirtieth day of June of the current year," but, irrespective of this, it is clear that his retirement was effective prior to his death, which occurred after the President's action. (File 26543-62:1, Aug. 28, 1911.)

Retirements made under sections 8 and 9 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), were legally effective on the thirtieth day of June of the current year, although the President's order approving such retirements may have been dated subsequent to June 30, and the Secretary of the Navy may have notified the officers concerned that they would be placed on the retired list from July 12. The intention of Congress was plainly expressed in these two sections of the personnel act, that the vacancies provided for were to occur or be created for the fiscal year ending June 30. If there were any doubt about this interpretation of the law, it would be removed by the provision in section 9, that "the promotions to fill vacancies thus created shall date from the thirtieth day of June of the current year." This construction is not only warranted by the language of the law, but it conduces to a methodical and orderly administration of these sections. It results in making all the vacancies created under the provisions of the two sections take effect on the last day of the fiscal year, and the promotions made to fill such vacancies go into effect on the day immediately following the last day of the fiscal year, viz, on the first day of July of the current year. Accordingly, held that the order of the President, though dated on July 1, 1899, had the effect to retire

Lieutenant Commander William H. Driggs on June 30, 1899, under the provisions of section 8 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, and thus create a vacancy for and within the fiscal year ending with that day, and that the promotion of Lieutenant Walter McLean to fill the vacancy thus created should date from said 30th day of June. In other words, his promotion and his commission in pursuance thereof should bear date as of July 1, 1899; and he is entitled to the grade and rank indicated in his said commission, together with the emoluments attached, from and including that date. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 657.)

By special act of Congress, March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1346), it was provided: "That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to place Civil Engineer Robert E. Peary, U. S. Navy, on the retired list of the Corps of Civil Engineers with the rank of rear admiral, to date from April sixth, nineteen hundred and nine, with the highest retired pay of that grade under existing law * * *." Pursuant to this act the President commissioned Peary on March 13, 1911, as a civil engineer in the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral on the retired list from April 6, 1909, and it was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury, in a decision dated June 5, 1911 (17 Comp. Dec., 919), that he should be given the retired pay of a rear admiral under the act in his case from April 6, 1909, the date specified therein. As to the date of the vacancy in the Corps of Civil Engineers created by Peary's retirement, held that Mr. Peary was, in law and in fact, a civil engineer on the active list of the Navy until March 13, 1911; that Congress did not by the above act effect any change in the status of Mr. Peary prior to its enactment; that Congress undoubtedly had the authority to provide that Peary should be treated as a retired officer with the rank of rear admiral during the period from April 6, 1909, to March 13, 1911, but it could not, by legislative enactment, change the fact as it actually existed, that during all of said period he was a civil engineer on the active list of the Navy (citing Potts v. U. S., 125 U. S., 173; Burchard v. U. S., 125 U. S., 176; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 222; and file 26256-10a, Jan. 25, 1909); and accordingly that the officers promoted because of the retirement of Civil Engineer Peary should be given the date of the vacancies caused by the actual retirement of that officer and not the date from which his retirement was made to take effect. Had Congress intended that the officers promoted to fill vacancies caused by the retirement of Peary should be given the same date as that from which his retirement was made to take effect, it might easily have so stated in the act, as was done in section 9 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), which provided in express terms that "the promotions to fill the vacancies thus created shall date from the thirtieth day of June of the current year." By so doing Congress would have produced all the results which would have followed had Peary actually been retired on April 6, 1909; but even then the fact as it actually existed would not have been changed. Mr. Peary was not retired on April 6, 1909, and there accordingly existed no vacancy on that date by reason of his retirement, and nothing that Congress might say in an act passed nearly two years later could change this fact. (File 26255-83:4, Aug. 4, 1911, overruling file 26255-83:3, Mar. 25, 1911.)

An officer of the Navy who, by authority of a special act of Congress, is placed on the retired list with the rank and highest retired pay of a rear admiral from a prior date, is entitled to the retired pay of a rear admiral of the upper half from the date of his taking rank on the retired list, this being a higher rate than he has received. When Congress authorizes the dating back of a commission, it intends to give the officer pay from such date, unless otherwise expressed. (17 Comp. Dec., 919, citing McAlpine v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 493.)

The advancement in rank of an officer on the retired list of the Army for civil-war service may be made to relate back to the date of the act authorizing such advancement. The general rule is that laws speak from the date of their enactment, and where something remains to be done (nomination and concurrence of the Senate) not inconsistent with a relation back when it is done, the general rule may be applied. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 299.)

In accordance with a special act of Congress approved January 30, 1903, the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appointed a designated person to the office of passed assistant engineer on the retired list of the Navy, from October 13, 1868. At the date of said act the officer was on the retired list of the Navy as a second assistant engineer, having been so retired in 1873. Held, that in this case, while the commission pursuant to the special statute was dated in February, 1903, the appointment related back to October 16, 1868, and was a nunc pro tunc appointment, having the same effect as if the appointment had been made originally on that date. (9 Comp. Dec., 572.)

A retired officer of the Navy, under a special act of Congress, was appointed to a higher grade on the active list and immediately transferred to the retired list with the retired pay of that grade. This did not effect a new retirement, nullifying the original retirement, but merely effected an advancement on the retired list in pursuance of the usual legislative method adopted for that purpose. The obvious intention, meaning, and effect of the act simply was to advance the officer already on the retired list one grade on that list. He is therefore debarred from the benefits of an act which applies only to officers who have not received an advance of grade at or since the date of their retirement. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 111.)

Where an officer of the Army is retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted, in accordance with the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), his advancement in rank and retirement are, for practical purposes, simultaneous, for when the officer is retired he is also promoted, and it can not, therefore, be accurately described as "an advance in grade since the date of his retirement." The use of the word "since" would be inappropriate when no appreciable period of time intervenes between the two events. The promotion of officers at the moment of retirement, under the act of October 1, 1890, can hardly be said with propriety to be a favor. They would have been entitled to the same promotion on the active list but for causes creditable to them and establishing a claim to the country's gratitude, which operated to prevent such promotion. By giving the promotion at the moment of or as an incident to retirement, the Government is just rather than generous. Accordingly, held that the officers in question did not receive an advance of grade since the date of their retirement, but are entitled to the benefits of the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. 264), relating to advancement on the retired list for civil-war service. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 212, overruling 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 158, which was affirmed in 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 514, both of which latter opinions are noted below.)

An officer who fails physically upon examination for promotion and is retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted, in accordance with the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), thereby receives an advance of grade after the date of his retirement, and is accordingly excluded from the benefits of a statute which is restricted in its application to an officer who has not "received an advance of grade since the date of his retirement." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 158; overruled by 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 212, noted above.) The act of October 1, 1890, does not authorize the advancement of an officer found physically disqualified to the next higher grade on the active list, and his retirement, after having been so advanced, with the rank of such higher grade. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 514, affirming 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 158, which was subsequently overruled by 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 212.)

An officer of the Navy examined for promotion who fails physically and is retired, is properly given the rank of the higher grade on the retired list, under the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), from the date of the vacancy to which he would have been promoted on the active list, if qualified. (File 27231-89, Apr. 19, 1917.) The same rule has been applied to the retirement of officers of the Marine Corps under the same conditions. (File 26260-3237:1, Aug. 25, 1915; C. M. O. 29-1915, p. 9; see also file 26260-3604:2, Oct. 16, 1916.) However, date of rank should not be changed where already fixed under a different rule previously existing. (C. M. O. 35-1915, p. 11; file 27231-89, Apr. 19, 1917.)

The actual retirement of an officer who fails physically in line of duty upon examination for promotion should not take place before the occurrence of the vacancy to which he would have been promoted if qualified, he having been examined prior to the existence of the vacancy. (File 26260-1658, May 6, 1912, case of First Lieut. E. S. Yates, U. S. M. C.)

Action of the President is necessary before the retirement of an Army officer can be made; the provision of the act of February 2, 1901, section 32 (31 Stat., 756), that "if upon examination the officer be found disqualified for promotion, he shall, upon the approval of the proceedings by the Secretary of War, be treated in the same manner as if he had been examined prior to promotion" does not have the effect of depriving the officer of the difference between retired pay and active-duty pay from the date of the vacancy to which he would have been promoted had he successfully passed the examination. In this case the officer, a second lieutenant, was retired with the rank of first lieutenant on March 15, 1906, "to date from June 18, 1904," the date he would have been promoted to the grade of first lieutenant had he been found qualified. (12 Comp. Dec., 628; file 26260-3237:1, Aug. 25, 1915.)

Rank on retirement of officer holding recess appointment.—The acceptance by an Army officer of a recess appointment is provisional only and leaves to the officer a reversionary right to his former office in case his new appointment is not confirmed by the Senate. An Army officer who accepts a recess promotion and thereafter becomes eligible for retirement by reason of age before the adjournment of Congress and before the appointment is acted upon by the Senate, is entitled to the rank of his new appointment. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 598. See also note to sec. 1458, R. S., "Status of officer pending confirmation by Senate of his promotion.")

Rank on retirement of officer failing to qualify for promotion.—The privilege which an officer has of retirement "with the rank to which his seniority entitles him to be promoted," given by the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), is limited to cases where the officer fails in his physical examination only. (Steinmetz v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 404.)

Under the clause in the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), providing that officers of the Navy who fail physically, in line of duty, upon examination for promotion, shall be retired with the rank to which their seniority entitled them to be promoted. Held, that an ensign examined for promotion to lieutenant (junior grade), found not physically qualified, and subsequently ordered to appear before a retiring board, which latter board finds him incapacitated by reason of physical disability incurred in line of duty, should be retired in the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), although in the meantime a vacancy occurred in the grade of lieutenant to which he would have been entitled to promotion by seniority had he qualified but for which he was never examined or ordered up for examination. (File 26253-200:1, Feb. 17, 1912.)

It may be true that if Ensign Allen had qualified for promotion to lieutenant (junior grade) and been commissioned in that grade, he would have become the senior lieutenant (junior grade) and thereby entitled to the vacancy in the grade of lieutenant, provided he qualified therefor. But the fact remains that Ensign Allen never qualified for the grade of lieutenant (junior grade), and was never commissioned therein, and the question of his rights if he had so qualified and been promoted cannot now be considered. Never having occupied a position in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) on the active list, it follows that he never acquired seniority in that grade. The fact is, at the time the vacancy occurred in the grade of lieutenant to which it is suggested he was entitled to promotion by seniority, there were officers in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) senior to Allen, who was then only in the grade of ensign, notwithstanding that he would have become senior to them had he been promoted to the grade of lieutenant (junior grade). (File 26253-200:1, Feb. 17, 1912).

A captain in the Navy, found disqualified by reason of physical disability contracted in the line of duty, upon examination for promotion by seniority to the grade of rear admiral, and retired in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 4, 1911, is entitled to the retired pay of a rear admiral of the lower half only, notwithstanding that, had he been qualified for promotion and actually been promoted, he would have been, at the time of his retirement, a rear admiral of the upper half. (22 Comp. Dec., 671).

It may be true that if Captain Tappan had been found qualified on examination he would have been promoted to the grade of rear admiral, and by the time of his retirement would have been entitled by seniority to be a rear admiral of the upper half. But as a matter of fact he was not found qualified on examination. He never attained the rank of rear admiral of the lower half on the active list, and therefore never acquired by seniority the right to be promoted to rear admiral of the upper half. The seniority of Capt. Tappan entitled him to be promoted to the next higher grade or rank; the next higher grade or rank to that of captain in the Navy is rear admiral of the lower half (citing Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182). (22 Comp. Dec., 671; Tappan v. U. S., 54 Ct. Cls., 76.)

The "seniority" to which the officer is entitled is that of the rank for which, upon "examination for promotion," he has been "found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in the line of duty." The grade or rank for promotion to which the officer has been found physically disqualified upon his examination is the only one within the intent of the law to which he is entitled to be promoted. Not only seniority for a particular grade but also the finding of an examining board that the officer is not physically qualified for that very grade, are both requisite to entitle him to retirement in such grade. (File 26253-200:1, Feb. 17, 1912.)

A captain in the Marine Corps became due for promotion to the grade of major from August 29, 1916, by reason of the naval appropriation act of that date which created a number of original vacancies in the various grades of the Marine Corps. He failed physically for promotion and was retired. In the meantime, an officer in the grade of major failed upon examination for promotion to the grade of lieutenant colonel, to fill a vacancy created in that grade on August 29, 1916. Had the captain been promoted to the grade of major, he would have been number one in that grade and would thus have become due by seniority for promotion to the grade of lieutenant colonel from August 29, 1916, to fill the vacancy for which his senior had failed to qualify. Held, that under the act of October 1, 1890, made applicable to the Marine Corps by act of July 28, 1892, the captain mentioned was entitled by reason of his seniority to be retired with the rank of major and not with the rank of lieutenant colonel. (File 26260-3604:2, Oct. 16, 1916).

A passed assistant paymaster was examined for promotion to the grade of paymaster, and found not physically qualified, which finding was approved by the President February 10, 1916. The candidate was then ordered before a retiring board, which found him incapacitated, due to disability incurred in line of duty, which finding was approved by the President March 14, 1916. Under the act of March 4, 1911, he became entitled on retirement to the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted. In the grade of paymaster there were the ranks of lieutenant and lieutenant commander. Under the law as it then stood staff officers were examined for promotion in grade, without regard to the rank which they would receive on promotion, the rank being governed by the status of the line officer next after whom they took precedence. Usually, if qualified, the officer's rank on promotion would be the lower rank in the upper grade. However, where his examination was delayed it might happen that the officer, if qualified, would on promotion be entitled to the higher rank in the grade to which promoted. In this case, on the date that the officer became due for promotion, he would have been entitled, if promoted, only to the rank of lieutenant, but by reason of delay in his examination, on February 10, 1916, the date on which he was found not physically qualified for promotion, he would have been entitled, if promoted, to the rank of lieutenant commander in the grade of paymaster, that being the rank of his "running mate" in the line. Held, that the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted, within the meaning of the act of March 4, 1911, was the rank of lieutenant commander, and accordingly that this officer should receive that rank on the retired list. (File 26253-465:2, Mar. 16, 1916).

For other cases, see above, "When retirement or advancement on retired list takes effect," and see 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 385, noted under section 1448, Revised Statutes, "Physical examination for promotion not sufficient for retirement."

Restoration of retired officer to active list.—See section 1465, Revised Statutes, and note thereto; see also note to section 1459, Revised Statutes.

Status of officer illegally retired.—An officer whose name is placed on the retired list of the Army by the Secretary of War, in apparent compliance with provisions of law, is an officer de facto if not de jure, and money paid to him as salary can not be recovered back by the United States. (Badeau v. U. S., 130 U. S., 439.)

Correction of erroneous retirement.—See notes to sections 1408, 1452, and 1454, Revised Statutes.

The President has no power to correct the retirement of an officer so as to give him increased rank from the date of his original retirement, where the law which is claimed to entitle the officer to the higher rank has been repealed; mistakes, if any, made in the execution of an act which is subsequently repealed, can not be rectified by executive action after such repeal. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 60.)

Where an officer was found incapacitated for active service by reason of wounds received in battle, and the President directed that, in accordance with such finding, he be placed on the retired list of the Army with the higher rank to which such disability entitled him: Held, that the President had the right to revoke said order before it was actually executed and before it had reached the officer concerned, it appearing that the officer's disability was not caused by wounds received in battle; held further, that even had the original order been executed and delivered to the officer and his name placed on the retired list with increased rank, it would be the duty of the President to correct such action and place the officer on the retired list with the actual rank which he held at the time of retirement. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 7, construing act July 28, 1866, sec. 32, relating to the Army.)

On February 22, 1869, by direction of the President, Paymaster Gen. Benjamin W. Brice was retired from active service, and on the same day Asst. Paymaster Gen. Nathan W. Brown was nominated to be Paymaster General vice Brice, retired; Deputy Paymaster Gen. Hiram Leonard to be Assistant Paymaster General vice Brown, promoted; Paymaster Benjamin Alvord to be Deputy Paymaster General, vice Leonard, promoted; and Virgil S. Eggleston to be paymaster, vice Alvord, promoted. On March 3 the Senate advised and consented to the appointment of Eggleston to be a paymaster in the Army. The nominations of the others were not consented to by the Senate. On March 5, by direction of the President, the order placing Paymaster Gen. Brice upon the retired list was revoked, and he was to be considered as on duty as Paymaster General from February 22, the date of his retirement. Held, that there was and is no vacancy in the office of paymaster to which Eggleston could be appointed, as Alvord was not removed from the office of paymaster unless he was appointed Deputy Paymaster General, and had accepted the appointment, and he was not so appointed, as the Senate had not advised and consented thereto, and the law provides that no officer in the Army shall, in time of peace, be dismissed from service except upon and in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial to that effect or in commutation thereof. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 44; but see 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, noted under sec. 1363, R. S., "Effect of nomination and confirmation of an officer for appointment to grade already full.")

The retirement of an officer of the Marine Corps on furlough pay, under section 1454, Revised Statutes, was in error, as said section does not apply to the Marine Corps. Accordingly, so much of the President's order relating to this officer's retirement, as provided that he should receive only furlough pay, must be treated as of no effect. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 442.)

Executive orders accomplish retirement only as they apply to particular cases and when not in conflict with the law. It is the law which gives the right, which fixes the officer's status, and consequent pay, and not the recommendation of a retiring board, even though supplemented by orders which have met the approval of the President. And where the decision will turn exclusively upon the proper construction of a statute, an executive order is not final nor binding on the court. (Cloud v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 69.)

The refusal of the head of the administrative department to recognize a retired officer as of the rank to which he is entitled by law, does not deprive the Court of Claims of jurisdiction to allow the officer the pay of such rank. (Cloud v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 69.)

Courts can not order retirement of officers.—Where an officer of the Army has been examined for promotion, and upon failure to qualify is honorably discharged from the service, the courts are without jurisdiction to order him placed on the retired list upon his petition setting forth that he had been found by a board physically incapacitated for service and that he was thereby entitled to be retired and entitled to retired pay during life, instead of being dismissed with one year's pay. The report of the board is not final, but must be approved or disapproved by the President. This is the only relief from the errors or injustice that may be done by the board which is provided. The courts have no power to review. The courts are not the only instrumentalities of the Government. They can not command or regulate the Army. To be promoted or retired may be the right of an officer, the value to him of his commission, but greater even than that is the welfare of the country, and it may be, even its safety, through the efficiency of the Army. (Reaves v. Ainsworth, 219 U. S., 296.)

Where it was provided by law that retired officers who served during the civil war should be entitled to the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, and the Navy Department decided that a particular officer was not entitled to the benefits of the act, a decision of the Court of Claims (Moser v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 86), holding that the officer was entitled to the retired pay of the next higher grade, and purporting to decide that he was also entitled to the rank of such grade, does not estop the Secretary of the Navy from contesting the officer's claim to the rank of such higher grade. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 352; Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13.)

For other cases, see note to section 417, Revised Statutes.

Authority of the Secretary of the Navy to determine grade of retired officer.—Whatever, if any, duty the Secretary of the Navy has about the matter of placing names upon the retired list, it is not that he himself shall settle the question of grade or of retirement, but after a determination of those questions by the President, with whom they lie, to give effect to his directions. Should the President in fact retire an officer with a certain grade, and the Secretary of the Navy decline to enter the name of the officer upon the list as of that grade, there might be room to make a good argument showing that his duty to do so was ministerial and ought to be controlled by mandamus; but when the President retires one with a certain grade, or in a certain grade, there is no where in the law any authority at all for the placing of that name on the retired list as of another or different grade. (Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13.)

An officer was retired pursuant to the express direction and approval of the President, who by order did retire the officer as a captain of the Navy, and at no time at or since such retirement did the President confer a higher rank or office upon said officer. The President, then, having actually retired the officer with the grade of captain, it can not be said that there rested upon the Secretary of the Navy a duty to accord to the officer upon the Navy Register a different grade. In short, the position of the officer comes to no more than this; that he has been retired by the President with the grade of captain, while he conceives himself to be entitled to retirement with the rank of rear admiral; he asks that the Secretary of the Navy be required, through the writ of mandamus, to place his name upon the retired list with the rank of rear admiral, which the President declined to accord him. For this, there is neither duty, authority, nor power in the Secretary of the Navy; therefore, no room for a mandamus to go. (Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13.)

Physical examination for promotion not sufficient for retirement.—See note to section 1448, Revised Statutes.

Difference between retirement and waiting orders.—There is a well-recognized distinction between "retirement" and "waiting orders" (see secs. 1443, et seq.; sec. 1556); and an officer [Revenue-Cutter Service—now Coast Guard] placed on "permanent waiting orders" was not thereby retired. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 286; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 762.)

Difference between retirement and discharge.—An Army officer by his retirement is not discharged from service or out of the service. (U. S. v. Gillmore, 189 Fed. Rep., 761.)

Residence of retired officer.—A retired officer of the Navy or Marine Corps is not required to remain at his official residence; he may go at his pleasure to any point within the United States, or travel from point to point, the only requirement being that he keep the Navy Department advised of his present address, his official residence remaining as recorded at the Department. Under the Navy Regulations he is not authorized to change his official residence without permission of the Bureau of Navigation. A retired officer of the Marine Corps relieved from duty and ordered to his home is entitled to mileage only from the place he is relieved from duty to his official residence. (17 Comp. Dec., 952.)

There is no law or regulation which limits the selection of the home of an officer on retirement from active service to a place within the continental limits of the United States. (18 Comp. Dec., 638.)

The Army mileage law of June 12, 1906 (34 Stat., 246), which provided "that when the station of an officer is changed while he is on leave of absence he will, on joining the new station, be entitled to mileage for the distance to the new station from the place where he received the order directing the change providing the distance be no greater than from the old to the new station; but if the distance be greater he will be entitled to mileage for a distance equal to that from the old to the new station only," is applicable in principle to the mileage of an Army officer placed on the retired list and ordered to his home, where he selects a home abroad. (18 Comp. Dec., 634.)

When an officer is retired and ordered to proceed to his home, if the order is not obeyed within a reasonable time it loses its character as an order to travel on public business, and if the travel is subsequently performed, it is at the officer's pleasure and convenience, and not under orders within the meaning of the statute allowing mileage. (13 Comp. Dec., 112.)

As to status of retired officer residing abroad, with reference to acts by him amounting to expatriation or abandonment of his office in the U. S. Navy, see note to section 1428, Revised Statutes.

A retired officer who resides at a place where it is inconvenient or impossible for him to receive his pay in person must, in the discretion of the disbursing officer on whose roll he is carried, furnish evidence of his right to receive his pay in accordance with Art. 1338, Navy Regulations, 1909 [Art. R-4385, Navy Regs., 1913]. (File 27231-26.)

Retired officer cannot be appointed to office limited to active list.—The permanent designation of the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Building is an imperative order to continuous duty, and this is quite incompatible with the selection of a retired officer, who is generally exempt from such orders. It cannot be held that the act authorized an appointment, which is an order from which such officers were exempt. It is easy to see here that the fact that the duties imposed upon this superintendent require for their performance an officer fully qualified for active duty is a sufficient reason why this appointment was required to be made from the active list, and not from those who have already passed the period of their full usefulness and have on that account been retired from active service. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 421, 1225 and 1462, Revised Statutes.

Retired officer holding position as Congressman.—The question whether a Congressman can receive pay as a retired Army officer is one of grave doubt, which only a determination of the Supreme Court can satisfactorily settle. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 686; see also file 27231-74, May 12, 1916.)

Veto of bill to make retired officers of Army not amenable to court-martial.—"The original act establishing the retired list of the Army (act of Aug. 3, 1861), referred to the personnel therein included as only partially retired, and provided that a retired officer should be entitled to wear the uniform of his grade, should be borne on the Army Register, and should be subject to the rules and Articles of War, and to trial by general court-martial for any breach of these articles. By the act of July 24, 1876, officers of the Army on the retired list were specifically declared to constitute a part of the Regular Army, a provision which is found repeated in subsequent acts affecting the organization of the Army; and other statutes enacted during this period made retired officers of the Army available for certain classes of active duty, in time of peace with their consent, and in time of war without their consent. By the recently enacted National Defense Act, the authority of the President over retired officers has been further extended, so as to make them subject to his call in time of war for any kind of duty without any restriction whatever. Courts and Attorneys-General have, in a long line of decisions, held that officers of the Army on the retired list hold public office. It thus appears that both the legislative and judicial branches have drawn a sharp distinction in status between retired officers, who are regarded and governed at all times as an effective reserve of skilled and experienced officers and a potential source of military strength, and mere pensioners, from whom no further military service is expected. Officers on the retired list of the Army are officers of the Army, members of the Military Establishment distinguished by their long service, and, as such, examples of discipline to the officers and men in active service. Moreover, they wear the uniform of the Army, their education and service hold them out as persons especially qualified in military matters to represent the spirit of the Military Establishment, and they are subject to active duty in time of national emergency by the mere order of the Commander-in-Chief. They are, therefore, members of the Army, officers of the United States, exemplars of discipline, and have in their keeping the good name and the good spirits of the entire Military Establishment before the world. Occupying such a relation, their subjection to the rules and Articles of War and to trial by general court-martial have always been regarded as necessary, in order that the retired list might not become a source of tendencies which would weaken the discipline of the active land forces and impair that control over those forces which the Constitution vests in the President.

"The purpose of the Articles of War in times of peace is to bring about a uniformity in the application of military discipline which will make the entire organization coherent and effective, and to engender a spirit of cooperation and proper subordination to authority which will in time of war instantly make the entire Army a unit in its purpose of self-sacrifice and devotion to duty in the national defense. These purposes can not be accomplished if the retired officers, still a part of the Military Establishment, still relied upon to perform important duties, are excluded, upon retirement, from the wholesome and unifying effect of this subjection to a common discipline. I am persuaded that officers upon the retired list would themselves regard as an invidious and unpalatable discrimination which in effect excluded them from full membership in the profession to which they have devoted their lives, and in which by the laws of their country they are still members. So long as Congress sees fit to make the retired personnel a part of the Army of the United States, the constitutionality of the proposed exemption of such personnel from all liability under the Articles of War is a matter of serious doubt, leaving the President, as it does, without any means sanctioned by statute of exercising over the personnel thus exempted the power of command vested in him by the Constitution.

"Convinced, as I am, of the unwisdom of this provision and of its baneful effect upon the discipline of the Army; doubting, as I do, the power of Congress wholly to exempt retired officers from the control of the President, while declaring them to be a part of the Regular Army of the United States, I am constrained to return this bill without my approval." (Veto message of President Wilson, Aug. 18, 1916, 53 Cong. Rec., 14950.)

"Navy Register," history and definition of, etc.—"An exhaustive research has failed to disclose any statute requiring the publication by the Secretary of the Navy of a Navy register. Many references are found in the laws to the 'Navy register,' or to the 'official Navy register,' or 'official register of the Navy,' etc. Thus the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), provides for the advancement in rank and pay of officers who served during the civil war. One of the conditions of such advancement, as stated in this act, is that the officer's name must be 'borne on the official register of the Navy.' The act was nevertheless held to apply to mates, whose names are not included in the published Navy Register, as that publication includes only 'commissioned and warrant officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps,' and mates do not come within these designations. In connection with the cases of mates, it was decided that the 'official register of the Navy' was the official record or register of officers of the Navy kept in the Bureau of Navigation, and not the published register. This seems to be the obvious construction of the expressions referring to the Navy register which are found in the various acts of Congress, and laws requiring the Secretary of the Navy to enter certain officers' names on the Navy register, or to omit certain other names from the Navy register, are not, therefore, construed as requiring the publication of such a register." (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

"An examination of the records discloses that lists of officers of the Navy, with certain information pertaining thereto, were sent to the respective houses of Congress at various times in pursuance of resolutions, one of which was House of Representatives resolution of January 23, 1812 (Annals of Congress, 12th Cong. 1st sess. pt. 1, p. 929), which read as follows: 'Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to lay before this House a statement of the names, rank, pay, and rations of the commissioned officers and midshipmen belonging to the Navy of the United States.'" (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

"Reference is next found to a resolution of the House, dated March 3, 1813, reading as follows: 'Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House at the next session of Congress a statement of the number of * * * officers in the naval service of the United States, their rank, pay, and employ.'" (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

"There appears to have been a Senate resolution, dated August 2, 1813, on this subject, but I have been unable to locate a copy thereof." (Memo. of J. A. G., Feb. 7, 1911, file 27231-8.)

"Next in order is Senate resolution of December 13, 1815, as follows: 'Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be requested to furnish annually, on the first of January, each Member of the Senate with a copy of the Register of the Officers of the Army and Navy of the United States.'—Annals of Congress, 14th Congress, 1st session, 1815-16, pages 21, 22." (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

"Following this resolution [last above quoted] the Navy Register appears to have been printed annually, 'by order of the Secretary of the Navy,' and, as late as 1860, it was stated on the title page of the Register 'Printed by order of the Secretary of the Navy, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States of December 13, 1815.'" (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

"The duty of printing the Navy Register and furnishing one copy to each Member of the Senate is not now required of the Secretary of the Navy, as, by act of January 12, 1895, entitled 'An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents (28 Stat., 601), provision is made for the printing and distribution of the Navy Register as a public document by the 'Joint Committee on Printing.' Section 1 of the act cited reads as follows: 'That there shall be a joint committee on printing, consisting of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, who shall have the powers hereinafter stated.' Section 54 of this act provides: 'Whenever any document or report shall be ordered printed by Congress, such order to print shall signify the "usual number" of copies for binding and distribution among those entitled to receive them. No greater number shall be printed unless ordered by either House, or as hereinafter provided. When a special number of a document or report is ordered printed, the usual number shall also be printed, unless already ordered. The usual number of documents and reports shall be one thousand six hundred and eighty-two copies, which shall be distributed as follows: * * *.' And section 73: 'Extra copies of documents and reports shall be printed promptly when the same shall be ready for publication, and shall be bound in paper or cloth as directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and shall be of the number following in addition to the usual number: * * * Of the Registers of the Army and Navy, fifteen hundred copies of each; five hundred for the Senate and one thousand for the House.'" (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

"It does not appear from any of the foregoing that the secretary has ever been required by law to 'publish' an annual Navy Register. At one time he was requested by the Senate to furnish each of its members, annually, with a copy of the 'Register of the Officers of the * * * Navy of the United States,' in compliance with which request the Navy Register was printed annually and the necessary number furnished to the Senate. Now, however, it is no longer required of the Secretary of the Navy to print any copies whatever of the Navy Register, as the printing thereof comes under the Joint Committee on Printing and the Public Printer. The most that is required of the Secretary of the Navy is to furnish Congress with a list of the officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, after which the matter passes out of the Secretary's hands and the printing is done under the direction of Congress through its joint committee." (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

The "Official Register of the United States" is published by the Director of the Census in pursuance of the act of June 7, 1906 (31 Stat., 219), and contains a list of "persons in the civil, military, and naval service of the United States, and list of vessels." The Director of the Census is the only official expressly required by law to publish an official register of persons in the naval service. (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

The judiciary will not, by mandamus, compel the Secretary of War to change the position of an officer's name in the Army Register, even though it be conceded that an error exists therein. (Edwards v. Root, 24 App. D. C., 419, 431; as to the Navy, see file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911, and Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13.)

"The mere designation of lineal or relative rank in the Official Army Register does not fix and determine his rank in the Army and his right to promotion. That right depends upon other conditions. It is true the Official Army Register, is an official record of the War Department, that furnishes evidence of the rank and status of officers in the various grades and classes of the officers in the Army organization; but it does not per se establish and determine any right to particular rank, much less to promotion. This latter rank depends upon quite different conditions, and apart from the evidence furnished by the Official Army Register. Promotion in a certain sense is a new appointment, and, to the position of captain, can only be effected by the nomination of the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The mere entry, therefore, in the Official Army Register of the name and rank of the appellant would not operate to entitle him to or to control such promotion. That must rest primarily in the judgment and discretion of the President." (Edwards v. Root, 24 App. D. C., 419, 431; see file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

In the published Navy Register "various methods are adopted to indicate the rank of officers whose rank is higher than that belonging to their grade. Thus, in the case of officers on active duty, serving as chiefs of bureau and as Judge Advocate General, the higher rank held by them under their commissions as such chiefs of bureau or Judge Advocate General is indicated merely by a footnote, the names of such officers being placed in their regular places in their respective grades. Thus * * * an officer of the Navy on the active list, whose actual grade is that of captain, but who has the rank of rear-admiral while serving as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, is placed in his regular position in the grade of captain in the Navy Register, and not placed in the grade of rear-admiral, an appropriate footnote being made to indicate his higher rank. In the case of a large number of retired officers, whose grade on the active list was that of captain, but who were given the rank of rear-admiral on the retired list by reason of civil-war service their names are collected under the heading 'Rear-Admirals,' and the fact that they enjoy a higher rank than that belonging to their grade on the active list is indicated by a letter of the alphabet in a column under the heading 'Law governing retirement.' On the other hand, there are a number of officers whose actual grade is that of mate, but who have the rank of warrant officer on the retired list because of civil-war service. Their names will be found on page 158 of the Register for 1910, under the heading of 'Mates' and not 'Warrant Officers.' In their cases, however, there is a subheading reading 'Rank of Warrant Officer.' This latter method is followed in the case of the various staff officers who received the rank of a higher grade on retirement, as, for example, in the case of Medical Director Francis M. Gunnell, whose name is printed under the heading of 'Medical Directors' with a subheading, 'Rank of Rear Admiral,' and not under the heading of Rear-Admirals. In the cases of mates and certain staff officers, it was specifically held by the Attorney General in several published opinions that these officers did not obtain an advance in grade by virtue of their civil-war service, but retained their old grade with the addition of a higher rank. This, however, was merely the application to certain specific cases of general principles already well understood." (File 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

Formerly the register of officers of the Navy, kept in the Navy Department, was kept in bound record books, and after the name of an officer was once entered in the book, its position was not changed, but changes in his rank were indicated by notation on the page where his name appeared. It follows that there was no list of rear admirals, or list of captains, kept in the department, nor list of retired officers, as, even after retirement, the officer's name and record was kept in the same position. References in acts of Congress which would indicate that the names of officers were kept by rank, and retired officers placed in a separate list, may be explained on the ground that Congress was not informed as to the method in which the official register was kept in the Navy Department. Now, the register of officers is kept by the card-index system, the positions of the cards being changed upon corresponding changes in the officer's rank. Under this arrangement, the names of retired officers are kept in a separate place, but the cards in their cases are arranged alphabetically, instead of by rank as in the case of officers on the active list. (File 27231-8:8, Mar. 9, 1911.)

The Secretary of the Navy is not required to publish a Navy Register at all. For a number of years prior to and including the year 1907, such a register was published semiannually by the Navy Department, on the first day of January and July, respectively. In the July register, the names of retired officers were omitted altogether, with the exception of such retired officers as were employed on active duty. Beginning with 1908 the publication of a register in July has been omitted. The publication of a register in January could also be omitted, should the Secretary of the Navy so decide. There is also a Navy Register or "directory" published monthly by the Navy Department, and in this register the names of all officers are alphabetically arranged, whether on the active or retired list. The names of officers could be so arranged also in the annual register, should the Secretary of the Navy so decide, as there is nothing in the law which requires him to publish any officer's name in any particular list. (File 27231-8:8, "Notes upon argument of Mr. George A. King, for petitioner, Mar. 10, 1911," in case of United States of America ex rel. Jefferson F. Moser v. George von L. Meyer, Secretary of the Navy, At Law, No. 53302, Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.)

Sec. 1458. [Vacancies filled by promotion according to seniority.] The next officer in rank shall be promoted to the place of a retired officer, according to the established rules of the service; and the same rule of promotion shall be applied successively to the vacancies consequent upon the retirement of an officer.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 22, v. 12, p. 291. 21 Dec., 1862 [should be "1861"], c. 1, s. 6, v. 12, p. 330.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), which provided that all promotions to the grades of rear admiral, captain, and commander, in the line of the Navy, should be made by selection only, from the next lower respective grade. By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), advancement by selection to the ranks of rear admiral, captain, and commander was extended to the Staff Corps of the Navy.

Pay of officers on promotion, see section 1561, Revised Statutes, and act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892).

Promotion by seniority in the Army was provided for by section 1257, Revised Statutes, and act of October 1, 1890, section 3 (26 Stat., 562).

Promotion by seniority in certain Staff Corps of the Navy was specifically provided for by section 1480, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 244). Advancement by selection to certain ranks in the Staff Corps of the Navy was authorized by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718). Advancement of staff officers to the ranks below commander is regulated by act of Aug. 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576).

Promotions not to be made to fill vacancies occasioned by retirement of officers who are additional numbers in grade. (Sec. 1510, R. S.)

Historical note.—By act of February 28, 1855 (10 Stat., 616), it was provided that “vacancies created in the active-service list by placing officers on the reserved list shall be filled by regular promotion in the order of rank or seniority.”

Act of February 21, 1861, section 3 (12 Stat., 150), provided for retirement of medical officers, and section 4 provided “that all vacancies in the Medical Corps of the Navy caused by the foregoing section shall be filled in accordance with established usage.”

Act of August 3, 1861, section 22 (12 Stat., 291): “The next officer in rank shall be promoted to the place of the retired officer according to the established rules of the service. And the same rule of promotion shall be applied successively to the vacancies consequent upon the retirement of an officer.”

Act of December 21, 1861, section 6 (12 Stat., 330): “That promotions shall be made in place of the officers retired under the provisions of this bill as is now provided by law.”

Promotion by seniority in the Navy was not originally established by Congress, but was adopted as a rule by the executive, and subsequent acts of Congress were enacted with reference to the rule already existing. This is shown by section 1458, Revised Statutes, which in purporting to provide for promotions by seniority, makes reference in that connection to “the established rules of the service.” (File 28687-4:1, Sept. 12, 1916; C. M. O. 3-1917, p. 8; Op Atty. Gen., Dec. 27, 1916, file 28687-4:8.)

Constitutionality of legislation requiring promotions by seniority.—See note to section 1480, Revised Statutes; and see cases noted under the Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2, “III. Power of Congress,” and “IV. Statutory requirements and qualifications,” see also note to section 1372, Revised Statutes, “Promotion by seniority and not competitive examination.”

The law requiring promotions in the Army to be made by seniority does not make it obligatory upon the President to promote to a vacancy existing in the grade of lieutenant colonel the senior officer in the next lower grade, if in his opinion the record of the officer has been such as to indicate that he is disqualified for promotion, but under the law he can not be eliminated either through the agency of a retiring board or a court-martial. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177.)

Congress has undoubtedly confined the President's discretion in the matter of promotions in the Army, to the extent at least of designating the class from which the appointment for promotion must be made. It has even been argued that the power both of appointment and promotion in the army is solely in Congress, under its power “to declare war,” “to raise and support armies,” and “to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces,” being withdrawn from the President's jurisdiction by the words, “whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for,” in Article II, section 2, of the Constitution. If this view be correct, it might be claimed with some force that the effect of the Army Regulations and acts of Congress on the subject of promotion is to give the senior officer a vested right to promotion at the moment a vacancy occurs, and to make confirmation by the Senate and appointment by the President unnecessary, or at most merely formal and evidential acts (citing 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 144; 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 480). However, the correctness of this view can not be admitted. Promotion in the Army is in the last analysis merely an appointment to a higher office therein; and this fact is illustrated and confirmed by the long-established practice of submitting nominations for promotion in the Army to the Senate for confirmation and of thereafter issuing a commission for the higher office. Promotion, therefore, having regard to its real nature, is as much or as little within the President's constitutional power of appointment as an original appointment, and is subject, in so far as that matter is concerned, to the same considerations. Now, appointment in the Army, as in any other department of the Government, is an executive and not a legislative act; and the provisions of the Constitution are satisfied by giving Congress the power to make the general rules, prescribing the organization and government of the Army, leaving to the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the designation of the particular individuals who are to fill the offices created by Congress therein. Congress may point out the general class of individuals from which an appointment must be made, if made at all, but it can not control the President's discretion to the extent of compelling him to commission a designated individual (citing President Harrison's veto, Feb. 26, 1891, Messages of the Presidents, vol. 9, p. 138; Attorney General Brewster's opinion in Fitz John Porter's Case, 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 18). Mandamus would not lie against the President in such a case. The matter is really concluded, in so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, by Attorney General Moody's opinion in 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 591 [noted below], relying on 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 13. It follows, therefore, that while promotion is a “right” inhering in the officer next in line of promotion, and practically almost certain to vest in him, it is yet inchoate in its nature and its legal vesting is subject to the fundamental condition of an appointment by the President. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254, holding that a commission can not be issued in the name of an officer whose death occurred after he was nominated by the President but prior to his confirmation by the Senate; compare 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 229, noted under Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, “VI. What constitutes appointment,” holding that where an officer died before accepting a commission, acceptance is conclusively presumed.)

The authorities upon this question establish the following: First, that Congress has not the power to designate an appointee by name (citing 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 18; U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 How., 40); second, that Congress has not the power to require the appointment of an individual who stands highest upon a competitive examination (citing 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516); third, that Congress can not require the President to appoint to a vacancy in the military service the senior officer in the next lower grade (citing 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177). The above propositions all rest upon the underlying principle that "the power of appointment of officers, the duty to appoint whom devolves directly on the President and Senate by virtue of the Constitution itself, is one involving a discretion not entirely to be controlled by Congress. This power is from a source above Congress, namely, the Constitution, and can not be destroyed by the inferior power" (citing 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177). The foregoing authorities, therefore, if they do not clearly define the respective powers of Congress and the President, at least leave no doubt that Congress has not the power to require the appointment of a particular individual, either by name or description. This, of course, applies equally to promotions, for a promotion is "an appointment to a higher office" (citing 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177). (File 28687-44, Sept. 12, 1916; C. M. O. 3, 1917, p. 7.)

Where Congress does not merely limit the President's power of selection to a class of officers, but proceeds to the very point of requiring that a particular individual be appointed to fill a vacancy existing in a higher grade, viz., "the next officer in rank," there is hardly room for doubt that such legislation is necessarily an attempted infringement upon the constitutional power of the President, and therefore can not be binding upon him. (File 28687-44, Sept. 12, 1916; C. M. O. 3, 1917, p. 8. See also to same effect, Op. Atty. Gen., Dec. 27, 1916, noted under sec. 1480, R. S.)

Compare 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36, noted under section 1461, Revised Statutes, with reference to the promotion of retired officers as their several dates upon the active list were promoted, and compare cases noted under section 1372, Revised Statutes.

Whether officer has vested right to promotion upon occurrence of vacancy.—The right to promotion inhering in one who is a commissioned officer is, under existing legislation, in the nature of a vested right, subject nevertheless to being defeated in accordance with the provisions of the laws. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

By the law and usage of the service a line officer of the Navy has as good a right to promotion, if found qualified for it, and to his proper rank in the grade to which he belongs, as he has to his pay, and questions involving the right to rank or promotion are always important because of the bearing they have on the efficiency of the service. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393.)

Where it was required by statute that promotions to certain offices in the Army be made by seniority, the senior officer was of right entitled to be promoted to a vacancy occurring in the next higher grade on the date that such vacancy occurred. But his right can not be held to have vested and become complete until his actual appointment. The law did not operate of itself to make him a lieutenant-colonel on the date he became entitled to the advancement; it was necessary that there should be an exercise of the appointing power to confer the office upon him, and until his commission was signed by the President the office did not vest. A similar view has always been taken by the Attorneys-General. In 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 13, it was held, respecting certain acts and Army regulations requiring vacancies in established regiments and corps to the rank of colonel to be filled by promotion according to seniority, that the laws and regulations prescribed only the mode in which vacancies should be filled; "they do not confer upon the officer next in the order of succession any right to the vacant place. This he can acquire only by virtue of a new commission." And in 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 44, it was held that the right to an office in the Army is not a vested one until the commission is signed by the President. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 591.)

For other cases, see 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254, noted above, under "Constitutionality of legislation requiring promotions by seniority;" and 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36, noted under section 1461, Revised Statutes.

Promotions required to be made from next lower grade.—The practice and usage of the Navy, prescribed and sanctioned by law, require that in the grades of the service, except in cases otherwise especially provided, promotions be made from the lower to the next higher rank or grade. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 496.)

The higher grades on the active list were to be constantly supplied by streams of promotion from below, the fountain being at the lowest grade of all and supplied from without. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 612, noted more fully under sec. 1457 R. S., "Restoration of retired officer to active list.")

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), promotions to the grades of rear admiral, captain, and commander, in the line of the Navy, were required to be made by selection from the next lower respective grade. (Similarly as to advancement of staff officers to the same ranks: Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718.)

Filling vacancy by transfer from another office of equal grade.—Where there are two or more offices of the same grade in a corps, each requiring a separate commission, on a vacancy occurring in one of them an incumbent of the other may be transferred by appointment to said vacancy, without prejudicing the rights of the senior in next grade below, whose claim to promotion would be fully met by appointing him to either. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 465.)

"Vacancy" defined.—The word "vacancy" means a legal vacancy, that is, one to which a person could be appointed under existing law, and not a numerical vacancy, that is, an official position which is vacant but which could not be filled at the time, under existing laws and regulations. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 331, construing act Feb. 24, 1897, 29 Stat., 593, relating to the constructive muster of volunteer officers into the Army.)

When law is changed, whether existing vacancies should be filled according to the old law.—In accordance with the practice under which an "officer is promoted in due course to fill a vacancy," it is clear that for a period of eighteen days the officers referred to were entitled by law to promotion, without examination under the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), made applicable to the Marine Corps by act of July 28, 1892 (27 Stat., 321). No suggestion is made that the failure to promote the three officers in question occurred from any act or omission of their own. The act of 1892 speaks only from July 28, and creates new conditions as to promotions thereafter to be made in the Marine Corps. It would be going very far to say that Congress intended that a right of promotion earned by long service and actually accrued may, by force of this enactment be taken away from the officer who has performed the service. The executive construction of the act of 1890 is of much weight. Vacancies then existing in the Army were filled under the law as it existed prior to October 1, without the examination prescribed by that act. This was a practical executive construction. "In a case of ambiguity, the contemporaneous construction, not only of the courts but of the departments, and even of the officials whose duty it is to carry the law into effect, is universally held to be controlling." (citing Schell's Ex. v. Fauche, 138 U. S., 572). Although the practice under the act of 1890 had not had sufficient time to ripen into the principle quoted, it should clearly appear that the executive action stated was contrary to law, to justify the overruling of this departmental decision. It must be understood that the legislation of 1892 was made by Congress with a full knowledge of the executive construction which had been previously made upon the act of 1890, and the inference is a necessary one that if this construction had not been in accordance with the intent of Congress, the act of 1892 would have contained a provision requiring a different executive rule. A construction which requires the three officers specified to be examined under the provisions of the act of July 28, 1892, will disregard rights which ought to be treated as vested rights of the officers affected, and will run counter to the established determination of the War Department, and will reverse a decision which has been practically acquiesced in by Congress. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), provided that thereafter promotions to the upper grades in the line of the Navy should be by selection only. Examinations and promotions by seniority under prior laws, which were not consummated prior to the act of August 29, 1916, were of no legal effect in view of the change in the law. (File 26260-3663:2, Oct. 9, 1916; file 26260-3648:3, Sept. 22, 1916; file 26260-3630, Jan. 18, 1917.)

The act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which provided that examinations for staff officers should not be required except for advancements in rank, operates on and after May 22, 1917, to exclude statutory examinations for promotions to higher grades in the Staff Corps, such as were theretofore required by law. (File 26521-203, July 31, 1917, citing and following file 26260-3663:2, Oct. 9, 1916, noted above.)

Officers of the Medical Corps, due for promotion to higher grades from August 29, 1916, and January 10, 1917, but who had not been examined for such promotions prior to May 22, 1917, could not after the last-named date be required to take the statutory examinations for promotion in grade in accordance with laws in effect prior to May 22, 1917. (File 26521-203, July 31, 1917.)

A medical officer due for promotion to the grade of surgeon from August 29, 1916, examined therefor on March 12, 1917, and found not professionally qualified, could not be required, after May 22, 1917, to undergo a further statutory examination for promotion in grade in accordance with prior laws, although the penalty consequent upon his professional failure, namely, loss of numbers equal to the average six months' rate of promotion to the grade for which said officer was examined, must be considered as having been attached under laws then in effect, and as not being disturbed by the subsequent change in the laws relating to promotion in grade made by the act of May 22, 1917. (File 26521-203, July 31, 1917.)

A medical officer due for promotion in grade from August 29, 1916, examined May 8, 1917, and found not qualified professionally, which finding, however, had not been approved on May 22, 1917, could not thereafter be required to undergo further statutory examination for promotion in grade, nor did any penalty attach in his case in consequence of the proceedings already had, owing to the fact that such proceedings were not completed by the President's approval, which is necessary to make the finding legally effective. (File 26521-203, July 31, 1917, citing Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 257.)

Date of vacancy created by retirement.—Vacancies caused by the retirement of officers from active service do not begin to run until the day following the date their retirement becomes legally effective. (16 Comp. Dec., 682.)

A vacancy in an office does not arise until the officer having the legal title to it ceases legally to hold it. (16 Comp. Dec., 682.)

Officers promoted by seniority, or receiving original appointments to fill vacancies caused by retirement of officers of a higher grade, are only entitled to the pay of the higher grade from and including the day succeeding the date the retirement of their predecessors becomes legally effective. If officers receiving original appointments in the Army accept the same on a date later than the day succeeding the date the retirement of their predecessors becomes legally effective, they are entitled to pay from the date of their acceptance only. (16 Comp. Dec., 682.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1444 and 1457, Revised Statutes.

Antedating rank on promotion.—By the settled practice of the service promotion to a higher grade includes the right to the rank of that grade from the date of the vacancy filled by the promotion. This practice has the distinct recognition of Congress. Section 1562 of the Revised Statutes, and the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 19), not only recognize the practice of making the rank to antedate the time of appointment to which the rank belongs, but extend it so as to give pay from the time rank begins. Before the legislation referred to, several of the Attorneys General had decided that it was competent for the appointing power to give rank by relation in making promotions

(citing 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 124; 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 237). (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393.)

Under an immemorial custom, officers of the Army promoted by seniority are given rank from the date of the vacancy which they are promoted to fill, and although not specifically authorized by statute, are allowed the pay of the higher grade from that date. (7 Comp. Dec., 506.)

The practice of antedating commissions for purposes of rank is an old one, and has been repeatedly recognized and sustained by the Attorney General and the courts. The sum total of the precedents is that the antedating of commissions, both on original appointment and on promotion, is an established custom of which Congress must be aware; that so far as concerns rank this practice has repeatedly been sustained, and under some circumstances is held proper even for purposes of pay. (File 26280-68, Apr. 12, 1916.)

In 1836 it was held by Justice Story, in U. S. v. Vinton (2 Sumn., 299, 28 Fed. Cas., 382) that the President and Senate had the right to antedate the brevet commission of an Army officer, and that the date so stated in the commission was binding upon the courts and entitled the officer to back pay. In 1842 it was held by Attorney General Legare (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 123) that the executive has the power to antedate the commissions of officers on promotion in cases of delay. In 1847 Attorney General Clifford (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 603, 608) recognized that "usage has strengthened the practice of antedating rank." In 1873 it was held by Attorney General Williams (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 191) that "where a fictitious date in an officer's commission would be attended with prejudice to other officers in the same grade, it must be deemed improper to thus date the commission, unless there is clear authority of law for so doing;" but that, while "there is no more authority under the statutes to antedate the commission in the one case than there is in the other," where no other officers are thereby adversely affected, the antedating of commissions is practically "unimportant." (File 26280-68, Apr. 12, 1916.)

By law persons competent to contract with reference to a given subject matter may give their contract a retroactive operation, and have its legal effect antecedent to the time when the contract was actually made; and so the President, for some purpose, may give to an instrument which he issues an effect in law prior to the date of its execution. Sections 1561 and 1562, Revised Statutes, provide for certain cases wherein the pay of officers shall commence from a date anterior to that of the commission. The specification in those cases implies the exclusion of all others. From the practice of the executive of inserting an antedate in the numerous cases arising under those sections for convenience to indicate when the officer's pay is to commence or to be increased by law, it is easy to see how it might be sometimes inserted for convenience for other purposes, or even inadvertently in some cases where it might have no practical application. Where an officer was advanced in rank for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle, under section 1506, Revised Statutes, and the date of his rank in his new commission was, for convenience, fixed as a date between that of the commission of the highest of the officers whom he was thus made to outrank and that of the lowest next above him, in order to indicate his position and rank with reference to the other officers of his grade; this was not a case in which he was entitled to pay from such antecedent date under sections 1561 and 1562, Revised Statutes. (Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145.)

Officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service [now Coast Guard] promoted by seniority in accordance with the established rules and practice of the service to fill certain additional offices created by act of April 16, 1908, are entitled to the pay of the higher grades to which promoted from April 16, 1908, the date the offices were created, which is the date the vacancies occurred. (15 Comp. Dec., 157.)

That an appointment to an office in the Army, when validly made, may, in so far as concerns rank and pay, relate back, either by force of a particular statute or regulation (citing sec. 1562, R. S., Howell's Case, 25 Ct. Cls., 288, 7 Comp. Dec., 506, 15 Comp. Dec., 157), or perhaps by executive act (citing U. S. v. Vinton, 2 Sumn. 299 [28 Fed. Cas. No. 16624]; 3 Op. Atty. Gen., 124, but compare 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 608), does not prove that the office itself vests at an earlier time than the date of commission. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 257; see also, note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, "VI. What constitutes appointment." Compare 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393, noted below, under "Status of officer pending confirmation by Senate of his promotion.")

The fact that the officer's appointment in this case conferred rank from the date of the vacancy, and that he was allowed pay in the higher grade from the date of the vacancy to the date of commission does not affect the view that until his commission was signed by the President the office did not vest. Rank and office are not identical. The former is merely an incident of the office, and is used as a designation or distinction conferred upon an officer in order to fix his relative position with reference to other officers or to determine his pay and emoluments. The allowance of pay to the officer in this case from the date of the vacancy appears to have been made in accordance with an immemorial custom of the War Department which has been followed by the accounting officers, although it rests on no statutory authorization. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 591, citing 7 Comp. Dec., 506, 511; see also Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), provided for an increase in the commissioned personnel of the Navy, but required that promotions to the grades of commander, captain, and rear admiral of the line should be made by selection only upon recommendation of a board of rear admirals to be convened during the month of December of each year. (39 Stat., 578.) Held, that no officers could be promoted to the grades named until after next January first, but that when so promoted their dates of rank in commissions should be the dates on which the vacancies occurred to which promoted. With reference to the additional positions in said grades authorized by said act, the dates of rank in commissions should be August 29, 1916, that being the date on which such vacancies occurred. As to one vacancy in the grade of rear admiral which existed prior to August 29, 1916, the officer selected therefor should be given date of rank in commission as of the vacancy which he is promoted to fill. (File 28687-4:1, Sept. 16, 1916.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609), created certain original vacancies in the grade of brigadier general in the Marine Corps, and the question arose as to date of rank to be inserted in the commissions of officers promoted thereto. Held, that to give the officers said higher rank from the date of the vacancies which are filled by their promotion is a custom which obtains in all branches of the service, and this custom has received the approval of Congress in various enactments, either expressly or by implication. Nevertheless, where the filling of vacancies is discretionary with the President, the commissions need not be made to date from the occurrence of the vacancies unless the appointing power so decides. (File 28687-7, Oct. 7, 1916, citing file 7151-03. The promotions in these cases were dated from August 29, 1916; see Navy Register, 1917, pp. 230, 231.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609) provided that the authorized number of commissioned officers in the Marine Corps should be based on the authorized number of enlisted men, distributed between the various ranks in the proportions therein prescribed; and further provided (39 Stat., 612), that the President might increase the number of enlisted men whenever, in his judgment, this should become necessary to place the country in a complete state of preparedness. By Executive Order of March 26, 1917, the President exercised his power by authorizing an increase in the number of enlisted men. Further increases in the number of enlisted men, for the period of the war, were authorized by act of May 22, 1917. (40 Stat., 84.) Held, that vacancies in commissioned ranks resulting from the President's order increasing the number of enlisted men, were created on the date of said order, and vacancies resulting from the temporary increase in the number of enlisted men authorized by the act of May 22, 1917, were created on the date of said act; held, further, that the date of rank to be given officers promoted to vacancies so created should ordinarily be the date of vacancy to which promoted. In no case, however, should any officer permanently or temporarily promoted be given rank from a date earlier than his date of rank in the lower grade. (File 28687-5:1, Sept. 7, 1917.)

For other cases, see note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, "When retirement or advancement on retired list takes effect"; and see note to section 1561, Revised Statutes.

Status of officer pending promotion.—Where, upon the retirement of a rear admiral, a commodore next in line was nominated to be a rear admiral to fill the vacancy, and before action thereon by the Senate the said commodore attained the age of 62 years and was retired under section 1444, Revised Statutes, as a commodore: Advised, that according to the law and usage of the service, the officer was entitled by relation to be a rear admiral from the date when the vacancy occurred and to receive the pay of a rear admiral from that date; and if the Senate should confirm his nomination he might be commissioned as a rear admiral and placed on the retired list as of that grade. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393; compare 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 257, and 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 591, noted above, under "Antedating rank on promotion.")

Where an officer accepts a recess promotion, and thereafter becomes eligible for retirement by reason of age, before the adjournment of Congress and before the appointment is acted upon by the Senate, he is entitled to be retired with the rank of his new appointment. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 598.)

While, if an officer is not confirmed, he falls back into his former office, until that event happens his actual office is that to which he has been appointed by the President under his constitutional power to fill offices where vacancies exist during the recess of Congress. All such recess appointments, while they continue in force, confer an absolute title to the office named and to the rank thereof, and such appointments continue until rejected by the Senate or until the Congress adjourns without any action being taken thereon. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 598.)

The acceptance by an Army officer of a recess appointment is provisional only, and leaves to the officer a reversionary right to his former office in case his new appointment is not confirmed by the Senate. An Army officer who accepts a recess promotion and thereafter becomes eligible for retirement by reason of age before the adjournment of Congress and before the appointment is acted upon by the Senate, is entitled to the rank of his new appointment. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 598.)

Under the laws requiring promotion by seniority and the practice of the Presidents and the War Department in conformity therewith, in case of such a promotion the officer next in seniority, if qualified, would be promoted to fill the vacancy thus created, and then the next one, and so on down the line. Then, if the vacating of the office by the officer first thus promoted (recess of the Senate) be but provisional, and dependent upon his confirmation, so also would be those of the succeeding officers. It might happen that the Senate should adjourn without confirming the appointment of an officer promoted to a higher grade, while confirming that of a junior officer nominated to the office which the senior officer had held. This, if effectual, would put the officer whose promotion was not confirmed out of office and out of the service, despite the provisions of section 1229, Revised Statutes; but such a case can hardly be supposed; the injustice of the case would certainly restrain the Senate from taking action which would have that result. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 600.)

An officer due for promotion by seniority to the grade of captain, to fill a vacancy in said grade which occurred prior to August 29, 1916, was examined for promotion to said vacancy but his examination was not finally acted upon prior to the date mentioned. Held, that his promotion had not been consummated on August 29, 1916, and upon the approval of the act of that date (39 Stat., 578) requiring subsequent promotions to the grades of rear admiral, captain, and commander, to be made by selection only, the proceedings which had been taken in the case of this officer became null and void. (File 26260-3663:2, Oct. 9, 1916.)

An officer became due for promotion to the grade of rear admiral on March 26, 1913, was examined and found qualified, but was not commissioned in the higher grade, nor was the board's finding as to his qualifications approved by the President. Held, that the officer continued in the status of a captain on the active list of the Navy, and was therefore legally available for selection for compulsory retirement from the grade of captain under the provisions of section 9 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1006). (File 26297-14, June 7, 1913.)

A second lieutenant in the Marine Corps became due for promotion to first lieutenant on May 13, 1908; he was examined for such promotion in April, 1909, was found not qualified, and the finding of the board approved on April 23, 1909. In the meantime, in March, 1909, he was tried by general court-martial and sentenced among other things to lose 30 numbers in his grade, which sentence was approved March 30, 1909. During this period the officer had been carried in the Navy Register as a first lieutenant "subject to examination and confirmation," standing No. 53 in a list of 92. Held, that the officer's grade at the time of the approval of his sentence was that of second lieutenant and not first lieutenant, and that his lineal position was No. 1 in the grade of second lieutenant, awaiting promotion; accordingly, held that the sentence requiring him to lose 30 numbers in his grade must be executed by reducing him 30 numbers in the grade of second lieutenant. (File 26260-308:D, June 4, 1909.)

A second lieutenant in the Marine Corps, having been nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, was appointed by the President a temporary first lieutenant in the Marine Corps, on August 14, 1917, to rank from May 22, 1917. His commission was mailed to his commanding officer for delivery on August 23, 1917. In the meantime, on August 18, 1917, the officer was reported to have committed certain offenses for which his trial by court-martial was ordered on August 29, 1917, subsequent to his appointment but prior to his notification and acceptance thereof. The act of appointment was complete when the commission was signed. If the office to which he was appointed was one from which he could not be removed by the President, the action of the Chief Executive in making the appointment would be irrevocable. However, in this case the temporary appointment was, under the terms of the law, revocable at the will of the President, and accordingly, the commission, although complete when signed and sealed, might nevertheless be withheld and revoked by the Secretary of the Navy, acting for the President. (File 26260-4837, Sept. 13 and 15, 1917.)

For other cases, see note to Constitution, Article II, section 3.

Death of officer before promotion complete.—A commission can not be issued in the name of an officer whose death occurred after he was nominated by the President but prior to his confirmation by the Senate. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

Where a person is appointed to office, either during a session or in a recess of the Senate, and dies before confirmation, his personal representatives must be remitted to Congress for the payment of salary earned by such officer. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312; see sec. 1761, R. S.)

Where an officer died before accepting a commission promoting him to a higher grade, his acceptance will be conclusively presumed. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 229; see also Comp. Dec., Sept. 23, 1915, 175 S. and A. Memo., 3780.)

The President may send to the Senate for approval of his action the names of officers on the retired list of the Army nominated by him for advancement in rank on account of civil-war service (act Apr. 23, 1904, 33 Stat., 264) after the adjournment of the last session of Congress, but who died before the convening of the present session; and upon approval by the Senate, the personal representatives of the deceased officers will be entitled to receive the advanced pay due such officers without further action by Congress. Such advancement in rank on the retired list does not constitute a promotion to a higher office. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 312; see also 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185.)

Promotion of officer accomplished by confirmation of his successor.—See 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, noted under section 1363, Revised Statutes, "Effect of nomination and confirmation of an officer for appointment to grade already full," and see 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 44, noted under section 1457, Revised Statutes, "Correction of erroneous retirement."

How seniority is determined.—Promotion among officers in the line of the Navy goes by seniority, and seniority is determined by the date of commission—that is to say, the date from which the commission recites that the appointment to a given grade begins. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393; see also Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 333; 24 Comp. Dec., 177; 22 Comp. Dec., 623; 17 Comp. Dec., 605; 22 Comp. Dec., 565, 566.)

Precedence of officers promoted by selection instead of seniority.—The act of July 25, 1866, section 1 (14 Stat., 222), enlarged the number of line officers in higher grades of the Navy, created original vacancies in each grade above that of lieutenant, and provided that appointments to fill such vacancies be made as follows: "That the increase in the grades authorized by this act shall be made by selection from the grade next below of officers who have rendered the most efficient and faithful service during the recent war, and who possess the highest professional qualifications and attainments." When officers are promoted by selection they should be considered as having gained length of service according to their promotion in determining their relative rank with other grades of the Navy, to a sufficient extent to place them above the officers over whom they were thus advanced. But in no case do the officers over whom they are thus advanced lose anything in length of service which they had already rendered. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 56.)

When the report of the Board of Rear Admirals for selection for promotion, created by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), is approved by the President, "the officers recommended therein shall be deemed eligible for selection, and if promoted shall take rank with one another in accordance with their seniority in the grade from which promoted." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579.)

"Promotion" and "appointment" compared.—"A promotion in the Army is an appointment to a higher office therein. The custom, so far as I am aware, has always been to nominate the promoted officer to the Senate and subsequently to appoint and commission him anew." (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177.)

"Promotion in the Army is, in the last analysis, merely an appointment to a higher office therein; and this fact is illustrated and confirmed by the long established practice of submitting nominations for promotion in the Army to the Senate for confirmation, and of thereafter issuing a commission for the higher office. Promotion, therefore, having regard to its real nature, is as much or as little within the President's constitutional power of appointment as an original appointment, and is subject, in so far as that matter is concerned, to the same considerations." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254; see also Op. Atty. Gen., Dec., 27, 1916, file 28687-4:8.)

Promotion is a mode of appointment, and it is not the less an appointment because the person promoted has previously held another appointment in the service. When a second lieutenant is promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, he is appointed to such rank by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 34, holding that the word "appointment" as used in sec. 1219, R. S., "applies to appointments on promotion as well as to original appointments," notwithstanding the prior construction of the War Department to the contrary. This opinion was overruled in 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 196, noted below.)

A clear and well-defined distinction between appointment and promotion has existed, and been recognized in the War Department continuously since the establishment of the Army. Appointment is the selection of persons, not now in the Army, as officers of it, or the designation by selection of an officer already in the Army to a vacancy which is not required by the law or the regulations to be filled by promotion according to seniority. Promotion is the advancement of officers already in the Army, according to seniority, to vacancies happening in the different arms of the service and according to rules prescribed by law or by regulations having the force of law. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 196; affirmed 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 74—holding that the word "appointment" in section 1219, R. S., applies only to the original entry of the officer into the regular service or subsequent appointment by selection; but that it does not apply to promotions by seniority as defined in the regulations of the Army—overruling 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 34, noted above. See also file 11130-35, Dec., 20, 1916.)

The advancement of a line officer of the Marine Corps to major and paymaster, and the advancement of another line officer to major, adjutant and inspector, were "appointments by selection at the discretion of the appointing power, and were not promotions under the statutes regulating such promotions." Their subsequent advancement to a higher rank in their respective branches of the Marine Corps was a promotion in the case of each officer, and not an "appointment" within the meaning of section 1219, Revised Statutes, fixing the relative rank between officers "having the same grade and date of appointment and commission." "To hold that promotions are appointments where the officers thus promoted are in different departments, but are not appointments where they are in the same department, is to narrow the application of the statute by reading into its general provisions a substantial qualification of which its language gives no suggestion." (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 74, affirming 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 196, noted above.)

As to the difference between promotion and appointment, in fixing the relative rank of officers, it may be observed that what is technically called an appointment may be in every practical sense a promotion. Without vouching for the strict accuracy or completeness of the definitions of "appointment" and "promotion" in 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 196 [quoted above] it is apparent that the advancement of an officer to a higher grade, and to which he could not then succeed in due course by seniority, while called an appointment, is in fact and effect a promotion, and it would seem that an officer thus advanced should be entitled to whatever benefit attaches to promotion. The advancement of a captain in the Marine Corps to assistant adjutant and inspector, with the rank of major, by whatever name it be technically called, is in fact a promotion. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 155.)

"Gen. McClernand was given and accepted a recess appointment which has not been confirmed or acted upon. This, I assume, was an appointment by way of promotion to a higher office." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 598, 601.)

It has been the rule of the accounting officers to hold that the appointment of an officer in one branch of the service to an office in another branch is an "original entry into the service" within the meaning of section 1560 of the Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., May 31, 1907, 76 S. and A. Memo., 372.)

The appointment of an officer from the office of ensign in the Navy to the office of assistant naval constructor, an office belonging to another branch of the naval service, clearly was not a promotion in course to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade, but was an appointment which must, in the absence of any special provision of statute, be governed by the rules which apply to appointments to office generally, with reference to commencement of pay, which is held to be the date of acceptance of the office. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 20, 1907, 79 S. and A. Memo., 462; but see Comp. Dec., Aug. 12, 1915, 174 S. and A. Memo., 3756, noted below.)

An ensign in the line of the Navy, who was appointed as an assistant naval constructor with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) was not "advanced in grade or rank" within the meaning of the act of March 4, 1913, (37 Stat., 892); but his appointment as an assistant naval constructor is regarded as a new appointment. (20 Comp. Dec., 186, Sept. 19, 1913; but see, Comp. Dec., Aug. 12, 1915, 174 S. and A. Memo., 3756, noted below.)

Since the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 928, 945), which provided for transfer of ensigns to the grade of assistant naval constructor, such transfer involving an advance in rank, ensigns so transferred are advanced in rank pursuant to law, and are entitled, under the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), to the pay and allowances of assistant naval constructors from the dates stated in their commissions, although prior to the date of actual appointment in the construction corps. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 12, 1915, 174 S. and A. Memo., 3756.)

The appointment of a midshipman as an assistant civil engineer was an "original entry into the service" within the meaning of section 1560, Revised Statutes, and not a "promotion in course to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade" within the meaning of the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), superseding section 1561, Revised Statutes. (13 Comp. Dec., 606, Mar. 12, 1907.)

The appointment of a warrant officer to be a temporary ensign in the Navy, pursuant to the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 85), was an advancement in grade or rank pursuant to law, within the meaning of the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), and entitles the officer to the pay of the higher grade or rank from the date stated in his commission. (24 Comp. Dec., 401.)

The temporary appointment of a pay clerk as an assistant paymaster is substantially a promotion, and pay under such appointment is authorized from date of rank and prior to date of approval of his bond. (25 Comp. Dec., 550. Followed and extended, Comp. Dec., May 5, 1919, file 26254-2795;1.)

For other cases see note to section 1407, Revised Statutes, under "Appointment of enlisted man as warrant officer not a promotion"; and note to section 1408, Revised Statutes, "Appointment as warrant officers."

Acceptance of promotion.—The acceptance of a promotion is not necessary to consummate the appointment of an officer in the naval service to a higher grade. The acceptance of a promotion does not, as the acceptance of an original appointment does, invest an unofficial person with official character. It exalts his rank alone. If it devolves upon him official duties which were inaccessible to him before, it was not from defect of official responsibility on his part that the higher duties could not have been demanded of him by the Government, but rather because the Government had chosen to vest to that extent in his superior officers the privilege of performing such higher duties. As a commissioned officer of the Navy, he had already bound himself to obey all lawful orders of his superiors, and no accession of dignity to his rank could augment this obligation. The acceptance of a promotion, then, is not the act of accepting an office in the sense in which that phrase is used to denote the assumption of official responsibility. In so far as his acceptance of the promotion bears any analogy to the acceptance per se of an office he may be said to have accepted all promotions to which he might attain when he entered into the naval service under his first commission. On the other hand, while a promoted officer may not, and in some situations certainly could not, decline the performance of duties of corresponding grade, it is plain that he might decline the rank with its honors and emoluments. But in doing so it is clear that his action would in substance be less a declination than a resignation. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 229, holding that where an officer died before accepting his promotion, the presumption is conclusive in law that it would have been accepted by him had he lived to receive it; see also Comp. Dec., Sept. 23, 1915, 175 S. and A. Memo., 3780.)

Oath of office on promotion.—A transfer, promotion, or reduction from one grade to another is an appointment to that grade, and a clerk in an executive department so transferred, promoted, or reduced is required to take the oath of office prescribed in section 1757, Revised Statutes. (8 Comp. Dec., 521.) [Note: By act of May 13, 1884, section 2 (23 Stat., 22), the oath of office prescribed by section 1757, Revised Statutes, must be taken by every person appointed to any office of honor or profit either in the civil, military, or naval service. See also act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 25 (30 Stat., 1009).]

A clerk in an executive department who is appointed to another position or to a clerkship of another grade must take the oath of office prescribed in section 1757, Revised Statutes. The fact that these clerks may have taken an oath of office when originally appointed does not relieve them from taking a new oath upon every new appointment for each new appointment they receive is to a new office, and before entering upon that office they are required by the provisions of section 1757, Revised Statutes, and of Article VI of the Constitution to take an oath of office. It was held by the Attorney General (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 221) that a person who was his own successor in office must take the oath which the law requires shall be taken upon every new appointment before entering upon the duties. It necessarily follows that if a person, instead of being his own successor, is appointed to another position and in another place, he must take a new oath of office. (1 Comp. Dec., 4.)

The promotion of an officer from the grade of ensign to that of lieutenant (junior grade) "was not an original entry into the service, requiring a formal acceptance or oath of office." (Comp. Dec., Sept. 23, 1915, 175 S. and A. Memo., 3780.)

For other cases, see note to section 1757, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1459. [Retired officers withdrawn from command, and from line of promotion.] Officers on the retired list shall be withdrawn from command, except in the case provided in sections fourteen hundred and sixty-three and fourteen hundred and sixty-four, and from the line of promotion on the active list.—(3 Aug., 1862 [should be “1861”], c. 42, s. 22, v. 12, p. 290; 21 Dec., 1861, c. 1, ss. 3, 4, v. 12, p. 329.)

Active duty for retired officers.—See note to section 1462, Revised Statutes.

Promotion on retired list.—See notes to sections 1460 and 1461, Revised Statutes.

Restoration of retired officers to active list.—See section 1465, Revised Statutes.

Promotion on retired list.—The act of February 28, 1855 (10 Stat., 616), declared that officers placed on the reserved list should be ineligible to further promotion. But the third section of the act of January 16, 1857, to amend the first-named act, expressly repealed this provision, and the fourth section declared that reserved officers might be promoted on the reserved list, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but no such promotion should entitle them to any pay beyond that to which they were entitled when so reserved, nor should they, by such promotion, take any higher rank than they would have taken had they been retained in the active service of the Navy. The twenty-second section of the act of August 3, 1861, providing for the better organization of the military establishment enacts that “if any officer of the Navy shall have become or shall hereafter become, incapable of performing the duties of his office, he shall be placed upon the retired list, and withdrawn from active service and command, and from the line of promotion,” with certain pay and emoluments therein specified, graduated according to the rank of the different classes of officers. The clause of that section which withdraws officers who may be placed on the retired list from “the line of promotion,” does not destroy the right to promotion “on the reserved list.” The line of promotion referred to in that act is plainly that which exists for officers in active service, involving increased rank and pay. From this line retired officers are very properly withdrawn, because it would be unjust to the officers in active service if their right to promotion should be obstructed by the claims of those who are relieved from duty. But in its stead they may receive promotion “on the reserved list.” (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 107; see notes to sections 1461 and 1465, R. S.)

Restoration of officers to “line of promotion.”—Under the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 910), authorizing the President to place “on waiting orders out of the line of promotion, with one-half active-duty pay,” officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service [now Coast Guard] who are permanently incapacitated, and to fill the resulting vacancies by promotion in the order of seniority, held, that an officer placed on “permanent waiting orders” is withdrawn from the line of promotion, but may be restored to the service in his former rank when his disability ceases, without Congressional action. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

For other cases, see note to section 1465, Revised Statutes.

Employment on active duty.—From sections 1459 and 1462, Revised Statutes, it appears to be the policy of the law to prevent the employment of officers on the retired list of the Navy save under some exceptional circumstances. (3 Comp. Dec., 581. For other cases, see sec. 1462, R. S.)

Sec. 1460. [Promotions to rear-admiral on the retired list. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

“SEC. 1460. There may be allowed upon the retired list of the Navy nine rear-admirals by promotion on that list: Provided, That this section shall not prevent the Secretary of the Navy from promoting to the grade of rear-admiral on the retired list, in addition to the number herein provided, those commodores who have commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or who have performed other highly meritorious service, [or who, being at the outbreak of the late war of the rebellion citizens of any State which engaged in such rebellion, exhibited marked fidelity to the Union in adhering to the flag of the United States.]” (16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 14, v. 12, p. 585; 25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 1, v. 14, p. 222. 15 Aug., 1876, c. 302, v. 19, p. 204.)

It was superseded by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), providing that “hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired.” (See 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495; also see note to sec. 1461, R. S.)

Pay of officers on retired list was to be based on pay which they received on the active list at the date of retirement, under provisions of section 1588, Revised Statutes. (See also sec. 1591, R. S.)

Advancement for meritorious service.—The act of March 2, 1867, section 9, chapter 174, providing “that no promotion shall be made to the grade of rear-admiral upon the retired list while there shall be in that grade the full number allowed by law,” does not forbid the advancement to that grade on the retired list, under section one of the act of July 25, 1866, of any commodore who may have commanded a squadron by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or performed highly meritorious service. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 544.)

Sec. 1461. [Promotion of retired officers with running mates on active list. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

“SEC. 1461. Officers on the retired list of the Navy shall be entitled to promotion as their several dates upon the active list are promoted:

Provided, That no promotion shall be made to the grade of rear-admiral upon the retired list while there shall be in that grade nine rear-admirals by promotion on that list, exclusive of those so promoted by reason of having commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or of having performed other highly meritorious service. No promotion to the grade of rear-admiral on the retired list while there shall be in that grade the full number allowed by law."—(16 Jan., 1857, c. 12, s. 4, v. 11, p. 154; 2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 9, v. 14, p. 517; 30 Jan., 1875, c. 30, v. 18, p. 304.)

It was superseded by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), quoted in note to section 1460, Revised Statutes. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 501.)

Promotion on the retired list under certain specified conditions was authorized by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717). Advancement to the pay of higher ranks was authorized for retired warrant officers and chief warrant officers by act of April 10, 1918, (40 Stat., 516.) See also notes to sections 1459 and 1465, Revised Statutes

Pay of officers on retired list was to be based on pay which they receive on the active list at date of retirement, under provisions of section 1588, Revised Statutes. (See also sec. 1591, R. S.) But see acts of April 10, 1918, and July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 516, 717).

Advancement in rank of retired officers.—See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes.

Promotion under this section was mandatory, and not subject to examination.—Section 1461, Revised Statutes, gives to naval officers on the retired list a right to promotion on that list as their several dates on the active list are promoted. The Navy Department ruled that the law authorizing such promotions on the retired list was not strictly imperative, but left the matter in some degree subject to the discretion of the President to select such officers as in his opinion might be "entitled" to promotion on the retired list. And although a few such officers were afterwards promoted no general promotions of retired officers were made. In view of the fact that there are officers retired from active service who in case of war would be entirely unfit for any duty, this interpretation seemed to the Navy Department to be justified. However, the law makes no discrimination and authorizes no examination in the cases of retired officers to determine their fitness for advancement to higher grades than those in which they were retired for causes disqualifying them for active service. The language of section 1461 is explicit and distinct in its character. The word "entitled," which it is thought may be construed as giving a right of selection to the President, will hardly bear that interpretation. There is undoubtedly force in the argument which is suggested against this system of indiscriminate promotion; but it is not a question of what the law ought to be, but of what the law is. A practical effect of the law which would be undesirable cannot be allowed to overcome its express terms. Such operation of the law presents a question for the legislative and not the executive branch of the Government. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36. But see notes to sec. 1458, R. S., as to constitutionality of legislation requiring promotions by seniority on the active list.)

Promotion on retired list an exception to settled policy.—Promotion in the case of a retired officer is necessarily an exceptional incident, due to the generosity of the Government, and not contemplated by the system of retirement. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 214.)

Sec. 1462. [Active duty for retired officers.] No officer on the retired list of the Navy shall be employed on active duty except in time of war.—(3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, v. 17, p. 547.)

Active duty for retired officers was authorized by act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), which expired by its terms at the end of 12 years from date of its enactment.

Active duty for retired officers, with their consent, was authorized by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329).

Active duty for retired officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, during the existence of war or national emergency, was authorized by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717.)

Army officers retired for physical disability are to be examined from time to time, and if found able to perform service of value to the Government shall be assigned to such duty as the Secretary of War may approve. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 629.)

Assignment of retired officers to command, in time of war, was authorized by sections 1463 and 1464, Revised Statutes.

Detail of retired officers to educational institutions, was authorized by section 1225, Revised Statutes, as amended, and other laws noted under that section.

Pay of retired officers employed on active duty, was fixed by section 1592, Revised Statutes, by acts of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), and April 10, 1918 (40 Stat., 516), and also by the particular enactments, above cited, authorizing their employment on active duty.

Promotion on retired list of officers employed on active duty pursuant to act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), was authorized by that act.

Retired enlisted men may be assigned to active duty in time of war or when a national emergency exists. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 591; see also act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 941.) Promotion of men so employed on active duty is authorized by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 719.)

Historical note.—By act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat., 556), it was provided "that no officer on the retired list of the Navy shall be employed on active duty except in time of war." At the date of this enactment, certain retired officers were employed on active duty, and the question arose whether they were entitled to be continued on such duty. It was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury, March 28, 1873 (see "Acts and Resolutions Relating Chiefly to the Navy and Navy Department," 1872-1873, pp. 42, 43), that the prohibition in the act quoted applied only to putting officers on duty after the date of the act, and although it became immediately effective upon date of its approval, did not operate to deprive retired officers of duty pay for the period that they were continued on active duty after its enactment, but that, "any officer, however, on the retired list, who, at the date of the act, was on duty under orders from the Navy Department, will be entitled to his duty pay until relieved, up to any period previous to the first of July next."

By act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), it was provided that any retired officer might be "ordered" to active duty "during a period of twelve years from the passage of this act." Upon expiration of the period mentioned, all retired officers on active duty under orders issued during the said period, were detached from such duty, and thereafter no retired officers were employed on active duty until approval of the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329), and in accordance with the terms of said act. (See records of Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, and Headquarters, U. S. Marine Corps.)

Employment on active duty exception to general policy.—At the time of the passage of the act of June 7, 1900 [above noted], section 1462, Revised Statutes, prohibited the employment of retired officers on active duty except in time of war. There is no other statute in effect now [October 13, 1908], which authorizes the employment of such officers on active duty in time of peace. The act of June 7, 1900, made a specific exception to the statute then in force, and provided that during a limited period certain officers on the retired list, viz, those who might be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, might be ordered to such active duty as they are able to perform. The said act is, therefore, a special act relating to a particular subject, and makes exception to the general law in effect at its passage. (15 Comp. Dec., 235.)

From sections 1459 and 1462, Revised Statutes, it appears to be the policy of the law to prevent the employment of officers on the retired list of the Navy, save under some exceptional circumstances. (3 Comp. Dec., 581.)

The act of 1900 making retired naval officers subject to be ordered to such active duty as they are able to perform must be read in connection with and as part of the act authorizing their retirement, and read in view of the manifest purpose of that act. So read, it is certain that it does not mean that while a naval officer by his retirement is debarred from further promotion and its better pay, he still remains, in time of peace, subject to orders to the same permanent, continuous active duty at sea and on shore as before his retirement. On the contrary, it means, generally, that he is relieved and retired from active duty, but subject in times of need (of which the Secretary is the judge) to be temporarily ordered to such active duty as he is able to perform. But these cases are exceptions, arising from necessity, and do not contemplate any general, permanent or continuous assignment of a retired naval officer to active duty or for a longer period than the necessity of the service requires. Taken literally, this provision of the act of 1900 would authorize the assignment of every retired naval officer to the same continuous and permanent active service, both at sea and on shore, as that upon which he first entered, while by his nominal retirement he is debarred from that promotion and better pay which, but for his retirement, he might have earned by the same service. This is not what the law means. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508; but see laws noted above.)

Examination of retired officer before employment on active duty.—It is not to be presumed that the President will exercise the power of ordering retired officers to active duty in time of war unless, upon full examination, he shall be satisfied that they are competent for the higher grade on the active list which they have reached by promotion on the retired list. Such investigation will undoubtedly be made in view of the fact that these promotions on the retired list are not accompanied with the careful examinations which attend those upon the active list. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36, construing sec. 1461, R. S.)

Consent of Senate required before orders to active duty in time of war.—Retired officers can be ordered to active duty in time of war only by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36, citing sec. 1463, R. S. But see laws noted above.)

Retired officer on active duty is not an officer of the active list.—It will be observed that retired officers called upon active duty do not return to the active list unless under circumstances of a peculiar character. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36, citing sec. 1465, R. S.)

The act of June 7, 1900, authorizes the employment of retired officers on active duty, but it does not restore them to the active list. (15 Comp. Dec., 230.)

A retired officer of the Navy on active duty under the provisions of the act of June 7, 1900, was held not on the active list of the Navy, within the meaning of the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), which allowed a gratuity of six months' pay to the widow or any designated beneficiary upon the death of an officer on the active list of the Navy in line of duty; and the widow of a retired officer of the Navy dying while on such active duty was held not entitled to the benefits of said provision of the act of May 13, 1908. (15 Comp. Dec., 230.)

A retired officer of the Army assigned to active duty is not restored to the active list, and where such an officer dies on duty his burial expenses can not be defrayed from an appropriation for disposition of the remains of officers on the "active list." (19 Comp. Dec., 540.)

When a retired officer is assigned to active duty and subsequently detached therefrom, this does not operate as a new retirement. The retirement of an officer is a proceeding that can only take place in a prescribed manner, and it is not pretended that such proceeding occurred, with reference to the officer in this case, more than once. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167.)

Retired officer practically restored to active list while on duty.—The effect of the act of June 7, 1900, is practically to restore retired officers, when employed on active duty, to the active list for pay purposes, and their pay is not affected by the circumstance of their retirement or by the grade or rank which they may hold on the retired list. (13 Comp. Dec., 241; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 376.)

Can not be ordered to duty or appointed to office limited to active list.—The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), did not operate nor was it intended to transfer back to the active list any retired officer when ordered to active duty. On the contrary, he is still a retired officer and is borne as such upon the retired list, though temporarily performing active duty. Hence, if any law requires that a certain duty be performed, or a certain place be filled, by an officer of the active list, this provision does not authorize the assignment of a retired officer thereto. This does not mean that a retired officer may not, under this provision, be assigned to duties usually performed by officers on the active list, but only that he can not be so assigned where any law requires the duty to be performed by an officer of the other class. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

If the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), applies to retired officers of the Marine Corps, nevertheless, it would not have the effect of authorizing a retired marine officer to be detailed to active duty as commandant of the Marine Corps when the law expressly requires that the commandant shall be selected from officers on the active list of the Marine Corps. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 486; see below, "Employment of retired marine officers on active duty.")

At the time the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 553), was enacted, providing for the detail as superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Building of an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army or Navy, there was no warrant for the employment on active duty of retired officers of either branch of the service in time of peace, nor does that act profess to give such warrant. Such officers were then exempt from active service; therefore, this act would not refer to them nor authorize their appointment. Hence, the only conclusion possible is that this appointment was intended to be made from the active list, the only engineer officers who were then subject to that duty. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

The question is not as to the duties to which a retired officer may be ordered in general, but is as to the class of officers from which, under the act of 1883, the President must designate this superintendent. It is unimportant that under the later act a retired officer may be ordered to any active duty, so long as the earlier act requires this particular appointment to be made from the other class. This act of 1883 means today just what it meant when enacted. The fact that the later law has made retired officers generally subject to be ordered to any active duty, has not amended or changed the previous law in this case. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

Again, the permanent designation of this superintendent is an imperative order to continuous duty, and this is quite incompatible with the selection of a retired officer, who is generally exempt from such orders. It can not be held that this act authorized an appointment, which is an order from which such officers were exempt. It is easy to see here that the fact that the duties imposed upon this superintendent require for their performance an officer fully qualified for active duty is a sufficient reason why this appointment was required to be made from the active list, and not from those who have already passed the period of their full usefulness, and have on that account been retired from active service. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

For other cases, see notes to section 421, Revised Statutes, "I. Appointment of Chiefs of Bureaus," and section 1225, Revised Statutes.

Requiring retired officer to prepare affidavit is an employment on active duty.—The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), contains no specification as to the character of the duties to which a retired officer may be ordered, except "such as he is able to perform," and there is no limit as to the time he may be employed, except the life of the act, so that he may be employed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy as well for one day as for any longer period, and at his home as well as any other place. Held, that a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, addressed to a retired officer at his home, enclosing a large batch of papers with the following statement: "It is desired that you will, as soon as practicable, prepare and forward to the Department for transmission to the Secretary of State your affidavit as requested by him in rebuttal of the German case," and not stating that "this employment on shore duty is required by the public interest," employed the officer on active duty within the meaning of the act of June 7, 1900, and entitled him to active-duty pay. (10 Comp. Dec., 467.)

Attending court-martial as witness or accused.—The duty of attending as a witness before a general court-martial is not one of the duties to which a retired Army officer may be assigned by the Secretary of War in time of peace. But a retired officer, under section 1256, Revised Statutes [providing that retired Army officers shall be subject to trial by court-martial] can be ordered before a general court-martial for a breach of the Articles of War, and would be entitled to mileage for travel in obeying such order. (10 Comp. Dec., 51, citing 7 Comp. Dec., 97.) An order issued in such a case, however, is to be distinguished from an order to attend such a court as a witness. It is a duty enjoined upon him by statute in one case while in the other it is a duty which can only be required of him by subpoena as in the case of a civilian witness. (10 Comp. Dec., 51.)

For other cases, see note to section 850, Revised Statutes.

Orders to perform active duty after retirement must be specific.—An order of the President placing an officer of the Navy upon the retired list on account of age changes the status of such officer wherever he may be and whatever duty he may be performing, and thereafter he is entitled to retired pay only, unless such status is changed by some subsequent order of the Secretary of the Navy pursuant to law. It may be that the Secretary of the Navy, under the act of June 7, 1900, might issue a preliminary order in terms assigning an officer to duty after retirement, but such order should be certain in its terms and not given that effect by strained construction. (Terry v. U. S., Ct. Cls., No. 28148, 86 S. and A. Memo., 644; see also 17 Comp. Dec., 533.)

The retirement of an officer for age thereby detaches him from active duty, and unless thereafter assigned to active duty by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with law, he is entitled only to retired pay, notwithstanding that he was retained on active duty by the commanding officer of his vessel. The latter is not authorized to retain in active service an officer who has been retired pursuant to section 1444, Revised Statutes, unless it is done in accordance with a decision of the Secretary of the Navy in a particular case. It may be true that in some cases the acts of subordinate officials are taken as the acts of the head of the department to which they belong; where, however, the statute requires the exercise of judgment or discretion, as the act of June 7, 1900, the officer in whom such discretion is vested must act for himself, and he can not delegate that power to another. (9 Comp. Dec., 299; compare 9 Comp. Dec., 20, noted under sec. 1444, R. S.)

An officer, while under treatment in hospital, was placed on the retired list and ordered to proceed at his convenience to his home: Hild, that an officer placed on the retired list is entitled to retired pay only, no matter what his previous status may have been, unless placed on duty by some subsequent order; the above order did not have the effect of placing the officer on duty while traveling to his home. (File 26254-2, Apr. 29, 1908.)

Detachment from active duty without express orders.—Notice of the dissolution of a court-martial on which a retired officer of the Marine Corps was ordered to duty as a member is sufficient to terminate his assignment to active duty under that order, although no orders were issued expressly detaching him from active duty. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 29, 1910, 115 S. and A. Memo., 1578; Gibson v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 554.)

A formal order detaching or relieving retired officers from active duty is not necessary; when the duty to which the officer is assigned ends the order assigning him to active duty expires. (Gibson v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 554.)

Leave of absence does not detach from active duty.—A retired officer of the Navy who is granted a leave of absence is not by such grant returned to his former condition as a retired officer, but is in the leave status of an officer on the active list, and he is entitled while on such leave to the pay provided for officers of the active list on leave of absence. (11 Comp. Dec., 376, construing act of June 7, 1900.)

When, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, the services of a retired officer are no longer required on active duty, his order will relegate such officer to the retired status, but an order granting leave of absence for a specified time does not have that effect. (11 Comp. Dec., 376.)

Employment of retired Marine officers on active duty.—The assignment to active duty of retired Marine officers is governed by statutes relating to the Navy. Section 1622, Revised Statutes, does not authorize the assignment of Marine officers to active duty in accordance with laws pertaining to the Army. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281; file 27231-47, May 31, 1912; see also sec. 1622, R. S.)

Pay and allowances while employed on active duty.—See laws noted above; and see section 1592, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1463. [Assignment of retired officers to command in time of war.] In time of war the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may detail officers on the retired list for the command of squadrons and single ships, when he believes that the good of the service requires that they shall be so placed in command.—(21 Dec., 1861, c. 1, s. 3, v. 12, p. 329. 3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, s. 1, v. 17, p. 547.)

Active duty in general.—See section 1462, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Assignment of officers on active list to command of squadrons, with rank and title of "flag officer," was authorized by section 1434, Revised Statutes.

By act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1133), it was provided that the President may formulate appropriate rules governing assignments to command of vessels and squadrons.

Designation of officers for the command of fleets or subdivisions thereof, with the rank and pay of admiral or vice admiral, shall be made in time of war from the grades of rear admiral or captain on the active list, and in time of peace from the grade of rear admiral on the active list, but this shall not be held to amend or repeal sections 1434, 1463, and 1464, Revised Statutes. (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 18, 40 Stat., 89.)

Powers of President as Commander in Chief can not be impaired by Congress.—See note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 1.

President's power with reference to the retired list depends upon laws enacted by Congress.—See note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 1, under "I. Powers of Commander in Chief."

Effect of orders under this section.—Retired officers can be ordered to active duty in time of war only by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The power of the President with the consent of the Senate is in reality, although not in form, a power to give a new commission to a retired officer in time of great public emergency. It will be observed that retired officers thus called upon active duty do not return to the active list unless under circumstances of a peculiar character. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 36, citing sec. 1465. R. S.)

Sec. 1464. [Commanding officers of squadrons to have rank of "flag-officer."] In making said details the President may select any officer not below the grade of commander and assign him to the command of a squadron, with the rank and title of "flag-officer;" and any officer so assigned shall have the same authority and receive the same obedience from the commanders of ships in his squadron holding commissions of an older date than his that he would be entitled to receive if his commission were the oldest.—(21 Dec., 1861, c. 1, s. 4, v. 12, p. 329.)

See section 1434, Revised Statutes, and note thereto, with reference to officers of the active list assigned to command of squadrons.

This section not amended or repealed by act of May 22, 1917, section 18 (40 Stat., 89), noted above, under section 1463, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1465. [Restoration of retired officers to active list.] Retired officers so detailed for the command of squadrons and single ships may be restored to the active list, if, upon the recommendation of the President, they shall receive a vote of thanks of Congress for their services and gallantry in action against the enemy, and not otherwise.—(21 Dec., 1861, c. 1, s. 3, v. 12, p. 329.)

Restoration to active list is authorized by special enactment of Congress in individual cases, as for example, act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 602).

Veto by President of bill to restore retired officers to active list.—See note to Constitution, Article I, section 7, clause 2.

Vote of thanks, effect of.—See sections 1365, 1446, 1508–1510, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Restoration of retired officer to active list.—See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, "Correction of erroneous retirement"; and note to section 1459, Revised Statutes.

It may be questioned whether Congress has constitutional power to authorize executive action which should result in setting aside the legal effect of the proceedings of a naval board and in restoring to the active list of the Navy one who had been retired thereunder. The law divides the Navy into two distinct classes, with distinct duties and distinct grades of pay. The retired list was to be filled from the active list, and an officer once placed upon it was off the active list and not a subject of promotion. The higher grades on the active list were to be constantly supplied by streams of promotion from below, the fountain being at the lowest grade of all and supplied from without. The practical construction put upon the statute by the executive has been that officers are placed upon each of these lists by the action of the President in conjunction with the Senate, the concurrence of the Senate to the appointment of an officer on the retired list being obtained by its approval of the nomination of his successor in his place by name. It may be questioned whether the Congress could, without abolishing the office, constitutionally remove an officer from an office into which he had been legally inducted, and still more whether it could place him in another office without the constitutional action of the President. These points not decided. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 612.)

An officer of the Army who has been retired from active service in accordance with law can not be reinstated in his former place by an order of the President, though the vacancy caused by his retirement may not have been filled. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 209, citing 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223.)

Army officers who have been retired from active service by the President under the twelfth section of the act of July 17, 1862, can not be reinstated on the active list except by a new appointment with the advice and consent of the Senate, and where vacancies on the active list exist which may lawfully be filled. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 99.)

Section 2 of the act of June 18, 1878 (20 Stat., 165), provided that the President may in certain cases, where a prescribed procedure has not been followed in the retirement of an officer not recommended for promotion, "Order and direct the reexamination of the same." It was not intended by this provision to restore the officer to the active list and thereby to repeal the laws limiting the active force of the Navy. If such had been the intention, Congress would have said so. (Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 604, 615.)

The law which makes retired officers of the Navy "ineligible to further promotion," intends only that they shall cease to be eligible to promotion as a matter of course in the routine of naval usage, and according to rank. It must be so, because their places have been filled, and the statute-aggregate has been attained by the promotion of those who remain on the active-service list. It does not follow that they may not be promoted to independent vacancies. No act of Congress could limit to that degree the constitutional power of appointment. The true solution of the problem is to renominate to the Senate, and commission anew such of the officers of the reserved list, if any there be, as it may be desired to restore to their previous status in the Navy. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223, 236.)

Retired officers of the Navy may legally be restored to the active list by temporary appointment where vacancies exist which may lawfully be filled by temporary appointment in accordance with the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84). (File 27231-103, July 17, 1917.)

Full effect may be given to section 1465, Revised Statutes, by holding that it authorizes the restoration of retired officers to the active list under the circumstances there prescribed without reference to the condition of the active list at the time; that is to say, whether or not vacancies exist which might otherwise lawfully be filled. This construction is particularly warranted by the ruling of the Attorney General that no act of Congress could limit the constitutional power of appointment to the extent of rendering retired officers ineligible for appointment to vacancies existing on the active list. (File 27231-103, July 17, 1917, citing 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223, 236.)

As to grades of admiral, vice admiral, and commodore, see notes to section 1362, Revised Statutes.

As to change in designation of "masters" to "lieutenants (junior grade)," see note to section 1362, Revised Statutes.

By act of October 6, 1917, section 3 (40 Stat., 410), the President was authorized for the period of the existing emergency only to appoint as generals the Chief of Staff and the commander of the United States forces in France; and as lieutenant generals each commander of an Army or Army Corps organized as authorized by existing law.

By act of October 6, 1917, sections 3 (40 Stat., 411), it was provided that "brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade."

Admiral of the Navy ranks with General in the Army.—This section provides for relative rank between officers of the Navy and officers of the Army, from the vice admiral, who ranks with the lieutenant general of the Army, to ensigns, the lowest commissioned officers of the Navy, who rank with second lieutenants in the Army; but no such relative rank was provided for the Admiral of the Navy. The grade of Admiral in the Navy is the grade next above that of vice admiral, and the next grade in the Army above that of lieutenant general, with which the grade of vice admiral corresponds in rank, was that of General of the Army. The latter grade ceased to exist August 5, 1888, by the death of Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, the then incumbent, and has not since been revived. [But see act of Oct. 6, 1917, noted above.] Although the law does not specify any grade in the Army with which the grade of Admiral is to be ranked, the reasonable intent of section 13 of the Navy personnel act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), providing that, subject to certain exceptions, the commissioned officers of the Navy should receive the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank in the Army, was that the grade of Admiral should be regarded as corresponding in rank with the grade of General as the latter grade formerly existed, and that the Admiral of the Navy should receive the same pay and allowances which the General of the Army formerly received. (6 Comp. Dec., 868.)

By Navy Regulations, 1913 (Art. R 1010); it was provided that "Admiral shall rank with General."

By a resolution of the Continental Congress November 15, 1776, it was provided "That the rank of the naval officers be, to the rank of officers in the land service, as follows:

"Admiral, as a general.

"Vice admiral, as a lieutenant general.

"Rear admiral, as a major general.

"Commodore, as a brigadier general.

"Captain of a ship of 40 guns and upwards, as a colonel.

"Captain of a ship of 20 to 40 guns, as a lieutenant colonel.

"Captain of a ship of 10 to 20 guns, as a major.

"Lieutenant in the Navy, as a captain."

Aid to Admiral of the Navy does not rank with aid to General in the Army.—A lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy serving as aid to the Admiral of the Navy is entitled only to the pay of his rank, which corresponds to that of a first lieutenant in the Army. The fact that by law (sec. 1096, R. S.) aids on the staff of the General of the Army were entitled to the rank of colonel of Cavalry does not entitle an officer of the Navy to the rank of captain in the Navy, corresponding to that of colonel in the Army, while serving as aid to the Admiral of the Navy. By section 1096 a lieutenant or captain selected as aid by the General of the Army had conferred upon him while serving as such aid the rank of colonel of Cavalry, and by section 1261 he was entitled to the pay of a colonel. In 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 551, it was held that the rank conferred by section 1096 entitled such aids to the precedence, when serving upon courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military boards, and the like, to which the same rank would entitle an officer of the line of staff (independent of the office of aid) when thus serving. There is no statute or regulation which confers upon an officer of the Navy, while serving as aid to the Admiral, any different rank from that which he held while not so serving. To allow him the pay of a colonel while so serving would be to assume that his rank was changed from that of a lieutenant (junior grade) to that of a captain in the Navy. Accordingly, held that such officer can not be allowed any pay in addition to the pay of the office and rank of lieutenant (junior grade) which he held while serving as aid to the Admiral. (11 Comp. Dec., 733; see also 21 Comp. Dec., 840, as to officer serving as aid to a rear admiral temporarily holding the rank of admiral as commander in chief of a fleet.)

While section 1094, Revised Statutes, provided that the Army of the United States should consist, among other officers, of "one General," said section concluded with the following: "Provided, That when a vacancy occurs in the office of General or lieutenant general such office shall cease, and all enactments creating or regulating such offices shall, respectively, be held to be repealed." Upon a vacancy occurring in the office of General under this proviso that office ceased to exist and section 1096, Revised Statutes, providing for aids to the General of the Army, who should have while so serving the rank of colonel of cavalry, was thereby repealed. Even conceding that section 1096 was revived as the result of the act of June 1, 1888 (25 Stat., 165), by virtue of which Lieut. Gen. Sheridan was made for life the General of the Army, said section did not remain in force after the death of Gen. Sheridan, since which time there is no officer of the Army to which pay of aids to the Admiral of the Navy can be assimilated under section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007). (Wood v. U. S., 224 U. S., 132, affirming 44 Ct. Cls., 611.)

Grade of commodore abolished on the active list.—Section 7 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005), in effect abolishes the rank of commodore, at least so far as respects the active list of the line of the Navy, and lifts those in that rank to that of rear admiral. Prior to the act of 1899 the corresponding ranks of officers of the Navy and the Army were rear admiral and major general, commodore and brigadier general, captain and colonel. By that act the rank of commodore was abolished, although that of brigadier general was undisturbed. No change was made in the relative rank of captain and colonel or of rear admiral and major general, but the legislation left one rank in the Army to which there was no corresponding rank in the Navy. The statute in effect lifted the rank in the Navy, which was corresponding to that of brigadier general in the Army, to that of rear admiral, corresponding with that of major general in the Army. The individuals thus raised in rank were not so raised on account of distinguished services or for any personal reason, but simply in consequence of the abolishing of the official rank they had held. (Rodgers v. U. S., 185 U. S., 83.)

In the case of Rodgers v. United States (185 U. S., 83), it was stated with reference to the act of March 3, 1899: "The statute in effect lifted the rank in the Navy, which was corresponding to that of brigadier general in the Army, to that of rear admiral and corresponding with that of major general in the Army." The Supreme Court in the above quotation was speaking of the active list of the Navy. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

The grade of commodore was omitted from the active list by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005). That act, however, while thus abolishing the grade of commodore on the active list, did not thereby affect the rank of officers then on the retired list having the rank of commodore, and it contained several provisions for the future retirement of officers with that rank under certain prescribed conditions, viz, by section 7 of said act it was provided "that nothing contained in this section shall be construed to prevent the retirement of officers who now have the rank or relative rank of commodore with the rank and pay of that grade;" by section 8 (30 Stat., 1006) it was provided that officers retired on their own applications for the purpose of creating a prescribed minimum of annual vacancies should be placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of the "next higher grade, as now existing, including the grade of commodore;" by section 9 (30 Stat., 1006), it was provided that officers retired by selection for the purpose of creating a prescribed minimum of annual vacancies should be placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of the "next higher grade, including the grade of commodore, which is retained on the retired list for this purpose." None of these provisions for retirement with the rank of commodore is now in force. Under section 1481, Revised Statutes, certain staff officers are retired with the rank of commodore, this being the only case in which any officers are now placed on the retired list with that rank, retirements under section 1473, Revised Statutes, being made in practice with the rank of rear admiral instead of commodore as was provided therein. The naval appropriation act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), which established new rates of pay for the Navy, provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service, and the annual pay of each grade shall be as follows: * * * rear admiral, second nine, or commodore, six thousand dollars." There were no commodores on the active list at the time of the enactment last cited, but there were then and are now a number of officers on the retired list with the rank of commodore, and, as above stated, retirements are still being made with that rank under section 1481, Revised Statutes. The rank of commodore has continued to be assimilated with that of brigadier general by the Navy Regulations (Art. R 1010, 1913), notwithstanding the expression of the Supreme Court in the Rodgers case that the legislation of March 3, 1899, "left one rank in the Army to which there was no corresponding rank in the Navy." Inasmuch as section 1466 provides that the

"relative rank between officers of the Navy, whether on the active or retired list, and officers of the Army," shall be as specified therein, the Navy Regulations have been correct in continuing to show the rank of commodore as assimilated with that of brigadier general. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

Section 7 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005), eliminated the rank or grade of commodore from the active list of the Navy. (11 Comp. Dec., 547.)

The commodores on the active list and the rear admirals of the Navy were amalgamated on account of international relationships the consideration of which caused the Navy Department to regard the complications confronting it as inimical to the honor and dignity of this Nation because of the adverse effect upon its high ranking representatives in their association with foreign officers. (File 3980-1402:3, Mar. 4, 1918.)

Two grades of rear admirals for pay purposes.—Rear admirals were divided into two grades for pay purposes by section 7 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005), rear admirals of the "nine lower numbers" being given the pay and allowances of brigadier generals of the Army, while rear admirals of the upper nine numbers were not specifically provided for, but under the general provisions contained in section 13 of the same act they received the same pay and allowances as officers of the corresponding rank in the Army, viz, major general, that being the rank corresponding to the rank of rear admiral according to section 1466. This division of rear admirals into two grades for pay purposes was continued in effect by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), which provided different rates of pay for "rear admirals, first nine," and "rear admirals, second nine"; also by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), which provided that "hereafter pay and allowances of officers in the upper half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps and including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, shall be that now allowed by law for the first nine rear admirals, and the pay and allowances of officers in the lower half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps, shall be that now allowed by law for the second nine rear admirals." (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

The provision fixing the pay of the rear admirals of the lower half of that grade to correspond with the pay of a brigadier general arose from the fact that the relative rank of officers of the Army and Navy had been so adjusted by statute as to rank commodores with brigadier generals, and the rank of commodore being dropped from the service by said Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 7, the pay of a brigadier general was given to the nine lower numbers of rear admirals, who would otherwise have had the rank of commodore with the corresponding pay of brigadier generals. (Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182.)

Is it unreasonable to suppose that Congress thought it unwise to give to those officers (who had neither by length of service or by personal distinction become entitled to the position of rear admiral as it had stood in the past) all the benefits of such position? Would it be unnatural for Congress to bear in mind those who by length of service or by personal distinction had already earned that position, and provide that in at least the matter of pay there should be some recognition of the fact? Again, is it unreasonable to believe that Congress intended that those officers whose past services placed them according to their prior relative rank side by side with brigadier generals of the Army should not by a mere change of statute be given a benefit in salary which was not at the same time accorded to brigadier generals in the Army? May not this explain its action in so dividing the rear admirals into two classes, one composed substantially of former rear admirals, equal both in rank and pay with major generals in the Army, and the other of those who in the past were only commodores, to whom was given the rank of rear admirals but the pay of brigadier generals in the Army? (Rodgers v. U. S., 185 U. S., 83.)

Rear admirals being divided into two classes for the purpose of pay, and there being no question that had plaintiff been promoted in the active service from captain to rear admiral he would have passed into the lower grade of rear admirals, so far at least as his pay was concerned, and would have received so long as within that number the pay of a brigadier general, notwithstanding that for all other purposes he was entitled to the rank and privileges of a rear admiral, held that the advancement of plaintiff on the retired list in accordance with section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), to receive "the rank and three-fourths the sea pay of the next higher grade," entitled him to the pay of the next higher rank, and but for the difference made in the pay of rear admirals would entitle him to three-fourths the full pay of that rank, but taking one step upward for the purpose of pay he passes into and not over the next pay grade, which is that of the nine lower numbers. (Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182.)

All rear admirals rank with major generals.—Rear admirals of the lower half, except for purposes of their own pay and allowances, are rear admirals with the relative rank, under section 1466, Revised Statutes, of major generals in the Army; and their aids are entitled under section 1261, Revised Statutes, to the additional pay provided by law for aids to major generals in the Army, and not merely to the additional pay provided for aids to brigadier generals in the Army. It will be noted that the proviso to section 7 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005), does not specify that a rear admiral of the lower half shall have the relative rank and pay of a brigadier general, but merely that he shall receive the same pay and allowances. This proviso does not affect the rank given them. If Congress had intended to assimilate their rank as well as pay and allowances to that of a brigadier general it might easily have said so. (11 Comp. Dec., 547.)

It is established that while there are two divisions in the grade of rear admiral for pay purposes, nevertheless all officers in that grade for all other purposes are entitled to the same rank and privileges. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

The rank of all rear admirals is assimilated by section 1466 to that of major generals in the Army. (6 Comp. Dec., 960.)

A rear admiral whether on the active or retired list corresponds in rank with a major general in the Army. Accordingly held that a retired officer on active duty as aid to a retired rear admiral employed on active duty is entitled to the additional pay provided by law for aids to major generals in the Army. (14 Comp. Dec., 471.)

Temporary assignment to rank of rear admiral.—The assignment of a captain of the Navy to duty in command of a squadron with the rank and title of rear admiral, by authority of section 1434, Revised Statutes, does not make him a rear admiral within the meaning of the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), providing additional pay for aids to rear admirals. (17 Comp. Dec., 54; see also note to sec. 1434, R. S.)

Relative rank of brigadier generals and rear admirals of the lower half.—The act of October 6, 1917, section 3 (40 Stat., 411), provides that "brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade." This is materially different from stating, conversely, that "rear admirals of the lower half of the grade shall hereafter rank relatively with brigadier generals of the Army." If, for example, the pay of rear admirals of the lower half had been in the past higher than that allowed brigadier generals in the Army, and the act of October 6, 1917, had provided that brigadier generals should thereafter receive the same pay as rear admirals of the lower half, it is apparent that this would have resulted in increasing the pay of brigadier generals to that provided for rear admirals of the lower half; whereas, had it been provided under the same circumstances that rear admirals of the lower half should thereafter receive the same pay as brigadier generals of the Army, this would have resulted in reducing the pay of rear admirals of the lower half to that fixed for brigadier generals. The same distinction exists with reference to the rank of the officers concerned. In the past the rank of rear admirals of the lower half has been higher than that of brigadier generals, viz, it has been the same in all respects as that of major generals. Under these circumstances Congress did not provide that hereafter the rank of rear admirals of the lower half shall be the same as that of brigadier generals, which would have resulted in reducing the rank previously enjoyed by such rear admirals, but on the contrary it provided that hereafter the rank of brigadier generals shall be the same as that of rear admirals of the lower half, thereby elevating the rank of brigadier generals while leaving the rank of rear admirals of the lower half the same as it previously had been. In other words, rear admirals of the lower half continue by law to rank with major generals in the Army, the only change being that now brigadier generals of the Army rank with rear admirals of the lower half. Unless this were so, rear admirals of the lower half who prior to the act of October 6, 1917, ranked ahead of all major generals of a later date of commission would now be required to take rank behind all major generals, including those of a later date of commission whom they had previously outranked. This would amount to nothing more nor less than a reduction in the rank of rear admirals of the lower half, and that without any corresponding advantage to brigadier generals for whose benefit the amendment of October 6, 1917, was enacted. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

Section 1466 provides that commodores, whether on the active or retired list, shall rank with brigadier generals. If the rank of brigadier generals is elevated, as it has been by the act of October 6, 1917, the necessary consequence is to elevate correspondingly the rank of commodores, just as any increase in the pay of brigadier generals must have resulted in automatically increasing the pay of commodores if the pay of the latter, instead of their rank, had been assimilated to that of brigadier generals. In other words, commodores have ranked with brigadier generals in accordance with explicit statutory enactment, and must continue so to rank unless and until otherwise provided by Congress. It follows that under the law commodores rank with brigadier generals, brigadier generals rank with rear admirals of the lower half, and rear admirals of the lower half rank with major generals. Had this been a question of pay instead of rank there would be no difficulty in giving the law full force and effect. That is, had it been provided that commodores should have the same pay as brigadier generals, brigadier generals the same pay as rear admirals of the lower half, and rear admirals of the lower half the same pay as major generals, it is evident that the pay of all four grades would have been identical. However, in the matter of rank insurmountable obstacles exist to giving effect to this legislation as thus construed. The case is the same as though it were stated that major generals, rear admirals of the lower half, brigadier generals, and commodores are all on precisely the same footing in relation to rank with its resulting precedence; and inasmuch as the precedence of officers of the same or corresponding rank is determined, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, by date of commission, it would follow that commodores must take precedence ahead of all the others when the commissions of the commodores are of an earlier date than those of officers in the other grades mentioned. From a practical point of view it would be an impossible situation to have commodores as a class preceding major generals of a later date of commission. If the law could be construed so that nothing contained therein should operate to give any officer of a lower grade precedence of an officer of a higher grade, one impossible situation would merely be substituted for another, as in that event we would have a brigadier general preceding rear admirals of a later date of commission, while the rear admirals in turn would precede major generals of a later date of commission, while the major generals in turn would precede the brigadier general because holding a higher grade. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

The situation created by the act of October 6, 1917, can be corrected only by legislation. Under the present law it is indisputable that major generals and brigadier generals both take rank and precedence with rear admirals; and that commodores take rank and precedence with brigadier generals. Major generals and brigadier generals must be treated as but one grade for purposes of precedence with rear admirals; while at the same time as between themselves they must be treated as officers of separate and distinct grades, different in degree. This creates two conflicting rules for determining the precedence of officers who may be associated together at the same time and place. Two grades in the Army or Marine Corps can not be made equal to one grade in the Navy without at the same time making them equal to each other. The difficulty is more pronounced in the Navy than in the Army, because of the fact that the Marine Corps is normally a part of the Navy, its officers serving habitually on courts and boards with other officers in the naval service. In other words there are under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department officers having all of the ranks involved, namely, rear admiral, major general, brigadier general, and commodore; while under the War Department the only grades involved are major general and brigadier general; so that the War Department can never have jurisdiction of the entire question. In the case of a commodore being associated on duty with a rear admiral of the Navy and a brigadier general of the Marine Corps, it would follow that by date of commission the commodore would most likely rank ahead of the brigadier general who, in turn, might be entitled to precedence ahead of the rear admiral, whom the commodore could not precede. (File 3980-1402:4, Feb. 19, 1918.)

The act of October 6, 1917, can not be given effect fully by construction not extending to executive legislation. Administrative officers can not make law but must take the law as it stands. If the law as made by Congress is defective either in what it contains or what it omits, the remedy can be furnished only by Congress. In the present case the legislative intent is too plain for discussion that brigadier generals should be elevated in rank to the level of rear admirals of the lower half, and not that the latter should be reduced. This can not be an accomplished fact so long as rear admirals continue by law to rank with major generals, and commodores continue by law to rank with brigadier generals. If there were any warrant for the executive by regulations to make commodores rank after brigadier generals, instead of with brigadier generals as provided by statute, and make rear admirals of the lower half rank after major generals instead of with major generals as provided by statute, a solution would thereby be reached; but where the rank of these officers has been definitely fixed by explicit legislation, the executive can no more change the rank to which they are thus entitled than it could change their pay as fixed by statute. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

The War Department is in complete agreement with the Secretary of the Navy that the law upon this subject (Act of Oct. 6, 1917) should be repealed, and has accordingly recommended such repeal to the Senate and House military committees. (File 3980-1402 : 7, Apr. 10, 1918.) A bill for this purpose (H. R. 12512) was introduced in the House of Representatives on June 19, 1918, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. (File 3980-1402 : 8, Aug. 1, 1918.)

Midshipmen not included by this section.—Section 1466 provides for relative rank between officers of the Navy and officers of the Army, but no such relative rank is given to cadets (now midshipmen). Although officers of the Navy, naval cadets (midshipmen) do not correspond in rank with any officer of the Army, and therefore are not entitled to the allowance of mileage for travel on shore duty abroad. (7 Comp. Dec., 2.)

Professors at Naval Academy do not rank with professors at Military Academy.—A line officer of the Navy of the rank of lieutenant commander corresponds in rank to a major in the Army; his detail to duty as head of the department of modern languages of the United States Naval Academy does not entitle him to the rank of commander, corresponding to lieutenant colonel in the Army, because under the law certain professors at the Military Academy are entitled to the rank and pay of lieutenant colonel. The position of professor at the Military Academy is an office separate and distinct from any other office in the Army, the incumbent of which is appointed by the President and not detailed from the officers of the Army. There is no law entitling a naval officer, by virtue of his assignment, to the rank or pay of a professor either at the Naval Academy or Military Academy; nor any law providing that an Army officer may be detailed to perform the duties of a professor at the Military Academy and thereby become entitled to the rank and pay of a professor at that institution. (11 Comp. Dec., 591.)

Staff officers included by this section.—Section 1466 fixes the relative rank of officers of the Army and officers of the Navy. This section is general, with no exception or limitation, and therefore it applies equally to all officers of the Navy of the grades there mentioned, whether of the line or staff. That section contains the clause, "lineal rank only being considered," but that simply means that it is not necessary to specify and fix relative staff rank, since staff officers in both services possess assimilated lineal rank. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

As staff officers are, equally with those of the line, "officers of the Navy," as stated in section 1466, the provisions of that section apply as well to them as to officers of the line, and thus defines the rank in both branches of the naval service. And since the Navy personnel act has eliminated the word "relative" in this connection, this is their actual rank. This merely defines the rank of these officers, by making the rank of a captain the same as that of a colonel, and so on. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 496, 499.)

Section 1466, Revised Statutes, assimilates in rank lieutenants in the Navy with captains in the Army. Under the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), and section 1466, Revised Statutes, passed assistant surgeons of the Navy, as well as assistant surgeons, rank with captains in the Army. (U. S. v. Farenholt, 206 U. S., 226.)

Officers of the Marine Corps and line officers of the Navy.—By section 1603, Revised Statutes, officers of the Marine Corps are in relation to rank on the same footing as officers of similar grades in the Army. Accordingly, they take precedence with line officers in the Navy according to grade; and if of similar grade, then according to date of commission. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517.)

Officers of the Marine Corps and staff officers of the Navy.—Staff officers of the Navy take precedence with officers of the Army of corresponding rank according to date of commission. Accordingly, officers of the Marine Corps, who by section 1603, Revised Statutes, are in relation to rank on the same footing as officers of similar grades in the Army, take precedence with officers of the staff corps of the Navy of corresponding rank according to dates of commission; and the Navy Department would not have the authority, with the approval of the President, to amend the Navy Regulations so as to do away with the practice as to the relative rank of officers of the Marine Corps and line officers of the Navy established in accordance with the Attorney General's opinion of October 7, 1905 (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517). (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

Relative rank when of same or corresponding grade.—Section 1466 fixes the relative rank by grades only of line officers of the Navy and of the Army. But this merely tells what grades in each service, designated by their titles, shall be of corresponding or equal right and dignity, and does not fix the relative rank of these officers when of the same or corresponding grades. This is left undetermined, so far as express statute or regulation is concerned. But the unwritten law of the Army and Navy—a rule of action governing in both branches of the service—derived from long established and uniform practice, has settled this. From the earliest days of the Army and Navy it has been the rule and practice that officers in the same grade in the Army and Navy have relative rank and precedence between themselves according to the dates, respectively, of their commissions; the senior in commission ranking the junior. The same rule applies in such cases as that which governs officers of the Army and officers of the Navy as between themselves in each case, namely, that seniority in commission or appointment gives precedence in the same grade. This has become a well-understood rule of action and practice, which, in fact, governs and controls officers of the Army and Navy with the same force and precision as if embodied in statute or regulation. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517; see also, 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 16, and 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 264.)

In so far as the precedence of officers of the same rank is not regulated by statute, the Secretary of the Navy may determine same with the force and effect of law, by virtue of his general authority under the President to make rules and regulations for the government of the Navy. Usually this, of course, is better done by general rules than by decisions in particular cases, but it may be done either way. It would seem that, according to the preference given throughout the statutes and by the rules and practice of the War and Navy Departments to seniority of service, the longer service of an officer would, other things being equal, give him precedence in rank with reference to another officer promoted to corresponding rank from the same date. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 156.)

Relative rank when of same or corresponding grade and same date of commission.—"In fixing the relative rank of officers of the Army, officers of the Navy, and officers of the Marine Corps, of the same grade and date of appointment and commission, the time which each may have actually served as a commissioned officer of the United States, whether continuously or at different periods, shall be taken into account." (Art. R 1010 (2), Navy Regs., 1913; see also sec. 1219, R. S., relating to the Army.)

This rule for determining precedence between officers of the same grade and date is statutory in the Army, and the rule so prescribed by statute for the Army is extended to the Navy by the foregoing regulation. Such a regulation for the Navy is almost a necessity in view of the law governing the Army, as should a different rule be prescribed for the Navy than that which governs by law in the Army, such rules would necessarily conflict where officers of the Army and Navy serve or associate together, and it would be impossible to fix their relative precedence except by the adoption of the same rule to govern all. Nevertheless no statute limits the Secretary of the Navy in fixing the precedence of such officers of the Navy as between themselves, where they are of the same grade and date of rank, and therefore the regulation above quoted might by authority of the Secretary be departed from and some different rule of precedence adopted. (File 11130-53:1, June 25, 1919.)

Command of joint forces of the Army and Navy.—There is no law which purports to provide who shall command joint forces of the Army and Navy doing duty together, this matter having been left by Congress, where it properly belongs, to the President, who, as commander in chief of the Army and Navy, is the only authority vested by the Constitution with the power to determine what officers shall take command of such forces, either by virtue of rank or by special designation. Article 1050 of the Navy Regulations, 1913, issued with the written approval of the President, provides: "An officer of the Navy can not assume command of Army forces on shore, nor can an officer of the Army assume command over any ship of the Navy, or over its officers or men afloat, except in either case by special authority for a particular service; but when officers of the Navy are on duty on shore with the Army they shall be entitled to the precedence of the rank in the Army to which their own corresponds, except command as aforesaid, and this precedence will regulate their right to quarters." (File 3980-1402:3, Mar. 4, 1918.)

For other cases, see note to section 1342, Revised Statutes, article 120.

Corresponding rank did not give corresponding pay.—While the act of July 16, 1862, sec. 1466, R. S., had fixed the relative rank of Army and naval officers, no provision for similarity of pay was made until the passage of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), which act, while providing against a reduction of then existing pay of commissioned officers of the Navy, undertook to equalize the pay of naval officers (theretofore generally below that paid to officers of corresponding rank in the Army) with that of officers in the Army of equal rank. (U. S. v. Cropley, 196 U. S., 327, citing U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418.)

Sec. 1467. [Rank according to date.] Line officers shall take rank in each grade according to the dates of their commissions.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 1, v. 12, p. 583. 21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 7, v. 13, p. 54. 24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 1, v. 13, p. 424.)

Precedence of officers promoted by selection to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the line or staff of the Navy. See act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718).

Rank of officers advanced for distinguished conduct in battle. See sections 1506-1510, Revised Statutes.

Special provisions governing the precedence of temporary, reserve, and Coast Guard officers transferred to the line or staff of the regular Navy, are contained in act of June 4, 1920, sections 3, 4, and 5 (41 Stat., 835, 836).

Date of commission defined.—Seniority among line officers of the Navy is determined by date of commission—that is, the date from which the commission recites that the appointment to a given grade begins. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393; see also Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 333; 24 Comp. Dec., 177; 22 Comp. Dec., 623; 17 Comp. Dec., 605; 22 Comp. Dec., 565, 566; compare Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145.)

Officer suspended from rank by sentence of court-martial.—Where an officer is sentenced by court-martial "to be suspended for two years from rank and duty, on furlough pay, and to retain his present number on the list of lieutenant commanders during that time," officers in the same grade, although of a later date of commission, may pass above him on the list by reason of the sentence which held said officer to the number which he held at the time of the sentence. The sentence rendered by authority of law gives the law in this case, and section 1467, Revised Statutes, must, in its application, accord with the sentence. An order thereafter issued by the Secretary of the Navy, remitting "the unexecuted portion of the sentence," does not operate to restore the officer to the position in the list to which his date of commission would entitle him. The form of the remitting order was not a nullification of the original sentence, neither was it an absolute pardon for the offense committed. The sentence is neither declared void nor vacated; the "unexecuted portion" is "remitted"; that portion of the sentence which previous to the remitting order operated to place two officers above the officer sentenced was executed at the date of the order of remission, and was therefore by the terms of the order not affected by it. While an absolute pardon might reinstate the officer sentenced (citing 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 547, and 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 31 and 656), an order by the Secretary remitting the unexecuted portion of the sentence can not produce that result. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 243; compare notes to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, "When pardon may be granted.")

Loss of date for failure to qualify for promotion.—See note to section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended.

Precedence of officers promoted by selection.—When officers are promoted by selection they should be considered as having gained length of service according to their promotion in determining their relative rank with other grades of the Navy, to a sufficient extent to place them above the officers over whom they were thus advanced. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 56. See section 1486, R. S., as to officers who have gained or lost numbers.)

When the report of the Board of Rear Admirals for selection for promotion created by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), is approved by the President, "the officers recommended therein shall be deemed eligible for selection, and if promoted shall take rank with one another in accordance with their seniority in the grade from which promoted." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579.)

Where officer has been issued more than one commission in the same rank.—See file 4649-02, July 17, 1902, noted under section 421, Revised Statutes, "Precedence of chiefs of bureaus."

An officer who receives a permanent commission in the grade of commander while already holding a temporary commission in the same grade of an earlier date, continues to take precedence from the date of his temporary commission so long as that commission remains in force and is not expressly revoked or terminated by operation of law. (C. M. O. 237, 1919, p. 28, citing file 11130-47:1, July 18, 1919; see also C. M. O. 72, 1917, p. 20, citing file 11130-47, Nov. 28, 1917.)

An officer given a temporary commission as assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), and afterwards given a permanent commission in the same grade and rank from a later date, takes precedence from the date stated in his permanent commission and not from the earlier date stated in his temporary commission. (C. M. O. 30, 1918, p. 31, citing file 11130-37:4, Mar. 12, 1918.)

Antedating rank on promotion.—See note to section 1458, Revised Statutes.

Precedence of officers commissioned on same date.—See note to section 1466, Revised Statutes.

When naval officers are commissioned on the same date, the numbering of the commissions to determine the relative rank of the officers is, in the absence of statutes, a matter of practice in the Navy Department, and not governed by law. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

A fictitious date can not properly be inserted in an officer's commission, where this would be attended with prejudice to other officers in the same grade, unless there is clear authority of law for so doing. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 192.)

For other cases, see notes to Constitution, Article II, section 3, "Duty to commission officers."

Sec. 1468. [Commanding officers of vessels and stations.] Commanding officers of vessels of war and of naval stations shall take precedence over all officers placed under their command.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

Command of hospital ships. See note to section 1488, Revised Statutes.

Command of vessels and navy yards. See sections 1529 and 1542, Revised Statutes.

Marine officers not to exercise command over any navy yard or vessel of the United States. See section 1617, Revised Statutes.

Precedence of officers commanding squadrons. See sections 1434 and 1464, Revised Statutes.

Staff officers, exercise of military command by. See section 1488, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1469. [Aid or executive officer.] The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, detail a line officer to act as the aid or executive of the commanding officer of a vessel of war or naval station, which officer shall, when not impracticable, be next in rank to said commanding officer. Such aid or executive shall, while executing the orders of the commanding officer on board the vessel or at the station, take precedence over all officers attached to the vessel or station. All orders of such aid or executive shall be regarded as proceeding from the commanding officer, and the aid or executive shall have no independent authority in consequence of such detail.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

“Aid or executive” is not entitled to additional pay as aid to a rear admiral.—Section 1469, Revised Statutes, has no reference to the designation of aids on the personal staff of a Navy officer like that provided for officers of the Army in sections 1096–1098, Revised Statutes. (6 Comp. Dec., 154.)

The provision in the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), for additional pay for aids is: “Aids to rear admirals embraced in the nine lower numbers of that grade shall receive one hundred and fifty dollars additional per annum, and aids to all other rear admirals two hundred dollars per annum each.” The statutory aid or executive to a commandant of a naval station, or “captain of the yard” as he is styled by Navy Regulations, is not an aid of the kind contemplated by the act of May 13, 1908, and therefore is not entitled to the additional pay which that act provides for “aids to rear admirals,” even though the particular commandant with whom he serves may incidentally be a rear admiral. An officer detailed as aid or executive officer to the commandant of a naval station under the conditions of section 1469 corresponds by the terms of that statute to an executive officer of a war vessel. He acts as an aid or executive officer to the commandant as commandant, whomsoever the commandant may be and whatever grade he may hold, and independently of his personality. The mutual official relationship between them is simply that of a superior officer and an officer of an inferior rank attached for duty purposes to a common station, as distinguished from the individual, personal, or social relationship of an aid and a rear admiral, which is the basic relationship between an aid and a rear admiral of the kind of aid contemplated by the act of May 13, 1908, and for whose service in such relationship that act has provided additional pay. The duties performed by the former for the commandant are the routine executive duties of a naval station, while the duties performed by the latter for a rear admiral are personal or social in their character. (23 Comp. Dec., 327, following 21 Comp. Dec., 561, which overruled 21 Comp. Dec., 431.)

An aid to an admiral in the Navy, whose pay is provided for in the act of May 13, 1908, is an officer legally ordered to duty with an admiral, vice admiral, or rear admiral to perform for him strictly personal, confidential, and routine duties. These duties can not be combined with the duties of a fleet ordnance officer or any other officer who has other duties to perform separate and distinct from the duties of an aid. (Knox v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 22.)

A captain in the Navy ordered to duty as captain of the yard, where the commandant of the navy yard was a rear admiral, is not entitled to additional pay as aid to a rear admiral. (Helm v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 32.)

A lieutenant in the Navy ordered to duty as “aid to the commandant, captain of the yard, and also as engineer officer of the yard,” is entitled to the additional pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), as aid to a rear admiral, the navy yard being under the command of an officer with the rank of rear admiral. (Frucht v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 570.)

The decision of the Court of Claims in the Frucht case (noted above) turned upon the character of duties actually shown to have been performed by the claimant in that case, which were personal duties in addition to and aside from his duties as captain of the yard. In that case it was specifically stated in the findings of fact: “While stationed as aid to the commandant of the navy yard at Pensacola, Fla., the claimant performed the usual duties required of aids to the commandant * * * and in addition performed other duties of a more personal character and such as are usually required of aids to rear admirals in the Navy and generals in the Army.” (File 26254–1643:1, Jan. 19, 1915.)

Where an officer was detailed by the Secretary of the Navy to duty as “aid to Rear Admiral William F. Fullam,” Superintendent of the Naval Academy, he was not detailed for duty as aid or executive under section 1469, Revised Statutes, and regulations based thereon; but was an aid to a rear admiral and his duties were in no way the same as those provided for under the laws and regulations relating to aids or executives, and captains of the yard. There is no law or regulation which prevents a rear admiral on duty ashore from having an aid, and if the Secretary of the Navy specifically designates an officer to serve in such capacity he is entitled to the additional pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908. (23 Comp. Dec. 329; see also 24 Comp. Dec., 558.)

For other cases, see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, “Additional pay for special duty.”

Staff officer can not be assigned to duty as “aid or executive.”—See note to section 1404, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1470. [Staff officers, when to communicate directly with commanding officer.] Staff officers, senior to the officer so detailed, shall have the right to communicate directly with the commanding officer.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

Sec. 1471. [Chiefs of Bureaus.] The chiefs of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Provisions and Clothing, Steam Engineering, and Construction and Repair shall have the relative rank of commodore while holding said position, and shall have, respectively, the title of Surgeon-General, Paymaster-General, Engineer-in-Chief, and Chief Constructor.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), which provided that "when the office of chief of bureau is filled by an officer below the rank of rear admiral, said officer shall, while holding said office, have the rank of rear admiral." By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), it was provided that "hereafter chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department, including the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, shall, while so serving, have corresponding rank and shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for chiefs of bureaus of the War Department and the Judge Advocate General of the Army." By act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 411), it was provided with reference to the Army that "hereafter, the chief of any existing staff corps, department, or bureau, except as is otherwise provided for the Chief of Staff, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of major general."

As to rank, title, and precedence of chiefs of bureaus, see note to section 421, Revised Statutes.

Bureau of Provisions and Clothing was designated as Bureau of Supplies and Accounts by act of July 19, 1892 (27 Stat., 243, 245).

Bureau of Steam Engineering was designated as Bureau of Engineering by act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 828).

Historical note.—On December 24, 1862, the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 413), holding that the latter had authority under the law to issue regulations fixing the "relative rank of the line and civil or staff officers of the Navy." Following this opinion it was provided by regulation that chiefs of bureaus of the staff corps were "to rank with commodores, and to take precedence of each other, according to their dates of commission as surgeons, paymasters, naval constructors, and engineers, and not according to the date of appointment as * * * chief of bureau." (Navy Regs., 1865, Art. II, par. 25; Navy Dept. order Mar. 3, 1863.) On March 31, 1869, the Attorney General (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 10) dissented from the previous opinion of his department, above cited, and held that certain regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approbation of the President, on March 13, 1863, "establishing and increasing the relative rank of the staff officers of the Navy," were invalid. By General Order No. 120 of April 1, 1869, the Secretary of the Navy published this latter opinion of the Attorney General, and stated that, in accordance therewith, "the order of March 3, 1863, and the Navy Regulations, Article II, paragraphs 6 to 28 (both inclusive), are hereby revoked and annulled." Thereafter, by act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 537, sec. 12), Congress provided that the chiefs of the Bureaus of Medicine and Surgery, Provisions and Clothing (now Supplies and Accounts), Steam Engineering (now Engineering), and Construction and Repair, shall have the relative rank of commodore while holding said position, "or if heretofore or hereafter retired therefrom by reason of age or length of service." The same act provided that when the office of chief of bureau is filled by a line officer below the rank of commodore, said officer shall have the relative rank of commodore during the time he holds said office.

Titles of chiefs of bureaus.—The head of a department for his own purposes as such has authority to designate offices therein and to cause his subordinates to designate them in official communications by names other than those theretofore borne by such offices. There is no statute or rule of law which forbids the employment of certain names in such cases, where the head of the department considers that new relations acquired by such branches of business under a reorganization of his department requires. Congress has not seen fit to so hamper a coordinate branch of the Government. Its own use of names is not such a prohibition. There is no legal objection to the employment of two names or many names for the same object nor will it be "inconsistent with law" for the head of the department under section 161, Revised Statutes, to make use of other names than those used by Congress. Names are ordinarily free for the person speaking or writing to choose. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 697.)

Persons in the public service may be officially designated by titles other than those used in the law to identify their offices or positions under the Government, it being necessary to adhere to the statutory designation only in making their appointments to office. The mere assignment of a different title for official purposes to one occupying an authorized position under the Government does not by any means constitute an attempt by the executive to create a new grade or to change the office or position held by one whose designation has thus been changed for administrative reasons. (C. M. O. 92, 1918, p. 27; file 18141-24, July 9, 1918.)

"The chiefs of the Bureaus of Medicine and Surgery, Supplies and Accounts, Steam Engineering (now Engineering), Construction and Repair, and Yards and Docks, while holding these offices, shall have, respectively, the title of Surgeon General of the Navy, Paymaster General of the Navy, Engineer in Chief of the Navy, Chief Constructor of the Navy, and Chief of Civil Engineers of the Navy. Each such chief of bureau, however, shall be addressed and designated by the title of his rank; in written communications the title of his office to be stated next after his name." (Art. R. 1006 (2), Navy Regs., 1913, C. N. R. 12, Sept. 12, 1918.)

Staff bureaus.—The bureaus mentioned in section 1471 are the staff bureaus of the Navy, under the existing organization, except that the Engineer Corps (Steam Engineering) has now been transferred to the line by the personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005). (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122.)

For other cases concerning chiefs of bureaus, their titles, etc. see note to section 421, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1472. [Chief of bureau, when below rank of commodore. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1472. When the office of chief of Bureau is filled by a line officer below the rank of commodore, said officer shall have the relative rank of commodore during the time he holds said office."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

It was superseded by the following provision in the act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005): "When the office of chief of bureau is filled by an officer below the rank of rear admiral, said officer shall, while holding said office, have the rank of rear admiral." The latter provision was in turn superseded by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), which provided that "hereafter chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department, including the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, shall, while so serving, have corresponding rank and shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for chiefs of bureaus of the War Department and the Judge Advocate General of the Army." By act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 411), it was provided with reference to the Army that "hereafter, the chief of any existing staff corps, department, or bureau, except as is otherwise provided for the Chief of Staff, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of major general."

See note to section 421, Revised Statutes, for cases concerning the rank status, etc., of chiefs of bureaus.

Sec. 1473. [Retired from position of chief of bureau.] Officers who have been or who shall be retired from the position of chiefs of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, of Provisions and Clothing, of Steam Engineering, or of Construction and Repair, by reason of age or length of service, shall have the relative rank of commodore.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of July 19, 1892 (27 Stat., 243, 245), by which the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing was designated as Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; also by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which changed the words "the relative rank of" to "the rank of," and provided that chiefs of bureaus, while so serving, shall have the rank of rear admiral; and by act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 828), which changed the designation of the Bureau of Steam Engineering to Bureau of Engineering.

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), it was provided that "any officer of the Navy who is now serving or shall hereafter serve as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such bureau chief."

Rank of staff officers retired for causes incident to the service. See section 1482, Revised Statutes.

See generally note to section 421, Revised Statutes, as to retirement of chiefs of bureaus.

Rank on retirement now rear admiral.—The Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), has now substituted the rank of rear admiral in the cases of retirement of staff officers, in which such retirement was authorized by the Revised Statutes with the relative rank of commodore. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294, 296, citing 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433; compare 5 Comp. Dec., 821.)

Retirements under section 1473, Revised Statutes, are made in practice with the rank of rear admiral instead of commodore, as was provided therein. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917.)

For other cases, see note to section 1466, Revised Statutes.

Retirement of a chief of bureau creates a vacancy, but is not a vacancy created by death, resignation, absence, or sickness which may be filled in accordance with sections 178-181, Revised Statutes. Congress having made no provision for the temporary discharge of his duties in this case, the bureau remains without a head until the place is filled pursuant to the provisions of section 421, Revised Statutes. The order of the President designating the Chief Constructor as Acting Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering [now Engineering], upon the retirement of the chief of that bureau, was unauthorized. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337; compare cases noted under sec. 179, R. S.)

"Retired" defined.—There is a difference between retiring from the office and retirement in the sense of section 1473. All staff bureau chiefs who are entitled to retirement under the statutes when serving as Paymaster General, etc., have the right to bear the appropriate title followed by the word "retired"; but of course this is not so when the service as bureau chief is followed, not by retirement but by return to other active duties. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

Retirement affects tenure of office.—That the retirement of an officer from active service affects his tenure of office as bureau chief, as well as his office in the line, is recognized by Congress in the provisions of section 1473, Revised Statutes. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337.)

Retirement in cases not covered by this section.—The contention that, since section 1473, Revised Statutes, specifically provides that chiefs of four of the bureaus shall be retired with the rank of commodore, therefore Congress can not have intended to confer the same privilege on the chiefs of the other four bureaus, or on the Judge Advocate General, besides imputing to Congress an intention to make a discrimination for which no possible reason can be suggested, loses its force when the act of March 3, 1871 (which is the source of R. S. 1471, 1472, 1473, and 1482), is read as a whole in the light of the situation existing when it was passed. When this is done with a desire to ascertain the actual intention of Congress, the proper inference will be seen to be that Congress intended, not to discriminate between one chief of bureau and another, but to confer upon the chiefs of the so-called staff bureaus a grade or rank on retirement which it thought already appertained to the chiefs of the so-called line bureaus. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505.)

It seems clear when the statutes relating to this subject are considered as a whole and in their order, that Congress intended: (a) As a general thing to equalize the grade or rank of an officer of the Navy on retirement with that enjoyed by him at the moment of his retirement; (b) to use the word "grade" in section 1457, Revised Statutes, as a general term indicating any marked distinction fixed by law among officers which would be expressed in their commission, title, or pay, not excluding chiefs of bureaus having a certain rank; (c) not to make any distinction between one occupant of a bureau office and another because of the line or staff source from which he came. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, holding that "a line officer of the Navy, retired while serving as Chief of Bureau or Judge Advocate General, should be placed on the retired list with the rank attached by law to the said position of Chief of Bureau or Judge Advocate General.")

For other cases relating to retirement of chiefs of bureaus, etc., see note to section 421, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1474. [Medical Corps.] Officers of the Medical Corps on the active list of the Navy shall have relative rank as follows:

Medical directors, the relative rank of captain.

Medical inspectors, the relative rank of commander.

Surgeons, the relative rank of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant.

Passed assistant surgeons, the relative rank of lieutenant or master.

Assistant surgeons, the relative rank of master or ensign.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 5, v. 16, p. 535.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), which provided that "assistant surgeons shall rank with assistant surgeons in the Army"; by section 1168, Revised Statutes, the lowest rank of an assistant surgeon in the Army during the first three years of service was that of a lieutenant of cavalry; the effect of the act of 1900 was therefore to give to assistant surgeons in the Navy the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) instead of ensign. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 138.) The act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), authorized the appointment of additional passed assistant and assistant surgeons "with the rank, respectively, of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade)." Further amendment to this section was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), which provided that "all assistant surgeons shall from date of their original appointment take rank and precedence with lieutenants (junior grade)." The act last cited further created the rank of rear admiral for medical directors, in addition to the rank of captain, the distribution to be "one-half medical directors with the rank of rear admiral to four medical directors with the rank of captain, to eight medical inspectors with the rank of commander, to eighty-seven and one-half in the grades below medical inspector." (See note to sec. 1368, R. S.) The words, "the relative rank of," as used in this section, were changed to read, "the rank of," by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006). The title "master" was changed to "lieutenant (junior grade)" by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472).

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), it was provided that "officers of the lower grades of the Medical Corps, * * * shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law." By act of May 22, 1917, section 17 (40 Stat., 89), it was enacted that the above clause in the act of August 29, 1916, shall not operate "to disturb the relative position of officers in the Medical Corps with reference to precedence or promotion, but all such officers otherwise qualified shall be advanced in rank with or ahead of officers in said corps who were their juniors on the date of said act."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral, shall be by selection in the manner therein provided.

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

See sections 1368-1375, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto, concerning the organization of the Medical Corps, and appointments, promotions, etc., therein.

Historical note.— It is obvious that every military establishment, whether Army or Navy, must have connected with it certain organizations of business or scientific men whose services, although auxiliary to the combatant force of such establishment, are yet necessary to its efficiency. These constitute the staff corps as distinguished from the line. It is also necessary that the officers of such a corps, being gentlemen who render important and valuable services, should be brought into such relations with the officers of the line that their own dignity shall be preserved, and the proper order of a military establishment maintained. While, therefore, rank is primarily established with reference to those who are entitled to command, with a view to determining the order in which they are to command, it is necessary to give to the grades created in other corps a rank which shall either be the same with the rank of the officers of the line, or which, by relation to the rank of the officers of the line, shall entitle those holding it to such honor, attention, and respect as is accorded to officers of the line of the rank to which it relates or is assimilated. Such rank, whether it be absolute in terms, or whether it be termed assimilated or relative rank, may, of course, be always subject to such exceptions as the legislative power may deem proper. Orders were early passed by various secretaries of the Navy providing that certain officers of the staff should rank with certain officers of the line, the same orders providing that this should not give them authority to exercise military command, and should give no additional right to quarters. Two general orders of this nature, of Secretary Bancroft and Secretary Mason, relating to surgeons and pursers, were confirmed by the act of August 5, 1854 (sec. 4, 10 Stat., 587). A similar order by Mr. Toucey in relation to engineers was also confirmed by a subsequent statute. These orders did not give to the staff officers to whom they referred the same rank as that held by officers of the line, but a rank equal to and assimilated with that of officers of the line. In January 1871 a bill was passed by the House of Representatives which gave to each staff officer definite or absolute rank, the phrase used in regard to such officers, e. g., being "13 pay inspectors who shall have the rank of commander." This bill was the subject of much discussion, and in the Senate it was amended and finally passed by both houses of Congress in a form which gave to the officers of the staff relative rank, the phrase used in regard to such officers being, e. g., "13 pay inspectors who shall have the relative rank of commander." This statute is embodied in sections 1474-1480, Revised Statutes. It is impossible to conceive why this change was made if Congress, when it finally passed the bill, did not suppose that the "relative" rank of commander was something different from the rank or grade of commander. The terms seem almost to force the conclusion that the pay inspector was to have the rank of commander by reference or relation to the rank held by a commander in the line. While undoubtedly Congress might provide that he should have the absolute rank of commander and might annex to it appropriate conditions considering the duties expected to be performed by him, such as that he should not exercise military command, it is apparent that in inserting the word "relative" Congress has made the provision which it deemed necessary for the respect which was undoubtedly to be accorded to him. In the Army it is no doubt true that certain officers whose duties are strictly those of staff officers, like the officers of the Pay Corps of the Army, have absolute rank (see sec. 1182, R. S.), but it will be observed that neither the word "relative" nor any word expressive of the same idea is found in the section. These officers of the Army are identified with certain grades of the line by appropriate words conferring absolutely the rank of those grades, but by the use of the word "relative" Congress indicates its intention to make the grades of the Pay Corps of the Navy equal to but not identical with the grades of the line with which they are connected by relation. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

On December 24, 1862, the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 413) holding that the latter had authority under the law to issue regulations fixing the "relative rank of the line and civil or staff officers of the Navy." Following this opinion it was provided by regulation that "surgeons, paymasters, naval constructors, chief engineers, chaplains, professors of mathematics, passed assistant surgeons, secretaries, assistant surgeons, assistant naval constructors, assistant paymasters, first assistant engineers, second assistant engineers, third assistant engineers, clerks, carpenters, and sailmakers are to be regarded as staff officers, and all other officers of the service as line officers. The relative rank between the officers of these two classes is to be as follows: Assistant surgeons to rank with masters," etc. (Navy Regs., 1865, Art. II; par. 5 et seq.; Navy Dept. order Mar. 3, 1863.) On March 31, 1869, the Attorney General (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 10) dissented from the previous opinion of his department, above cited, and held that certain regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approbation of the President, on March 13, 1863, "establishing and increasing the relative rank of the staff officers of the Navy," were invalid. By General Order No. 120 of April 1, 1869, the Secretary of the Navy published this latter opinion of the Attorney General, and stated that, in accordance therewith, "the order of March 3, 1863, and the Navy Regulations, Article II, paragraphs 6 to 28 (both inclusive), are hereby revoked and annulled." The same general order also published the rank of staff officers as then established by law. Thereafter by act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 535, et seq.), embodied in sections 1474-1480, Revised Statutes, Congress established the relative rank of various staff officers.

By the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), it was provided "that all sections of the Revised Statutes which, in defining the rank of officers or positions in the Navy, contain the words 'the relative rank of' are hereby amended so as to read 'the rank of,'

but officers whose rank is so defined shall not be entitled, in virtue of their rank to command in the line or in other staff corps."

Command of hospital ships by medical officers.—See note to section 1488, Revised Statutes.

Clerical error in stating rank of medical officer in commission.—An assistant surgeon was nominated to the Senate for appointment as a passed assistant surgeon without mention of the rank, whether lieutenant or lieutenant (junior grade), to be held under such appointment; by clerical error he was commissioned as passed assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant instead of the rank of lieutenant (junior grade). While it is true that section 1474, Revised Statutes, provides that passed assistant surgeons shall have the rank of lieutenant or lieutenant (junior grade), without specifying the number in each rank, yet the rank is not left to the discretion of the appointing power but is determined by section 1485, Revised Statutes. To have given this officer the rank of lieutenant at the time of his promotion would have advanced him about 20 numbers in rank, which, without the advice and consent of the Senate, is specifically prohibited by section 1506, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of June 17, 1878 (20 Stat., 143). Accordingly, held that the officer in question is entitled only to the pay of lieutenant (junior grade). (11 Comp. Dec., 43; compare 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 496, noted under sec. 1485, R. S., holding that secs. 1485 and 1486, R. S., have nothing whatever to do in determining whether an officer should be advanced in one rank or more than one.)

Retirement of medical officer with higher rank than that provided for the active list.—Under section 1474, Revised Statutes, the highest grade in the Medical Corps was that of medical director with the relative rank of captain; and under section 1475, Revised Statutes, the highest officers of the Pay Corps were pay directors with the relative rank of captain. In the active list there was no higher relative rank to be attained in either of these corps than that of captain. Nevertheless, held that under section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), providing for the retirement of certain officers with the rank "of the next higher grade," a pay director and a medical director having the rank of captain were entitled to be retired with the rank of rear admiral, although this will result in a higher rank than that to which it would be possible for them to attain in the active service. Of course, one occupying the highest rank in the Navy could not by retirement or other means be promoted to a higher grade when none exists. But section 11 of the act cited refers to the rank or grade of officers of the Navy generally, without respect to the limitations of rank placed upon the different branches of staff service. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

The officers of different staff corps, such as the Medical Corps and the Pay Corps, have separate and distinct titles appropriate to the nature of their service and to their rank in the corps; and in addition thereto are given relative rank by the same title that is applied to officers of the line. The line furnishes the standard of rank for officers of all classes. A captain of the line is merely a captain and has but one title to designate both his office and his rank. An officer of the staff has an official title to identify his position in his corps and also a relative rank in addition, the latter being arbitrarily fixed by Congress to designate his relative rank in the service in accordance with the line standard. The rank conferred upon a person holding the position of medical director is purely statutory and arbitrary, and there is no reason why a retired medical director should not hold a higher relative rank than that which is permitted on the active list. That Congress has in other instances contemplated a similar result is apparent from the provisions of section 1481, Revised Statutes, which provides that certain staff officers shall when retired have the relative rank of commodore. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

Rank of acting assistant surgeons.—By act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 369, 380), the President was authorized to appoint for temporary service 25 acting assistant surgeons "who shall have the relative rank and compensation of assistant surgeons." The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), raised the rank of assistant surgeons in the Navy by providing that "assistant surgeons shall rank with assistant surgeons in the Army." Prior to that act the rank of assistant surgeons in the Navy, upon entrance into the Navy, was that of ensign. By Revised Statutes 1168 the lowest rank of an assistant surgeon in the Army, during the first three years of service, was that of a lieutenant of cavalry. The effect of the act of 1900 was, therefore, to give assistant surgeons in the Navy a higher rank—that is, to raise them from the rank of ensign to that of lieutenant (junior grade). By circular of the Surgeon General of the Navy, December 29, 1902, it was stated that acting assistant surgeons would have the same rank and pay as assistant surgeons in the regular service. Claimant was commissioned as an acting assistant surgeon, the commission stating his rank to be that of lieutenant (junior grade). Held, that the act of 1898 provided for a standard by which to determine the rank and pay of the acting assistant surgeons, and that under said act the standard was the rank and pay of assistant surgeons in force at the time when the services of the acting assistant surgeons were rendered, and not the rank and pay in force when the act of 1898 was enacted, which had become a nonexistent or obsolete standard. The relation which the act of 1898 established between the rank and pay of acting assistant surgeons and assistant surgeons in reason must rest upon the substantial identity of the services to be rendered by the incumbents of both offices. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137.)

A passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) corresponds in rank with an assistant surgeon in the Army with the rank of a first lieutenant, and a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant corresponds in rank with as assistant surgeon in the Army with the rank of captain. His pay is attached to his rank by section 7 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899. Therefore a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant is entitled to the pay of an officer of corresponding rank in the Army, to-wit, that of an assistant surgeon with the rank of captain. (9 Comp. Dec., 676, modifying 5 Comp. Dec., 943.)

There is no ground for distinction between assistant surgeons and passed assistant surgeons that would give mounted pay to one and deny it to the other. (9 Comp. Dec., 676.)

Section 1466, Revised Statutes, assimilates in rank lieutenants in the Navy with captains in the Army. Under the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), and section 1466, Revised Statutes, passed assistant surgeons of the Navy as well as assistant surgeons rank with captains in the Army. (U. S. v. Farenholt, 206 U. S., 226.)

As to status of passed assistant surgeons, see note to section 1368, Revised Statutes.

Advancement in rank and promotion of staff officers.—See note to section 1480, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1475. [Supply Corps.] Officers of the Pay Corps on the active list of the Navy shall have relative rank as follows:

Pay directors, the relative rank of captain.

Pay inspectors, the relative rank of commander.

Paymasters, the relative rank of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant.

Passed assistant paymasters, the relative rank of lieutenant or master.

Assistant paymasters, the relative rank of master or ensign.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 6, v. 16, p. 536.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which changed the title of "master" to "lieutenant (junior grade)"; by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which changed the words, "the relative rank of," to read, "the rank of;" by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), which provided that "hereafter the Pay Corps shall be called the Supply Corps"; by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), which created the rank of rear admiral for pay directors, in addition to the rank of captain, the distribution to be "one-half pay directors with the rank of rear admiral to four pay directors with the rank of captain, to eight pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to eighty-seven and one-half in the grades below pay inspector." (See note to sec. 1376, R. S.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), it was provided that "officers of the lower grades of the * * * Pay Corps * * * shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral shall be by selection in the manner therein provided.

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

See sections 1376-1389, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto, concerning the organization of the Supply Corps, and appointments, promotions, etc., therein.

Historical note.—See note to section 1474, Revised Statutes.

Retirement with higher rank than that provided for the active list.—See note to section 1474, Revised Statutes.

Rank of paymasters and assistant paymasters.—The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), provides that "assistant surgeons shall rank with assistant surgeons in the Army." There is no statute which makes assistant paymasters having the rank of ensign and lieutenant (junior grade) rank with assistant paymasters in the Army. Nor is there any law whereby paymasters in the Navy shall rank with paymasters in the Army, yet there is a direct correspondence under these laws between the paymaster with the rank of lieutenant in the Navy and the paymaster with the rank of "captain, mounted," in the Army. Under section 1466, Revised Statutes, lieutenants in the Navy rank with captains in the Army, lieutenants (junior grade) with first lieutenants, and ensigns with second lieutenants. The lowest grade or rank in the pay corps of the Army is that of captain, who is given by law the rank of "captain, mounted." There is not, and never has been, any rank in the Pay Corps of the Army below that of captain. Accordingly, held, that under the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), providing that officers of the Pay Corps of the Navy shall receive the same pay provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army, a paymaster in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant has corresponding rank with a "captain, mounted," in the Pay Corps of the Army, and that, there being no corresponding grade in the Pay Corps of the Army to that of assistant paymaster in the Navy with the rank of ensign, or lieutenant (junior grade), the latter corresponds in rank to second lieutenant or first lieutenant in the Infantry of the Army, and is entitled only to Infantry pay. (Stevens v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 484; 15 Comp. Dec., 124.)

Advancement in rank and promotion of staff officers.—See note to section 1480, Revised Statutes.

The permanent rank of rear admiral on the active list of the Pay Corps (now Supply Corps) was first authorized by act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607) which provided that chiefs of bureaus eligible for retirement after 30 years' service should be entitled to the permanent rank, title, and emoluments of a chief of bureau, while on the active list, the same as they would have received if retired for age or length of service; this provision was repealed by act of August 22,

1912 (37 Stat., 328), which contained a proviso that no officer who had received the benefits of the act of 1910 should be deprived thereof on account of such repeal; prior to its repeal two officers of the Pay Corps, Paymaster General Eustace B. Rogers (file 22724-18) and Paymaster General Thomas J. Cowie, had been permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral. (See note to sec. 421, R. S., under "Rank of chiefs of bureaus.")

Sec. 1476. [Engineer Corps. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1476. Officers of the Engineer Corps on the active list shall have relative rank as follows:

"Of the chief engineers, ten shall have the relative rank of captain, fifteen that of commander, and forty-five that of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant.

"First assistant engineers shall have the relative rank of lieutenant or master, and second assistant engineers that of master or ensign."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 7, v. 16, p. 536. 24 Feb., 1874, c. 35, v. 18, p. 17.)

It was amended by act of February 24, 1874, section 1 (18 Stat., 17), which changed the title of first assistant engineer to passed assistant engineer and changed the title of second assistant engineer to assistant engineer.

It was superseded by act of August 5, 1882, section 1 (22 Stat., 286), which provided that the active list of the Engineer Corps should thereafter consist of 10 chief engineers with the relative rank of captain, 15 chief engineers with the relative rank of commander, 45 chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant commander or lieutenant, 60 passed assistant engineers and 40 assistant engineers with the relative rank for each as previously fixed by law.

The act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), changed the title of "master" to "lieutenant (junior grade)."

The act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), abolished the Engineer Corps and transferred the members thereof to the line of the Navy. (See note to sec. 1390, R. S.) The appointment and assignment of line officers for engineering duty only are authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580).

Sec. 1477. [Constructors. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1477. Of the naval constructors, two shall have the relative rank of captain, three of commander, and all others that of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant. Assistant naval constructors shall have the relative rank of lieutenant or master."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 9, v. 16, p. 536.)

It was amended by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which changed the title "master" to "lieutenant (junior grade)."

It was superseded by act of March 3, 1899, section 10 (30 Stat., 1006), which provided "that of the naval constructors five shall have the rank of captain, five of commander, and all others that of lieutenant commander or lieutenant. Assistant naval constructors shall have the rank of lieutenant or lieutenant (junior grade)."

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), created the rank of rear admiral for naval constructors in addition to the ranks theretofore authorized, the distribution to be "one-half naval constructors with the rank of rear admiral to eight and one-half naval constructors with the rank of captain, to fourteen naval constructors with the rank of commander, to seventy-one naval constructors and assistant naval constructors with rank below commander." (See note to sec. 1402, R. S.) The permanent rank of rear admiral on the active list in special cases was previously authorized in the Construction Corps by act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607), which provided that chiefs of bureaus eligible for retirement after 30 years' service should be entitled to the permanent rank, title, and emoluments of a chief of bureau, while on the active list, the same as they would have received if retired for age or length of service; this provision was repealed by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), which contained a proviso that no officer who had received the benefits of the act of 1910 should be deprived thereof on account of such repeal; prior to its repeal one officer of the Construction Corps, Chief Constructor Washington L. Capps, had been permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral (see note to sec. 421, R. S., under "Rank of chiefs of bureaus").

See sections 1402-1404, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto, concerning the organization of the Construction Corps, and appointments, promotions, etc., therein.

Historical note.—See note to section 1474, Revised Statutes.

Advancement in rank and promotion of staff officers.—See note to section 1480, Revised Statutes.

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), it was provided that "officers of the lower grades of the * * * Construction Corps, * * * shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral shall be by selection in the manner therein provided.

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

Rank of naval constructors held to be their grade.—Naval constructors belong to the staff; nevertheless they have been treated as eligible under section 423, Revised Statutes, for appointment as Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, which section provided that the chief of the bureau shall be appointed from the list of officers of the Navy "not below the grade of commander," and shall be a skillful naval constructor. Thus under the practical interpretation of section 423, naval constructors are treated as officers of the Navy, and their relative rank as the actual rank or grade required by the section; but it is to be observed that in no other way could compliance be had with the explicit requirement that the officer appointed Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair be a "skillful naval constructor." Faults in expression were disregarded in order to carry out the manifest intention of the law-maker. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 47. As to difference between rank and grade, see notes to secs. 421, 422, 423, 1362, 1457, and 1479, R. S.)

Sec. 1478. [Civil engineers. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1478. Civil engineers shall have such relative rank as the President may fix."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 9, v. 16, p. 536.)

It was amended by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which changed the words, "the relative rank of," as contained in all sections of the Revised Statutes defining the rank of officers or positions in the Navy, to read, "the rank of"; and by act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), which provided for the appointment of 12 assistant civil engineers, "of whom six shall have the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) and six the rank of ensign."

It was superseded by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), which created the rank of rear admiral for civil engineers, in addition to the ranks theretofore authorized, the distribution to be "one-half civil engineers with the rank of rear admiral to five and one-half civil engineers with the rank of captain, to fourteen civil engineers with the rank of commander, to eighty civil engineers and assistant civil engineers with the rank below commander." The permanent rank of rear admiral on the active list of the Civil Engineer Corps had previously been authorized for the benefit of Commander H. H. Rousseau by act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat., 1191), which same act also extended the thanks of Congress to said officer for distinguished service rendered by him as a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission in constructing the Panama Canal.

By act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1184), it was provided that "officers of the Corps of Civil Engineers hereafter appointed shall, from the date of their original appointment, take rank and precedence with lieutenants (junior grade)."

See note to section 1413, Revised Statutes, as to organization of Civil Engineer Corps, and appointments, promotions, etc., therein.

Advancement in rank and promotion of staff officers.—See note to section 1480, Revised Statutes.

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), it was provided that "officers of the lower grades of the * * * Corps of Civil Engineers shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral shall be by selection in the manner therein provided.

By act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197), it was provided that "promotions in the Corps of Civil Engineers shall be after such examination as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe." Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

Historical note.—See note to section 1474, Revised Statutes.

By section 1478, Revised Statutes, which is a reenactment of the statute of March 3, 1871, "civil engineers shall have such relative rank as the President may fix." An examination of the original statute shows that the authority was given to the President "in his discretion." This discretion has never been exercised and no relative rank has been assigned to these officers. It is difficult to conceive that those can be considered as officers in the Navy who have no rank by which their relation to the other officers, or to the men, can be determined. In the absence of such action by the President Held that civil engineers are civil officers. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 203.)

The authority of the President under the act of March 3, 1871 (sec. 1478, R. S.), "to determine and fix the relative rank of civil engineers," was not exercised until February 24, 1881, when their rank was fixed by him as follows: One with the relative rank of captain, two with the relative rank of commander, three with the relative rank of lieutenant commander, and four with the relative rank of lieutenant, which action was promulgated by a general order issued by the Secretary on that date. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 126, holding that civil engineers are officers of the Navy and eligible for retirement as such. The general order referred to is G. O. No. 263, Feb. 24, 1881.)

For other cases as to status of civil engineers, see note to section 1413, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1479. [Chaplains. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1479. Chaplains shall have relative rank as follows: Four, the relative rank of captain; seven, that of commander; and not more than seven, that of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 9, v. 16, p. 536.)

It was amended by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which changed the words "the relative rank of" to read "the rank of"; by section 13 of the same act (30 Stat., 1007), which provided that "naval chaplains, who do not possess relative rank, shall have the rank of lieutenant in the Navy"; and by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), which provided that "naval chaplains hereafter appointed shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy until they shall have completed seven years of service, when they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant in the Navy; and lieutenants shall be promoted, whenever vacancies occur, to the grade of lieutenant commander, which shall consist of five numbers, and when so promoted shall receive the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant commander in the Navy: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to increase the number of chaplains as now authorized by law or to reduce the rank or pay of any now serving."

It was superseded by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 404), which fixed the "total number of chaplains and acting chaplains in the Navy," and provided that "of the total number of chaplains and acting chaplains herein authorized ten per centum thereof shall have the rank of captain in the Navy, twenty per centum the rank of commander, twenty per centum the rank of lieutenant commander, and the remainder to have the rank of lieutenants and lieutenants, junior grade."

The same act (38 Stat., 403, 404) provided that "while so serving acting chaplains shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy. After three years' sea service on board ship each acting chaplain before receiving a commission in the Navy shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy by examination by a board of chaplains and medical officers of the Navy his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of chaplain in the Navy, and if found so qualified, shall be commissioned a chaplain in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade. * * * Naval chaplains hereafter commissioned from acting chaplains shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy until they shall have completed four years' service in that grade, when, subject to examination as above prescribed, they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant in the Navy, and chaplains with the rank of lieutenant shall have at least four years' service in that grade before promotion to the grade of lieutenant commander, after which service, chaplains shall be promoted as vacancies occur to the grades of lieutenant commander, commander, and captain."

The same act (38 Stat., 404) provided "that no provision of this section shall operate to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances that would have been received by any person in the Navy except for the passage of this section, and that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Advancement in rank and promotion of chaplains.—See note to section 1480, Revised Statutes.

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral shall be by selection in the manner therein provided.

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

Chaplains with the rank of lieutenant and chaplains with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) advanced since June 30, 1914 to the rank of lieutenant shall not be advanced in rank to lieutenant commander until they have served at least four years with the rank of lieutenant; except that this requirement of a minimum of four years' service with the rank of lieutenant shall not operate to reduce the rank, pay or allowances that would have been received by any person in the Navy except for the passage of the section relating to chaplains in the act of June 30, 1914. This prohibition as to promotion being retarded applies only to those chaplains in the service on June 30, 1914. (File 15721-7, Aug. 13, 1914.)

Naval chaplains commissioned after June 30, 1914, from acting chaplains, after at least four years' service in the rank of lieutenant shall be promoted to the rank of lieutenant commander, subject to the restrictions placed on the number of officers in the Corps of Chaplains who may have the rank of lieutenant commander. Thereafter they are promoted to the higher authorized ranks as vacancies occur therein without restriction as to the period of service in the intervening ranks before such advancements. (File 15721-7, Aug. 13, 1914.)

The act of June 30, 1914, makes no provision for the advancement of chaplains with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) who were in the service on that date; the requirement of four years' service in the grade of chaplain with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) applies only to those chaplains thereafter commissioned from acting chaplains. Said act, however, provides for the advancement of chaplains with the rank of lieutenant without regard to the date of their appointment as such. The advancement of chaplains with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the service on June 30, 1914, is governed by the provisions of the laws in force prior to that date, which are not modified in this respect by the said act of June 30, 1914. The provision that nothing in said enactment shall operate to reduce the rank, etc., that would have been received by any person in the Navy except for the passage thereof prevents advancement from being retarded, but does not provide for accelerating advancement in rank to lieutenant in their cases. In other words, they are required to serve seven years as chaplain with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), as required by the act of June 29, 1906, before being advanced in rank to lieutenant. (File 15721-7, Aug. 13, 1914.)

The requirement of four years' service with the rank of lieutenant prior to advancement to the rank of lieutenant commander is not waived in order that vacancies created by reason of the passage of the act of June 30, 1914, may be immediately filled, but it is waived where its effect would be to delay promotions that would have been made irrespective of that act, such as to fill vacancies created by death, resignation or retirement of officers occupying the limited number of positions. (File 15721-7, Aug. 13, 1914.)

Chaplains with the rank of lieutenant commander in the service on June 30, 1914, are advanced in rank to commander and captain as vacancies occur in those ranks, without regard to length of service with the rank of commander or lieutenant commander. (File 15721-7, Aug. 13, 1914.)

The requirement of four years' service in the grade of chaplain with the rank of lieutenant before promotion to the grade of chaplain with the rank of lieutenant commander, should not be held to retard the promotion of chaplains in the service on June 30, 1914, who have completed seven years in the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), as required by the act of June 29, 1906, such promotion being to fill vacancies in the higher ranks in the grade of chaplain; because the act of June 30, 1914, provides that no provision thereof shall operate to reduce the rank, pay or allowances that might have been received by any person in the Navy except for the passage of the chaplain section therein. However, a chaplain would not be entitled to promotion to any rank above that of lieutenant, even after four years' service as a lieutenant, unless a vacancy occurred in the higher rank. Although the act of August 29, 1916, changed the retiring age from 62 to 64 years, and if this had not been done a vacancy would have been created by the retirement of a chaplain for age upon his reaching 62 years, nevertheless the provision in said act of August 29, 1916, that "nothing contained in this act shall be construed to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances of any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps as now provided by law," does not entitle a junior officer to promotion in rank which he would have received had the senior officer been retired for age at 62 years. On the date of said act of August 29, 1916, the chaplain in question had the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant, none of which has been reduced by the operation of said act. The act of August 29, 1916, changing the retirement age, may have operated to retard his advancement by delaying the retirement of the senior chaplain for age, but it did not operate to reduce the rank, pay, and allowances to which he was then or is now entitled by law. Accordingly, held that the chaplain in question is not entitled to promotion to the rank of lieutenant commander, and will not be entitled to such advancement until after a vacancy occurs in said rank for which he qualifies on examination as required by section 20 of the act of May 22, 1917. (File 15721-20, Sept. 24, 1918.)

"Grade" and "rank" in the Chaplain Corps.—The word "grade" as used in the act of June 30, 1914, is an obvious error. There are but two grades in the Corps of Chaplains; first, the grade of chaplain, in which officers are distributed in the "ranks" of captain, commander, lieutenant commander, lieutenant, and lieutenant (junior grade); and secondly, the grade of acting chaplain, in which the officers have the "rank" of lieutenant (junior grade). It is necessary to read the word "grade" as "rank" in said act in order to conform to the well-established meaning and usage of the words "grade" and "rank." (File 15721-7, Aug. 13, 1914. For other cases concerning "rank" and "grade" see notes to secs. 421, 422, 423, 1362, 1457, 1477, and 1480, R. S.)

Pay of chaplains.—See act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), providing that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service." It had previously been provided by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), that "the pay and allowances of chaplains in the Navy shall in no case exceed that provided for lieutenant commanders." The pay of the various ranks in the Navy is provided for by act of May 13, 1908 (53 Stat., 127). See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1480. [Professors of Mathematics. Promotions in staff corps.] Professors of mathematics shall have relative rank as follows: Three, the relative rank of captain; four, that of commander; and five, that of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant. [The grades established in the six preceding sections for the staff corps of the Navy shall be filled by appointment from the highest members in each corps, according to seniority; and new commissions shall be issued to the officers so appointed, in which the titles and grades established in said sections shall be inserted; and no existing commission shall be vacated in the said several staff corps, except by the issue of the new commissions required by the provisions of this section; and no officer shall be reduced in rank or lose seniority in his own corps by any change which may be required under the provisions of the said six preceding sections: Provided, That the issuing of a new appointment and commission to any officer of the pay corps under the provisions of this section shall not affect or annul any existing bond, but the same shall remain in force, and apply to such new appointment and commission.]—(31 May, 1872, c. 240, s. 1, v. 17, p. 192. 27 Feb., 1877, c. 69, v. 19, p. 244.)

Amendment to this section as originally embodied in the Revised Statutes was made by act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 244), which added thereto the portion printed in brackets above, and which in this form was embodied in the second edition of the Revised Statutes. (See "Introduction," ante, under "II. The Revised Statutes.")

Amendment to this section was also made by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which changed the words, "the relative rank of," to read, "the rank of;" and by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), which provided that "hereafter no further appointments shall be made to the Corps of Professors of Mathematics, and that corps shall cease to exist upon the death, resignation, or dismissal of the officers now carried in that corps on the active and retired lists of the Navy."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral, shall be by selection in the manner therein provided.

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.

"Pay Corps" is to be called the "Supply Corps," by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147). As to bonds of officers in the Supply Corps, see note to section 1383, Revised Statutes.

See notes to sections 1399-1401, Revised Statutes, concerning organization of Corps of Professors of Mathematics, duties of professors of mathematics, etc.

Constitutionality of amended section 1480.—Section 1480 as amended being applicable to advancement from grade to grade in the staff corps, it seems plain that Congress sought thereby to restrict the President to the nomination of a single person of its own choosing, and this without regard to his comparative fitness for the larger responsibilities of the higher office. The attempt so to do is in opposition to that provision of the Constitution (Art. II, sec. 2), requiring him to nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80, citing and affirming 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177 and 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

The President's power in regard to appointments and the Senate's check thereon was exhaustively canvassed in the Constitutional Convention. It was at one time moved that his power be restricted to "those cases not otherwise provided for by this Constitution or by law." The very ground urged in support of the motion was that otherwise the President would be given too much control over the Army. The motion was decisively defeated (citing Ferrand Records, Federal Convention, Vol. II, p. 405). "Argument is unnecessary to demonstrate how idle it would have been to have conferred the power on the President if, in practice, it might have been taken from him by statute, as would be the case if section 1480, as amended, were to be applied. (Hamilton in the Federalist, No. 76; Story on the Constitution, Vol. II, secs. 1526-1533; and Judge Cooley's note to the last section.) Moreover the alleged right to a statutory promotion could never be enforced by mandamus or injunction, if the President should refuse to nominate, or the Senate should refuse to confirm the senior officer." (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80.)

The provisions of section 1480, Revised Statutes, as amended, considered, and held (1) that advancement of staff officers in the Medical, Pay, and Construction Corps, and Corps of Civil Engineers, from the rank of captain to the rank of rear admiral, may be made upon selection by the President, whether or not such advancement be regarded as an advancement in rank only, or as an advancement in grade; and (2) that the promotion of all staff officers of the Navy to higher offices may be made upon selection by the President. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80. Note that this opinion was rendered by the Attorney General prior to the act of July 1, 1918, above cited, authorizing promotion by selection to certain higher ranks in the staff corps.)

For other cases, see note to section 1458, Revised Statutes; and see cases noted under Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2, "III. Power of Congress," and "IV. Statutory requirements and qualifications;" see also note to section 1372, Revised Statutes, "Promotion by seniority and not competitive examination."

"Grades established," meaning of.—The reference in section 1480 to "the grades established" in the six preceding sections for the staff corps of the Navy is the identical language of the ninth section of the act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 536), which refers to the previous sections of that act in which grade and relative rank in the staff department of the Navy are created together uno flatu; whereas in the Revised Statutes the two subjects are treated in distinct chapters. This effectually disposes of the argument that there was any establishing of grades in the sections assigning relative rank; the mistake of the revisers in using the expression, "grades established," being too evident to admit of doubt. Accordingly, held that in the organization of the Medical Corps of the Navy there is no such grade as passed assistant surgeon, but that passed assistant surgeon is merely a class in the grade of assistant surgeon, notwithstanding that section 1480 as amended refers to "grades established" in the six preceding sections, and that section 1474 provides for passed assistant surgeons with the relative rank of "lieutenant or master." (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 169; see note to sec. 1368, R. S., as to status of passed assistant surgeons.)

Rank of rear admiral in the staff corps not a new "grade."—The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), providing for the rank of rear admiral in certain staff corps of the Navy, is regarded as creating a new rank of rear admiral within the old grade of, e. g., medical director, rather than as creating a new grade of, e. g., "medical director with the rank of rear admiral." Accordingly, section 1480, Revised Statutes, as amended, because in terms applicable to such old grade, would apply to advancement thereto from a lower grade. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80, noted above, holding unconstitutional the requirement that promotions be made by seniority.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), did not create new grades. The words in that act, "the total number of commissioned officers * * * shall be distributed in the various grades," etc., while apt for distribution among existing, are inapt for the creation of new grades. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80.)

In each of the 16 different grades created by sections 1474-1479, inclusive, there was a separate and distinctive word title for each. Had the purpose been to create a new grade in the act of 1916, a new word title other than, e. g., "medical director," such as, for example, "surgeon general," would have been used. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80.)

Advancement in rank without change of grade.—Section 1480, Revised Statutes, being limited to grade can not affect advancement in rank; and because it is limited to those grades established by sections 1474-1479, Revised Statutes, it can not affect advancement in the staff corps from captain to rear admiral. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80.)

Whenever Congress creates a new grade or rank, without making any provision for filling it, the selection, in the case of a vacancy in grade, is made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate (citing 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 117); while in the case of a vacancy in rank, it is made by the President as commander in chief of the Navy, without any action on the part of the Senate. (Citing Gen. Ainsworth's case, 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 480.) Neither in the act of August 29, 1916, nor in the old law is there any provision for advancement from the rank of captain to that of rear admiral in any of the various staff corps; and the function of selection in every such case must be exercised by the President alone under the rule stated. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80.)

Under section 1480, as amended, it is not necessary to issue new commissions or appointments to staff officers receiving an advance in rank within the same grade; the rank of such officers changes with their seniority in grade, and as they hold the same office, such change in rank may be indicated by a notification from the Secretary of the Navy. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 358; see also 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 652; and see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3, under "II. Duty to commission officers.")

The law requires that commissions shall be issued to officers appointed or promoted to different offices or grades in the Pay Corps of the Navy, but there is no law which requires a commission to be issued on mere change of rank without change of office (citing 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 358, 363). The mere advancement in rank without a change in office does not create an office and is not accomplished by an exercise of the appointing power. (17 Comp. Dec., 255.)

In the absence of a specific law for the advancement of a paymaster of the Navy from one rank to another within the grade of paymaster, such advancement is primarily within the discretion of the Executive, limited by the rule of seniority (sec. 1480) and subject to the consent of the Senate (sec. 1506, amended). This discretion has been exercised under a rule of many years' practice in determining the date when such officer attains a higher rank by the laws providing for precedence of officers of the line and staff corps (secs. 1485, 1486). The staff officer takes precedence next below a certain line officer of the same credited service. This line officer is known in the service as the staff officer's "running mate"; and by the practice referred to when the "running mate" is regularly promoted or fails in examination the staff officer is advanced to the higher rank. When the date for advancement of a paymaster with the rank of lieutenant to the rank of lieutenant commander has been determined by the rule aforesaid and his advancement to that rank on the date ascertained has been consented to by the Senate, he becomes entitled to the pay and emoluments of the higher rank from the date he so took rank. (16 Comp. Dec., 662; see also 17 Comp. Dec., 255. Compare note to sec. 1485, and note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3, under "II. Duty to commission officers.") By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), it was provided that "officers of the lower grades of the Medical Corps, Pay Corps, Construction Corps, and Corps of Civil Engineers shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law"; and by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral shall be by selection in the manner therein provided.

Advancement in rank of professors of mathematics.—There is no statute which limits the discretion of the Executive with regard to the division of the five junior officers of the Corps of Professors of Mathematics between the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant. If the President deems it appropriate to nominate one or more of the professors of mathematics of the Navy now commissioned in the grade of lieutenant to be commissioned in the grade of lieutenant commander, it is entirely within his discretion so to do. (Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 2, 1909, file 26289-5a, following 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 511, noted under sec. 1376, R. S., in which it was held, with reference to the Pay Corps, that where the law fixes an aggregate number of officers, in two grades, without providing for the distribution of such officers between said grades, the number to be appointed in each of the two grades is necessarily left to Executive discretion, to be controlled by the general laws and regulations providing for the advancement of officers in the naval service. See also file 26289-9, Mar. 30, 1912.)

"Grade," "rank," and "title" in staff corps.—While "grade" has the same meaning as "office," "rank" is merely a classification to fix the position of officers with respect to other officers in the same or in other grades as to command, precedence, privilege, or pay. "Rank" may be conferred by mere notification and without either examination, confirmation, or commission (Gen. Wood's case, 15 Ct. Cls., 151, 159; Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S., 414; 20 Op. Att. Gen., 358, 362, 363; 19 Op. Att. Gen., 169; 27 Op. Att. Gen., 376); so also while "grade" is only partially, "rank" is wholly, within the control of Congress (Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S., 414, 417; Senate Rep. 2163, 38th Cong., 2d sess.). (31 Op. Att. Gen., 80.)

The naval appropriation act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 535-538), reorganized to some extent the staff corps of the Navy. As to the Medical Corps it provided, for example, for "medical directors who shall have the relative rank of captain," as to the Engineer Corps, for example, "chief engineers who shall have the relative rank of captain," "chief engineers who shall have the relative rank of commander." Of the naval constructors it said "two shall have the relative rank of captain, three of commander, and all others that of lieutenant commander or lieutenant." Section 10 then provided: "That the foregoing grades hereby established for the staff corps of the Navy, shall be filled by appointment from the highest numbers in each corps according to seniority, and that new commissions shall be issued to the officers so appointed, in which commissions the titles and grades herein established shall be inserted. Here we have created offices of, for example, "medical directors," "pay inspectors," "chief engineers," "naval constructors," with no provision for their position in the general scheme of the Navy, unless the added words, for example, "with the relative rank of captain" cover this omission. We then have the reference in section 10 to the foregoing establishment as one of "grades" and "titles" which must be specified in the commission. What "grades" and "titles" are referred to? It is clear both as a matter of common sense and of authority that the "grades" referred to in section 10 of the act of March 3, 1871, are, for example, "pay directors with the rank of captain," "chief engineers with the rank of commander," "chief engineers with the rank of lieutenant commander," etc. (31 Op. Att. Gen., 505, 513.)

Previous Attorneys General have held with respect to the phrases corresponding to "medical director with the rank of rear admiral," that the first two words represent the title to the office, while the latter words merely give it rank (citing 10 Op. Att. Gen., 377; 20 Op. Att. Gen., 358, reversing 16 Op. Att. Gen., 414, 417; 28 Op. Att. Gen., 429, 526; Op. Att.

The grade of chief engineer is one grade; they hold the same office; their relative rank among the chief engineers changes with their seniority in that grade, but the office of chief engineer remains the same. It is clear that the mere fact that different relative rank is assigned to officers whose office is designated by the same title does not necessarily put such officers in different grades. (20 Op. Att. Gen., 358, explaining 16 Op. Att. Gen., 414.)

Section 1475, Revised Statutes, does not give to a pay inspector the grade of commander. It confers upon him the rank of commander by relation only to the rank of a line officer of that grade. By the use of the terms, "relative rank," in that section, Congress intended to make the grades of the Pay Corps of the Navy equal to, but not identical with, the grades of the line with which they are by those terms associated. As generally used in reference to the naval and military service, the word "title" signifies the name by which an office or the holder of an office is designated and distinguished, and by which the officer has a right to be addressed; "grade" one of the divisions or degrees in the particular branch of the service according to which officers therein are arranged; and "rank" the position of officers of different grades or of the same grade, in point of authority, precedence, or the like, of one over another. Sometimes "rank" is used as synonymous with "grade," and the title of an officer, for example, admiral, vice admiral, etc., may denote both his grade and his rank. The designation, "pay inspector," expressed both title and grade in the Pay Corps. Held, that a commission in the following form, "John Doe, a pay inspector from the — day of —, A. D. 187—, with the relative rank of commander," gives the appropriate title and grade of the officer named therein, and fully satisfies the requirement of section 1480, Revised Statutes. (16 Op. Att. Gen., 414.)

A commission gives the officer, by the words "pay inspector," the title and grade to which he has a right. The addition of the relative rank, while not positively required by the statute, is eminently appropriate. Especially is this the case in view of the fact that, with reference to certain officers of the staff corps, this would be necessary, as their grade would be determined by the addition of their relative rank. (16 Op. Att. Gen., 414, citing secs. 1390 and 1476, R. S.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), makes reference to the "grade of assistant surgeon," showing that the title of the grade was "assistant surgeon" and that the added words in section 1474, "the relative rank of master or ensign," were no part of the definition of the grade but merely a classification within it. (31 Op. Att. Gen., 80.)

The rank conferred upon professors of mathematics by section 1480, Revised Statutes, does not confer upon them the corresponding grade. A professor of mathematics with the rank of captain, placed on the retired list with the rank of rear admiral on account of civil war service (act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 11, 30 Stat., 1007), held at the time of his retirement the grade of professor of mathematics and not the grade of captain. (13 Comp. Dec., 211.)

The grade of an officer in the Navy is his official station, by which are regulated his powers, duties, and pay. His pay may be further governed by his time of service within a grade, either in fact rendered within the grade, or constructively performed therein through the force of statutes. That the office of professor of mathematics is a grade, is recognized by the act of April 17, 1866, section 7 (14 Stat., 38), which provides, "That hereafter no vacancy in the grade of professor of mathematics in the Navy shall be filled." (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167, 171.)

Where the word "grade" is used in a statute relating to the Army to designate, indiscriminately, first an office and then a rank, it does not signify "office" in its first employment and "rank" in the second, but refers to a quality which may be common to both, viz, that of conferring relative superiority of position. The place of assistant surgeon is a step in promotion; so is that of captain on the medical staff. They are not steps as regards each other. The latter is a step within the former, a subgrade. It is a step above another grade. Those who have been advanced to it stand above those who have not been; and such seems to have been plainly the intent of the legislature. It is unnecessary to issue commissions to assistant surgeons in the Army upon their passing from the grade of lieutenant to that of captain. The office for which in these cases the President issues a commission is that of assistant surgeon; the grades of lieutenant and captain are not offices but are incident to the office of assistant surgeon. It appears that by section 1480, Revised Statutes, certain officers of the Navy receive a new commission for every grade which they attain. This is by an express statute that is limited to the cases named therein. Although it would require but a slight recognition by Congress to develop these grades (lieutenant and captain in the Army Medical Department) into separate offices, this has not been done as yet; and in the meantime the absence of a statutory provision like that in section 1480 is significant. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 652.)

The officers of different corps of the staff, such as the Medical Corps and the Pay Corps, have separate and distinct titles appropriate to the nature of their service and to their rank in the corps, and in addition thereto are given relative rank by the same title that is applied to officers of the line. The line furnishes the standard of rank for officers of all classes. A captain in the line is merely a captain and has but one title to designate both his office and his rank. An officer of the staff has an official title to identify his position in his corps, and also a relative rank in addition, the latter being arbitrarily fixed by Congress to designate his relative rank in the service in accordance with the line standard. The rank conferred upon a person holding the position of medical director is purely statutory and arbitrary, and there is no reason why a retired medical director should not hold a higher relative rank than that which is permitted on the active list. That Congress has in other instances contemplated a similar result is apparent from the provisions of section 1481, which provides that certain staff officers shall, when retired, have the relative rank of commodore. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

A class exists in the Army and Navy which does not have to do with the actual maneuvering of a regiment or ship of war, but which performs services deemed equally essential to that end, for example, paymasters, surgeons, chaplains, constructors, etc. There were and are reasons, based upon the efficiency of the service looked at as a whole, why a rank should be given to this class commensurate with the rank given to the class which actually exercised command. The difficulty was that in the case of an officer actually exercising command, his office or title correctly represented his rank except in exceptional cases. In the case, however, of, for example, paymasters, surgeons, etc., the title or office indicated no rank in the Navy as a whole. It was deemed necessary, therefore, to attach to the title or office of such persons a rank which should fix their precedence, pay, etc., and thus bring them in line with the rest of the service. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, citing 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

"Every officer in the Navy shall be designated and addressed by the title of his rank without any discrimination whatever. In written communications, the name of the corps to which any staff officer belongs will be stated immediately after his name; for example: Lieutenant John Doe, Medical Corps, U. S. Navy; Lieutenant John Doe, Pay Corps, U. S. Navy; Lieutenant John Doe, Construction Corps, U. S. Navy; Lieutenant John Doe, Civil Engineer Corps, U. S. Navy." (Art. R 1001 (2), Navy Regs., 1913, C. N. R. 12, Sept. 12, 1918. The designation of the "Pay Corps" was changed to "Supply Corps," by act of July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 147.) "All officers on the retired list have the titles of the rank with which retired." (Art. R 1002 (5), Navy Regs., 1913.) "Officers in oral official communications shall be addressed by the title of their rank, except that those below the rank of commander may be addressed by the title of their rank or as Mr.; and, in the case of officers of the Medical Corps, as Dr." (Art. R 1008, Navy Regs., 1913, C. N. R. 12, Sept. 12, 1918.) On general subject of titles, and powers of head of department with reference thereto, see note to section 1471, Revised Statutes, under "Titles of chiefs of bureaus."

For other cases concerning "rank," "grade" and "title," see notes to sections 421, 422, 423, 1362, 1457, 1477, 1479, and 1481, Revised Statutes. See also, above, "Grades established, meaning of."

Examinations required for promotion, in addition to seniority.—The Revised Statutes contained no specific provisions for filling grades in the staff corps, but by act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 244), the following was added to section 1480: "The grades established by the six preceding sections for the staff corps of the Navy shall be filled by appointment from the highest members in each corps, according to seniority; and new commissions shall be issued to the officers so appointed, in which the titles and grades established in said sections shall be inserted." Sections

1498-1510, Revised Statutes, provide for examinations for promotion as an additional requisite to seniority. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80. Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, sec. 20 (40 Stat. 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of Mar. 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank.)

Competitive examinations for promotion not authorized under this section.—

The custom and practice of the Navy Department, sanctioned by section 1372, Revised Statutes, of requiring competitive examinations of assistant surgeons, and assigning them positions on the Navy Register in the order of their relative merit as ascertained and reported by the board of examiners, is not, under section 1480, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 27, 1877, correct; the effect of the latter law being to adopt the rule of seniority in regard to promotions from one grade to another in the Medical Corps of the Navy. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

Promotions required to be by seniority under this section.—A passed assistant surgeon in the Navy having passed the necessary examination for promotion to surgeon, his claim to be promoted according to seniority is well founded. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

The act of February 27, 1877, embodied in section 1480, is prospective in its character, and is only to take effect from the date of its enactment. Its language contemplates that the rule prescribed by it may not have theretofore always been followed in reference to rank or seniority. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

The act of March 3, 1871, section 10 (16 Stat., 536), which is substantially identical with the act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 249), embodied in section 1480, Revised Statutes, contemplated by the use of the words "highest numbers in each corps according to seniority," that the promotions should be by seniority and not by competitive examination; and the provision that "no officer shall be reduced in rank or lose seniority" etc., contemplated also that unless this provision were inserted changes would be made in grades or numbers which had been theretofore fixed, which it was not the intention of Congress to disturb. This clause of the act of March 3, 1871, did not find its way into the original edition of the Revised Statutes, but is now in the second edition, section 1480. It was, however, reenacted by the act of February 27, 1877, which is a substantial reenactment with the exception that the word "members" is used instead of "numbers," and the words, "under the provisions of the said six preceding sections" are substituted for the words, "under the provisions of this act," which appeared in the original statute. These changes apparently have no other object than to adapt the statute to its place in the revision. The effect of it is to adopt the rule of seniority in regard to promotions from one grade to another in the staff corps. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

For other cases, see above, under "Constitutionality of amended section 1480."

Corps of Civil Engineers.—(Civil engineers are plainly included among those contemplated by the amended section 1480, as belonging to the "staff corps of the Navy." (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 126.)

Errors in commission.—Where through a clerical error an officer of the Navy was commissioned a passed assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant, instead of with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), he is only entitled to the pay of the lesser grade. (11 Comp. Dec., 43. See also note to sec. 1474, R. S., and see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3, under "II. Duty to commission officers.")

Sec. 1481. [When retired for age or length of service.] Officers of the Medical, Pay, and Engineer Corps, chaplains, professors of mathematics, and constructors, who shall have served faithfully for forty-five years, shall, when retired, have the relative rank of commodore; and officers of these several corps who have been or shall be retired at the age of sixty-two years, before having served for forty-five years, but who shall have served faithfully until retired, shall, on the completion of forty years from their entry into the service, have the relative rank of commodore.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 11, v. 16, p. 537.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), which abolished the Engineer Corps (see note to sec. 1390, R. S.); by the same act, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which changed the words "the relative rank of," to read "the rank of"; by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), which changed the retirement age from 62 to 64 years; and by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), which provided that "hereafter the Pay Corps shall be called the Supply Corps."

By act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), it was provided that "hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy, but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), provision was made for retirement of colonels in the Marine Corps with the rank of brigadier general after 45 years' service, or on retirement for age after 40 years' service, or on completion of 40 years from date of entry in the cases of those retired on account of age, in language similar to section 1481. The said enactment of August 29, 1916, was repealed by act of May 22, 1917, section 14 (40 Stat., 87.)

This section was repealed in part by the act of August 5, 1882 [above cited], prohibiting promotions on the retired list. There were three classes of officers to which the act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 537), embodied in section 1481, applied at the time of its enactment: (1) Officers of the several staff corps enumerated "who shall have served faithfully for forty-five years"; (2) officers of the several staff corps retired after attaining the age of 62 years, who had not completed 45 years' service, but who had completed 40 years' service and had served faithfully until retired; and (3) officers of the several staff corps retired from the service after attaining the age of 62 years, who had not served 45 years or 40 years; officers of this last class were entitled to the relative rank of commodore on the completion of 40 years from the date of their entry into the service; the first two classes were entitled to the relative rank of commodore when retired. The Navy Registers from March 3, 1871, to August 5, 1882, show that officers of each of the foregoing classes were advanced to the rank of commodore under section 1481; and that in the cases of officers in class 3, time on the retired list was counted in computing the 40 years' service in order to give them the increased rank (see 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57). However, the act of August 5, 1882, put an end to promotions of officers of class 3, and since that date the Navy Registers do not show that any officers of class 3 have been promoted to the rank of commodore under this section, although the records of the Navy Department show that there have been many applications from such officers for increased rank under said section, which applications have been denied. It is clear that the Navy Department has, since the enactment of August 5, 1882, construed it as prohibiting all promotions on the retired list, including those previously authorized by section 1481, Revised Statutes, and this construction is supported by the Attorney General's opinions with reference to promotions on the retired list under sections 1460 and 1461, Revised Statutes (see 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 498, 501). Accordingly, held, that an officer retired at the age of 62 years, before having served 45 years, but who served faithfully until retired, and who, after retirement, completed 40 years from the date of his entry into the service, is not entitled to be advanced to the rank of commodore on the retired list under section 1481. (File 27231-112, Apr. 1, 1918.)

The act of August 5, 1882, expressly declares in the plainest language that no officer shall be promoted after his retirement, thereby repealing section 1481, to the extent that it conflicts with that section. The act in terms applies to all officers irrespective of the time when they entered the service, and is not limited to those who entered the service subsequent to its passage. (Op. Atty. Gen., Jan. 28, 1921, file 27231-141.6.)

Retirement of officer after 45 years' service.—Under the provisions of section 1481, Revised Statutes, an officer of the Pay Corps [now Supply Corps] who has "served faithfully for forty-five years," may be retired with the rank of commodore. In computing said 45 years' service, an officer in the Navy may count service in the regular Navy, service as a student at the Naval Academy prior to March 4, 1913, and service in the United States Army. (File 27231-141, June 10, 1919. See notes to secs. 1443, 1444, R. S.)

Rank of rear admiral substituted for relative rank of commodore.—By sections 1481 and 1482 the retirement of staff officers is particularly provided for. Under the scheme at that time of relative rank (secs. 1474-1480, inclusive), and the survival then of the office of commodore, long service and faithful service in the staff corps gave the right of retirement with that relative rank. The Navy personnel act (Mar. 3, 1899, 30 Stat., 1006) has now substituted (sec. 7) the rank of rear admiral in such case. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294, 296, citing 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433. See note to sec. 421, R. S., under "VI. Retirement of chiefs of bureaus.")

Retired with rank of commodore in practice.—Under section 1481, Revised Statutes, certain staff officers are retired with the rank of commodore, this being the only case in which any officers are now placed on the retired list with that rank, retirements under section 1473, Revised Statutes, being made in practice with the rank of rear admiral instead of commodore, as was provided therein. (File 3980-1402, Oct. 31, 1917, noted more fully under sec. 1466, R. S., "Grade of commodore abolished on the active list.")

A civilian professor at the Naval Academy was appointed to the corps of professors of mathematics, with the rank of lieutenant, pursuant to a special act of Congress (37 Stat., 906), which provided that such appointee should be an extra number, "not in the line of promotion." Subsequently he was retired with the rank of lieutenant. At the time of his retirement he had completed 45 years' service, including his civilian service which under the special enactment was to be counted "as service in the Navy" for "pay and other purposes." Held, that under section 1481, he was entitled to the rank and pay of commodore on the retired list. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

Retirement with higher rank not a change in grade.—By section 1481, Revised Statutes, officers of the staff of the Navy having the relative rank of captain are retired with the relative rank of commodore, or that of the next higher grade. This is not an advancement in grade. The distinction between rank and grade in both the Army and Navy is so long and so well understood that we can not suppose Congress unmindful of it in this enactment. Section 1481, without any apparent intention to change the actual grade of the officers referred to, uses the language, "shall, when retired, have the relative rank of commodore." Had Congress here intended a change of grade and not of rank merely, it would have used the word "grade" instead of "rank." But Congress said rank and not grade, and this leaves the officers there referred to in the same grade as before, but with the relative rank of the next higher grade. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57.)

The act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), provided an advancement in rank and pay on the retired list for certain officers who served during the civil war, with the proviso that said act should not apply to any officer who had received an advance of "grade" at or since the date of his retirement. Held, that a medical director whose rank on the active list was that of captain, and who was retired under section 1481 with the relative rank of commodore, did not receive an advance of "grade" at or since the date of his retirement; that he is not, by virtue of his relative rank of commodore, an officer above the "grade" of captain; and that he is entitled to the increased pay provided for in the act of 1906. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57.)

For other cases, see note to section 1480, Revised Statutes, under "'Grade,' 'rank,' and 'title,' in staff corps." and references there cited.

Policy of retirement with higher rank.—Section 1481 and other retirement statutes indicate in general the principle that creditable retirement carries an advance in rank and pay (allowing for the difference between the active and inactive status). (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

There is no reason why a retired medical director should not be given a higher rank on the retired list, as a reward for Civil War service, than that which is permitted on the active list. That Congress has in other instances contemplated a similar result is apparent from section 1481, which provides that certain staff officers shall, when retired, have the relative rank of commodore, the highest rank on the active list for the Medical Corps (at that time) being captain. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

Sec. 1482. [Retired for causes incident to service.] Staff-officers, who have been or shall be retired for causes incident to the service before arriving at sixty-two years of age, shall have the same rank on the retired list as pertained to their position on the active list.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 11, v. 16, p. 537.)

See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, concerning the rank and grade of retired officers.

Sec. 1483. [Graduates of Naval Academy.] Graduates of the Naval Academy shall take rank according to their proficiency as shown by their order of merit at the date of graduation.—(23 May, 1872, c. 195, s. 1, v. 17, p. 153.)

See note to section 1521, Revised Statutes, for references to laws concerning commissioning of midshipmen after graduation from the Naval Academy.

"Graduation" defined.—The act of July 16, 1862, section 11 (12 Stat., 585), provided that "the students at the Naval Academy shall be styled cadet-midshipmen until their final graduating examination, when, if successful, they shall be commissioned ensigns, ranking according to merit." The act of July 15, 1870, section 12 (16 Stat., 334), provided that "the students at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be styled cadet-midshipmen * * *. When cadet-midshipmen shall have passed successfully the graduating examination at said academy, they shall receive appointments as midshipmen, ranking according to merit, and may be promoted to the grade of ensign as vacancies in the number allowed by law in that grade may occur." Held, that the words "final graduating examination" in the former statute, and "graduating examination" in the latter, signify that examination which, under the regulations of the Naval Academy, takes place after the prescribed term of sea service which forms a part of the course at the Naval Academy. Although graduation is used in a local and peculiar sense at the Naval Academy, referring to an examination held during and not at the end of the academic course, that is, to an examination which originally was intended to certify that the student might well be "sent to sea," and the examination at the end of the whole course was called the "final examination," so that in the vocabulary at Annapolis the adjectives "final" and "graduating," in connection with "examination" have a technical meaning, the former corresponding with graduating as ordinarily employed at institutions of learning and the latter differing materially from its common acceptance, being no more graduating as usually understood than the diploma then given is a diploma as usually understood, nevertheless the mere fact that the act of 1870 concerned an institution at which graduating has a peculiar meaning does not make it an exception to the rule requiring that word to be taken in its usual meaning. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 637; see also 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

The "final graduating examination" within the meaning of the act of July 16, 1862, was that examination to which the members of the graduating class were subjected after they had performed a term of duty on shipboard, with a view to their becoming practically proficient in the arts of seamanship, naval tactics, gunnery, and navigation. The numbers assigned to them respectively by the examining board as the result of the examination on the subjects indicated, when added to the numbers which had previously been assigned to them on the "graduating merit-roll" of the academy, determined their respective standing as passed midshipmen, the highest number taking precedence. This last examination upon the subjects to which the service of the students on board of ship was especially directed after the completion of the more purely academic studies, was the "final graduating examination" under the system devised by the department. After they had passed this examination they took rank in the Navy conformably to their standing thus ascertained in the academy. Such was the system in operation when the act of 1862 was passed. That act gave distinct legislative sanction to the regulation of the department by which this final graduating examination was appointed. Accordingly, held, that under said act, students or midshipmen at the Naval Academy are not entitled to be commissioned ensigns until they have performed the term of duty on shipboard and passed their final examination on practical navigation and seamanship. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

The construction given to the statute of 1870 by the authorities at the academy has been that midshipmen, although graduates, were nevertheless not entirely emancipated from probationary study, but that after "graduating" they were still, as theretofore, to be students at sea; that while such students at sea a provisional relative rank was assigned them by the statute, but that it was not intended by such legislation to abolish the old discipline by which a final graduating examination was to have effect upon the relative rank which they should bear after emancipation. There is no reason for disturbing this conclusion, by whatever course of argument it may be attempted to be met. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 296, affirming 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 637.)

In 15 Op. Atty., 637, and 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 296, this entire subject is elaborately discussed and clearly and distinctly decided, and it is not compatible with the proper administration of the Department of Justice that a third opinion upon the legal questions involved should be rendered, unless very exceptional circumstances should exist requiring so unusual a course to be pursued. The Attorney General discovers no circumstances which would justify him in considering the question in these opinions, twice considered and twice decided in the same way, as open questions for examination and decision. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 193.)

See note to section 1520, Revised Statutes, as to the "academic course" of midshipmen.

Precedence of graduates commissioned in the line of the Navy and in the Marine Corps.—It is very clear that officers of the Marine Corps and officers of the Navy take precedence, when of the same rank, according to date of commission. (See sec. 1603 and note to sec. 1466, R. S.) But the question is, What rule should be applied to determine the precedence of officers of the Marine Corps and officers of the Navy of the same rank, when their dates of commission are also the same? By section 1219, Revised Statutes, relating to the Army, and article R 1010 (2), Navy Regulations, 1913, previous commissioned service must be taken into account under such circumstances. This does not cover the case where date of commission is the same and neither party has had prior commissioned service. By a regulation of the Army (Art. 11, Army Regs., 1913), "when periods of service are equal, precedence will, except when fixed by order of merit on examination, be determined, first, by rank in service when appointed; second, by former rank in the Army or Marine Corps; third, by lot." There is no similar regulation with reference to the Navy: Suggested, that the precedence of ensigns and second lieutenants who are graduates of the Naval Academy be fixed by order of merit on final examination at the Academy. (File 11130-27, Aug. 26, 1915.)

The Attorney General has held that "there is no law making any distinction as to relative rank and precedence between the officers of the Marine Corps who are, and those who are not, graduates of the United States Naval Academy, either as respects themselves, or officers of the line of the Navy." (See 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517.) However, there is no statute which prevents the adoption of a rule that officers of the Navy and Marine Corps commissioned from graduates of the Naval Academy on the same date shall take precedence according to their order of merit on final examination at the academy. Indeed, so far as the statutes go they indicate that this is the rule which should be applied. Thus, section 1483 provides that "graduates of the Naval Academy shall take rank according to their proficiency as shown by their order of merit at the date of graduation." Again, the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), authorized the appointment of graduates of the Naval Academy "to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps," with the express provision that such appointments were to be made "in the order of merit, as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy." This was followed by the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878), which contained other provisions for appointments from graduates of the Naval Academy to the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and the Marine Corps, with the proviso: "Such appointments to be made from the final graduates of the year, in the order of merit as determined by the Academic Board of the Naval Academy." Also, the act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124), provided for appointments of graduates of the academy to the grades of ensign and assistant engineer in the Navy, with the proviso that they should take rank "among themselves according to merit as determined by the academic board." It would thus seem entirely proper to adopt the proposed rule fixing the precedence of second lieutenants and ensigns according to their order of merit at final graduation from the academy. (File 11130-27, Aug. 26, 1915.)

Graduation temporarily delayed.—When the date of final graduation arrives the graduating midshipmen may be scattered in various parts of the world where they happen to be on the date of the expiration of the two years' sea service period. It may happen that there is a delay in the receipt of their cruise reports, or that additional cruise reports are called for, or that there is a failure in the physical examination and a reexamination had upon the recommendation of the academic board at a later date to determine the permanency of the physical disability, or that there is a failure in some subject of professional examination and a reexamination ordered upon the recommendation of the board. When the midshipman, aside from the defect thus occasioned, is entitled to be graduated with his class, upon the curing or overcoming of such defect he becomes entitled to the title of graduate from the date of "final graduation" as fixed by the statute, that is, at the end of the six years' course. In this case the midshipman graduated from the four years' course at the Academy with his class on June 6, 1907; his two years' sea service from such date expired on June 5, 1909; his title as a graduated midshipman dates from June 6, 1909. (17 Comp. Dec., 298.)

Rule for determining date of precedence.—A rule that in each class of graduates from the Naval Academy the “date of precedence” of members of such class shall be determined by ascertaining the member having the earliest date of admission to the Academy and imputing that date of admission to every other member who stands above him in the class; and then taking the member below him who has the next earliest date of admission and imputing that date to all who stand above him but below the first date, and so on down in that order, but preserving to the members of each date their relative class standing in the order of merit, is in conflict with the act approved August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 284). (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 46; compare file 11130-2, Aug. 10, 1908, 11130-2/B, July 31, 1909, 11130-2/B&C, Jan. 5, 1910.)

When midshipmen enter the Naval Academy there is no means of determining their relative position other than by their respective dates of entry. At the termination of six years their relative position is fixed by their order of merit, among themselves, and those members who entered at later dates may be placed by such order of merit above their fellows who entered earlier. By this operation they have been advanced on the Navy Register over classmates who entered the Academy at earlier dates. A constructive length of service is necessary to be attributed to officers so advanced, and they are correctly given the same date of precedence as that of the officer standing below them who entered on the earliest date. (File 11130-2, Aug. 10, 1908, citing 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 58.)

By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891), it was provided that “hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or that of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy, or to the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps.” See also note to section 1486, Revised Statutes.

Importance of questions involving precedence.—Cases are of more than usual interest and importance which involve questions of rank and precedence amongst members of a profession in which rank and precedence form high motives to heroism and self-devotion. The country calculates upon the existence and force of these motives. They are recognized and fostered both by the law and by public opinion. Therefore it is that public action tending to disappoint these motives, and consequently to impair their effect in general, must be treated as of universal concern; and any action duly arraigned upon such account must be subjected to more than ordinary scrutiny. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 637.)

Sec. 1484. [Engineers graduated at Naval Academy. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

“Sec. 1484. Engineer officers graduated at the Naval Academy shall take precedence with all other officers with whom they have relative rank, according to the actual length of service in the Navy.” (3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, s. 1, v. 17, p. 555.)

It was superseded by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), which provided in part “that hereafter there shall be no appointments of cadet-midshipmen or cadet-engineers at the Naval Academy, but in lieu thereof naval cadets shall be appointed from each congressional district and at large, as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen, and all the undergraduates at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be designated and called ‘naval cadets;’ and from those who successfully complete the six years’ course appointments shall hereafter be made as it is necessary to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps: * * * such appointments to be made from the graduates of the year, at the conclusion of their six years’ course, in the order of merit, as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy * * *.” Prior to this act of August 5, 1882, the course of “cadet engineers” was four years (sec. 1524, R. S.) and cadet engineers graduated from the Naval Academy were appointed as assistant engineers (sec. 1394, R. S.); while the course of other students at the Naval Academy was six years (sec. 1520, R. S.), and section 1484 was intended to prevent cadet engineers when commissioned at the end of their four years’ course from gaining precedence over other students at the academy not commissioned until the end of their six years’ course (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 336, noted under sec. 1486, R. S.). The provisions of section 1484 were superseded and rendered obsolete by the act of August 5, 1882, which made the course for all students at the Naval Academy six years and provided that they should be commissioned “in the order of merit, as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy.”

Subsequent laws relating to the appointment of engineer officers from graduates of the Naval Academy were enacted on March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878), and July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124), noted under section 1521, Revised Statutes. The act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), abolished the Engineer Corps, while the appointment and assignment of line officers for engineering duty only was authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580). See note to section 1390, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1485. [Precedence by length of service.] The officers of the staff corps of the Navy shall take precedence in their several corps, and in their several grades, and with officers of the line with whom they hold relative rank according to length of service in the Navy.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 10, v. 16, p. 537.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), which provided that officers who enter the Navy "after the passage of this act" shall take precedence when of the same grade according to their respective dates of commission in that grade; and by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), which provided "that officers shall take rank in each staff corps according to the dates of commission in the several grades, excepting in cases where they have gained or lost numbers."

"Relative" rank was abolished and actual rank substituted therefor by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006).

Section 1485 modified by subsequent legislation.—The act of August 29, 1916 (cited above), superseded and repealed the following words in section 1485: "The officers of the staff corps of the Navy shall take precedence in their several corps, and in their several grades, * * * according to length of service in the Navy." (File 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

Section 1485 was modified by section 1486, as amended by act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat., 510), relating to constructive service to be credited to staff officers for purposes of precedence, and was superseded with reference to the younger officers of the Navy by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), providing that all officers who enter the Navy after said act of March 4, 1913, "shall take precedence when of the same grade according to their respective dates of commission in that grade." (File 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.) Under this amendment of March 4, 1913, all officers thereafter commissioned, including midshipmen who were under instruction on March 4, 1913, should take precedence with other officers of the same rank "according to their respective dates of commission." (File 11130-37, Jan. 19, 1917.)

When of the same grade, line officers of the Navy take precedence with each other according to date of commission, officers of the Marine Corps take precedence with each other according to date of commission, and officers of the Army take precedence with each other according to date of commission. Officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, of corresponding rank, take precedence with each other according to date of commission. The date-of-commission rule is the unwritten law of the Army and Navy (citing 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517; see also 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 16). This unwritten law was changed by section 1485 with reference to staff officers of the Navy, whose precedence as between themselves was by that section made to depend upon length of service, and based upon this latter rule for determining precedence of staff officers with each other, and evidently recognizing the impracticability of having a different rule applied to determine their precedence with officers of the line, Congress by the same section made the length-of-service rule applicable in determining the precedence of staff officers with the officers of the line. By act of August 29, 1916, Congress reverted to the general and established date-of-commission rule as applicable to the precedence of staff officers with each other. As a result, staff officers now take precedence in each rank according to date of commission, the same as line officers take precedence in each rank according to date of commission, and the same as officers of the Army and Marine Corps take precedence with each other and with all officers of the Navy according to date of commission. (File 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

The act of August 29, 1916, having destroyed the very foundation upon which the length-of-service rule was made applicable as between officers of the staff and officers of the line, the retention of that rule would be impossible of enforcement as it would mean two inconsistent rules for determining the precedence of staff officers as between themselves and with officers of the line. (File 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

Section 1485, Revised Statutes, in so far as it provided that officers of the staff corps should take precedence with officers of the line and other staff corps by length of service is absolutely and irreconcilably repugnant to the provision in the act of August 29, 1916, that officers shall take precedence in each staff corps according to date of commission; both laws can not stand; if staff officers are to take precedence with each other in the same corps according to date of commission they can not take precedence with the line and other staff corps according to length of service; if on the other hand the length-of-service rule is to be retained and applied in determining the precedence of staff officers with officers of the line and other staff corps, then the date-of-commission rule for determining precedence of officers in each staff corps must give way and the act of August 29, 1916, is rendered nugatory. Where it is impossible to harmonize the provisions of two statutes, the rule is settled that the later statute operates of necessity as an implied repeal of the earlier. (File 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919; but see 32 Op. Atty. Gen., 476, noted below.)

Held, that the act of August 29, 1916, repeals by necessary implication section 1485 of the Revised Statutes, and that officers of the staff corps must now take precedence in each staff corps, and with officers of the line and other staff corps, as well as with officers of the Army and Marine Corps, according to date of commission and in no case by length of service. (File 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919; file 11130-63, Sept. 23, 1919; C. M. O. 280, 1919, p. 19; affirmed on reconsideration, file 11130-63:1, Mar. 16, 1920, C. M. O. 74, 1920, p. 16, and file 11130-63:3, Dec. 11, 1920; see also file 11130-67, Apr. 26, 1920; file 11130-63:5, Feb. 14, 1921; file 11130-63:5, Feb. 28, 1921. But see 32 Op. Atty. Gen., 476, noted below.)

The Attorney General having been requested to render an opinion as to the effect of the act of August 29, 1916, upon section 1485, Revised Statutes, held: (1) That since said act of August 29, 1916, staff officers who entered the Navy prior to March 4, 1913, take precedence with officers of other staff corps, as well as with officers of their own corps, according to date of commission; (2) that such staff officers take precedence with officers of the line according to date of commission in cases where they are associated with line officers and it would be impracticable to give them precedence among themselves by date of commission and at the same time to give them precedence with the line officers by length of service; (3) that such staff officers take precedence with officers of the line according to length of service, as provided by section 1485, in cases where they are associated with line officers and it would not be impracticable to give them precedence among themselves by date of commission and with the line officers by length of service. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 476, Mar. 3, 1921; C. M. O. 4, 1921, p. 19.)

The conflict between section 1485, Revised Statutes, and the act of August 29, 1916, was illustrated by the Attorney General as follows: "Suppose Captain A of the Construction outranks Captain B of the same corps by date of commission, Captain B outranks Captain C of the line both by date of commission and by length of service, and Captain C outranks Captain A by length of service. Obviously the order of precedence of these officers can not be determined by applying either or both of the above statutes. Under the act of August 29, 1916, Captain A outranks Captain B, but that act does not define the relative rank of these officers to Captain C; that is done by Revised Statutes, section 1485, according to which Captain B outranks Captain C, who in turn outranks Captain A. But Captain B does not out-rank Captain A, because that is contrary to the express command of the act of August 29, 1916." In the situation thus supposed, it was held by the Attorney General that all three officers would take precedence by date of commission; but that "Revised Statutes section 1485 is repealed only as applied to that situation," that "it does not follow that section 1485 is repealed as to those situations to which it can be applied without coming in conflict with the act of August 29, 1916, as, for instance, between Captains A and C or Captains B and C," notwithstanding that "the result will be that Captain A will outrank Captain C in some circumstances, while in others the order of precedence will be reversed," and that "if there is one rule of precedence for staff officers among themselves and a different one between staff and line officers it may happen that an officer will find that his inferior of yesterday is his superior to-day, and that because of this fact great difficulty will be experienced in administering the laws applicable to the Navy." (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 476, Mar. 3, 1921; compare 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 255, 257, holding in another connection that "to so legislate as to prevent the application of previous legislation is to repeal the previous legislation by implication;" see also South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S., 267.)

For other cases see note to section 1486, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1486. [Length of service, how estimated.] In estimating the length of service for such purpose, the several officers of the staff corps shall, respectively, take precedence in their several grades and with those officers of the line of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank who have been in the naval service six years longer than such officers of said staff corps have been in said service; and officers who have been advanced or lost numbers on the Navy Register shall be considered as having gained or lost length of service accordingly.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 10, v. 16, p. 537.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat., 510), which added thereto the following: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to give to any officer of the staff corps precedence of, or a higher relative rank than that of, another staff officer in the same grade and corps, and whose commission in such grade and corps antedates that of such officer." It was further modified by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which abolished "relative" rank and substituted therefor actual rank. By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), it was provided that "section fourteen hundred and eighty-six of the Revised Statutes shall not apply in the case of officers who enter the Navy after the passage of this Act and all such officers shall take precedence when of the same grade according to their respective dates of commission in that grade." The same act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891), provided that "hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or that of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy, or to the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps."

By act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), it was provided "that all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited, for computing their pay, with five years' service." By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891), it was enacted that said provision in the act of March 3, 1899, "shall not apply to any person entering the Navy from and after the passage of this act."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), it was provided "that officers shall take rank in each staff corps according to the dates of commission in the several grades, excepting in cases where they may have gained or lost numbers."

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), it was provided that "any officer with the permanent rank of rear admiral who has heretofore served a full term and is now serving as chief of any bureau of the Navy Department shall be credited with service for all purposes as provided by section 1486 of the Revised Statutes, and nothing herein contained shall operate to increase the rank or pay of any such officer as now authorized by law."

See note to section 1485 upon question whether that section is repealed by subsequent legislation. See also note below, under "Officers who have been advanced or lost numbers."

Constructive service.—It will be noted that section 1485, Revised Statutes, standing alone, made actual length of service in the Navy the rule of precedence in the cases of staff officers in their several corps and with officers of the line of corresponding rank. By section 1486 this was modified, and provision was made for crediting officers with what is known as "constructive service" in determining their precedence under section 1485. This so-called "constructive service" was credited in two cases, namely, first: Officers upon their original appointment to a staff corps were credited with six years' constructive service so that they would take precedence, in the language of section 1486, "with those officers of the line of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank who have been in the Navy six years longer than such officers of said staff corps have been in said service;" and second: Officers advanced on the Navy Register were credited with constructive service in fulfillment of the requirement in section 1486 that officers so advanced "shall be considered as having gained * * * length of service accordingly." (File 11130-63:5, Feb. 14, 1921.)

Prior to March 4, 1913, the precedence of officers of the Navy was determined as follows: (a) Line officers took precedence in each grade according to dates of commission (sec. 1467, R. S.); (b) staff officers took precedence in each corps and grade according to length of service in the Navy (sec. 1485, R. S.); (c) officers of the line and officers of the staff corps took precedence with each other, first, according to rank (sec. 1489, R. S.), and when of the same rank, according to length of service in the Navy (sec. 1485, R. S.); (d) in determining length of service under (c), officers of the staff corps were given precedence with officers of the line of the same rank who had been in the naval service six years longer than such officers of said staff corps had been in said service; in other words, staff officers were credited with constructive service approximating six years (sec. 1486, R. S.); (e) the constructive service credited to staff officers for purposes of precedence was not to operate to give any officer of the staff corps precedence of another officer in the same grade and corps whose commission in such grade and corps antedated that of such officer (act Mar. 3, 1881, 21 Stat., 510, amending sec. 1486, R. S.). (File 11130-37, Jan. 19, 1917; see also file 11130-63:5, Feb. 14, 1921.)

In determining the precedence of line and staff officers (under (d) above noted), time spent by officers of the line while under instruction as midshipmen was credited to them as service in the Navy. When the midshipman's course of instruction was six years, this had the approximate effect of placing a staff officer, entering the service with the rank of ensign, on an equality for purposes of precedence with line officers commissioned as ensigns at the same time. It occasionally happened that the staff officer was disadvantaged under the practical application of the various provisions under (c), noted above; and when the course at the Naval Academy was reduced to four years, by act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), the staff officer gained an advantage in consequence of his continuing to be credited with constructive service of about six years. However, the general purpose of the legislation prior to March 4, 1913, was to equalize the precedence of line and staff officers commissioned in the Navy with the rank of ensign at approximately the same time. (File 11130-37, Jan. 19, 1917, citing 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 336; see also file 11130-63:5, Feb. 14, 1921.)

A line officer transferred to a staff corps could not under section 1486 as amended be assigned a date of precedence earlier than that of the junior officer in said corps at the time of such transfer. Thus an ensign commissioned as an assistant naval constructor with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), two and one-half years before his former classmates were promoted to the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) in the line, could not retain his original date of precedence where this was earlier than that of an officer previously commissioned in the Construction Corps. (File 11130-28, Feb. 5, 1916, citing file 1667, Apr. 25, 1900.)

In determining the precedence of staff officers with officers of the line, under section 1486, Revised Statutes, line officers who gained numbers as the result of their final graduating examination at the Naval Academy (see sec. 1483, R. S.) were considered to have gained length of service accordingly, and a staff officer could not claim the right to precedence ahead of a line officer so advanced in numbers because of the fact that such line officer's actual date of entry into the service was not six years prior to the date such staff officer was commissioned. (File 11130-2, Aug. 10, 1908.)

The amendment of March 4, 1913, was intended to place commissioned officers of the line and staff on an absolute equality in the future, by abolishing credit for midshipman's service in the one case, and credit for constructive service in the other, and requiring that all officers thereafter entering the Navy should take precedence "according to their respective dates of commission." At the same time Congress did not intend to deprive midshipmen already at the Naval Academy of substantial benefits which were promised them in the matter of pay and retirement when they were appointed; and accordingly, in providing that service at the Naval Academy should not thereafter be credited "for any purpose," it limited the application of this provision to midshipmen thereafter appointed to the Naval Academy. Thus was saved to other midshipmen the longevity credit to which they were entitled under previous laws for pay and retirement. But the act of March 4, 1913, did not preserve to midshipmen then serving the credit to which they were entitled under previous laws for purposes of precedence with officers of the staff. It destroyed the inequality then existing, under which midshipmen were credited with four years' service at the Academy while staff officers were credited with six years' constructive service; but it did not create a new inequality as would be the case if midshipmen then at the Academy were credited with four years' service for precedence, while staff officers appointed from civil life received no credit whatever. (File 11130-37, Jan. 19, 1917.)

Scope of section 1486.—This section has on occasions been regarded as applying only to appointments from civil life. This, however, is in error, the correct statement being that section 1486 applies to all officers who are not graduates of the Naval Academy. (File 11130-22, Nov. 17, 1913.)

A careful reading of section 1486 will disclose that its benefits are not limited to staff officers appointed from civil life, or from the enlisted personnel. On the contrary, it applies to all staff officers however appointed, except in so far as its operation is restricted by section 1483, Revised Statutes, fixing the precedence of graduates of the Naval Academy. Had it been intended to limit the provisions of section 1486 to staff officers appointed from civil life, Congress would doubtless have so stated, as it did in the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), providing that "all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited for computing their pay with five years' constructive service." (File 11130-22, Nov. 17, 1913.)

The department's records disclose that persons commissioned as officers in the staff corps of the Navy, while serving as midshipmen, paymasters' clerks, or enlisted men, were given a date of precedence six years prior to date of commission, or the earliest date that could be assigned without giving them precedence of senior officers in the same corps. (File 11130-22, Nov. 17, 1913.)

Purpose of section 1486.—This provision, which gave the benefit of six years of constructive service in determining the question of precedence among officers, was undoubtedly intended to equalize the officers of the staff with those of the line by provision which would give them, in determining the question of rank, a period which would be supposed ordinarily to answer to the time which was expended by the line officers in their education, and before their proper duties as officers commenced. Were it not for some such provision, the officers of the line would have an advantage over those of the staff in this, that the period of their education would be counted in determining their precedence as the term of their service. As, according to the construction which had been given to the regulations of the Navy, six years were expended by the line officers in their education, it was undoubtedly deemed proper to fix this as the time which should be given to the staff officers, in order to equalize them with the line officers. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 336; see also file 11130-63:5, Feb. 14, 1921.)

At this time certain cadet-engineers were receiving education at the Naval Academy, but then had only a term of education amounting to two years. This term was subsequently increased to four years; and it was, of course, observed that, if the engineer officers graduated at the Naval Academy were entitled to have, in determining the question of rank, the constructive service of six years, they would obtain too great an advantage over the line officers, because the term of their education would be counted as a term of service, while in addition, they would have what may be termed the fictitious or constructive term of service allowed to the officers of the staff corps. The act of March 3, 1873 (sec. 1484, R. S.), therefore, provided that "engineer officers graduated at the Naval Academy shall take precedence with all other officers with whom they have relative rank, according to the actual length of service in the Navy." While, therefore, in the Revised Statutes section 1484 precedes section 1486, it is in fact a limitation or exception to section 1486; and when thus read together it will be seen that all staff officers are entitled to the benefit of the six years' term of service, with the exception of those engineer officers who graduate at the Naval Academy. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 336; see also 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 46.)

Changes in dates of precedence.—It has heretofore been held by the department that no change in dates of precedence should be made except in cases where it is necessary so to do for the purpose of rectifying palpable errors (citing indorsement Sec. Nav. to Bu. Nav., file 3126-97); it has also been held that the statutes and regulations governing precedence having once been determined in any particular case, considerations of repose intervene and become important; that disturbance of the Navy lists is prejudicial to the service, and should not be sanctioned where doubt exists respecting the appropriate action, and where a considerable length of time has elapsed. (File 11130-22, Nov. 17, 1913, citing cases.)

Where only a short time has elapsed, and there are exceptional circumstances, the date of precedence assigned an officer of the Pay Corps should be corrected and the proper date of precedence assigned him, thereby avoiding great injustice which would otherwise result to such officer. (File 11130-22, Nov. 17, 1913.)

Effect of officer's precedence upon promotion.—The actual rank of all officers of the Navy has been fixed by section 1466, Revised Statutes. But as there are in the staff corps several officers of the same grade and rank, it was necessary that their relative rank as between themselves and officers of the same rank in the line be fixed and determined. This is done by sections 1485 and 1486, and is determined not by relative dates of commission but by length of service in the Navy. These sections do not attempt to fix the actual rank which staff officers hold in the Navy, or to change that rank as fixed by section 1466, but merely define the relative rank which these officers have as between themselves and with officers of the same rank in the line. That is, officers of the same rank shall, as between themselves, take precedence according to their length of service. Thus, a captain in a staff corps will take precedence of a captain in the same or a different corps, or a captain in the line whose service in either case has been for a shorter time than his. But in estimating his length of service the staff officer is, under section 1486, credited with six years more of service than the line officers, this giving the staff officer precedence of line officers of the same rank but who have not served six years more than he; while as between staff officers actual length of service determines the order of precedence. But there is nothing in these sections which gives to length of service, either actual or comparative, the effect of promoting an officer to a higher actual rank. Promotions in rank are regulated by different provisions. They merely fix the relative rank or precedence between officers of the same rank and who, but for this, would have been equal in rank and precedence. And the use of the word "precedence" instead of "rank" is also significant as showing that this was the purpose of the section. Accordingly, held that the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), providing for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy, authorizes their retirement with the rank of the next higher grade, and where there are more ranks than one in the next higher grade, as in the staff corps of the Navy, the officer is entitled on the retired list to the rank next above that held by him at the time of retirement, and is not entitled on the retired list to a rank more than one step above that held at retirement because of length of service in the Navy; and that sections 1485 and 1486 have nothing whatever to do with determining whether the advancement of such officer should be that of one rank or more than one; nor do those sections interfere with or affect the usual order of promotion of such officers in the Navy. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 496.)

In the absence of some specific provision of law the distribution of paymasters between the ranks allowed in said grade is primarily within the discretion of the Executive. Sections 1485 and 1486, Revised Statutes, provide for establishing the precedence of officers of the staff corps between officers of the same corps, officers of the different staff corps, and officers of the same rank in the line of the Navy. It has been the practice of the Navy Department for many years to use the statutes to fix the date on which staff officers shall attain a higher rank. The staff officer takes precedence next below a certain line officer of the same credited service. This line officer is known in the service as the staff officer's "running mate" and by the practice referred to, when the "running mate" is regularly promoted, or fails in examination, the staff officer is advanced to the higher rank. The Executive having the discretion as to the changing of ranks in the grade of paymaster may, of course, act directly in each case and appoint or notify the officer that he is appointed or advanced on the date of the notification or on a date subsequent thereto. He may also make regulations providing for the ascertainment of the date upon which the staff officer is entitled to advancement. He has not made such regulations; but by a practice which is said to have existed for 60 years has established the rule above stated by which to determine the date upon which the officer shall be advanced. Such long-established practice is the equivalent of a regulation. (16 Comp. Dec., 662.) NOTE.—At the time this decision was rendered the Navy Regulations (1913) provided (art. R 1005) that "civil engineers shall be advanced in rank to the two grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant on the same date and with the line officers with whom they take precedence, in the same manner as officers of the other staff corps of the Navy." It has since been provided by law that "officers of the lower grades of the Medical Corps, Pay Corps (now Supply Corps), Construction Corps, and Corps of Civil Engineers shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law" (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 576), and that the advancement of staff officers of the Navy to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral shall be by selection (act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718).

Section 1485 fixes precedence of officers of the staff corps without affecting their rank or office. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 80.)

"Officers who have been advanced or lost numbers."—A line officer promoted by selection to the next higher grade is to be regarded as having been advanced in numbers on the Navy Register and gained length of service accordingly; he should be credited with a constructive length of service necessary and sufficient to place him above the officers over whom he was thus advanced. The officers over whom he was advanced are not to be regarded as having lost numbers and length of service. The promotion by selection is to be accomplished, not by inflicting any injury upon officers who had been less fortunate, perhaps, in their opportunities; but by conferring promotion upon the officer advanced. The proceeding is one of advancement strictly, and in no case operates to degrade any officer or deprive him of anything which he had already obtained by length of service. Cases might be supposed in which it might do him incidental injury by placing above him an officer who stood below him, but his own position with reference to all grades of the Navy would be that which it originally was. Therefore in regulating the relative rank of the staff and the line, under section 1486, Revised Statutes, no officer of the line would be found to have lost anything of his actual length of service. Quære: Whether the phrase, "officers who have been advanced or lost numbers on the Navy Register shall be considered as having gained or lost length of service accordingly," is intended to use the words "gained" and "lost" as terms which are the converse of each other and refers to such incidental loss as occurs by change in relative position between officers, or whether the expression, "lost length of service," is to be considered as referring to those officers who may have been degraded, as by sentence of court-martial? (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 56.)

In 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 56 (noted above), the case was presented of a line officer, Francis M.

Ramsay, who entered the service on October 5, 1850, and who, under the act of July 25, 1866 (14 Stat., 222), was promoted by selection and thereby advanced on the Navy Register next above a line officer, Richard L. Law, who entered the service February 17, 1841. The Attorney General held that Ramsay should, under section 1486, "be considered as having gained length of service according to his promotion." Following this opinion there was published in the Navy Register of 1882, for the first time, a precedence list of officers of the Navy, and reference to this list (p. 167) shows that Capt. Ramsay was given, pursuant to the Attorney General's opinion, a date of precedence as February 17, 1841, being the same date as that held by Capt. Law, next above whom Ramsay was so advanced. Thus Ramsay was credited with constructive service of more than nine years for purposes of precedence. This opinion of the Attorney General continued to be followed by the Navy Department until a comparatively recent date in the publication of precedence tables in the annual Navy Register. (File 11130-63:5, Feb. 14, 1921, citing precedents.)

The first departure from the rule required by the Attorney General's opinion (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 56) appears to have occurred in certain cases of staff officers who were advanced to the rank of rear admiral in 1910, without any change in their dates of precedence. No explanation of this departure is forthcoming, other than that the Attorney General's opinion and the mandatory provision of section 1486 must have been overlooked or disregarded without authority of law. Similarly, in the cases of certain officers, line and staff, who have been advanced to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral by selection in accordance with the acts of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), and July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), such advancement has not been accompanied by any change in their dates of precedence as required by the Attorney General's opinion and section 1486. (File 11130-63:5, Feb. 14, 1921.)

Held, that officers of the line and staff of the Navy, who entered the Navy prior to March 4, 1913, and who have been advanced on the Navy Register, should be credited, for purposes of precedence, in accordance with section 1486, with "constructive service" sufficient to place them ahead of all others, line and staff, over whom they have been so advanced. This applies as much where officers have been advanced by selection over officers in their own corps as in any other case. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 476, Mar. 3, 1921, following 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 56.)

The advancement of an officer in numbers pursuant to a special act of Congress (Sept. 30, 1890, 26 Stat., 552, case of Chief Engineer George Wallace Melville), operates to make him gain length of service under section 1486, Revised Statutes, but this provision of that section has reference only to the question of rank and precedence mentioned in section 1485, and does not operate to increase his length of service for purposes of pay. The act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), providing that officers shall be credited with "the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the Regular or Volunteer Army or Navy, or both," relates to crediting actual service which is distinct from constructive service which an officer gains under section 1486 by advance in numbers. (5 Comp. Dec., 756.)

Where a warrant officer is sentenced by court-martial to loss of numbers, the effect of which is to place him below an officer of a later date of appointment, he is to be regarded as having lost length of service accordingly, and is not entitled to promotion under the act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 346), which authorizes the promotion of warrant officers "after six years from date of warrant," until the officer next above him in the list has become due for promotion. (File 17789-20, Dec. 18, 1913; approved by President, Feb. 18, 1914.)

Miscellaneous.—A Navy regulation providing that, "in all cases where commissioned officers of the different corps have the same date of precedence, they shall take rank as follows: 1. Line officers. 2. Medical officers. 3. Pay officers. 4. Engineer officers," is within the authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy by Revised Statutes 1547. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 46.)

Quære: Whether the question could be presented in any form for judicial determination, whether the practice of the Navy Department with regard to the rank and precedence of officers conforms to section 1485 of the Revised Statutes? (U. S. v. Alger, 152 U. S., 384, 397.)

Sec. 1487. [Quarters.] No staff officer shall, in virtue of his relative rank or precedence, have any additional right to quarters.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 10, v. 16, p. 537.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which abolished "relative" rank and substituted actual rank therefor.

Allowances for officers of the Army are made applicable to officers of the Navy by act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), which provided that commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps shall receive the same allowances, except forage, as may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army. By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), it was provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service." However, the same act made an exception in the cases of chaplains, by providing that "the pay and allowances of chaplains in the Navy shall in no case exceed that provided for lieutenant commanders." This exception was removed by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), which reenacted the provision in the act of May 13, 1908, without such exception. The corresponding ranks of officers of the Army and officers of the Navy are prescribed by section 1466, Revised Statutes. The designation of the "Pay Corps" was changed to "Supply, Corps" by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147).

"During the war, in such cases as may be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, this appropriation shall be available for the hire of quarters for officers attached to submarines when they are required to be on shore and Government quarters are not available." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 728, proviso to appropriation for "Pay of the Navy," which appropriation also makes provision "for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable.")

"During the present emergency every commissioned officer of the Army of the United States on duty in the field, or on active duty without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, who maintains a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such place of abode, without regard to personal quarters furnished him elsewhere, the number of rooms prescribed by the Act of March second, nineteen hundred and seven (Thirty-fourth Statutes, page eleven hundred and sixty-nine), to be occupied by, and only so long as occupied by, said wife, child, or dependent parent; and in case such quarters are not available every such commissioned officer shall be paid commutation thereof and commutation for heat and light at the rate authorized by law in cases where public quarters are not available; but nothing in this Act shall be so construed as to reduce the allowances now authorized by law for any person in the Army." (Act Apr. 16, 1918, 40 Stat., 530.) By naval appropriation act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), it was provided that said act of April 16, 1918, "granting under certain conditions, to every commissioned officer of the Army the right to quarters in kind for their dependents or the authorized commutation therefor, including the allowances for heat and light, shall hereafter be construed to apply to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps only during the period of the war and in no event beyond October 1, 1919." Said enactment of July 11, 1919, was expressly repealed by Joint Resolution of December 24, 1919 (41 Stat., 384), which further provided that officers of the Navy and Marine Corps "shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits under said act of April 16, 1918 (Public, numbered 129), from and after October 1, 1919, and during the present emergency." By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), said allowances under the Act of April 16, 1918, were continued until June 30, 1922.

"Hereafter the Secretary of the Navy may determine where and when there are no public quarters available for persons in the Navy and Marine Corps, or serving therewith, within the meaning of any acts or parts of acts relating to the assignment of quarters or commutation therefor." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718.)

"Hereafter officers temporarily absent on duty in the field shall not lose their right to quarters or commutation thereof at their permanent station while so temporarily absent." (Act Feb. 27, 1893, 27 Stat., 480.)

Marine officers are entitled to receive the same allowances as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of like grades in the infantry of the Army. (Sec. 1612, R. S.)

Special allowances for maintenance to officers serving under unusual conditions may be paid from the appropriation "Pay, Miscellaneous." (Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 813.)

The allowance for quarters to officers of the Army is prescribed by act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1168, 1169), amending act of June 17, 1878, section 9 (20 Stat., 151), to read as follows: "That at all posts and stations where there are public quarters belonging to the United States officers may be furnished with quarters in kind in such public quarters, and not elsewhere, by the Quartermaster's Department, assigning to the officers of each grade, respectively, such number of rooms as is stated in the following table, namely: Second lieutenants, two rooms; first lieutenants, three rooms; captains, four rooms; majors, five rooms; lieutenant colonels, six rooms; colonels, seven rooms; brigadier generals, eight rooms; major generals, nine rooms; lieutenant general, ten rooms: Provided further, That at places where there are no public quarters commutation therefor may be paid by the Pay Department to the officer entitled to the same at a rate not exceeding twelve dollars per month per room."

The same act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1167), also provided "that hereafter the heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the United States under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe."

By act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat., 1069), it was provided "that hereafter, at places where there are no public quarters available, commutation for the authorized allowance therefor shall be paid to commissioned officers, acting dental surgeons, veterinarians, members of the Nurse Corps, and pay clerks at the rate of $12 per room per month." (As to the corresponding ranks between officers of the Army and officers of the Navy, see sec. 1466, R. S.)

Transportation to be furnished families of officers ordered to make a permanent change of station. (Act May 18, 1920, sec. 12, 41 Stat., 604.)

Warrant officers and mates "shall hereafter receive the same commutation for quarters as second lieutenants of the Marine Corps" (act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1107); and "shall receive the same allowances of heat and light as are now or may hereafter be allowed an ensign, United States Navy." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 578.)

Army laws fixing the allowance for quarters are applicable to the Navy under the act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), and May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127, 128), as amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581). (24 Comp. Dec., 610.)

Under the law all commissioned officers of the Navy are now entitled to the same allowances, except forage, as provided by law for commissioned officers of the Army under corresponding conditions. (File 26255-471:2, Apr. 13, 1918; see also 15 Comp. Dec., 809, 812, citing 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 261; and see 150 S. & A. Memo., 2753.)

Commutation of quarters authorized prior to specific legislation.—In Whittlesey v. United States (5 Ct. Cls., 99), it was held that the right of an officer of the Army to commutation of fuel and quarters did not, at that time, rest upon any specific legislation; that it sprang out of the general authority of the War Department, and had been indirectly sanctioned by Congress from the origin of the Government. In United States v. Philbrick (120 U. S., 52), it was held that an order of the Secretary of the Navy, issued May 23, 1866 (G. O. No. 75), allowing officers who were not provided with quarters on shore stations a sum equal to one-third of their pay in lieu of all allowances except for mileage or traveling expenses under orders, was a valid order under the law as it then stood. (See also Allen v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 300.)

Authority for quarters does not imply authorization for quarters.—Commutation for quarters, fuel, and light not furnished to an officer or enlisted man can not be paid unless authorized by some statute or regulation—that is, the right to commutation does not arise automatically but must be based upon some specific provision of law. Accordingly, where an enlisted man was entitled by Army Regulations to quarters at the rate of one room, and by statute was entitled to heat and light for the same, and was not furnished the quarters or heat and light, he is not entitled to commutation in the absence of any statute or authorized regulation providing for the payment of such commutation. (Smith v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 313, holding that the second leader of the Marine band, who under statutes then in force was entitled to the pay and allowances of a sergeant major, was not entitled to commutation for quarters as there was no law or regulation authorizing such commutation in the case of a sergeant major.)

Assignment of quarters.—Where there are different classes of public officers entitled to quarters in kind or commutation thereof, the Secretary of the Navy must be the judge of how the interest of the Government may best be served in assigning the available quarters. If civilian professors at the Naval Academy are allowed quarters in kind or commutation thereof as part of their compensation fixed by the Secretary of the Navy, they would have an equal right thereto with commissioned officers entitled to quarters in kind or commutation thereof; and the Secretary of the Navy may exercise his discretion in determining whether it is to the best interest of the Government to assign the available quarters at the Naval Academy to the civilian professors or to the commissioned officers. (File 11168-4, Feb. 1, 1917.)

The question of assignment of quarters is an administrative one, under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, whose orders, regulations, and decisions thereon are binding upon all persons in the naval service; and is not a question under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Navy is prepared to safeguard to the fullest extent the interests of officers who make payments in accordance with any regulation or order issued by him. (File 26254-2134, Dec. 19, 1916.)

Quarters permanently assigned are not available for temporary assignment during periods that they become vacant in consequence of changes of stations, etc., and no quarters assigned any officer are available for reassignment during the temporary absence of the occupants on duty for which the law permits them to be absent without reduction of pay and allowances. (File 26254-2134, Dec. 19, 1916; see also file 26254-2120:1, Nov. 15, 1916. See below under "Officer temporarily absent from station.")

The commandant of a navy yard is not authorized to assign to other than Marine officers quarters at the navy yard under his command which were constructed for the use of Marine officers attached to said yard, even though such quarters may be temporarily unoccupied by Marine officers, in the absence of an order by the Secretary of the Navy permitting the transfer of such quarters for the use of officers of the Navy. In the absence of such order, officers of the Navy for whom no quarters are available are entitled to commutation of quarters. (File 26254-2134, Dec. 19, 1916.)

Where quarters at a navy yard are permanently assigned for the use of officers detailed to specified positions at said yard, and such quarters are temporarily vacant by reason of the change of station of said occupants or other similar exigency of the service, such temporarily vacant quarters should not be assigned to officers reporting for duty in the interim, unless such officers occupy positions at the navy yard which would entitle them to such quarters permanently. (File 2743-247, Bu. Nav., 26254-1418, Sec. Nav., Feb. 19, 1914; see also file 26254-2134, Dec. 19, 1916.)

Hire of quarters.—The amount to be paid for hire of quarters for officers has no relation whatever to the amount of commutation of quarters to which they may be entitled under certain circumstances. In hiring quarters the officer representing the Government is supposed to procure necessary, reasonable, and assuitable quarters as may be obtained, and on the best terms possible, and when thus procured they are to be assigned to the officers entitled to the same in the same manner as quarters owned by the Government. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 2, 1917, 192 S. & A. Memo., 4155. NOTE.—The specific question decided in this case was overruled by Comp. Dec., Apr. 12, 1917, file 26254-2131:7, noted below.)

The Secretary of the Navy authorized the commandant of the navy yard, Mare Island, to hire quarters for the officers of the third submarine division, temporarily, while the vessels of that division were undergoing repairs which made them uninhabitable, there being no tender on which they could be quartered and no quarters available at the yard. The commandant directed the yard pay officer to arrange for the hire of the quarters required, and to pay for them from the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," stating that the payment in no case should exceed the amount that each officer would be allowed as commutation of quarters according to his rank and for the time that quarters should be occupied. The quarters were hired by the officers concerned, and in no case did the cost thereof exceed the allowance for the number of rooms to which their respective ranks entitled them, nor were the prices paid in excess of those usually charged the general public for temporary occupancy. The amounts so paid for said quarters were disallowed by the Comptroller on the ground that the officers occupying the quarters, being directly and personally interested, could not properly represent the Government but only themselves. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 2, 1917, file 26254-2131:6, 192 S. & A. Memo., 4155.) On reconsideration, the Comptroller allowed the payments for hire of quarters in these cases, but stated: "It is expected that in future when it becomes necessary to hire quarters for officers the Government will be represented in making the contract for hire by some properly designated official other than the officer or officers who are to occupy the hired quarters." (Comp. Dec., Apr. 12, 1917, file 26254-2131:7.)

The Army Regulations provide for the renting of quarters where the public buildings are inadequate, but the authority to rent is reserved expressly to the Secretary of War and can not be exercised without his approval. Under the Army Regulations the practice has been for the proper officers to obtain the necessary authority to hire quarters as prescribed in the Regulations, and deal directly with the landlord, making disbursements directly to him through the Department of War, thus precluding the making of individual contracts of rental for quarters. There is no regulation permitting individual discretion or opinion as to the inadequacy of Army quarters. Accordingly, where an officer has quarters assigned him which are inadequate for himself and wife, and rents rooms outside his station without approval of the Secretary of War, he can not recover commutation or hire of quarters. (Moses v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 27.)

There is no authority of law for the hire of quarters on shore for naval officers on sea duty, the law presuming that officers on sea duty shall have quarters on board the vessel on which they are serving. This applies in the case of officers ordered to duty on board a submarine tender, where there are no public quarters available for such officers either on board said vessel or on shore. (23 Comp. Dec., 109. But see act July 1, 1918, quoted above.)

The annual naval appropriation act provides for "hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable." (See Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 824.)

"No public quarters" defined.—Under the act of June 18, 1878, section 9, providing with reference to the Army "that at places where there are no public quarters, commutation therefor may be paid by the Pay Department to the officer entitled to the same," etc., held that officers are entitled to commutation of quarters at places where the public quarters are "insufficient" in quantity, "for at such stations, in regard to all officers necessarily excluded from public quarters, there are, within the meaning of the proviso, 'no public quarters.'" (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 611.)

Under the law commissioned officers of the Navy are entitled to commutation of quarters "at places where there are no public quarters available" (act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1069); and the question whether or not there are "public quarters available," is to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy in proper cases. (File 28479-141, Nov. 15, 1915; see act July 1, 1918, quoted above.)

Public quarters are any suitable quarters provided by the Government.—Any suitable quarters provided by the Government for the use of an officer answers the requirement for "public quarters," though not expressly built for Army officers and an officer assigned to duty as an Indian agent and furnished a suitable building on the reservation for his quarters, without charge, is not entitled to receive commutation for quarters. (U. S. v. Dempsey, 104 Fed. Rep., 197.)

Officer occupying tent.—An officer detached from duty at a station where he was in receipt of commutation of quarters and ordered to duty with the Navy rifle team and furnished a tent for quarters while on such duty, is not entitled to commutation of quarters. The fact that he was put to the expense of providing quarters elsewhere for his family does not affect his right to quarters or commutation therefor while on duty with the Navy rifle team. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 15, 1914, 162 S. & A. Memo., 3336.)

Officer occupying room as guest.—Where an officer of the Medical Corps of the Navy requests to have quarters assigned him at his station, but there are no quarters that can be assigned, and he occupies a room in the Marine Barracks as a guest, with the understanding that he will vacate it whenever required to do so, he can not recover commutation for quarters. Commutation is a form of reimbursement; where there was no expense for quarters, as in this case (the occupied quarters being a part of the naval establishment of the United States), there can be no reimbursement in fact and therefore none allowed by law. If the officer had occupied quarters not belonging to the United States and was otherwise entitled to quarters, the fact that he was not charged for the use of the quarters would not be material and would not affect the right and obligation of the parties, but when the quarters occupied belonged to the United States, there is no legal right of recovery. (Odell v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 194.)

Officer assigned less than full number of rooms to which entitled.—An officer on duty at a station where public quarters are available is not entitled to commutation of quarters, even though he can not be assigned the full number of rooms to which his rank entitles him. (Comp. Dec., Oct. 31, 1913, 153 S. & A. Memo., 2854. See also file 9886-16, Oct. 15, 1908, 20032-4, Nov. 27, 1908, and 28479-141, Nov. 15, 1915.)

A naval officer whose rank entitles him to four rooms, but who had but one room furnished him for quarters, because there were no other public quarters available at his station, can not be allowed commutation for quarters. The theory of commutation is compensation or reimbursement for something paid out. In this case the officer was relieved from expense and did not become entitled to recover the value of quarters not paid for by him. (Irwin v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 87, 103.)

The quarters fitted up at the aeronautic station, Pensacola, Fla., for officers attending the flying school were intended to accommodate one officer in each room. It is desirable to quarter as many officers at the station as possible in order that they may be available at all times for flying. The hours of flying must conform to the weather conditions, especially for student aviators. There are not sufficient quarters available to assign each officer at the station the number of rooms authorized for his rank. Under these circumstances, an officer whose rank entitles him to four rooms, and who has been assigned one room at said station, is not entitled to the assignment of three additional rooms or to commutation of quarters if the Secretary of the Navy decides that he should be quartered at the station and that there are quarters available for him at said station. (File 28479-141, Nov. 15, 1915.)

In the assignment of quarters to officers at the Naval Academy the determining factor should be whether it is necessary for the proper performance of the officer's duties that he reside inside the academy limits. If in the judgment of the superintendent this is necessary the officer should be assigned such quarters as may be available; if not necessary and there are no quarters available commensurate with his rank, the officer may be permitted to reside outside the grounds and he will be entitled to commutation of quarters upon certificate of the superintendent that there were no quarters available during the period. (File 9886-18, Dec. 11, 1908.)

Officer attached to vessel of the Navy.—

An officer serving on board a vessel of the Navy, under orders, can not acquire any right to commutation of quarters for the reason that Congress has not attached any such allowance to his office for service at sea on board of a vessel. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 28, 1917, 198 S. & A. Memo., 4357.)

When an officer of the Navy is on receiving-ship duty, and the ship acting as receiving ship is detached from such duty, no other ship being designated in its place, if the situation is to be permanent in character, the officer is in a shore-duty status and becomes entitled, in the event that quarters in kind are not furnished him, to commutation of quarters; but if such situation is only temporary, the officer remains in a sea-duty status and is not entitled to commutation of quarters but must provide his own quarters. (Comp. Dec., July 3, 1917, 197 S. & A. Memo., 4300.)

A retired officer was ordered to active duty in time of war as commanding officer of a receiving ship. Under the regulations then in force governing the receiving-ship system, ships in commission were designated as receiving ships, retaining their own commanding officer as such ships in commission and in addition thereto having a commanding officer in their added function as receiving ships. There was a ship in commission actually designated as receiving ship at the station in question. The retired officer did not actually assume command of the receiving ship as such, but served on shore in a building used for such purpose, where he performed the duties of commanding officer of a nominal receiving ship. His orders to duty as commanding officer of a receiving ship assigned him to sea duty and did not entitle him to commutation of quarters, even though said orders referred to this duty as "shore duty." However, upon the detachment of the ship which had been designated as receiving ship, and during the period thereafter while there was no ship actually designated as receiving ship at said station, the officer may be allowed commutation of quarters, in view of the emergency conditions which existed, although it would seem that his orders to duty as commanding officer of the receiving ship were in effect canceled by the detachment of the ship, and new orders not having thereafter been issued to him, the duties he thereafter performed as commanding officer of a nominal receiving ship were not in obedience to any orders. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 28, 1917, 198 S. & A. Memo., 4357.)

Service of naval officers on board vessels is "duty in the field" within the meaning of the act of April 16, 1918 (40 Stat., 530, quoted above), relating to commutation of quarters for officers of the Army, which act applies to the Navy by virtue of section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), and the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581). Under these laws all commissioned officers of the Navy are now entitled to the same allowances, except forage, as provided by law for commissioned officers of the Army, under corresponding conditions. (File 26255-471: 2, Apr. 13, 1918, citing 12 Comp. Dec., 291, 293, and Ex parte Gerlach, 247 Fed. Rep., 616.)

Commissioned officers of the Navy on the active list on duty on vessels of the Navy are "on duty in the field" and possess the same right to commutation of quarters under the act of April 16, 1918 (above quoted), as is conferred by said act upon officers of the Army. (24 Comp. Dec., 610.)

For other cases, see below, "Officer temporarily absent from station," and see above, "Hire of quarters."

Officer awaiting orders.—An officer of the Army “unassigned” and “awaiting orders” at headquarters, who makes no application for fuel and quarters, and who does not show at the trial of his claim in court that no quarters were to be had at headquarters, is not entitled to commutation therefor; but upon showing that there were no quarters at headquarters, he is entitled to commutation. (Crosby v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 110.)

An officer of the Army who pursuant to orders reported to the headquarters of a department, there to “await further orders,” and while awaiting orders was not furnished fuel or quarters, is entitled to recover their commuted value. It is immaterial that he performed no active duty while thus awaiting orders. He was subject to assignment to such duty, and the responsibility for his nonemployment rested with his superior officer. Where an officer is directed to proceed to a place specified, there to await orders, it is his duty to go to that place and to remain there; he can not go elsewhere; he can not return until ordered; he is as much under orders and can no more question the duty of obedience than if ordered to an ambush to lie in wait for the enemy. (U. S. v. Lippitt, 100 U. S., 663, affirming Lippitt v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 148, quoting U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall., 411, and distinguishing U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S., 219.)

Officer at home awaiting orders.—An officer of the Army at his own home awaiting orders, having been ordered there at his own request and having no public duty whatever to perform, is not entitled to commutation of quarters. Quarters are expected to be furnished by the Government to its officers; when it can not thus furnish, it allows them to be obtained otherwise, and pays a money compensation therefor, called commutation. This is upon the assumption, first, that the officers are actually engaged in the public service; and, second, that such quarters are necessary to the discharge of their duty. It is upon the latter idea that commutation for fuel and quarters is not allowed to officers when in the field. The duty there is public not only, but of the most necessary character; still, apartments, kitchen, and offices are not there necessary, and can not be commuted for. The officer's home is not a station in the sense that he is entitled to public quarters or to a compensation in the form of commutation therefor. (U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S., 219.)

Officer at home performing duty.—A paymaster in the Navy detached from his vessel and ordered, “Proceed to your home in the United States, settle your accounts, and await orders,” is on duty during the period prescribed by the regulations and orders of the department for the making out of his accounts, and for that period he is entitled to commutation of quarters, there being no public quarters at his home which can be furnished to him. So much of the order as provides that the officer shall “await orders” at his home does not take effect until the period allowed for settling his accounts has expired. (Colhoun v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 31.)

A retired officer ordered to active duty in connection with the Naval War College, whose orders did not specify where the shore duty on which he was to be employed should be performed, and who selected his home as his station for the performance of such duty, is entitled to commutation of quarters notwithstanding that he reported at the War College by letter instead of in person. The assignment of an officer to duty at any place makes that place his post or station within the meaning of those terms as used in the law granting commutation of quarters. Where the choice is left to the officer, the selection of his home for the performance of the duty assigned him makes it a post or station; the fact that he reported by letter, as directed, does not defeat his right to commutation of quarters. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 14, 1910, 110 S. A. Memo., 1379.)

Officer undergoing trial by court-martial or by civil authorities.—An officer of the Army ordered to report for trial by court-martial at a place where quarters can not be assigned to him is entitled to commutation for quarters during his trial and while awaiting orders after the trial. The mere fact that an officer is under charges does not deprive him of his pay and allowances. Such forfeiture can only be imposed by the sentence of a court-martial. It is conceded that the officer was ordered before the court-martial for trial; that his status was that of an officer under suspension from duty during the existence of such trial. He was under charges during the pendency of his trial, and the result of the trial alone could determine his status as a volunteer Army officer. He could not absent himself from the place of trial without disobeying the orders of his superiors. He was not absent from his post of duty without leave. On the contrary, he was present at the court-martial in obedience to orders, awaiting the result of the trial and such orders as would necessarily follow. Aside from this, it has been held in a number of cases that the mere fact that an officer or soldier is under charges does not deprive him of his pay and allowances, and that such forfeiture can only be imposed by the sentence of a lawful court-martial (citing Smith v. U. S., 2 Ct. Cls., 206; Winters v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cls., 136; Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 22; Sullivan v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 402; and Dodge v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 35). In Sullivan's case, supra, it was held that, “when an officer is suspended and ordered in arrest, it is as much his duty to obey as it is to perform or execute any other order requiring affirmative action. He ceases by order of his superior officer to perform the active duties incident to his office. He is not to do anything in the discharge of his official obligations in the form of military duty until relieved of the disability incident to his arrest. He is ‘waiting orders’ emphatically. The official duties pertaining to his position have been transferred to some other officer, and so far as the right to perform the duties of his office goes, he is functus officio.” This case differs from that of Swaim v. United States (165 U. S., 553), in which it was held that when an Army officer was suspended from rank by sentence of a court-martial he was not entitled to emoluments or allowances; and differs also from the case of Phisterer v. United States (94 U. S., 219), in which it was held that an Army officer ordered by proper authority from a military post where he was rendering service to proceed to his home and await orders was not entitled to commutation for quarters. (Wales v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 225, holding that the court-martial in the case under consideration was illegally constituted and its sentence void.)

An officer of the Army for some months is in the custody of the civil authorities in Manila awaiting trial, on bail and not actually restrained of his liberty; subsequently he is under military arrest and confined to the limits of the city of Manila; during all this period he is under orders assigning him to temporary duty in Manila and resides in a private house, not having been furnished with quarters. Until his arrest he receives pay and commutation of quarters. He is tried and convicted in the civil courts at Manila, but the judgment is reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. He is subsequently tried, convicted, and dismissed from the Army by a military court-martial, and is thereafter reinstated and retired. Held, that it requires the decision of a court-martial to deprive an Army officer of his pay and emoluments, and that where an officer is awaiting trial before either a civil or military tribunal, under waiting orders issued by authority of the War Department, he is entitled to the emoluments of his office, including commutation for quarters. Further held that although this officer was first tried by a civil tribunal and afterward tried by a general court-martial, he was under waiting orders issued by authority of the War Department which covered the time involved in both trials, and is entitled to all the emoluments allowed by the Army Regulations, which include commutation for quarters. (Carrington v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 279.)

Officer detailed as professor in a college.—Where an officer of the Army is detailed by peremptory order to act as professor in a college he is entitled to be furnished fuel and quarters by the Government or commutation therefor. The order detailing him is one which he is bound to obey, and his right to commutation can not be affected by the fact that his detail was procured by the president of the college with his cooperation. In such a case, if there be no quarters at the place it will be a station without troops within the meaning of Army Regulations, and he need not make requisition for quarters. (Long v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cls., 398; see also note to sec. 1225, R. S.)

Civilian professors at Naval Academy.—The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 607), provides "that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ at the Naval Academy such number of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, as, in his opinion, may be necessary for the proper instruction of the midshipmen; and that professors and instructors so employed shall receive such compensation for their services as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy." This law clearly leaves it entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to prescribe the "compensation" of civilian professors and instructors, and the Secretary, in exercising such discretion, may, in accordance with the authorities, prescribe that such civilians shall be allowed public quarters, heat and light, or commutation thereof. (File 11168-4, Feb. 1, 1917, citing cases. See below, under "Whether commutation of quarters is salary, compensation, or pay proper.")

Officer temporarily absent from station.—An officer of the Navy on temporary duty in the United States away from his station beyond seas, if entitled to commutation of quarters at such station continued to be so entitled during the period of his temporary absence in the United States; he is not entitled, however, to commutation of heat and light during such absence, unless his quarters at his permanent station are occupied by his family or persons dependent upon him for support. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 17, 1916, 179 S. and A. Memo., 3570.)

An officer of the Pay Corps in receipt of commutation of quarters at his permanent station at Washington, D. C., as general inspector of the Pay Corps, may continue to receive such commutation while temporarily absent under orders requiring him to proceed to Yokohama, Japan, and to various other points outside the continental limits of the United States, including points lying within the island possessions of the United States, for the purpose of inspecting the accounts of the pay officers stationed at the points designated, including the accounts of paymasters of vessels with which he might fall in during his entire trip, and upon completion of said duty to return to his former station by way of the Suez Canal. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 26, 1901, to Paymaster Livingston Hunt; compare 21 Comp. Dec., 604.)

The Navy Regulations, 1913 (art. R-4511 (5)), provide that "the quarters to which an officer is entitled when on duty may be continued in kind, at his proper station, during the period for which the law permits him to be absent without reduction of pay and allowances." This regulation is based upon the act of February 27, 1893 (27 Stat., 480), which provides "that hereafter officers temporarily absent on duty in the field shall not lose their right to quarters or commutation thereof at their permanent stations while so temporarily absent." In the Comptroller's decision of August 3, 1907 (see 125 S. and A. Memo., 1850), it was held that "this statute authorizes the payment of commutation of quarters to naval officers, who are entitled to that allowance during the time they are temporarily absent on duty from their permanent stations, provided they were receiving such commutation at the permanent stations, or, if they were occupying public quarters, it gives them the right to retain their quarters during such absence." In the Comptroller's decision of July 26, 1911 (125 S. and A. Memo., 1854), it was said: "The act of February 27, 1893, supra, contemplates the temporary absence of an officer from his permanent station, and a temporary absence presupposes the intention to return to the permanent station and resume his duties there. If the absence of Lieut. Commander Trench from the academy was only temporary, under the act of February 27, 1893, he did not lose his right to retain his quarters there during such absence." (File 26254-2134, Dec. 19, 1916; see also file 26254-2120:1, Nov. 15, 1916.)

Agreement of officers for exchange of quarters and commutation.—An agreement whereby an officer who has been regularly assigned to public quarters undertakes to permit another officer to occupy such quarters and to exchange his right thereto for the other officer's right to commutation of quarters, is not authorized and in such case the officer who was assigned to public quarters but did not occupy them is not entitled to any commutation whatever in lieu thereof. (22 Comp. Dec., 707; see also file 26254-2052, July 7 and Aug. 7, 1916.)

Services of laborer in caring for quarters.—Service performed by a laborer at a navy yard, under the direction of the general storekeeper, in and about the quarters of that officer is not authorized by law, and the general storekeeper is liable to the United States for the value of services thus unlawfully converted to his personal use. (12 Comp. Dec., 697.)

"Duty without troops" defined.—The Army regulation concerning commutation of quarters for officers "on duty without troops," extends to officers on detached service, such as recruiting service, although there may be enlisted men on duty, such as guards, orderlies, clerks, and messengers. Such cases are distinguishable from those of officers of the line serving in the field or with their commands at a fort or in barracks. (Anderson v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 316.)

Prior to the act of March 4, 1915, commutation of quarters was only allowable where an officer was detailed for duty without troops. (Moses v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls. 27, citing Hunt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 704, and Anderson v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 316.) Under the act of March 4, 1915, commissioned officers of the Navy are now entitled to commutation of quarters "at places where there are no public quarters available." (File 28479-141, Nov. 15, 1915.)

The annual naval appropriation acts make provision for "hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops." (See act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 824.)

Application for quarters not necessary to allowance of commutation.—Commutation can be allowed an officer without previous demand by him for fuel and quarters and reply that they can not be furnished. (Whittlesey v. U. S., 5 Ct. Cls., 99.)

Where the headquarters of a military department are in a large city in which there are no quarters assignable to officers on duty, it is not necessary for an officer ordered there to make a demand that quarters be assigned to him. He will be entitled to recover commutation if it appear that there were no quarters which might have been assigned. (Lippitt v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 148. See also Crosby v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 110; Long v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cls., 398.)

Whether commutation of quarters is salary, compensation, or pay proper.—Commutation of quarters is part of the "official salary" of an Army officer within the meaning of those words as used in the act of June 28, 1902 (32 Stat., 483), relating to employment of Army officers under the Isthmian Canal Commission. (12 Comp. Dec., 343.)

Under the law providing that the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe the "compensation" of civilian professors and instructors at the Naval Academy, he may prescribe that such civilians shall be allowed public quarters, heat and light, or commutation thereof. (File 11168-4, Feb. 1, 1917, citing cases.)

Commutation is a form of reimbursement and is not part of the compensation of an officer. (Odell v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 194.)

The theory of commutation is compensation or reimbursement for something paid out. (Irwin v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 87, 103.)

The allowances provided for in General Order No. 75, Navy Department, May 23, 1866, namely, a sum to be paid officers not provided with quarters on shore stations, equal to one-third of their pay, in lieu of all allowances except for mileage or traveling expenses, constitute no part of the pay proper of officers and were designed to meet certain expenses they would necessarily incur in the discharge of their duties. (U. S. v. Allen, 123 U. S., 345.)

Sec. 1488. [Military command.] The relative rank given by the provisions of this chapter to officers of the Medical, Pay, and Engineer Corps shall confer no authority to exercise military command.—(General Orders 31 Aug., 1846, and 27 May, 1847. 5 Aug., 1854, c. 268, s. 4, v. 10, p. 587. 3 Mar., 1859, c. 76, s. 2, v. 11, p. 407.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), which abolished "relative" rank and substituted actual rank therefor, with the proviso that "officers whose rank is so defined shall not be entitled, in virtue of their rank to command in the line or in other staff corps." The same act, section 1 (30 Stat., 1004), transferred the Engineer Corps to the line of the Navy, and thereby abolished the Engineer Corps (see note to sec. 1390, R. S.).

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), it was provided that "hereafter the Pay Corps shall be called the Supply Corps."

By act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 614), it was provided that "line officers may be detailed for duty under staff officers in the manufacturing and repair departments of the navy yards and naval stations, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

By act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 930), it was provided that "hereafter officers who now perform engineering duty on shore only and officers of the Construction Corps shall be eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them." (See note to sec. 1404, R. S.) A similar provision was contained in the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 394).

 Command of vessels. See note to section 1529, Revised Statutes.

Command of hospital ships by medical officers.—The words "military command" in section 1488 have been supplanted by the later act of March 3, 1899 (quoted above), which provides that staff officers shall not "command in the line or in other staff corps." The command of a hospital ship by a medical officer is not a "command in the line or in other staff corps;" it is a command in the medical officer's own staff corps, and in their own staff corps medical officers have always had a command. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 571. NOTE.—In practice officers of the Supply Corps of the Navy were later detailed on hospital ships under the command of medical officers; see for example Navy Register of January 1, 1917, page 298; when the Attorney General's opinion cited was rendered, officers of the line or other staff corps were not, under the regulations then existing, to be assigned to duty on hospital ships commanded by medical officers.)

Prior to March 3, 1901, assignments to command of naval vessels were governed by section 1535, Revised Statutes, and regulations made in accordance therewith. The position of staff officers during the same period with regard to military command was restricted by the acts of August 5, 1854 (10 Stat., 587), and March 3, 1859 (11 Stat., 407), now section 1488, Revised Statutes. The act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1006), amending the words "the relative rank of" in the Revised Statutes to read "the rank of," provided that "officers whose rank is so defined shall not be entitled, in virtue of their rank to command in the line or in other staff corps." By act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1133), Congress declared "that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish, and from time to time to modify, as the needs of the service may require, a classification of vessels of the Navy, and to formulate appropriate rules governing assignments to command of vessels and squadrons." This act is plainly intended to amend the previous statutes on the subject and is designed to allow the President to reclassify the vessels of the Navy that had theretofore been fixed by section 1529, Revised Statutes; and to authorize him to assign the command of vessels, omitting all restrictions. He is by this act given the full power contemplated in that provision of the Constitution which makes him commander in chief of the Army and Navy. The act of March 3, 1901, is a complete substitute for prior laws or customs. The language of that act is clear and unambiguous, and was enacted with a full knowledge of the conditions brought about by prior laws and of the necessity of a new and elastic system by which the President could from time to time make such regulations as the necessities of the changing conditions in the service should require. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 571.)

A joint board of Army and Navy medical officers convened by the President, under orders of January 11, 1906, recommended the construction of hospital ships for both the Army and the Navy, the personnel of which should consist of one medical officer in command of the ship, four medical officers to attend the patients, and a number of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, it being "recommended that the crews of hospital ships be composed entirely of civilians." This recommendation was approved by the Secretary of War and by the Surgeon General of the Navy, and disapproved in toto by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in part for the reason that "it would be impracticable, dangerous, and inimical to the service, and contrary to laws, regulations, and customs of long standing," to have medical officers in command of such ships. The Surgeon General of the Navy again approved the recommendation of the board on September 24, 1906, stating that—"The bureau concurs in the recommendation of the joint board that a medical officer should be placed in command of a hospital ship, but does not contemplate nor consider it advisable that such command should give him control of her navigation * * *." The medical officer in command is to receive all orders from the commander in chief or from the department and to transmit them to the captain of the ship. His command should be absolute, the captain of the ship taking his directions from the senior medical officer. The captain should not be a naval officer, but should belong to the merchant marine, and should have entire control of the navigation of the ship and of the civilian crew and regulate discipline and matters pertaining to them. The discipline of the medical branch should be in the hands of the medical officer in command * * ." The Bureau of Navigation on September 27, 1906, declined to add anything to its previous statement on the subject. Thereupon the Secretary of the Navy on December 12, 1906, made the following order: " * * Second. The department holds that such a ship, when in commission, should be treated as a floating hospital, and as such placed under the command of a medical officer, her navigation being controlled by a competent sailing master. In war time, the entire crew should be, so far as possible, specially enlisted from civilians, as men of the Hospital Corps, and for such time only as their services will probably be needed. In time of peace, the crew, except such as are engaged in hospital duties, could be organized substantially as is that of a naval auxiliary, but subject to the provision above set forth as to the command." The President on January 4, 1908, approved the Secretary's decision of December 12, 1906, and orders issued thereunder, and ordered as to the future: "The hospital ships of the Navy will hereafter, unless otherwise directed by Congress, be placed under the control and command of medical officers of the Navy, their navigation being exclusively controlled by a competent sailing master having the complete responsibility for everything connected with the navigation of the ship * * *." Naval regulations were made, issued, and approved by the President, and published for the government of the Navy, as follows (art. 37, par. 2, Navy Regs., 1909): "A hospital ship may be commanded by a naval medical officer not below the grade of surgeon." The law provides that such regulations, when so approved, shall be the regulations of the Navy (sec. 1547, R. S.), and they shall have the force of law when not inconsistent therewith (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 46; Gratiot v. U. S., 4 How., 80). Held, that the orders preceding this regulation and the regulation itself were issued and adopted in accordance with law, and under this authority the Secretary of the Navy may now assign a medical officer, not below the grade of surgeon, to the command of a naval hospital ship. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 571.)

Construction officer can not be assigned to purely military duties.—See note to section 1404, Revised Statutes.

For other cases, as to command on shore by engineer officers and construction officers, see notes to sections 1390 and 1404, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1489. [Processions, boards, &c.] In processions on shore, or courts-martial, summary courts, courts of inquiry, boards of survey, and all other boards, line and staff officers shall take precedence according to rank.—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

See notes to sections 1467, 1485, and 1486, Revised Statutes.

The precedence of line officers, active or retired, serving as members of courts-martial, is determined, first, by their rank, and, second, by their respective dates of commission, except in cases where they have gained or lost numbers, in which event they gain or lose seniority accordingly. (File 28025-495:1, May 2, 1917.)

Precedence of line and staff officers on courts-martial.—Prior to the act of August 29, 1916, noted under section 1485, Revised Statutes, it was decided that a rear admiral of the line of the Navy, serving as member of a general court-martial, preceded a rear admiral of the Pay Corps (now Supply Corps) of the Navy, serving on the same court-martial, notwithstanding that the latter's date of commission was earlier than that of the line rear admiral, because of the fact that the rear admiral of the line had greater length of service than the rear admiral of the staff, even crediting the latter with the constructive service of six years provided for by section 1486, Revised Statutes, and that length of service governs, and not date of commission, in fixing the precedence of these officers. (File 28025-385:5, Oct. 30, 1915, re precedence of Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske and Pay Director T. J. Cowie. See notes to sections 1485 and 1486, Revised Statutes, for later cases.)

Sec. 1490. [Ensigns as steerage officers.] Ensigns shall be steerage officers, unless assigned to duty as watch and division officers.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 10, v. 16, p. 334.)

See note to section 1435, Revised Statutes.

"Steerage officer.—An officer living or messing in the steerage. Steerage officers in the U. S. Navy are clerks, midshipmen, cadet-midshipmen, mates, cadet-engineers, ensigns when not in charge of a watch and division, and all officers ranking with ensign." (Hammersly's Naval Ency., 1884. NOTE.—The grades of midshipmen and cadet-engineers have been abolished, and the title of "cadet-midshipmen" has been changed to "midshipmen.")

"Junior officers of the line are those below the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, not assigned permanently to duty as watch and division officers." (Navy Regs., 1913, Art. R 2701 (1).)

Wardroom officers.—"All commissioned officers not in command, above the rank of ensign, shall be wardroom officers. Ensigns assigned to duty as watch and division officers, either on deck or in the engineer department, shall also be wardroom officers." (Art. I 803, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

Sec. 1491. [Warrant officers.] The President may, if he shall deem it conducive to the interests of the service, give assimilated rank to boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers, as follows: After five years' service, to rank with ensigns, and after ten years' service to rank with masters.—(2 July, 1864, c. 219, s. 1, v. 13, p. 373.)

By act of March 3, 1899, section 12 (30 Stat., 1007), boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers were, after 10 years from date of warrant, to be commissioned as chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, and chief sailmakers, to rank with but after ensign. This provision was amended by act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 346), providing for the promotion of the officers mentioned after 6 years from date of warrant, instead of 10 years, as theretofore. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), it was provided that commissioned warrant officers on the active list, with creditable records, shall, after 6 years from date of commission, receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade), and after 12 years from date of commission, the pay and allowances of a lieutenant. Similar provision for pay of retired warrant officers and chief warrant officers while employed on active duty was made by act of April 10, 1918 (40 Stat., 516).

Officers holding permanent warrant or permanent commissioned warrant ranks on June 4,

1920, and who are transferred to permanent higher ranks in accordance with the act of that date shall, if they thereafter fail professionally on examination for promotion, revert to their permanent warrant or permanent commissioned warrant status. (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 4, 41 Stat., 835.)

See note to section 1405, Revised Statutes, for laws relating to appointment of warrant officers and commissioned warrant officers to the grade of ensign, and for laws creating additional grades of warrant officers, etc.

The President never exercised the discretion placed in him by the act of July 2, 1864, and section 1491, Revised Statutes, in which that law is now embodied. (File 17789-21, Jan. 30, 1914.)

Section 1491 has been regarded by the Navy Department as having been repealed by the act of March 3, 1899 (above quoted), providing for the commissioning of warrant officers to rank with but after ensign, section 26 of that act having provided "that all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed." (File 17789-21, Jan. 30, 1914.)

Masters.—Now lieutenants (junior grade). See note to sec. 1362, R. S.

Sec. 1492. [Coast Guard officers serving as part of the Navy. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1492. The officers of the revenue-cutter service when serving, in accordance with law, as a part of the Navy, shall be entitled to relative rank, as follows: Captains, with and next after lieutenants commanding in the Navy; first lieutenants, with and next after lieutenants in the Navy; second lieutenants, with and next after masters in line in the Navy; third lieutenants, with and next after ensigns in the Navy."—(2 Mar., 1799, c. 22, s. 98, v. 1, pp. 699, 700. 16 July, 1862, c. 183, ss. 1, 11, v. 12, pp. 583, 585. 4 Feb., 1863, c. 20, s. 4, v. 12, p. 640.)

It was superseded by act of April 12, 1902, section 2 (32 Stat., 100), which provided that the commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall rank as follows: "Captains with majors in the Army and lieutenant commanders in the Navy; first lieutenants with captains in the Army and lieutenants in the Navy; second lieutenants with first lieutenants in the Army and lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy; third lieutenants with second lieutenants in the Army and ensigns in the Navy: Provided, That whenever forces of the Navy and Revenue-Cutter Service shall be serving in cooperation pursuant to law (section twenty-seven hundred and fifty-seven, Revised Statutes), the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall rank as follows: Captains with and next after lieutenant commanders in the Navy; first lieutenants with and next after lieutenants in the Navy; second lieutenants with and next after lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy; third lieutenants with and next after ensigns in the Navy."

Other changes were made by act of April 16, 1908 (35 Stat., 61), which authorized in the Revenue-Cutter Service one captain commandant "with the rank of a colonel in the Army and a captain in the Navy", six senior captains, "each with the rank of lieutenant colonel in the Army and a commander in the Navy", one engineer in chief "with the rank of a lieutenant colonel in the Army and a commander in the Navy", and six senior engineers "each with the rank of a major in the Army and a lieutenant commander in the Navy."

Coast Guard created.—By act of January 28, 1915 (38 Stat., 800), the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service were consolidated and established as the Coast Guard, "which shall constitute a part of the military forces of the United States and which shall operate under the Treasury Department in time of peace and operate as a part of the Navy, subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, in time of war or when the President shall so direct * * * : Provided, That no provision of this act shall be construed as giving any officer of either the Coast Guard or the Navy, military or other control at any time over any vessel, officer, or man of the other service except by direction of the President." The same act, section 3, provided that all existing laws affecting rank in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall apply to the corresponding positions in the Coast Guard.

Precedence by date of commission.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 600), it was provided that, "whenever the personnel of the Coast Guard, or any part thereof, is operating with the personnel of the Navy in accordance with law, precedence between commissioned officers of corresponding grades in the two services shall be determined by the date of commissions in those grades"; and that "whenever, in time of war, the Coast Guard operates as a part of the Navy in accordance with law, the personnel of that service shall be subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the Navy."

Temporary ranks established.—By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 732), the temporary promotion was authorized of the captain commandant "to the rank of commodore in the Navy and brigadier general in the Army," and the engineer in chief of the Coast Guard "to the rank of captain in the Navy and colonel in the Army." The same act also authorized temporary promotion of other officers in the Coast Guard.

Titles of officers.—An act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat., 879), provided that "titles of commissioned officers of the Coast Guard are hereby changed as follows: Senior captain to commander, captain to lieutenant commander, first lieutenant to lieutenant, second lieutenant to lieutenant junior grade, third lieutenant to ensign, captain of engineers to lieutenant commander (engineering), first lieutenant of engineers to lieutenant (engineering), second lieutenant of engineers to lieutenant junior grade (engineering), and third lieutenant of engineers to ensign (engineering): Provided, That all laws applicable to the titles hereby abolished in the Coast Guard shall apply to the titles hereby established."

Coast Guard a part of the Navy when so serving.—Revenue cutters are placed under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy and for all practical purposes are, during the time they cooperate with the Navy, a part of the Navy. This seems entirely clear from the provisions of section 1492, Revised Statutes, which designates the relative rank of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service when serving in accordance with law “as a part of the Navy.” (3 Comp. Dec., 543.)

It is a question of history that during the war with Spain vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service fought side by side with vessels of the Navy proper. If men were appointed to office or enlisted in the Revenue-Cutter Service for the war only, and under the provisions of section 2757, Revised Statutes, the President directed them to cooperate with the Navy, and they were placed under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy and the expenses thereof were defrayed by the Navy Department, and they served creditably in cooperation with the Navy during the war with Spain, and were honorably discharged at the close of the war. Held, that such officers and enlisted men so serving, so paid, so directed, and so governed, constituted a part of the temporary force of the Navy during the war with Spain within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1899, granting extra pay to “the officers and enlisted men comprising the temporary force of the Navy during the war with Spain.” Held, further, that this decision is not applicable to officers and enlisted men who may have been appointed to office or enlisted in the Revenue-Cutter Service for the war only, who did not serve by order of the President under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy in cooperation with the Navy during the war. (5 Comp. Dec., 671.)

It is clear that the Revenue-Cutter Service, neither in its inception nor in its more recent development, is to be regarded as a part of the Navy, to which it would naturally be assigned, unless it is cooperating therewith in accordance with the express provision of law on the subject (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 543).

Despite the military character given the Revenue-Cutter Service by existing legislation, it is still an organization separate and distinct from the Navy, under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and assigned to duty in connection with the collection of the customs revenue. Now as formerly it can only be regarded as part of the Navy when serving therewith in accordance with law (secs. 1492 and 2757, R. S.). (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 543.)

The word “Navy” as used in the act of February 28, 1919, section 3 (40 Stat., 1203), providing for the payment of mileage to men honorably discharged from the Navy since November 11, 1918, is broad enough to include men honorably discharged from the Coast Guard at any time when the Coast Guard operates, pursuant to law, as a part of the Navy. (File 28762-329, Mar. 10, 1919, C. M. O. 114-1919, p. 16.)

A registrant under the selective draft law who has served in the Coast Guard in time of war should be considered as having “served in the Navy of the United States” so as to bring him within the purview of the act of August 31, 1918, section 3, providing “that men registered under the provisions of this act who have served in the Navy of the United States shall, upon their own application, be permitted to reenlist in the naval or marine service of the United States with and by the approval of the Secretary of the Navy.” (File 28798-773, Nov. 23, 1918, C. M. O. 174-1918, pp. 21, 22; compare C. M. O. 141-1918, pp. 27, 28, holding that enlisted men of the Coast Guard while operating as a part of the Navy are not eligible for appointment to the Naval Academy as midshipmen under the act of June 30, 1914, 38 Stat., 410, which authorized such appointments to be made “from the enlisted men of the Navy.”)

The Navy of the United States, in law and in fact, embraces the Coast Guard in time of war just as certainly as it does any other military force operating under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy. Accordingly the word “Navy” is broad enough to include the Coast Guard in time of war, service in the Coast Guard at such time is service in the Navy, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard are enlisted men of the Navy. However, it has repeatedly been held that the meaning of the word “Navy” may vary as used in different statutes; thus it may be used in a restricted sense as including only what may be called the Navy proper and excluding the Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and other organizations which would be embraced by the term “Navy” when given its extended meaning. Where the language of the law, its purpose and spirit, and the object which it was intended to accomplish, indicate that it was the intention of Congress to include the Coast Guard as well as the Navy proper, the word “Navy” will be construed accordingly as embracing the Coast Guard. (File 28798-773, Nov. 22, 1918.)

Miscellaneous.—Wherever the expenses of the Coast Guard are paid by the Navy Department, in accordance with law, any naval appropriations from which payments are so made shall be reimbursed from available appropriations for the Coast Guard. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 600; but see acts June 15, 1917, 40 Stat., 212, July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 731, and July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 150.)

Purchase of naval supplies by Coast Guard personnel. (See act Mar. 6, 1920, 41 Stat., 506.)

Pay and allowances of Coast Guard personnel same as Navy. (See act May 18, 1920, sec. 8, 41 Stat., 603.)

Commissioned officers of Coast Guard empowered to serve on naval courts-martial in time of war. (Act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 393.)

Assignment to duty of Coast Guard personnel. (See act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 601.)

Enlisted personnel of Coast Guard not to be detailed to the office of the Coast Guard. (Act May 29, 1920, 41 Stat., 650.)

OF PROMOTION AND ADVANCEMENT.

Sec. 1493. [Physical examination.] No officer shall be promoted to a higher grade on the active list of the Navy, except in the case provided in the next section, until he has been examined by a board of naval surgeons and pronounced physically qualified to perform all his duties at sea.—(21 Apr., 1864, c. 63, s. 4, v. 13, p. 53. 28 July, 1866, c. 312, s. 1, v. 14, p. 344.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), which provided that "the provisions of sections fourteen hundred and ninety-three and fourteen hundred and ninety-four of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall apply to the Marine Corps;" and by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which provided "that hereafter all laws relating to the examination of officers of the Navy for promotion shall be construed to apply to the regular advancement of staff officers to higher ranks on the active list the same as though such advancements in rank were promotions to higher grades: Provided, That examinations for such staff officers shall not be required except for such regular advancements in rank."

Boards of medical examiners may be convened by senior officer present or other commanding officer on a foreign station when so authorized by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1171.)

Retirement of officers for physical incapacity. See sections 1448-1457, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Retirement with higher rank of officers failing in physical examination for promotion is authorized by act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267); but this does not apply to officers of the rank of lieutenant commander and above (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 118).

Selection of officers for promotion does not dispense with examinations required for promotion by seniority. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579.)

Authority to convene boards of medical examiners on foreign stations.—The words "on a foreign station," as used in the act of March 4, 1917 (above noted), are construed by the Navy Department to mean "outside of the continental limits of the United States." Accordingly, the Secretary of the Navy may empower commanding officers of fleets to convene boards of medical examiners, such authority to become effective when their commands are outside the continental limits of the United States, and not merely when they are in waters, ports, and stations in foreign countries. (File 26521-186:30, Oct. 8, 1920.)

Examinations in the Marine Corps.—The act of July 28, 1892 (27 Stat., 321), provided that "promotions to every grade of commissioned officers in the Marine Corps below the grade of Commandant shall be made in the same manner and under the same conditions as now are or may hereafter be prescribed, in pursuance of law, for commissioned officers of the Army: Provided, That examining boards which may be organized under the provisions of this act to determine the fitness of officers of the Marine Corps for promotion shall in all cases consist of not less than five officers, three of whom shall, if practicable, be officers of the Marine Corps, senior to the officer to be examined, and two of whom shall be medical officers of the Navy: Provided further, That when not practicable to detail officers of the Marine Corps as members of such examining boards, officers of the line in the Navy shall be so detailed." Under this law the medical officers examined the candidate as to his physical and mental fitness for promotion and made a written report thereof to the examining board. The mental and physical fitness of the candidate, and all questions which arose in connection therewith, were then voted upon by each member of the entire board. This part of the examination preceded the moral and professional examination. When the candidate was found mentally and physically qualified for promotion, the medical officers were excused from further attendance with the board. Thus the board which passed upon the mental and physical fitness of an officer of the Marine Corps for promotion was not "a board of naval surgeons," but a board consisting partly of officers of the Marine Corps or nonmedical officers of the Navy and partly of medical officers of the Navy. (File 28687-14, Dec. 14, 1916.)

To comply with the provision in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), extending section 1493, Revised Statutes, to the Marine Corps, the physical examination of an officer of the Marine Corps preliminary to promotion must be conducted by a "board of naval surgeons," and this board must consist of more than one medical officer. The board should convene separately from the board for the moral and professional examination. It may consist of the same two medical officers who are also on the examining board as required by the act of July 28, 1892. (File 28687-14, Dec. 14, 1916.)

There is no doubt that the act of August 29, 1916, has the effect of adding the words "or Marine Corps" after the word "Navy," in section 1493. This section provides that the candidate, before promotion and except as provided in the next section, must be examined by a board of naval surgeons and pronounced physically qualified to perform all his "duties at sea." The quoted words were not repealed by the act of August 29, 1916. While the paramount duties of a Marine officer are "field duties" and not "sea duties," yet Marine officers perform sea duty. Such duties being the minor part of a Marine officer's duties, and the "board of naval surgeons" being empowered to examine the candidate only as to his physical qualifications to perform "his duties at sea," the mental and physical examination required by the act of July 28, 1892, is still necessary to determine the officer's fitness to perform all the other duties of the grade to which he is to be promoted. (File 28687-14, Dec. 14, 1916.)

The act of July 28, 1892, is not expressly or impliedly repealed by the act of August 29, 1916, but is still in force. Suggested that sections 1493 and 1494, Revised Statutes, be amended so as to avoid the complications resulting from the application of those sections as they now exist to the Marine Corps. (File 28687-14, Dec. 14, 1916.)

Prior to the act of August 29, 1916, it was held that the cases which a board of naval surgeons constituted under section 1493 was authorized to examine and pronounce upon were cases of officers in the line of promotion on the active list of the Navy, exclusively, and that such board was not invested by law with authority to examine and pronounce upon the physical qualifications of a Marine officer for duty at sea; that section 1621, Revised Statutes, which declares that the Marine Corps shall at all times be subject to the laws and regulations established for the government of the Navy, except when detached for service with the Army by order of the President, does not warrant the inference that it was intended to subject that corps to any other laws and regulations of the Navy than such as relate to discipline and maintenance, within which category section 1493 did not fall. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 117.)

The Secretary of the Navy is of the opinion that the laws regulating promotions in the Navy and Marine Corps should be identical; that is, that promotions in the Navy and Marine Corps should be regulated by one law and the provisions thereof should be identical. At present there are numerous differences in the methods and conditions of promotion between the Navy and Marine Corps, and between different branches of the Navy proper, itself. (File 28687-14, Feb. 5, 1917.)

Physical examinations prior to promotion to all grades in the Marine Corps without exception are required by the Navy law contained in section 1493 of the Revised Statutes as extended and applied to the Marine Corps by the act of August 29, 1916. This requirement is not repealed by anything contained in the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 774), relating to promotions in the Army. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920.)

"Board of naval surgeons."—In interpreting section 1493, Revised Statutes, it is held that the wording, "a board of naval surgeons," means that a board of two medical officers, or more, of the Navy is empowered to act in the case of examination of officers for promotion. (Naval Courts and Boards, sec. 665, citing file 26521-30; see also file 28687-10, Oct. 31, 1916.)

Other than the section itself, there is no provision of law as to the number of officers which shall constitute the "board of naval surgeons" required by section 1493, Revised Statutes. It was the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, under date of January 25, 1912 (file 26521-30), that the board of naval surgeons prescribed by section 1493 "should consist of more than one medical officer." Medical boards for the physical examination of officers in the Navy for promotion, convened pursuant to this section of the Revised Statutes, in general consist of three medical officers. (File 28687-14, Dec. 14, 1916.)

Section 1493 applicable to staff officers.—Prior to the act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 583), there was no law which required officers in any branch of the naval service, including the Marine Corps, to pass a physical examination as a preliminary to promotion. The fourth section of that act directed the Secretary of the Navy to appoint an advisory board of naval officers, whose duty was to carefully scrutinize the active list of line officers in the Navy, above and including the grade of master, and report to the Secretary in writing those found to be worthy of promotion. The board, in recommending an officer for promotion, was to certify that he "has the moral, mental, physical, and professional qualifications to perform efficiently all his duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted." By the sixth section of the same act a similar advisory board was to be appointed at least once in every four years. These provisions, which applied solely to line officers of the Navy, were superseded by other provisions on the same subject contained in the act of April 21, 1864, chapter 63. The latter provisions are embodied in section 1493 et seq. of the Revised Statutes. They include both line and staff officers, but in terms extend to those only who are "on the active list of the Navy." (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 117.)

Examinations were discontinued for promotion of staff officers in grade by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which act and section also reenacted a provision in the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), requiring examinations of staff officers for advancement in rank, "the same as though such advancement in rank were promotions to higher grades." Prior to the act last cited it had been held that sections 1493 and 1496 which provide that no officer shall be promoted to a higher "grade" on the active list until his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness theretofore has been established to the satisfaction of the board of examining officers appointed by the President, does not require that a staff officer be subjected to examination prior to advancement to a higher relative rank in the same grade, where more than one rank is attached to said grade; the office remains the same, and the change in relative rank may be indicated by a notification from the Secretary of the Navy, no examination or new appointment or confirmation by the Senate being necessary. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 358.)

Erroneous promotion of officer not physically qualified.—An ensign in the Navy who failed to pass the physical examination for promotion to lieutenant (junior grade) but whose name was inadvertently included in the list of officers who had passed such examination, and who because of such inadvertence was not advised by the Navy Department of his failure to pass such examination but was appointed and commissioned as a lieutenant (junior grade) and performed service as such, was a de facto lieutenant (junior grade) for the period of performance of such service, viz, from date of receipt by him of his commission as lieutenant (junior grade) to date of notification of the erroneous issuance of such commission, and is entitled to retain pay as a lieutenant (junior grade) received by him for such period. (19 Comp. Dec., 747.)

The physical qualification required by section 1493, Revised Statutes, as a condition precedent to the promotion of naval officers is not unconstitutional (citing 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516, 520, 524, 525), nor is it directory merely; and an ensign who was nominated, confirmed, and commissioned as a lieutenant (junior grade), without having qualified for such promotion by passing the physical examination required by said section, did not become legally invested with the office of lieutenant (junior grade). (20 Comp. Dec., 13, citing Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 266. Compare note to Constitution, ante, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

Pay of officer while undergoing examination.—Sections 1493 and 1496, Revised Statutes, provide for an examination of certain officers of the Navy as a prerequisite to their promotion. The temporary absence of an officer from his vessel, not on special duty, or on duty consistent with the exercise of the duties of his position on the vessel, does not alter his sea status. The officer in this case was not ordered to the performance of any specific duty as such. The examination for his promotion was rather in the nature of an incident to his service of whatever character it might be at the time. To hold that his absence while engaged in examinations under the law for his promotion separated him from his ship would be virtually to exclude officers at sea from the benefits intended to apply alike to all grades and classes of the service. Examination for promotion is incident to sea service as well as to shore service, and is not a special duty inconsistent with service in any grade or class. Accordingly, held that an officer of the Navy attached to a sea-going vessel is entitled to sea pay while temporarily absent from his vessel attending examinations for his promotion, unless his absence is under such circumstances that it operates to detach him from his vessel; but he is not entitled to commutation of rations for the reason that he is not then "doing duty on board," as required by section 1579, Revised Statutes. (4 Comp. Dec., 455.)

This section not applicable to temporary promotions.—See note to section 1496, Revised Statutes.

New physical examination not required in case of delayed promotion.—An officer having qualified physically upon examination for promotion by a board of naval examiners, he may thereafter be promoted when found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified without any further physical examination, notwithstanding that considerable delay may occur before his qualifications are established upon examination by a naval examining board in accordance with section 1496, Revised Statutes. A new physical examination in such cases of delay is customarily required by the executive for the good of the service, in order that an officer may not be advanced to a higher grade when not physically in condition to perform the duties thereof; but another formal examination by a board of medical examiners might be dispensed with if the officer has once fully qualified physically for promotion, notwithstanding that delay may occur in the actual promotion of such officer, or he might under such circumstances be examined and promoted upon the informal report of a single medical officer or a non-statutory board. (File 26266-627:1, Jan. 30, 1919; see also 22 Comp. Dec., 153; compare Hooper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90.)

Sec. 1494. [Physical disqualification by wounds.] The provisions of the preceding section shall not exclude from the promotion to which he would otherwise be regularly entitled any officer in whose case such medical board may report that his physical disqualification was occasioned by wounds received in the line of his duty, and that such wounds do not incapacitate him for other duties in the grade to which he shall be promoted.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 4, v. 13, p. 53. 28 July, 1866, c. 312, s. 1, v. 14, pp. 344, 345.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), which provided that "the provisions of sections fourteen hundred and ninety-three and fourteen hundred and ninety-four of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall apply to the Marine Corps;" and by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which provided "that hereafter all laws relating to the examination of officers of the Navy for promotion shall be construed to apply to the regular advancement of staff officers to higher ranks on the active list the same as though such advancements in rank were promotions to higher grades: Provided, That examinations for such staff officers shall not be required except for such regular advancement in rank." It is further provided by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), that "no captain, commander, or lieutenant commander shall be promoted unless he has had not less than two years' actual sea service on seagoing ships in the grade in which serving."

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), it was provided "that the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, regarding the promotion of captains in the line of the permanent Navy shall not restrict the promotion of such captains as may have been wounded in line of duty and who are now on the active list, and such captains shall be entitled to the benefits of the provisions of section 1494, Revised Statutes of the United States, and also to the benefits of the act of March 4, 1911 [36 Stat., 1267]."

The expression "wounds received in the line of his duty," found in section 1494, Revised Statutes, means precisely what it says, and is not restricted to any particular part of that duty, as to wounds received in battle or in some hazardous enterprise. The statute is plain and unambiguous, and therefore neither calls for nor admits of construction. It must be read as it is written. An officer thus disqualified for sea duty is eligible for promotion if his wounds do not incapacitate him for other duties in the grade to which he seeks promotion. The words "other duties" in section 1494 refer to duties other than duties at sea. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

For definition of "line of duty" see note to section 1451, Revised Statutes.

Precedents of Navy Department.—In 1898 Ensign Wilfred V. Powelson was so seriously injured in both legs by falling through a hatch, as to be physically disqualified for duty on shipboard, yet he was under this section promoted to lieutenant (junior grade), the board having found that his wounds did not incapacitate him for other duties in that grade. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

In 1895 Assistant Engineer Walter S. Burke, while on duty on shipboard, had his arm crushed in the machinery, resulting in amputation of the forearm. In August, 1896, upon examination for promotion, the board found that solely from the facts above stated he was disqualified for the performance of his duties at sea but that he was not incapacitated for the other duties of his profession in the grade to which he sought to be promoted and he was promoted accordingly. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

In 1868 Passed Assistant Engineer Cooper lost a leg from having it crushed in machinery while on duty on shipboard. Though incapacitated for sea service, he was afterward promoted, under this section, and performed satisfactorily the shore duties to which he was assigned. In November, 1877, he was ordered before a retiring board, which found that he was not incapacitated for active service, in the meaning of the law, and therefore did not recommend him for retirement. Upon the record of these proceedings, President Hayes made this endorsement: "This report and finding are approved. Mr. Cooper will not be retired." This could only have been upon the ground that the officer, though disqualified for "duties at sea," was not incapacitated for the "other duties" mentioned in section 1494. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

The precedents of the Navy Department under section 1494, Revised Statutes, are correct; such precedents should not be departed from in the case of a particular officer, unless they are clearly wrong or detrimental to the service, even if there were doubt as to their correctness. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

Purpose of section 1494.—There are various duties other and no less important than those on shipboard; and these under existing regulations must be performed by officers of various grades. This being so, Congress may well fill these places from meritorious officers whose wounds received in the service have incapacitated them for active duty at sea, and provide for their promotion in due course as it has done. There is no reason why an officer wounded in the service should not be promoted as well as his more fortunate brother, if there are duties in the higher grade which he can satisfactorily and sufficiently perform; and this is recognized in the section under consideration. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

Practical objections cannot be remedied by administrative action.—The real objection, if there be any, to the promotion of an officer physically disqualified for duty on shipboard is that such promotion would to a great extent prevent the service from receiving in that grade all the benefit it would receive from the service of a sound man; and as the number of such officers is limited, the whole may be required for sea duty, and the filling of one or more vacancies by promotion of men fit for shore duty alone might be detrimental to the service. If the statute under consideration (sec. 1494) were ambiguous and it were clear that such promotion of officers who are capable of shore duty only was seriously detrimental to the service, this might be a reason for giving it another construction, if possible. But the statute is not ambiguous, and no rule of interpretation permits us to do violence to its plain terms in order to avoid what is at best only a remote possibility and one which Congress could not have overlooked in framing these sections (secs. 1493 and 1494); and one which has not been a serious menace to the service in the 30 or more years since the legislation was enacted. All these considerations are exclusively in the discretion of Congress. If it shall be found that under existing laws and practice the number of officers of a certain grade fit for sea duty is not adequate to the requirements of that branch of the service, Congress may correct the evil by either increasing the number or requiring full qualification for promotion. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.)

The act of July 11, 1919 (above quoted), waives the provisions of the selection law in the case of any captain who was on the active list on the date of said act and who had been wounded in line of duty. Any such captain was thereby made eligible for promotion by seniority, under the law as it stood prior to August 29, 1916; and under section 1494 may be promoted if physically qualified for duties other than at sea; or, if not so qualified, is entitled, on retirement, to the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted. (File 26521-351, July 31 and Sept. 19, 1919.)

Marine Corps examinations.—See note to section 1493, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1495. [Examinations, when; and effect of.] Officers subject to examination before promotion to a grade limited in number by law shall not be entitled to examination in such a sense as to give increase of pay until designated by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the higher grade; and officers eligible for promotion to a grade not limited in number shall not be entitled to examination until ordered to present themselves for examination or until a class, in which they are included, has been so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy.—(3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, s. 1, v. 17, p. 555. 22 June, 1874, c. 392, v. 18, p. 191.)

Examination of staff officers for advancement in rank. See act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), quoted in note to section 1494, Revised Statutes.

See notes to sections 1505 and 1562, Revised Statutes.

Examinations in Marine Corps.—The act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), relating to the Army, directs that examinations be conducted at such times anterior to the accruing of the right to promotion as may be best for the interests of the service. This provision is made to apply to the examination for promotion of commissioned officers in the Marine Corps below the grade of commandant by the act of July 28, 1892 (27 Stat., 321). The act of February 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 756, sec. 32), relating to the Army, provides that "when the exigencies of the service of any officer who would be entitled to promotion upon examination require him to remain absent from any place where an examining board could be convened, the President is hereby authorized to promote such officer, subject to examination, and the examination shall take place as soon thereafter as practicable. If upon examination the officer be found disqualified for promotion, he shall, upon the approval of the proceedings by the Secretary of War, be treated in the same manner as if he had been examined prior to promotion." By the act of July 28, 1892, supra, this provision of the act of February 2, 1901, is undoubtedly made applicable to examinations for promotion of officers in the Marine Corps. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 568.)

Engineer officers.—Under the law and the regulations a first assistant engineer became eligible to examination for promotion when he had served two years at sea upon a naval steamer. But he was merely eligible. He was not entitled to be examined until his turn for promotion had arrived or was near at hand. In no event therefore could he demand that the increased pay of his new grade should begin until he had a right to be examined for promotion. (Hunt v. U. S., 116 U. S., 394, 397.)

Examination of ensigns.—The grade of lieutenant (junior grade) being a grade "not limited in number" within the meaning of section 1495, Revised Statutes, an ensign is not entitled to be examined for promotion to the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) on his termination of three years' service in the grade of ensign unless ordered to present himself for examination or until a class in which he is included has been so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy. (18 Comp. Dec., 466.)

The grade of lieutenant (junior grade) is a grade not limited in number. The right of officers to examination for promotion to a grade "not limited in number" prior to their being ordered to present themselves therefor is governed by section 1495, Revised Statutes. (22 Comp. Dec., 565, citing 18 Comp. Dec., 466, 17 Comp. Dec., 605, Hunt v. U. S., 116 U. S., 394, 397, Doyle v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 142; see also 24 Comp. Dec., 639.)

Sec. 1496. [Mental, moral, and professional examination.] No line officer below the grade of commodore, and no officer not of the line, shall be promoted to a higher grade on the active list of the Navy until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all his duties at sea have been established to the satisfaction of a board of examining officers appointed by the President.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 1, v. 13, p. 53.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), which provided "that hereafter all laws relating to the examination of officers of the Navy for promotion shall be construed to apply to the regular advancement of staff officers to higher ranks on the active list the same as though such advancements in rank were promotions to higher grades: Provided, That examinations for such staff officers shall not be required except for such regular advancements in rank." Also by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stats., 1171), providing that the senior officer present or other commanding officer on a foreign station may be authorized by the Secretary of the Navy to order boards for examination of candidates for promotion in the Navy and Marine Corps.

Officers who fail upon examination for promotion by reason of drunkenness or other misconduct, to be discharged with not more than one year's pay. (Act Aug. 5, 1882, 22 Stat., 286.)

Officers selected for promotion to the grades of commander, captain, and rear admiral shall undergo the examinations prescribed by law for officers promoted by seniority. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 579.)

Suspension from promotion of officers failing professionally upon examination, is provided for by section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended, which also provides for the discharge of such officers failing upon reexamination after period of suspension.

The grade of commodore on the active list of the Navy was abolished by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005). See note to section 1362, Revised Statutes.

Questions of law arising before examining board.—The existing regulations with reference to examining boards provide that "any question of law arising before the board, * * * shall be submitted to the Judge Advocate General" (see Naval Courts and Boards, sec. 634). While this, no doubt, is intended to apply to specific questions arising in concrete cases, it is quite evident that it contemplates the same distinction with reference to questions of law and fact arising before examining boards as is made by the department with reference to questions of law and fact arising before courts-martial; in other words, that while questions of fact are properly to be left to the exclusive determination of the board in the first instance, upon questions of law the board should ascertain and be guided by the decisions of the department, opinions of law officers of the Government, and other authorities which will be furnished by the Judge Advocate General when required. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

In construing laws relating to the naval service, the board will be guided by the construction placed upon them by the Navy Department, and will not qualify its recommendation by any proviso concerning the legality of the department's decisions. (File 26260-3362, Mar. 21, 1916.)

"Mental," "moral," and "professional," defined and distinguished.—As to moral qualifications, see note to section 1456, Revised Statutes.

An exact definition of the words "mental, moral, and professional" is not desirable and should not be attempted. Such a definition would likely prove defective and a source of embarrassment in the future, not only with reference to the subject matter included therein, but also in respect to matters of exclusion. This is the view which has heretofore been taken by the department, and also by the courts with reference to similar questions. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917, citing file 26260-1319, June 29, 1911, p. 10, and Swain v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173.)

With reference to the words "mental incapacity," as used in connection with civil transactions, it has been judicially stated: "No clear and definite rule can be laid down, defining mental incapacity * * * which will apply in all cases * * *. Each case, therefore, must, to a certain extent, rest upon its own peculiar circumstances." (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917, citing Allen v. Allen, 64 Atl., 1115.)

With reference to what constitutes mental, moral, and professional incapacity certain principles have been settled or may be deduced from the law, regulations, and precedents which will be helpful in arriving at a proper conclusion. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

"There can be no doubt as to the nature of so much of the inquiry as regards professional fitness for the naval service. That is a question of specialty, which speaks for itself. So it is in the matter of physical condition, which is the familiar subject of the pension law. But the law also calls for investigation of mental and moral fitness * * *. As to this point, there is nothing of innovation, or contradiction of pre-existing law, in either of the acts. Qualities of mind, things moral as distinguished from things physical, not only courage, promptitude, efficiency, but patriotism, honor, virtue, and the opposites of each, as cowardice, negligence, insufficiency, disaffection, dissoluteness, are expressly mentioned, either for praise or blame, as the case may be, in the rules for the government of the Navy." (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 352.)

The Navy Regulations draw a marked distinction between "professional" fitness on the one hand, and "mental and moral" fitness on the other. This distinction and classification is not original with the regulations, for as early as January 31, 1857, the Attorney General, in an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 352), separated "mental and moral" on the one hand from "physical and professional" fitness on the other. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

The Navy Department's precedents are in harmony with the Attorney General's opinion (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 352), in which "mental and moral" qualifications are grouped and classified together as "qualities of mind, things moral as distinguished from things physical." (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

The so-called "Naval Efficiency Act," approved February 28, 1855 (10 Stat., 616), provided in part for the separation from the active service of officers found by an examining board to be "incapable" of performing their duties. Instructions were issued by the Secretary of the Navy to the board of officers to the effect that "an officer may be 'incapable,' either mentally, physically, or morally; for although he may possess a strong mind and robust frame, yet, if his moral perception of right and wrong be so blunted and debased as to render him unreliable, he could hardly be regarded as being the capable officer, to be intrusted with the lives of his countrymen, and the property and honor of his country." Here the department's instructions regarded "mental" fitness as meaning "possessing a strong mind," and "moral" fitness as implying a correct "perception of right and wrong." In other words, these instructions classified "mental" and "moral" qualifications as "qualities of mind," the same as did the subsequent opinion of the Attorney General (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 352). These instructions of the Secretary of the Navy were upheld by the Attorney General December 10, 1856 (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223, 233), as being well within the scope of the statute. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917. NOTE.—The question submitted to the Attorney General in the opinion last cited was whether, among other things, "any error of law was committed by the Secretary of the Navy, in his instructions to the board of officers"; and the Attorney General held that "no error of law has been committed on which to base claim for the reversal of the finding of the board or of the approval of the President," stating in the course of his opinion that, as compared with the letter of the act, the instructions seem to be not enabling, but on the contrary restrictive, so as to caution the board in their dealing with moral, as distinguished from physical or mental inability or incompetency to perform, promptly and efficiently, all the possible duties of an officer of the Navy.)

The law requires that both the moral and professional fitness be established. The use of both words suggests that the moral qualifications to be shown are such as are independent of the professional; those qualities which may exist and yet are such as do not appear in a purely professional examination, however searching that examination may be. (File 29260-2969, June 12, 1915.)

Clearly the written examination of a candidate on professional subjects goes to demonstrate his professional fitness, and a failure in any professional subject inquired into on the written examination is a professional failure within the meaning of the law. It is only where one or more reports on fitness which are considered by the examining board are found to be so unsatisfactory that the board for that reason, independent of the written examination, determines that an officer is not qualified for promotion, that a decision must be made as to whether his disqualification rests on moral or professional grounds. (File 29260-2969, June 12, 1915.)

It is recognized that the line of demarcation between professional and moral fitness in some instances is not clearly drawn, either by law or regulations, and that consequently confusion results in applying a uniform standard to all cases where a decision must be made as to whether the character of the reports on fitness of the candidate establish his moral or professional unfitness for promotion. Especially is the standard a varying one where officers appear before different examining boards. It is obvious that in justice to the service no officer who has been found to be morally disqualified to be promoted should be continued therein and that in justice to the officer, no summary severance from the service should be made on the ground of moral failure when the disqualification is in fact a professional one, to which the law attaches a less severe penalty without the stigma which attaches in the former case. (File 26260-2969, June 12, 1915.)

To be continued in the commissioned personnel, one must be "an officer and a gentleman." The standard as an officer to which one must measure is a professional standard, and the test usually laid down is a written examination on professional subjects, coupled with a satisfactory professional record. The standard as a gentleman to which an officer must measure is nothing more or less than the standard of a gentleman in any walk of life, and the test of moral fitness of an officer is, in the opinion of the department, the test necessary to determine the moral fitness of one purporting to be a gentleman who is not in the naval service. (File 29260-2969, June 12, 1915.)

"Moral" may be defined as pertaining to those intentions and actions on which right and wrong, virtue and vice, are predicated, or to the rules by which such intentions and actions ought to be directed; "relating to the practice, manners, or conduct of men as social beings in relation to each other, as respects right and wrong, so far as they are properly subject to rules" (citing Webster's Int. Dic.). Accepting this definition and keeping in mind that the professional examinations cover all questions of right and wrong in a professional sense, we find that moral fitness in the sense of gentlemanly fitness relates "to the practice, manners, or conduct of men as social beings in relation to each other, as respects right and wrong (in a moral as distinguished from a professional sense), so far as they are properly subject to rules" (i. e., so far as they are subject to a recognized or established moral procedure). (File 29260-2969, June 12, 1915.)

A quite clear distinction can be drawn between professional and moral qualifications. As to mental qualifications, the distinction between it and professional, moral, or even physical qualifications is far more difficult of determination, to say nothing of definition; and it seems impossible to state any clear line of demarcation between them that will cover all cases, inasmuch as the term "mental" is broader than the others and may be included in one or all of the other terms. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

Referring to the board's definition of mental fitness, as follows, "In this connection, the term refers only to the general intelligence of the candidate as shown in his written examination, or by his personal attitude and bearing before the board, or by his record," it is hardly considered that a candidate's "personal attitude and bearing before the board" should be a basis of judgment as to mental qualifications, unless accompanied by a display of temperamental qualities properly to be considered as affecting mental or other qualifications. Also in the same definition it would be well to include impressions gained from the oral examination. In addition also to the "general intelligence" of a candidate, it is considered that his mental qualifications must include also the character, power, and qualities of his mind and his temperamental qualities. It is clear that mental qualifications refer essentially to temperamental qualities, and it is therefore considered that the examples of professional unfitness cited by the board, as follows, "Poor judgment, inaccuracy, slovenliness, insubordination, indolence, unreliability, capriciousness, lack of force, lack of initiative, or any other temperamental unfitness which in civil life would not be considered as indicating mental abnormality or moral obliquity," might well, in many cases, be regarded as indicative also of mental unfitness. As emphasized before, however, each case must be settled on its own particular merits. If one or more of these traits is present to an extent rendering the candidate, in the opinion of the board, professionally unfit for promotion, a complete finding would seem to be that he is morally, but not mentally or professionally, qualified for promotion. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

The lack of proper mental or moral qualifications may, and usually does, affect an officer's professional or physical qualifications. This is best shown by the fact that an examination of the department's records for a period of 24 years (1880-1904) has disclosed only a few isolated cases in which an officer who was found not mentally qualified for promotion was reported at the same time to possess all the necessary professional, moral, and physical requirements. The almost invariable rule has been that the lack of the necessary mental qualifications is coupled with other deficiencies and it seems altogether reasonable that, as a general thing, this should be the case. Nevertheless it will not be contended that lack of mental qualifications, in the sense of the statute, can not exist independently of professional, moral, or physical unfitness. Otherwise it would not have been necessary for Congress to specify all four requirements for promotion in the Navy as it has done for more than 50 years. A diseased brain, although properly classified as physical unfitness, would seem necessarily to be accompanied by lack of the mental, moral, or professional qualifications for promotion; but it is entirely possible for an officer to be mentally, morally, or professionally unfitted for promotion without disease of the brain. In short, as has heretofore been remarked by the Judge Advocate General in a similar connection (file 26260-1319, June 29, 1911), "any discussion of the question whether an officer can be morally unfit for promotion, without his mental, professional or physical qualifications being affected, however interesting it may be, becomes purely idle and academic when we remember that Congress has itself, by express language in the act of April 21, 1864 (sec. 1496, R. S.), provided that no officer shall be promoted to a higher grade until his moral, as well as his mental, professional and physical fitness, shall have been established to the satisfaction of the board of examining officers." (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

Navy department's precedents.—The department's precedents in which the question of mental, moral, or professional fitness is involved may be cited quite as much to indicate the somewhat varying interpretation of what constitutes mental disqualifications as to offer matter from which a clear definition thereof may be deduced. Incidentally, they confirm the more easily marked distinction between professional and moral disqualifications. It is believed that it will be very rare when according to the department's views a case will arise in which mental unfitness would not be coupled with professional, moral, or physical disqualifications. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

The following precedents are quoted from the Secretary of the Navy's letter of February 19, 1917, to the Naval Examining Board, Navy Yard, Washington, D. C. (file 26521-179):

MENTAL QUALIFICATIONS.

(a) Commodore William K. Mayo, examined for promotion, February 12, 1886. Board reported as follows: "The candidate having failed to establish his mental fitness in all respects, the board can not give the certificate required by section 1504 R. S., that he has the mental, moral, and professional qualifications to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the next higher grade, and therefore we do not recommend him for promotion." This finding was adhered to by the board after further proceedings.

Commodore Mayo's reports on fitness contained among other things the following unfavorable entries: "The general impression seems to be that he is a difficult person to get along harmoniously with." "While, in my opinion, possessing the requisite qualifications, I am afraid, judging from my personal experience with him, that his temperament and disposition are such as would militate against the chances of his efficiency and usefulness in any position." "His mental faculties are such as to qualify him for promotion but, in my opinion, his judgment is apt to be warped by his suspicions and prejudices." As to the general reputation of the candidate, "it is that of a man who, by his suspicions and prejudices makes it exceedingly unpleasant for those who have the misfortune to serve with him." "In my judgment Commodore Mayo is so peculiarly constituted that his judgment is often so warped by his strong prejudices and suspicions as to unfit him for the calm consideration and solution of important questions that may come before him. Holding this opinion I can not conscientiously think him a fit officer to perform all his duties at sea in a higher grade." Other matters of record related to "rudeness in speech," "discourtesy of demeanor," "severity and harshness," etc. Fifteen specific cases of complaint against Commodore Mayo were given thorough consideration by the board. Referring to these cases the board stated in its first report:

"Any one of the foregoing cases, taken by itself, might be considered as of minor importance and as exhibiting on the part of Commodore Mayo a mere error of judgment, which all men are, at one time or another, liable to fall into. But, aggregated, they indicate unmistakably a habit and condition of mind the manifestation of which, in a commanding officer, is demoralizing in its tendency and subversive of discipline. If, while in command of a shore station, and under the restraining influences of the Navy Department, Commodore Mayo has displayed such mental peculiarities as are shown by the evidence, the board is forced to the conclusion that he ought not to be intrusted with the duties and responsibilities inseparable from a command in foreign waters."

In its second report the board stated:

"In the several citations made the candidate claims that he was acting in the interest of discipline—while the board considers the majority of those acts to be subversive of discipline. And it is this failure on the part of the candidate, even after a deliberate view of his case—assisted as he was by able counsel and expert advice—to apprehend the true direction to which the whole mass of the documentary evidence points—that furnishes the strongest corroborative evidence of the candidate's imperfect ideas in regard to discipline, and adds to the proof of his incapacity to exercise at all times the discretion looked for in a commanding."

No action was taken by the President upon the record of the board's finding, as the case was disposed of by the retirement of Commodore Mayo upon his own application after 40 years' service, under section 1443, Revised Statutes.

(b) Asst. Surg. Frederick Joaquin Barbosa Cordeiro, examined for promotion, July 23, 1887. Board reported as follows:

"The board, after carefully considering all the evidence in the case of the candidate, including his single testimonial, the records on file at the Navy Department, the interrogatories addressed to various naval officers and the answers thereto, and the letter and statement of the candidate, all of which, including copies of the records on file at the department, are hereunto appended, concluded the examination of the candidate, and decided that the mental fitness of the candidate to perform all his duties, at sea and on shore, has not been established to the satisfaction of the board; therefore we certify that Asst. Surg. Frederick Joaquin Barbosa Cordeiro, United States Navy, does not possess the mental qualifications to perform efficiently, at sea and on shore, all the duties of the grade to which he seeks promotion.

"The board are led to the above conclusion by the evidence hereunto appended, which establishes clearly to their minds the fact that Asst. Surg. Frederick Joaquin Barbosa Cordeiro, United States Navy, has an insubordinate disposition and is therefore lacking in one of the most essential qualifications of an officer of the Navy. In view of this fact we do not recommend him for promotion."

The board reassembled November 10, 1887, pursuant to orders, and further examined the candidate. December 22, 1887, the board completed its proceedings and reported that it

"Decided that the candidate has exhibited professional qualifications as well as literary and scientific attainments of more than the average excellence and that his moral fitness has also been established to the satisfaction of the board, but that his mental fitness for promotion has not been so established.

"After carefully reviewing the subject of the mental fitness of the candidate for promotion the board see no reason to change their opinion as expressed in their report made July 23, 1887. The board arrived at this conclusion for the reasons that the candidate has failed to present any favorable testimony or letter from any senior medical officer with whom he has served since he has been in the service, that two of these officers have pronounced him unfit for promotion, that the records on file at the Navy Department contain opinions from the Surgeon General and from Rear Admiral L. A. Kimberly, United States Navy, of the same nature, and that the service would be benefited by his resignation, and that he has been severely reprimanded by the Secretary of the Navy. The board also consider that the answers to 10 of the interrogatories are unfavorable to the candidate as contributing to the evidence exhibiting his mental tendency as insubordinate and unduly self-asserting, that four—at least are negative, and that the rest, while in his favor, are chiefly from officers with whom his association on duty has been indirect, seven of them having had no association with him on duty at all.

"The board do not consider the testimony sufficient to prove any defect in the moral character of the candidate, although his action in showing the Medical Journal to Ensign Dent without first obtaining the consent of Surgeon Kidder, his statement as to the time he spent before the board of investigation at the Boston Navy Yard, 'about one minute,' and his estimate of the time necessary to obtain a medical officer's presence at the dispensary at the Boston Navy Yard when the latter was on board the receiving ship at that place, 'six minutes,' both of which periods are manifestly underestimates and his accusation, in his defense, against Lieut. Nazro of being influenced by unworthy motives in answering the interrogatories as he did, would seem to indicate a feeble moral sense, but the board prefer to regard these points as additional evidence of his mental unfitness for promotion.

"The candidate seems to have been on terms of hostility with two out of three medical officers to whom he has been subordinate since his entry into the service. The testimony in these cases, although somewhat conflicting in some respects, nevertheless leads the board to the opinion that he has been guilty of insubordination and disrespect, and the board are well satisfied that harmony and concert of action, so desirable for the benefit of the service, did not exist in the medical departments of the Boston Navy Yard and of the U. S. S. Powhatan, owing to the mental inability of the candidate to fully appreciate his position as a junior officer and his disregard of the opinions of his seniors.

"The full tenor of his defensive argument is to the effect that he has been misrepresented in every instance, and that in every instance he has been the victim of unjust animus, prejudice, or absolute falsehood.

"In examining the testimony of those officers who have reported against either his mental or professional fitness, the board have been unable to detect any animus of an unjust nature against him, and believe that such animus existed only in the imagination of the candidate. These animadversions in his defense in the opinion of the board are still further evidence of the disqualifying condition of the mental constitution of the candidate.

"The plea of ignorance of the customs of the service, on the part of the candidate is insufficient to account for all the trouble he has given those in authority over him, since all young medical officers, upon entering the service, must have labored under the same disadvantage, and yet it is a very uncommon thing to hear of such curious complaints against them as those made against the candidate.

"The candidate, in the opinion of the board, although possessing a high grade of information and accomplishment as a physician is unquestionably too vain of his attainments, and is unwilling to give others credit for whatever proficiency they may possess. This defect in his mental constitution in civil life might be of small moment, but the board considers it a grave defect in one belonging to the service, since it could only result in destruction of harmony and scandalous conflict in a department in which all personal considerations should subordinate themselves to the endeavor to do all things for the benefit of the sick and for the best interests of the service.

"In conclusion, the board do not believe that the interests of the service would be subserved by the promotion of the candidate, and therefore they do not recommend Asst. Surg. Frederick Joaquin Barbosa Cordeiro, United States Navy, for promotion."

The President's action in this case, June 15, 1888, was as follows:

"A case is here presented of a medical officer, concededly of unusual skill and attainments, held unfit for promotion for no established neglect of duty or anything else more substantial (so far as facts are developed), than instances of disrespect or insubordination which are almost frivolous. This officer is not the most agreeable man in the Navy in his intercourse with his superiors, but he should not be denied promotion for that; he has probably very high ideas of his ability and perhaps is dogmatic; but these things, while disagreeable, may exist in a man to whom it would be very unjust to deny promotion.

"Besides all this, I am perfectly satisfied that everything stated in the foregoing abstracts that has caused unhappiness to the applicant's superior officers might have been avoided if they themselves had exercised a little tolerance and forbearance.

"I can not approve the findings of the board in this case."

(c) Pay Insp. John H. Stevenson, examined for promotion to pay director. Board reported as follows:

"We are satisfied as to the professional abilities of the candidate. His methods of business are shown by the evidence to have been loose, reckless, regardless of law, and defiant of orders, but we believe his conduct is not shown to have been influenced by a desire for personal profit, but that, from mental peculiarities or temperament, his moral sense of the obligations of law, orders, and regulations is so obtunded as to render him unfit to conduct the important duties which pertain to the grade in the Navy to which he is a candidate for promotion. In this sense we consider him, as stated below, morally unfit for promotion. We therefore decide that the professional fitness of the candidate to perform the duties of a naval officer at sea and on shore in the next higher grade has been established, but not the mental and moral fitness, and we therefore do not recommend him for promotion."

The proceedings and finding of the examining board in the above case of Pay Insp. Stevenson were approved by the President September 25, 1893.

(d) Asst. Paymaster S. J. Semmes, examined for promotion February 4, 1898. Found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified. Finding disapproved by the President, and the case ordered before another board, which found the candidate professionally, but not mentally or morally qualified. Record returned by the department with instructions, among others, that the board "place upon record whatever matter, in its opinion, tends to disqualify the candidate mentally for promotion." Pursuant to these instructions, the board caused the following entry to be made in the record:

"In the matter of the previous finding of the board, that the candidate was mentally disqualified for promotion, the board wishes to state that it was then and still is of the opinion that the habits of Asst. Paymaster Semmes mentally disqualify him, and further that the transaction of the check, as shown on page 5 of the candidate's affidavit, appended and marked 'H,' exhibits a mental obliquity and apparent inability to see that, in cashing that check himself, as he stated he did, he used Government funds for his own purposes in a manner which it is deemed shows want of moral and mental sense."

The Judge Advocate General in his review of the above case made the following remarks:

"It is noted that the board finds Mr. Semmes mentally disqualified for promotion, stating that in its opinion his habits 'mentally disqualify him,' and also that 'he exhibits a mental obliquity and apparent inability to see that, in cashing' his personal check out of the funds in his possession as paymaster, 'he used Government funds for his own purposes in a manner which it is deemed shows want of moral and mental sense,' and yet finds him professionally qualified for promotion. Although somewhat peculiarly expressed, the adverse purport of this finding is sufficiently clear.

"A careful examination of the record does not, in my judgment, disclose any evidence whatever showing that Mr. Semmes was guilty of dishonest conduct, but it does exhibit, first, a carelessness in handling his accounts that is inexcusable in an officer whose duties demand the greatest care and exactness; and, second, that he is addicted to habits of intemperance to such a degree as to unfit him for efficient service as an officer of the Navy."

No action was taken by the President upon the record in the above case, as the matter was disposed of by the candidate's resignation from the service.

MORAL QUALIFICATIONS.

(e) Passed Asst. Paymaster Louis A. Yorke, examined for promotion December 14, 1886. Found mentally, but not professionally or morally qualified. The evidence upon which the board based its finding that he was not morally qualified for promotion consisted principally of "several complaints which had been made against him to the department, consisting of alleged indebtedness to individuals, and of neglect, refusal, or evasion to pay the same." Finding approved by the President, February 19, 1887.

(f) Boatswain Louis W. Sopp, examined March 1, 1906. Found that he had "the mental and professional, but not the moral qualifications, by reason of his failure to pay his debts, which is a result of his own misconduct, to perform efficiently all his duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted." The Secretary of the Navy recommended approval by the President, April 9, 1906, stating in part: "Persistent failure, without adequate cause, to meet just pecuniary obligations is regarded as a proper basis for a finding of moral disqualification * * *. In all the cases above mentioned payment was unduly delayed * * *; and in some instances promises of prompt payment appear to have been lightly broken. Such conduct as that of Mr. Sopp in these matters can not but bring discredit upon the service, both at home and abroad, and it shows, in the judgment of the department, that the offender is out of place as an officer in the Navy." Finding of board approved by the President April 10, 1906.

(g) Gunner George L. Mallery, examined October 12, 1904. Found mentally and professionally, but not morally qualified, "by reason of failure to pay his just debts, which is the result of his own misconduct." Finding approved by the President.

(h) Lieut. Robert H. Osborne, examined June 9, 1908. Found mentally but not morally or professionally qualified, his moral failure being due to indifference in contracting financial obligations which he was unable to discharge. Upon reconsideration, the board reported:

"The board respectfully adheres to its original decision, and in doing so respectfully invites attention to the fact that the deficiency found in moral qualifications was not the failure of Lieut. Osborne to pay the debt owed Mr. W. E. Rouse as such, but his failure to keep his written promise to pay in a certain time and method, his failure to show any practical reason for such neglect of his promise, and his failure to meet his obligations in the sense of making any arrangement with his creditor after the matter had been brought to his attention by the department. In the opinion of the board such absolute neglect and indifference to his obligations and to his promise show a standard of morals below that which should be required of naval officers." Finding approved by the President, July 3, 1908.

(i) Boatswain Alfred H. Hewson, examined May 3, 1909. Board found: "That Boatswain Alfred H. Hewson, United States Navy, has the mental, but not the moral nor the professional qualifications, to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted, and do not recommend him for promotion." The Acting Secretary of the Navy, May 17, 1909, recommended approval of the board's finding, stating as follows: "Upon reviewing the case it appears that Mr. Hewson has been habitually intemperate and that he has shown a lack of proper officer-like appreciation in his methods of dealing with his financial affairs." Finding approved by the President.

(j) Gunner Edmund DuB. Gould, examined April 4, 1908. Found mentally but not professionally qualified, and from the unfavorable evidence before it the board was not satisfied as to his moral fitness and did not recommend him for promotion. Upon a second appearance before an examining board it was found that he had the mental, but not the moral and professional qualifications, by reason of his failure to pay his debts, and not making the percentage necessary to qualify, and he was not recommended for promotion. The Secretary of the Navy recommended approval of the board's finding, stating in part: "From a review of the record of proceedings of the Naval Examining Board, it would appear that this officer has persistently neglected to pay his debts, that he has failed to reply to communications addressed to him officially upon these matters, and that he has failed to make any satisfactory explanation or excuse for his delinquencies in the above particulars." The board's finding was approved by the President.

(k) Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin B. Webster, examined January 6, 1898. The board reported as follows:

"The board decided that Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin B. Webster, United States Navy, has the mental and professional, but not the moral qualifications, by reason of the facts mentioned in the charges formulated by the board from the record, which are a result of his own misconduct, to perform efficiently all his duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted, and do not recommend him for promotion."

The charges formulated by the board were as follows: "First. Habits of gambling, as indicated by the letter of F. L. Crompton, of Shanghai, China, dated July 26, 1897. Second. Carelessness in the settlement of debts, as indicated by the correspondence between the candidate and his creditors, and the Navy Department. Third. Transactions of the candidate characterized as 'disgraceful,' and 'scandalous' by the Secretary of the Navy, and published in General Court-Martial Order No. 76, dated July 28, 1896." The finding of the board was approved by the President.

(l) Commander George W. Wood, examined June 29, 1893. Board reported: "By reason of the facts adduced by the evidence as to his habits of drunkenness, and the contracting of debts beyond his means, and neglect of creditors, since his last promotion, we find that Commander Wood is morally unfit for promotion to the next higher grade * * * We hereby certify that Commander George W. Wood, United States Navy, has the mental, but not the moral and professional qualifications, to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the next higher grade, and do not recommend him for promotion." Board's finding approved.

(m) In a case more recent than those noted above the candidate was found not morally qualified for promotion, the board in its report June 21, 1911, stating in part:

"After duly deliberating on all the matters herein referred to, the board believes that the candidate did not use his utmost exertions toward liquidating his debts as quickly as possible, but that from the contraction of the first debts to the payment of the last one, June 14, 1911, he has shown a degree of moral turpitude which unfits him for promotion."

The Secretary of the Navy recommended approval of the board's finding. President Tatt's decision in the case was as follows:

"I am not satisfied from the showing made that Lieutenant Burt's character has been shown to be such as to unfit him morally for promotion. Of course, the failure to pay debts and the circumstances under which the debts were contracted, when their payment is postponed or neglected, may constitute conduct unbecoming an officer. But here the debts have been paid; and they were not so great in amount or so many as to indicate utter recklessness when it is considered that Lieutenant Burt is a married man and, necessarily, had the expense of a family upon him in addition to that attendant upon his sea service; I am bound to say that the specifications which were handed to me as to the immorality involved in his relation to debts seem to be, many of them, strained, and I can not think that it is just to eliminate him from the naval service for such delinquency." (File 26260-1392:15, Jan. 2, 1912.)

In connection with moral qualifications, see also note to section 1456, Revised Statutes.

PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS.

(n) Machinist Martin M. Schreiber, examined May 17, 1909; found morally and professionally but not mentally qualified for promotion. The record in this case was returned to the board with the following remarks:

"The board is directed to reconsider this record, keeping in mind the fact that the educational qualifications of the candidate should be considered under the head of the professional qualifications, and that after considering his professional and educational qualifications together, they will report as to whether or not he is professionally qualified." (File 26260-438.)

On revision the board found the candidate morally qualified, "but because of the character of his answers to the written examination, and the lack of knowledge shown throughout his paper, that his mental and professional fitness is not established, this despite the candidate's excellent reports of fitness." Finding approved by the President.

(o) Boatswain Edward Allen, examined October 28, 1908; found morally and professionally but not mentally qualified, owing to his lack of knowledge of the English language, orthography, punctuation, etc., and because a perusal of his papers shows a marked degree of illiteracy. The record was returned to the board with the following remarks:

"After careful consideration of the matter the record of proceedings is returned to the board with the information that the department regards the above-mentioned disqualifications as constituting part of the professional examination, and not as exhibiting mental deficiency."

On revision the board found the candidate morally and mentally, but not professionally, qualified. Finding approved by the President.

Consideration by board of court-martial proceedings.—As early as 1897 the specific question [right of examining board to consider court-martial proceedings against candidate] was raised and decided by the department. In that case an examining board treated "as closed" certain matters brought to its attention for which the candidate had been tried by court-martial. The decision in that case embodied the following statement: "The fact that a case has been finally acted upon by the highest authority, or that no action whatever has been taken, does not close that portion of the officer's record to which it relates in such a manner as to relieve an examining board from the responsibility of scrutinizing it. Where an officer's record is found not good, it seems * * * then to become the especial duty of the board to make a thorough and exhaustive examination." (File 5878-97.) The same question has been judicially decided in accordance with the Navy Department's precedents and practice. With reference to the authority of an examining board to consider the proceedings of a court-martial and other facts shown by the officer's record bearing upon his moral fitness for promotion, the court in the case of Davis v. United States (24 Ct. Cls., 442) said: "The board was charged with the duty of examining into his mental, moral, and professional qualifications for advancement. What better evidence could it have of these qualifications than the candidate's actual career in his then grade? It was natural and proper for the board to look into his record. If a good officer he would proudly rely upon it and demand its examination as a right." In 1911 the question was again considered by the department (file 26260-1392, 26260-697, June 29, 1911, p. 17), and it was held: "The question of an officer's amenability to trial by court-martial for acts affecting his moral fitness can not * * * have any bearing upon the question now under consideration. For should the officer be so tried and convicted, or even acquitted, by court-martial, an examining board would still have the duty cast upon it by express provisions of law, of examining into the facts and outcome of such trial, in order to determine for itself the effect, if any, that should be given thereto with reference to the officer's qualifications for promotion in the Navy." Accordingly, when an officer is examined for promotion, all papers relating to his service since the last examination whereby he was promoted, including the complete record of the officer's trial by court-martial, where he has been so tried, are sent to the examining board by the department, and it is the duty of the board to review all the papers so furnished and determine whether or not in the members' own minds the officer has the mental, moral, and professional qualifications for promotion to the next higher grade. In a case where the officer has been tried by court-martial, were the examining board bound by the result at which the court had arrived, it would be unnecessary to forward the entire record of the trial, as merely the findings of the court would be sufficient. But the law specifically empowers the examining board "to examine into all matters on the files and records of the Navy Department" relating to the service of the officer since the last examination whereby he was promoted (sec. 1499, R. S., as amended), and requires that the whole record and finding of the board, together with "any matter on the files and records of the Navy Department, touching each case," shall be presented to the President for his approval or disapproval of the finding (sec. 1502, R. S.). It follows that, regardless of the finding which may have been reached by a court-martial, the entire record and all evidence which it contains, concerning the service of the candidate since the last examination whereby he was promoted, must be considered by the board, and that no member is justified in recommending the candidate's promotion unless, in his own opinion, the officer is qualified therefor. (File 26260-3342 : 1, Mar. 27, 1916.)

It is the province of the board to find the candidate either morally qualified or not morally qualified for promotion; the board's finding must, however, under the law, express the opinion which the members themselves entertain, and a finding which states that the candidate is morally qualified for promotion, not because the board so believes but because the board feels itself bound by the opinion which it attributes to others, is in law no finding at all. (File 26260-3342 : 1, Apr. 7, 1916.)

In its first action in this case the board stated in effect that "no matter what its personal feelings may be," it found the candidate morally qualified for promotion because the members of a court-martial had acquitted him of the serious offenses with which he had been charged, and the board "has not the power to question the findings of said board." The department returned the record, instructing the board that no "member is justified in recommending the candidate's promotion unless, in his own opinion, the officer is qualified therefor;" that the Navy Regulations specifically provide that "it shall be held obligatory upon any member of the board to decline to recommend the promotion of an officer until he is satisfied of the officer's entire mental, moral, and professional fitness for promotion"; that the so-called acquittal of the court-martial in this case had been disapproved and thereby set aside and nullified by the convening authority; and that the board has not only the "power" but the duty of making a full examination of the facts in the case and determining for itself whether the matters disclosed by the record render the candidate qualified, or not qualified, for promotion." The board disregarded the above instructions and in its revised finding stated: "The members of this board, who are subordinate in rank to the court who acquitted this candidate, feel from their training and association with commissioned officers, that the members of the court must have been influenced by extenuating circumstances as well as by the testimony that appears in the record of the court * * *". The board is of the opinion that the court-martial board, being commissioned officers of high rank under oath, upon their honor, acquitted the candidate, and in view of the above accepts the findings of the court." The court here makes the same error as previously. The department expects, and the law contemplates, that the members of an examining board shall be competent to judge for themselves whether a candidate is qualified for promotion, and to assume the responsibility placed upon them by law of so doing. It would be useless to convene such boards if they are merely to reflect the opinion which they think has been entertained by others. The board is required to make an independent investigation of the evidence before it, in order to determine the candidate's fitness for promotion, and if the evidence before the board is not sufficient, the board is by law given authority to obtain additional evidence. The board should know that the members of a court-martial are sworn to try each case before them "according to the evidence which shall come before the court," and could not lawfully make a decision based upon circumstances not appearing in the record. Also that courts-martial can not make a finding of guilty unless the evidence establishes the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, while on the other hand, members of an examining board are not required to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that a candidate is not qualified for promotion, but instead are forbidden to recommend any officer for promotion "as to whose fitness a doubt exists." In other words, before a court-martial every doubt must be resolved in favor of the accused, while before an examining board such doubts, if any, must be resolved against the candidate, and the existence even of a doubt as to his fitness requires that he be not recommended for promotion. For this reason the finding of a court-martial, even if approved, would not be conclusive upon an examining board. (File 26260-3342 : 1, Apr. 7, 1916.)

The matter of determining an officer's moral fitness for promotion is not analogous to the question of determining whether he should be brought to trial by court-martial for alleged offenses. On the contrary, an examining board is required to report the opinion of its individual members concerning the fitness of a candidate for promotion, regardless of whether unfavorable matters upon the candidate's record have been acted upon by a court-martial or not, and regardless of the finding reached by the court-martial if one has been convened. (File 26260-3628:1, Aug. 25, 1916.)

Consideration of misconduct by candidate which is not within the reach of a court-martial.—Misconduct in private life may be the subject of trial by court-martial and the department endeavors to take appropriate disciplinary action whenever such cases are brought to its attention. However under ordinary circumstances the domestic relations of an officer, unless there has been misconduct on his part reflecting discreditably on the naval service and justifying a recourse to disciplinary proceedings under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, are not regarded as matters falling within the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, but are properly under the jurisdiction of civil courts. Instances, however, may arise where misconduct in private life would not be within the reach of law or discipline to the extent of court-martial proceedings. Such matters are nevertheless subject to investigation by an examining board in determining an officer's fitness for promotion, where they have occurred since the last examination whereby he was promoted or where they have not previously been inquired into and decided upon, or where they constitute a "fact continuing" affecting his present fitness for promotion. (File 26521-179, Feb. 19, 1917.)

Consideration of matters under investigation by civil courts.—The members of an examining board are forbidden to recommend any officer for promotion "as to whose fitness a doubt exists." The board has the duty devolved upon it of making a thorough investigation into the matters which are the subject of correspondence referred to it by the department, examining witnesses with reference thereto if necessary, and of determining as the result of such investigation, together with any other matters of an unfavorable character which may be upon the candidate's record, whether or not the candidate is morally qualified for promotion; and the board is not authorized to delay its proceedings pending a determination of litigation in the civil courts involving the relations between the candidate and his wife. It is possible that a final adjudication upon the merits of the controversy may never be reached in the civil proceedings, and even if it were this would not relieve the board of its duty to make an independent investigation of the matters at issue in so far as they may affect the moral fitness of the candidate for promotion. (File 26260-3628:1, Aug. 25, 1916.)

Duty of board to weigh evidence without requesting department's instructions.—

"With regard to the request contained in your letter above-mentioned, that the board be instructed as to whether or not it should consider the report of the court of inquiry referred to, the report of Paymaster Allen, dated November 22, 1888, and the action of the department relative thereto, as a final disposition of the matters, you are informed that it is for the board to examine and determine as to whether or not these reports have been finally acted upon by the department; if acted upon, what weight should be given to the department's action; and if not acted upon, what weight should be given to them in the absence of such action by the department." (File 1966-93, May 16, 1893.)

"The determination of the question of the fitness of an officer for promotion is vested by law in the examining board and in the President, and it is the duty of the examining board unembarrassed by instructions from this department, to give such consideration to all facts occurring since the examination of the candidate for his last promotion as well as to all such as appear upon the file and records of the department, as will enable it to reach a just conclusion." (File 1966-93, May 16, 1893.)

An examining board having been duly appointed and organized in pursuance of law, it becomes its duty, in accordance with the requirements of section 1496 of the Revised Statutes, to ascertain and report upon the mental, moral, and professional fitness of the candidate for promotion. As sections 1499 and 1502 of the Revised Statutes empower the board to examine any matter on the files and records of the Navy Department touching each case which may in the opinion of the board be necessary to assist it in making up its judgment relative to the case of any officer under consideration, and it being understood that all such matters upon the files and records of the department are placed at the disposal of the board, it is deemed proper that the board should be left to the performance of its duties untrammelled by instructions from the department. (File 1966-93, May 16, 1893.)

Burden of proof.—The following is quoted from "General Instructions" formulated by the Secretary of the Navy on December 14, 1894, concerning proof of moral fitness, as a result of questions presented in the case of Lieut. Commander Frederick W. Crocker (see also file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911):

"6. The lieutenant commander whose case is now being considered, having arrived at the point where he is entitled to promotion to the next higher grade, under conditions fixed by the statute, stands in the position of an applicant for an appointment. He is no longer to be a lieutenant commander, but is an applicant for appointment to the position of a commander in the Navy of the United States, an office of great responsibility. He is to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, provided he is competent and worthy. The burden of proof is upon him to show that he complies with these conditions. He is the actor in these proceedings, which are instituted simply to ascertain the facts upon which the President shall act in sending his name to the Senate, and by which that body is to be guided in confirming or refusing to confirm him.

"7. Any reasonable doubt that may arise out of the evidence offered is, in all cases of this kind, to be resolved in favor of the Government and against the applicant. Should the applicant fail of appointment under these rules, the law directs that he is to be discharged from the service, unless circumstances exist which authorize his retirement. If the refusal to appoint were intended as a punishment, the law would not contemplate payment of a year's or any other salary on his discharge. Such discharge simply means that the Government no longer needs the applicant's services.

"8. It follows, therefore, from the nature of these proceedings, that the statutes of limitation, quoted by counsel, have no application whatever. Everything that has occurred during the applicant's term of office as lieutenant commander, or at any other time, inquiry into which is not prohibited by the law and regulations [see sec. 1499, R. S., as amended], may be adduced for the purpose of showing that he is not competent, or, if competent, is not worthy of the appointment to the office of commander which he now seeks. It can not be contended that because the Government has not instituted proceedings by court-martial it has, therefore, been negligent in the matter of defending itself against a claim of a candidate to serve it, and is, by reason of its own neglect, compelled to appoint an unworthy or incompetent person to office. The Government has a right, when an inquiry of this nature is instituted, to satisfy itself of the fitness of the candidate for promotion, to introduce in evidence records made in accordance with the regulations lawfully prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and any other testimony that may be necessary to satisfy itself of the fitness or unfitness of candidates for office.

"9. The department has, however, decided that the members of an examining board should reach their conclusions respecting the mental and moral qualifications of the candidate upon the evidence of record only, independently of any personal knowledge which they may have on the subject. Any facts within the personal knowledge of members of the board, important to be considered, should be made matter of record and the candidate given an opportunity to meet them. Paragraph 8, article 1715, United States Navy Regulations, is accordingly amended so as to read as follows:

"The onus of establishing professional fitness shall be held to rest entirely upon the officer under examination. The mental and moral fitness of the candidate shall be assumed unless a doubt shall be raised on either head in the mind of any member of the board, from the answers contained in any of the interrogatories or reports on fitness, from the general reputation of the candidate, or from other sources of evidence of record. It shall be held obligatory upon any member of the board to decline to recommend the promotion of an officer until he be satisfied of the officer's entire mental, moral, and professional fitness for promotion. The board, while careful not to do injustice to an officer regarding whom there is any doubt, shall take equal care to safeguard the honor and dignity of the service, recommending no officer for promotion as to whose fitness a doubt exists.' " (This regulation is now embodied in Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, secs. 620, 643.)

Finding of majority of board governs.—The board may find an officer qualified for promotion by a majority, and one member (a minority) may find him not so qualified, and such a majority finding, when approved, is valid. (File 26260-1244, Apr. 14, 1911.)

In case of dissent the record must show those of the members who concurred in, and those who dissented from, the opinion of the board, with the reasons for dissent. (Sec. 650, Naval Courts and Boards.)

This section not applicable to temporary promotions.—Sections 1493 and 1496, Revised Statutes, clearly relate to promotions in the permanent Navy. The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), authorizes temporary promotions to all grades in the Navy above the lowest grades, and provides (sec. 8) that all temporary promotions "shall continue in force until otherwise directed by the President * * *." Said act however makes no express provision as to the manner in which such temporary promotions shall be made. On the other hand, said act in several places refers to existing law with reference to permanent promotions. The fact that the act of May 22, 1917, makes repeated references to the "permanent" Navy or Marine Corps, that it also makes repeated references to existing law in connection with permanent promotions, that it says nothing about existing law with reference to temporary promotions, and that it expressly makes such temporary promotions revocable by the President at any time, leads irresistibly to the conclusion that the provisions of existing law with reference to promotions in the permanent Navy are not controlling as to the temporary promotions provided for in said act, but that such temporary promotions may be made during the war in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Accordingly held, that an officer before being temporarily promoted is not required by law to pass any examination either as to his mental, moral, professional, or physical qualifications; but that it is within the discretion of the President to determine what examinations if any preliminary to temporary promotions are advisable for the proper protection of the interests of the Government. (File 28687-22, June 14, 1917, citing Taylor v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 155, noted under sec. 1370, R. S. Compare 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 341, noted under sec. 1370, R. S., "Application of statutory requirements to appointments under subsequent laws." See also 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 173, as to provisional advancements in rank in the Naval Reserve Force.)

The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), clearly indicates that it did not contemplate the passing of statutory examinations prior to temporary promotions authorized therein, for it expressly requires examination of all officers prior to permanent promotion, notwithstanding that they have in the meantime been temporarily promoted to higher grades; and it would be an absurdity in the case, for example, of an officer holding a permanent commission as lieutenant and temporarily promoted during the war to the grades of lieutenant commander and commander, and who had been required to pass the statutory examinations prior to such temporary promotions, to require him thereafter to pass the prescribed examinations for permanent promotion to the grade of lieutenant commander when he became due for such permanent promotion. (File 28687-22, June 14, 1917.)

Sec. 1497. [Promotion to rear admiral in time of peace. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1497. In time of peace no person shall be promoted from the list of commodores to the grade of rear-admiral, on the active list, until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all his duties at sea has been established as provided in the preceding section."—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 7, v. 12, p. 584. Amended by 21 April, 1864, c. 63, v. 13, p. 53.)

It was superseded by the act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), which abolished the grade of commodore on the active list of the Navy (see note to sec. 1362, R. S.). Thereafter promotions to the grade of rear admiral were made by seniority from the grade of captain (see sec. 1458, R. S.), subject to the examinations required by sections 1493 and 1496, Revised Statutes. New provisions for promotion to the grade of rear admiral, by selection from the grade of captain, were contained in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), which said act further provided (39 Stat., 579), that officers selected for promotion thereunder "shall prior to promotion be subject in all respects to the examinations prescribed by law for officers promoted by seniority."

Selection of rear admirals during war was provided for by section 1365, Revised Statutes.

Selection by the President of officers to command squadrons with the rank and title of "flag-officer" is provided for by sections 1434, 1463, and 1464, Revised Statutes. The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 89), provided that said sections of the Revised Statutes were not to be construed as amended or repealed by the provisions of that act authorizing the designation of officers to command fleets and subdivisions thereof with the rank of admiral and vice admiral while so serving. The act last cited further provided that in time of war selections under the provisions thereof were to be made from the grades of rear admiral or captain on the active list, and in time of peace from among the rear admirals on the active list. The rank of "flag-officer" under section 1434, Revised Statutes, is now rear admiral (see note to said section).

Sec. 1498. [Examining boards.] Such examining board shall consist of not less than three officers, senior in rank to the officer to be examined.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 2, v. 13, p. 53.)

Provisions of this section held mandatory.—Where a naval examining board consisted of three officers, one of whom was not senior in rank to the officer to be examined, held that the proceedings of said board should be disapproved as fatally defective. The law being mandatory in its terms, all the members of the board must be senior to the officer under examination before them. (File 26260-1244, Apr. 14, 1911.)

Sec. 1499. [Powers of.] Said board shall have power to take testimony and to examine all matter on the files and records of the Navy Department relating to any officer whose case may be considered by them. The witnesses, when present, shall be sworn by the president of the board.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 1, v. 13, p. 53.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of June 18, 1878 (20 Stat., 165), which provided "that hereafter in the examination of officers in the Navy for promotion no fact which occurred prior to the last examination of the candidate whereby he was promoted, which has been enquired into and decided upon, shall be again enquired into, but such previous examination, if approved, shall be conclusive, unless such fact continuing shows the unfitness of the officer to perform all his duties at sea."

Refusal of Navy Department to furnish board with records prior to last examination of candidate.—As has been judicially stated (Davis v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 442), the above section of the Revised Statutes "opened up the whole past life of an applicant for promotion, and made him liable at each step in his career to a fresh investigation, long after the event, of charges before enquired into and decided upon." To remedy any injustice this may have caused, probably, the statute of June 18, 1878, was passed. This statute places a bar in the way of a new examination into old accusations or facts, and starts the officer in his higher grade with a clean record, unless the fact be a continuing one, showing the candidate's unfitness to perform all his duties at sea." Again, in the same case (Davis v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 445), it was stated: "The limit placed by Congress upon the scope of inquiry was that past issues, old charges, once enquired into by competent authority, decided upon and the decision approved, should not be reopened. When promoted to the grade of pay inspector Davis's record as paymaster had been investigated by an examining board and passed upon. The finding had been approved. The statute holds that decision to be final; it closes forever, so far as examining boards are concerned, one period of the officer's professional career, unless a 'fact continuing shows the unfitness of the officer to perform all his duties at sea.'" The record of the candidate in this case prior to his last promotion does not contain any matter which the board is authorized to inquire into by the act of June 18, 1878, and the Navy Regulations, consequently the department does not deem it advisable to furnish such record to the board as requested by the president thereof. (File 26521-173, Jan. 25, 1917.)

Upon the examination of officers for promotion the law in explicit language prohibits inquiry into any fact which occurred prior to the last examination whereby the candidate was promoted, which has already been inquired into and decided upon, and specifically provides that "such previous examination, if approved, shall be conclusive." Only one exception to this mandatory rule is contained in the statute, and that is where the "fact continuing shows the unfitness of the officer to perform all his duties at sea." The record of the candidate in this case prior to his last examination is entirely clear of all offenses of the character mentioned by the board, and therefore does not contain any matters into which the board is authorized by law to inquire, and for this reason it is held that the department has not the right to furnish the same to the board in response to its request. Such action would produce a deviation from the statutory provisions, and the precedent thus established might some time in the future result in the proceedings of a naval examining board being set aside and annulled as fatally irregular and defective. (File 26521-173:1, Feb. 1, 1917.)

For other cases, see note to section 1496, Revised Statutes, under "Consideration by board of court-martial proceedings."

Records submitted to Board on Selection for Promotion.—The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578, 579), relating to the selection of officers for promotion, provides that the selection board shall be furnished by the Secretary of the Navy "with the record of each officer." Under this law the board must be furnished with the entire record of the officer since his appointment to the Navy, and not merely the record of the officer in his existing grade. The act of June 18, 1878, modifying section 1496, Revised Statutes, is inapplicable to the selection board, whose examination of the entire record would seem to be almost essential to determine comparative fitness. The act of June 18, 1878, can still have effective operation with reference to the promotion of officers to grades below commander, and also with reference to the promotion of officers to the grades of commander, captain, and rear admiral, as the act of August 29, 1916, continues in force the provisions of the Revised Statutes relating to the promotion board, as supplement-

tary to selection in the latter cases, by the provision "that any officers so selected shall prior to promotion, be subject in all respects to the examinations prescribed by law for officers promoted by seniority." (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 87, concurring in opinion of the Judge Advocate General, Nov. 28, 1916, file 26521-169, which overruled the opinion of the Acting Judge Advocate General of Nov. 14, 1916, file 26521-169).

Counsel for examining board.—A letter having been received by an examining board signed as counsel for a candidate for promotion the board requested that some person conversant with the law be detailed to attend the sittings of the board and act as their adviser in matters of law and procedure. The department accordingly designated to advise the board in matters of law and procedure an officer attached to the Judge Advocate General's office who had been assigned when occasion required to the duty of conducting courts of inquiry and courts-martial. This action was taken in accordance with the precedent established some 12 years before when the same candidate was examined for promotion to his present grade (pay inspector). On that occasion grave matters affecting his fitness were upon record and the first naval examining board which examined him found him neither morally nor professionally qualified for promotion. Col. Robert G. Ingersoll appeared as his counsel before that board and Assistant Attorney General Simons was assigned to the duty of assisting the board during the examination. (Memo. Sec. Navy, Mar. 7, 1893, in relation to the examination of Pay Insp. John H. Stevenson for promotion to pay director.)

Sec. 1500. [Officer may be present and make statement.] Any officer whose case is to be acted upon by such examining board shall have the right to be present, if he so desires, and to submit a statement of his case on oath.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 3, v. 13, p. 53.)

Provisions of this section held mandatory.—Every officer of the Navy whose eligibility to promotion is to be acted upon by an examining board under the provisions of sections 1496, 1498-1505, Revised Statutes, has the right to be present at his examination. He must be duly notified of the time and place of his examination, and unless he waives his right or expresses a lack of desire to be present, he must be given leave of absence or permission to attend. No finding of the board adverse to his qualifications for promotion can be made without a personal examination of such officer unless he fails to appear after having been duly notified to do so (sec. 1503, R. S.). Held, that the proceedings and findings of the naval examining board in this case are fatally irregular and defective in that (1) said officer, being at the time in the discharge of his duty on shipboard, and under orders of his superior officer, was not notified of the time and place of his examination for promotion, and was not given and did not have an opportunity or permission to exercise his right to appear and be heard at such examination; and (2) said board of examiners rejected said officer and his application for promotion without any examination of himself, although he had not failed, "after having been duly notified, to appear before said board." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 251.)

Waiver of right to appear must be affirmative.—From the provisions of sections 1500 et seq., it is apparent that in every case the officer whose case is to be acted upon has the right to appear and to be heard. The declaration of this right to be present carries with it a command to those having control of his person to relieve him from restraint and permit him to exercise the right thus conferred. An officer on duty can not leave without orders or permission; it is therefore the manifest duty of the proper officers to give to the candidate timely notice of the time when and place where the board will meet to consider his case, and to give him also leave of absence and permission to attend; or to ascertain from him that he did not desire to be present. Without this the officer is effectually deprived of the right secured to him by the statute. The right to be present may be waived; but in order to do this some affirmative act of waiver is necessary and it is not inferred from the fact that the officer continues in the performance of the duty to which he has been ordered nor is this any expression of a lack of desire to be present at his examination. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 251.)

Correction of action taken where officer not accorded the right to be present.—In this case the officer appeared before the board, but the examination was temporarily suspended and he was granted permission to go home and to be absent until notified by the board to appear. He failed to receive this notice until after the examination, which was resumed during his absence, had been completed. The proceedings and findings of the board were approved by the President and his orders in the case duly executed by the retirement of the officer under section 1447, Revised Statutes, but the vacancy created by such retirement remains unfilled: Held, that the action of the President can be revoked and the officer allowed a rehearing, the vacancy created by his retirement not having been filled and no rights of any other person having therefore intervened. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 20.)

Certain officers in the grade of lieutenant, by reason of vacancies in the next higher grade and their seniority became eligible for promotion to the vacancies upon passing the examinations required by section 1496. They were examined and found disqualified professionally for promotion. They were suspended from promotion (sec. 1505, R. S.) and other officers next in order of seniority were examined, found qualified, and appointed to said vacancies. Lieut. Barnes was one of the officers first examined and the Attorney General (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 251, 258) held that said examinations were fatally irregular and defective. In consequence of the Attorney General's conclusion the four officers who had been suspended from promotion were again examined, found qualified, and commissioned to fill the vacancies in the grade of lieutenant commander to which they were originally entitled. This necessitated the changing of the dates of promotion to the grade of lieutenant commander of those officers who in the meantime had qualified and been commissioned. The Secretary of the Navy properly, in accordance with the Attorney General's opinion, treated the examination as void and gave the officers other examinations. Held, that the promotions first made were contrary to law (section 1458, R. S.) as the officers so promoted were not the senior officers entitled to such promotion, in view of the fact that the examinations first held were irregular; accordingly held that the commissions issued to such officers were ineffective to give them the offices, but that such officers were de facto lieutenant commanders from the date they received notice of their commissions and entered upon duty thereunder, although such promotions were subsequently set aside as illegal; and that pay received as such de facto lieutenant commanders can not be recovered back. (17 Comp. Dec., 611). Under similar circumstances, an officer who did not receive notice of his promotion until after the date from which he took rank when subsequently promoted in accordance with law to another vacancy, was neither a de jure nor de facto officer during the interim and therefore is not entitled to pay as lieutenant commander for that period. (18 Comp. Dec., 340.)

Examination by supervisory board.—Where the written professional examination of an officer is conducted under the supervision of a board of officers where he is stationed, before which supervisory board the officer was ordered to and did appear for examination, but the record of proceedings of said supervisory board and all the evidence before it were transmitted to the Naval Examining Board at Washington, D. C., to be finally passed upon by the latter board subject to the approval or disapproval of the President, held that the officers who supervised such examination as was had at the officer's station were not the naval examining board referred to in the statutes; their office was merely to collect and put into proper written form certain data and evidence bearing upon the qualifications of the candidate and to transmit the same properly certified to the examining board at Washington and it is the latter board to which the statutes refer, before which the candidate has the right to be present. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 251.)

Where an officer appearing before a supervisory board formally waived his right to appear before the statutory board, which latter board found him not professionally qualified for promotion, it was decided by the Secretary of the Navy, in accordance with the Attorney General's opinion (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 251, noted above), that it would be legal to suspend the officer from promotion in accordance with section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended, but that as a matter of expediency, he would be permitted to appear before a statutory board for personal examination. (File 26260-2744, May 22, 1916.)

Candidate should be formally notified of charges against him.—While it has been held by the Navy Department that the candidate having been present during the examination and known the testimony introduced, and having announced that he would not avail himself of the opportunity given by the board to offer further testimony, had no ground for complaint on account of the fact that he had not been formally notified that the evidence tended to show that he was addicted to habits of intemperance, the department deems it proper that in a case of this character the candidate should be formally notified of the charges against him and heard upon them as indicated in the published instructions for naval courts and board. (File 2136-98, Apr. 12, 1898.)

Statement by candidate not under oath.—The candidate has the right to submit a statement of his case on oath, if he chooses so to do; however, where he did not express any desire to make his statement under oath, but submitted a statement not under oath, it must be taken that he waived the right to make said statement under oath. The proceedings of the board in such case were accordingly approved by the President. (File 26260-1678, Feb. 28, 1912; see also file 26260-1360:1, Jan. 30 and Feb. 12, 1912.)

Sec. 1501. [Record.] The statement of such officer, if made, and the testimony of the witnesses and his examination shall be recorded.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 3, v. 13, p. 53.)

The Judge Advocate General shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all boards for the examination of officers for promotion in the naval service. (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164, amended June 5, 1896, 29 Stat., 251.)

Instructions for the keeping of records of examining boards and the form of such records, are contained in Naval Courts and Boards, 1917.

Sec. 1502. [Revision by the President.] Any matter on the files and records of the Navy Department, touching each case, which may, in the opinion of the board, be necessary to assist them in making up their judgment, shall, together with the whole record and finding, be presented to the President for his approval or disapproval of the finding.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 3, v. 13, p. 53.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of June 18, 1878 (20 Stat., 165), which provided "that hereafter in the examination of officers in the Navy for promotion no fact which occurred prior to the last examination of the candidate whereby he was promoted, which has been enquired into and decided upon, shall be again enquired into, but such previous examination, if approved, shall be conclusive, unless such fact continuing shows the unfitness of the officer to perform all his duties at sea." Also by act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 90), which provided that "the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to direct the Secretary of the Navy to take such action on the records of proceedings of naval examining boards and boards of naval surgeons for the promotion of officers of the Navy as is now required by law to be taken by the President."

Supervisory power of President over physical examination.—Section 3 of the act of April 21, 1864 (sec. 1502, R. S.), refers to action by the President upon the finding of the board of examining officers provided for in section 1 of that act, which passes upon the "mental, moral, and professional fitness" of the candidate. There is nothing in said act constituting the board of naval surgeons, as to who shall appoint them, or as to the number of which the board shall consist, nor any express provision for approval or disapproval by the President. However, by the fourth section of the act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 584), provision was made for an advisory board to report upon the "moral, mental, physical, and professional qualifications" of line officers for promotion; and section 5 of the act of April 21, 1864, provides that all officers not recommended for promotion under the said provision in the act of 1862 "shall have the right to present themselves for examination, according to the provisions of this act; and if found duly qualified, and such finding be approved by the President of the United States, they shall be promoted," etc. Although this provision of the act of 1864 provides only for such officers who have been before the board established by the act of 1862, and were not recommended by that board, it affords safe ground for holding that the same approval exists as to all other officers examined by both boards in accordance with the act of 1864. Accordingly, held, that the President has a supervisory power over the action of the board of naval surgeons provided for in section 4 of the act of April 21, 1864 (sec. 1493, R. S.), and may approve or disapprove the same. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 347.)

No officer can be promoted until his physical fitness to discharge all his duties at sea has been favorably passed upon by a board and the board's action has the approval of the President. (Hooper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90, 102.)

The conclusions of any military court, board, or commission must, before being carried into execution, have the approval of the Commander in Chief or of some one representing him. Accordingly, even where the law does not expressly provide for approval of boards in the Army, such boards must receive the approval of the Secretary of War, whose action is conclusively presumed to be that of the President, in order to be valid and effective. It is not, however, essential that this approval should be express or indicated in any formal language; it might be indicated by merely giving effect, through appropriate orders, to the findings of the board. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 193; file 26266—627:1, Jan. 30, 1919.)

See also act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 90), quoted above as amendment to section 1502.

Approval or disapproval of President required to give effect to findings.—Under the law a candidate's status could not become that of an officer qualified for promotion until his physical fitness for the promotion had been found by a board of naval surgeons, as required by sections 1493 and 1494, Revised Statutes, and his mental, moral, and professional fitness therefor had been found by a board of examining officers appointed under section 1496, and the findings of both of these boards to that effect had been approved by the President as required by section 1502 (22 Comp. Dec., 153, citing 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 347, 18 Comp. Dec., 466, Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 257, 266). On the other hand, his status could not become that of an officer disqualified for promotion or to whom the presumption of disqualification attaches by the mere finding of the board alone, without its approval by the President, as section 1502 requires equally all findings of a board, whether of fitness or unfitness, to be presented to the President for his approval or disapproval, and an officer is entitled to the benefit of the President's action on an adverse finding before being classed as disqualified or being presumed to be disqualified. (22 Comp. Dec., 153; compare Hooper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90.)

The promotion of an officer can not take place (under secs. 1493, 1494, 1496, and 1502) until his fitness for the promotion has been established to the satisfaction of both the board of naval surgeons and the board of examining officers, and the recommendation of both boards to this effect has been rendered operative by the approval of the President. (18 Comp. Dec., 466, citing 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 347; Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 257, 266-267; Adamson v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 623, 628; Crygier, Admx. v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 268; 17 Comp. Dec., 167, etc.)

Suspension of action by the President.—An officer absent from the United States on duty on a foreign station became due for promotion by seniority; he was nominated for the promotion, "subject to the required examination before being commissioned"; the Senate advised and consented to the appointment of said officer and others similarly nominated, "agreeably to their nominations, respectively"; the same day the President signed a commission appointing the officer to the higher grade for which nominated and confirmed, which commission was given to the Secretary of the Navy, who held it to be delivered to the officer upon his passing the examination required by law; after his return to the United States some years later, the officer was duly examined, and reported qualified by the board in conformity with section 1504, Revised Statutes; the President took the following action upon the board's report: "After examination of the record I have concluded to suspend final action upon the finding of the board until an opportunity shall have been afforded Lieut. Jouett to further establish his fitness for promotion, which, considering the evidence of record indicating a tendency on his part to intemperate habits, I regard as open to question. He will therefore be ordered for duty at sea, for such period as the Secretary of the Navy may deem proper, and his conduct while on such service will be reported for my information." The President's order was obeyed, and more than a year later he disapproved the findings and recommendations of the board and directed the officer to be reexamined. The following year the officer was reexamined and found not morally qualified, which finding was approved by the President and the officer discharged from the service in accordance with the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), (which was enacted after he had become due for promotion and had been nominated, confirmed, and his commission made out subject to examination). Held, That the President's approval or disapproval of the findings is, by section 1502, Revised Statutes, distinctly required, and it is contemplated that he shall examine the whole record and findings; having the duty imposed upon him to approve or disapprove, the President had the power to suspend action or to seek further information; these are necessary incidents of the executive reviewing power; to become operative the board's decision must be acted upon by the President, and the nomination and confirmation of a naval officer for promotion, "subject to the required examination before being commissioned," do not take the case out of the operation of the Revised Statutes, section 1502, which makes examinations subject to the approval of the President. (Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 257.)

An officer was examined for promotion in course to fill a vacancy existing on August 23, 1912; the board of naval surgeons which examined him on December 9, 1912, found him physically qualified for promotion and said finding was approved by the President July 1, 1913; the examining board, which examined him on February 4, 1913, found him mentally and professionally, but not morally, qualified; this finding was not presented to the President and no action was taken by him thereon. He was again examined, May 8, 1913, and found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified; the President on July 1, 1913, directed that action upon this report be suspended for one year; he was again examined, August 19, 1914, and found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified; the President on September 16, 1914, directed that action upon this report be withheld for a period of six months, "when such action will be taken as the nature of a special report which will be required from his commanding officer will warrant." At the end of six months the required findings and special report were submitted to the President and on March 25, 1915, he approved the findings of the examining boards of May 8, 1913, and August 19, 1914, to the effect that the officer was mentally, morally, and professionally qualified. The President having previously approved the findings of the medical board as to the physical fitness of the candidate, upon his approval of the findings as to his mental, moral, and professional qualifications on March 24, 1915, the candidate's status became that of an officer qualified for promotion in course to fill a vacancy, who had not previously been disqualified for the promotion and to whom no presumption of disqualification attached prior to his actual qualification, and who therefore is presumed to have been qualified from the date of the vacancy. (22 Comp. Dec., 153; compare Hooper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90.)

Section 1502 contemplates an examination by the President of the whole record and findings and no limitation is placed upon the time which he may take in approving or disapproving a finding. Having the duty imposed upon him under the statute to approve or disapprove a finding, he had the power to suspend doing so and to seek further information, and his suspension of July 1, 1913, of such action in this case for one year on the findings of the mental, moral, and professional fitness of the board of May 8, 1913, and his further withholding, February 16, 1914, of such action for six months subsequent to the finding to the same effect of the board of August 19, 1914, were necessary incidents of his exercise of the reviewing power conferred on him by section 1502. (22 Comp. Dec., 153, citing Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 257, 262.)

An officer became due for promotion by length of service on December 27, 1912; was examined by a board of medical examiners on February 15, 1913, and by a naval examining board on February 19, 1913, and found qualified by both boards. In view, however, of unfavorable reports of fitness in his case, the Secretary of the Navy recommended and the President directed on April 9, 1913, that final action on the findings and recommendations of the boards be suspended for a period of one year, at the expiration of which time he would be again examined. On October 31, 1914, he was reexamined by a board of medical examiners and found not physically qualified for promotion. This finding was approved by the President on November 21, 1914. He was examined by a naval retiring board on December 21, 1914, and found temporarily incapacitated for active service, and on June 12, 1915, was reported by another naval retiring board not incapacitated for active service; both reports were approved by the President. On September 15, 1915, he was examined by a board of medical examiners and found physically qualified for promotion, but under date of November 17, 1915, was found by a naval examining board to be not professionally qualified; both reports were approved by the President and the officer was suspended from promotion for six months in accordance with section 1505, as amended. On July 7, 1916, he was examined by a board of medical examiners which found him not physically qualified for promotion and recommended that he be re-examined physically in six months; no action was taken by the President upon this report. On January 22, 1917, he was again examined by a board of medical examiners and found physically qualified for promotion and on January 30, 1917, a naval examining board reported him mentally, morally, and professionally qualified for promotion; both reports were approved by the President on April 5, 1917. He was commissioned in the higher grade for which found qualified with date from June 27, 1913, six months after the date on which he originally became due for promotion. The officer brought suit in the Court of Claims for pay of the higher grade from the date stated in his commission, and the attorney for the United States conceded his right to recover. Nevertheless the Court of Claims decided that the officer was not entitled to pay from the date stated in his commission, June 27, 1913, as authorized by the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892). Four opinions were filed by the court in this case, in which the President's course in suspending action upon the favorable reports of the boards which first examined the officer and found him qualified was construed as equivalent to an unfavorable finding by said boards. In the opinion of Hay, J., it was stated with reference to this point: "It does not appear from the record whether the unfavorable reports of fitness referred to professional or physical unfitness; and for a proper determination of the case it makes no difference to which they referred. If he was physically unfit, and the President for that reason suspended for a period of one year the findings and recommendations of the boards, and directed him to be examined again at the end of that period, then the plaintiff could not have been promoted in pursuance of law at the time he was examined, nor until he became physically qualified * * *. It also appears that the plaintiff was physically disqualified down to June 12, 1915. * * *. If he failed professionally on his first examination and failed again on his reexamination, he is illegally in the service and certainly can not now ask for the pay of an office to which he is not entitled. So whether he was physically or professionally unfit in his first examination he has no standing in this court." In the opinion of Barney, J., it was said: "As before stated, the plaintiff in this case was deferred from rank as chief machinist for six months, presumably by reason of having failed once professionally on an examination, but was not deferred from rank on advance on account of physical disability. * * * Section 1493, it will be seen, suspends him from promotion automatically during the period that he is not qualified for service at sea, which of course is during the time he is physically disqualified for promotion. Thus, construing section 1493, section 1505, as amended, and the act of March 4, 1913, together the plaintiff was automatically (by sec. 1493) and actually by law (act of Mar. 4, 1913) suspended from promotion during the whole period extending from the completion of his six years' service as machinist (Dec. 29, 1912) to a date six months after his failure on examination professionally, which would bring that time to June 16, 1916, beyond which his rank could not be extended." Campbell, C. J., referring to the qualifications for promotion of the officer at the time he originally became due, stated: "Not only is it thus made to appear that he was not qualified, but the record goes further and affirmatively shows that he was disqualified. To have promoted him in the face of this record would have been in total disregard of section 1493." It was further stated in the opinion last cited: "Up to September 15, 1915, the plaintiff had been found physically disqualified and therefore could not be promoted because of the provisions of section 1493. * * * He was examined on July 7, 1916, and was reported incapacitated for duty. While no action appears to have been taken by the President on the last report, the officer could not be promoted under section 1493 in face of that report unless inaction upon it be held to be equivalent to no report by the board. It was not until January 22, 1917, that plaintiff qualified under section 1493." (Hooper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90.) The Secretary of the Navy submitted to the Department of Justice a memorandum concerning this case with request that if deemed advisable same be placed before the Court of Claims in any further proceedings which might be had: motion for a new trial was made by claimant and was overruled by the Court of Claims before opportunity had presented for the Attorney General to consider the question of submitting said memorandum to the court. The Secretary of the Navy thereupon submitted to the Court of Claims certain questions bearing upon the action to be taken in this case, for a ruling by the court thereupon under section 148 of the Judicial Code, and the court decided that it was without jurisdiction under that section to answer the questions so submitted. It was thereupon decided by the Navy Department that, as the case stood, the appointment which had been issued to this officer was inoperative and ineffectual, and that the necessary steps should be taken to issue him a new appointment; also that as the Court of Claims' decision appeared to have been based principally upon the fact that no final action had ever been taken upon the first examinations in this case, the records thereof should be submitted to the President with recommendation that the finding of the board of medical examiners that this officer was physically qualified when first examined be approved, and that the finding as to his professional qualifications be disapproved; which was accordingly done, and upon such action having been taken by the President the officer was renominated, reconfirmed, and recommissioned with rank from the same date as stated in his original commission. (File 26266-627:1.) He then brought suit in the Court of Claims for pay from date stated in his new commission (Hooper v. U. S., Ct. Cls., No. 33,975), but this suit was subsequently withdrawn by him prior to decision.

Approval by President subject to recommendation of Secretary of the Navy.—An officer was examined for promotion and found not physically qualified therefor. The Bureau of Medicine and Surgery recommended that he "be ordered to naval hospital for operative treatment, and that he be reexamined when he has recovered to determine his physical fitness for promotion." The Secretary of the Navy, reciting the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, transmitted the record to the President with his advice "that the findings and recommendation of the board of medical examiners in this case be approved, with a view to effecting the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the above-quoted indorsement." The President's action upon the record was as follows: "The finding and recommendation of the board in this case are approved." Thereafter the officer was admitted to the naval hospital for operative treatment, after which he was again examined and found physically qualified for promotion. Held, that it would be too strict, if not a strained construction of the President's action to say that he merely approved the finding of the board of medical examiners when as a matter of fact he had before him not only their report but the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery and the advice thereon of the Secretary of the Navy. In view of the course that was subsequently taken it would seem that the construction adopted and acted upon, that the Executive had approved the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery which accompanied the report, indorsed as it was by the Secretary of the Navy, that the officer be reexamined after receiving operative treatment, can not be said under the facts of the case to have been an unreasonable construction. Accordingly the officer did not lose any right to be promoted to the vacancy for which first examined with rank from date of said vacancy. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237; compare 22 Comp. Dec., 565, 591, 646.)

Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.—The proceedings of an examining board to determine the qualifications of an officer of the Army for promotion can not be reviewed by the civil courts by writ of certiorari. The decision of the board is not final but must be reported with the proceedings to the President, and may be approved or disapproved by him. This is the only relief from the errors or the injustice that may be done by the board which is provided. (Reaves v. Ainsworth, 219 U. S., 296, 306.)

Sec. 1503. [No officer to be rejected without examination.] No officer shall be rejected until after such public examination of himself and of the records of the Navy Department in his case, unless he fails, after having been duly notified, to appear before said board.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 3, v. 13, p. 53.)

Statute held to be mandatory.—The language of the section, "no officer shall be rejected until after such public examination of himself," refers manifestly to the previous sections giving him the right to appear and be examined under oath; and it is this personal examination which must be had in every case before an adverse finding, or which is the same thing, before the officer can be rejected. These provisions make it certain, first, in every case the officer has a right to be present at his examination; second, in every case he must be duly notified of the time and place of his examination and unless he waives his right or expresses a lack of desire to be present, he must be given leave of absence or permission to attend; and third, no finding of the board adverse to his qualifications for promotion can be made without a personal examination of the officer himself unless he fails to appear after having been duly notified to do so. The proceedings of an examining board are fatally irregular and defective where the officer being at the time in the performance of his duty on shipboard under orders of his superior officer, was not notified of the time and place of his examination for promotion and was not given and did not have an opportunity or permission to exercise his right to appear and be heard at such examination, and nevertheless said board of examiners rejected said officer and his application for promotion without any examination of himself, although he had not failed "to appear, after being duly notified, before said board." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 251.)

While the expression, "no officer shall be rejected until," etc., is not the most apt to express the idea intended, yet the meaning of the section is both certain and plain. For the only matter or thing which this board can "reject" or allow or pass upon at all is the application, claim, or right of the officer to promotion, involving of course his fitness therefor. The board can do but one of two things, find the officer qualified and recommend his promotion or find him not qualified and fail to recommend his promotion. The latter is the only possible way in which an officer can be "rejected," and when the board thus finds that the officer is not qualified and that they do not recommend him for promotion, the officer is "rejected" within the meaning of this section. And this is what the section says shall not be done without the personal examination of the officer or his failure to appear after being duly notified to do so. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 251.)

Sec. 1504. [Report of recommendation.] Such examining board shall report their recommendation of any officer for promotion in the following form: "We hereby certify that ———— has the mental, moral, and professional qualifications to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted, and recommend him for promotion."—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 4, v. 12, p. 584. As amended by 21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 4, v. 13, p. 53. 28 July, 1866, c. 312, s. 1, v. 14, pp. 344, 345.)

Form of report by naval examining board.—By act of May 22, 1917, section 20 (40 Stat., 89), it was provided "that hereafter all laws relating to the examination of officers of the Navy for promotion shall be construed to apply to the regular advancement of staff officers to higher ranks on the active list the same as though such advancements in rank were promotions to higher grades: Provided, That examinations for such staff officers shall not be required except for such regular advancements in rank." Naval Courts and Boards, 1917 (p. 439), prescribed the form of report by naval examining boards in the cases of candidates found qualified for promotion, as follows: "We hereby certify that Lieutenant H—— C. E——, U. S. Navy, has the mental, moral, and professional qualifications to perform efficiently all the duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade (grades) to which he is to be promoted, to wit: ——— (and ———) and recommend him for promotion." By Changes in Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, No. 1, of March 16, 1918, the foregoing form was changed by inserting after the word "(grades)" the words "(or rank)," and by striking out the words "to which he is to be promoted," and inserting in place thereof the words "for promotion to which he is a candidate." By Changes in Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, No. 2, the words, "for promotion to which he is a candidate," were stricken out, and the words used in section 1504, "to which he is to be promoted," were restored.

Sec. 1505. [Failing in examination.] Any officer of the Navy on the active list below the rank of commander who, upon examination for promotion, is found not professionally qualified, shall be suspended from promotion for a period of six months from the date of approval of said examination, and shall suffer a loss of numbers equal to the average six months' rate of promotion to the grade for which said officer is undergoing examination during the five fiscal years next preceding the date of approval of said examination, and upon the termination of said suspension from promotion he shall be reexamined, and in case of his failure upon such reexamination he shall be dropped from the service with not more than one year's pay: Provided, That the provisions of this Act shall be effective from and after January first, nineteen hundred and eleven.

This section was amended and reenacted to read as above by act of March 11, 1912 (37 Stat., 73). As originally enacted it read as follows:

"Sec. 1505. Any officer of the Navy on the active list below the grade of commander, who, upon examination for promotion, is not found professionally qualified, shall be suspended from promotion for one year, with corresponding loss of date when he shall be re-examined, and in case of his failure upon such re-examination he shall be dropped from the service." (15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 8, v. 16, p. 333.)

Further amendment to this section was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), providing for promotion by selection of line officers in the grades of lieutenant commander, commander, and captain, which act provided that should officers so selected fail in their professional examination they "shall thereafter be ineligible for selection and promotion." This law was extended to staff officers of the Navy by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718).

Construction of section 1505 prior to amendment.—The words in section 1505, "shall be suspended from promotion for one year, with corresponding loss of date," do not mean that the loss of date is to be contemporaneous with the term of suspension but only that it shall agree therewith in point of duration. Accordingly, where a lieutenant in the Navy, being the senior officer of his grade, became entitled to examination for promotion to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade (lieutenant commander) which occurred January

22, 1880, and afterwards upon examination failed to pass and the findings of the examining board were approved, February 6, 1880, by the President, who directed that the officer "be suspended from promotion for one year, with corresponding loss of date," held that the loss of date of the officer is one year, to be reckoned from the occurrence of the vacancy, January 22, 1880, the date from which he would have taken rank as lieutenant commander had he been found qualified for promotion, and that his year of suspension is to be reckoned from the approval by the President of the findings of the examining boards, February 6, 1880. In this case, as the officer, by reason of his suspension, is ineligible for promotion during the whole of the year commencing February 6, 1880, no vacancy should be kept open for him until February 6, 1881. Such vacancies as happen to exist during that period the officers who are then eligible for promotion are entitled to fill. But as his loss of date is only to be one year from January 22, 1880, if on his second examination he shall be found qualified to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade which occurred after the period of his suspension, he will be entitled upon promotion thereto to take rank in such grade as of the date of January 22, 1881; he will not, however, be entitled to the pay of the higher grade from the ranking date in his commission, as his case is not one covered by section 1562, Revised Statutes. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 587; pay of officers on promotion from date stated in their commissions is now provided for by act of Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892.)

If it were held that the loss of date is to commence from the time when the President approved the findings of the examining boards, the officer might practically lose much more than a year in date, as under some circumstances there may be considerable delay in the adjudication of his case. On the other hand, if the suspension is to date from the time of the occurrence of the original vacancy, it is easy to conceive of cases in which the officer suspended would not have the time which it was the intention of the statute to allow him in order to repair the deficiencies in his professional qualifications. If upon his second examination he fails, the officer is to be dropped from the rolls of the Navy; and in making provision for suspension and for reexamination it was clearly intended that a considerable time should elapse between the commencement of the suspension and the time when he could be ordered for reexamination. For the period of the year of suspension the officer is out of the service so far as promotion is concerned. As he is ineligible for promotion during the whole year, no vacancy should be kept open for him until expiration of that period. Such vacancies as occur the officers who are then eligible are entitled to fill; and it is the obvious intention of Congress that such positions shall be filled, as they are created not for the benefit of officers but for the needs of the public service. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 587.)

Section 1505, prior to its amendment, required that professional failure of an officer below the grade of commander be followed by suspension "from promotion" for one year with corresponding "loss of date," or a one-year loss of date and a subsequent reexamination. Under the construction which was placed upon it, the year of suspension "from promotion" began to run from the date of the President's approval of the finding by a naval examining board of professional disqualification of an officer for promotion; on the other hand, the year of "loss of date" began to run from the retroactive date of the vacancy for which the officer was examined and found disqualified to fill (citing 16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 587; 25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 568; 20 Comp. Dec., 199, etc.). The year of suspension "from promotion" and the year of "loss of date" were different years and covered different periods of time, the former running from one date, the latter from another, and the two periods being separate and distinct. The period of suspension "from promotion" was the period which affected the right of the officer to the pay of the higher office for which he had failed to qualify, in that it postponed for a year his reexamination to that office, which in turn affected the particular vacancy in said higher office to which upon eventually passing the examinations as required by law he would become entitled to be appointed or promoted. During said year of suspension from promotion no vacancy in the higher office could be kept open for him, and upon his subsequently passing the examination he could only be appointed to a vacancy that was in existence during the year in the event there remained one to which the right of no other officer had attached. On his appointment to such a vacancy or a subsequent one he became entitled to the rank of the higher office for pay purposes for the retroactive period from the date of appointment back to the date of the vacancy he was entitled to fill or in other words to the pay of the higher office from the date of such vacancy if an officer covered by the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191). His "loss of date" on the other hand operated to reduce him in number on the list which in turn operated to delay his right to promotion to the grade above the one from which he had been suspended from promotion because of his being relegated by said loss of numbers to a lower place in the list than he otherwise would have occupied. It had no effect on his rank for pay purposes to the office from which he had been suspended (22 Comp. Dec., 623, citing 16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 587, 592).

Where a vacancy occurring February 2, 1895, was held open for an officer during his year of suspension, after which he was again examined and was promoted to fill said vacancy with rank from February 2, 1896, one year after the vacancy occurred, held that he was not entitled to be promoted to said vacancy but should have been promoted to the first vacancy occurring after the expiration of his year of suspension; and that he can not be allowed pay in the higher grade until the date that the latter vacancy occurred. (6 Com. Dec., 17.)

Method of executing loss of numbers.—Under section 1505, as it originally read, an officer suspended from promotion by reason of failure on examination, although subjected to a loss of numbers greater than at present, did not lose his position as the senior officer in his grade during his period of suspension. In other words, the officer while under suspension was nevertheless carried at the top of his grade, his loss of numbers being accomplished by the advancement over him of his juniors in grade who successfully qualified for promotion during the period of one year from the date of the vacancy to which he would have been advanced had he qualified therefor (citing file 26521-40, June 11, 1912); the amendment of March 11, 1912, was intended to reduce the period of suspension from one year to six months, and to mitigate the loss of numbers; also it provided that if the officer failed upon reexamination he should be dropped from the service with not more than one year's pay, instead of being discharged without any additional pay as was formerly the case. Accordingly, the whole purpose of the amendment was to mitigate the penalties previously prescribed by law for failure of an officer to qualify for promotion and not to add new penalties or to increase those already required. The administrative practice of the Navy Department, adopted upon the amendment, was to reduce the officer in his grade while under suspension according to the loss of numbers suffered, thereby imposing upon him a loss of seniority in grade while under suspension which he did not suffer under the former laws, thus adding a new penalty to that formerly provided. This practice, in the case of officers promoted by seniority, created an inconsistency between the period of suspension and the loss of numbers, which in many instances would operate to increase the period of suspension beyond the six months provided for by Congress; also in the case of officers promoted by length of service it necessitated, first, reducing the officer below those who were eventually to rank him, secondly, advancing him over the heads of such officers as had not been promoted when his term of suspension expired, and third, holding him at the foot of the higher grade when so advanced until the officers whom he had jumped should be advanced over him. These objections would be obviated by reverting to the practice which was in force under section 1505 as it originally read, viz, letting the officer retain his position at the top of his grade during his period of suspension and advancing his juniors over him until his total loss of numbers had been consummated; should his period of suspension expire in the meantime, under this practice he would be promoted if qualified and then mark time at the foot of the next higher grade until the other officers entitled to rank him in consequence of his loss of numbers had been advanced over him. (File 26260-3091:1, Nov. 3, 1915.)

While legal and fully in accordance with the spirit and purpose of the law to execute the total loss of numbers by having the officer mark time during his period of suspension while his juniors are advanced over him until the total loss of numbers has been consummated, the former practice of reducing the officer in grade during the period of suspension, which was adopted after the amendment of March 11, 1912, was not illegal; the law permits of either practice, and it was well within the discretion of the Navy Department to execute the total loss of numbers immediately upon commencement of the period of suspension, as it has done. It follows that, notwithstanding a change in this practice, the action taken in past cases, not being illegal, should not be disturbed where the officers concerned have already been promoted and commissioned. (File 26260-3091:1, Nov. 3, 1915.)

The fact that the loss of numbers which an officer is required to suffer under section 1505, as amended, is to "equal the average six months' rate of promotion to the grade for which said officer is undergoing examination" would seem to indicate that the loss of numbers is to be suffered in the higher grade, while a loss of numbers in his present grade and an immediate promotion to a higher grade would be of no practical effect so far as loss of numbers is concerned. It would seem, therefore, that an assistant surgeon advanced under such circumstances to the lowest number in the grade to which he is thus promoted must be held stationary at that number until the officers below him, corresponding to the numbers he has lost, have been advanced over him in said higher grade. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 96; see also file 26280-88, Mar. 18, 1916.)

The loss of numbers is determined by the condition of the Navy Register at the date the suspension becomes effective; thus, where an officer is required to lose nine numbers in consequence of his failure, these numbers are represented by the nine officers who were next below him in grade on the date that his suspension went into effect, and if any casualties occur within these nine numbers he would benefit thereby. (File 26260-3091:1, Nov. 3, 1915.)

Under the amendment of March 11, 1912, only promotions actually made during the five
